appears to have been originally adopted in regard to notices to produce, for the obvious reason that if a notice to produce such papers were necessary, the series of notices would become infinite. Philpott v Chase, 2 Camp 111, per Lord Ellenborough (see also In re Turner (1910) 1 K B 346). The Judges however subsequently extended the exception to many other notices, partly perhaps from a misapprehension of the ground on which the doctrine rests, partly from the experienced inconvenience attendant on a strict observance of the rule requiring notice, partly because the secondary evidence that is usually offered of a notice is a copy of the paper sent which partakes in great measure of the character of a duplicate original (Kine v Beaumont 3 B & B 291) and chiefly because it constantly happens that the opposite party is well aware from the nature of the action, that he will be charged with the possession of the original document. Colling v Treuvel 6 B & C 399, 400, Robinson v Dixon, 3 Com B 754, Faylor Es § 150. In Roberts v Bordshan, 1 Stark 228 no notice was required for a letter telling of a bill's dishonour in as much as it 'was in the nature of a notice'. But a notice to surety of default of the principal was not held to be a 'mere notice'. Grove v Ware 2 Stark 174. A notice of a bill's dishonour was held to be a notice. Aelfland v Pearce, 2 Camp 599. But in case of a notice to a drawer of the acceptor's non payment, notice to produce was required. Langdon v Hulls, 5 Lsp 156. In Suan v Lewis 2 C M & R 261, by all the Judges, notice was held not necessary for notice of dishonour. See also Kine v Beaumont 3 B & B 288. In India by clause (a) of the proviso notice is dispensed with when the document to be proved is itself a notice. In America apart from the above single instance (i.e. notice to produce a notice to produce) most Courts from time to time recognize that the case of a notice—notice to quit, notice of dishonour, notice of suit and the like—is to be governed merely by the general principle namely, where the pleadings by implication give notice to produce the notice no express notice to produce it is necessary, but otherwise it is required. Wigmore § 1206.

Proviso para (2).—When the adverse party must know that he will be required to produce it. If from the nature of the action or indictment, or from the form of the pleadings, the defendant must know that he will be charged with the possession of an instrument and be called upon to produce it no notice to produce need be served upon him. Colling v Treuvel 6 B & C 398, 399. 'Where the nature of the action gives the defendant notice that the plaintiff means to charge him with the possession of such an instrument there can be no necessity for giving him any other notice'. Per Le Blanc J in How v Hall 14 East, 274, 277. This principle is accepted in a variety of cases. Wigmore § 1205. It naturally suggests itself that there are cases in which formal notice to produce would be idle, as in the case of an action for wrongful detention of a document belonging to the plaintiff, although, strictly speaking, such an action would be for the material on which the written character appeared and it is on that account that the general rule that notice to produce must be given before secondary evidence can be received of the contents of a paper in the possession of the adverse party does not apply in those cases where the nature of the proceeding and pleadings are such as to notify the party that he is charged with the possession of the instrument and that its production is necessary. Continental Insurance v Rogers, 119 Ill 474 (Am.). Thus in an action for trover for converting a bond or bill of exchange, or other writing (Scott v Jones 4 Trant 865, How v Hall, 14 East 275, Bucher v Torral, 3 B & P 143) or in a prosecution for stealing any document (R v Belles 1 Lev 297, R v Bieman 3 Craw & D C C 109, contra R v Farr F & F 336) the counsel for the prosecution or the crown may at once produce secondary evidence of its contents even though the defendant should offer to produce the document itself. Whitchard v Scott 1 M & Rob 2, Taylor § 452. In an old case of trover Spencer C J said: 'After reviewing all the cases we hold that in an action of trover for bonds or notes no notice to produce the thing sought to be recovered was necessary, and that where the form of action gives the party notice to be prepared to produce the instrument if necessary to falsify the evidence of the other party it is not necessary to give notice to produce the instrument. These principles apply directly in this case. The form of

pleading, we must presume, gave the plaintiff notice, that he had received and he in his possession obligation amounting to more than 150 dollars. he was told then to come prepared to produce them. Hardin v Kretzinger 17 Johns (N Y) 243. See also Head v Gamble 10 A & J 797, R v Fluorthy 10 Cox Cr 57 (182). No notice to produce is necessary in an action for non-delivery of paper (Jolley v Taylor 1 Camp 113) in an action to recover the amount of a forged bill note which has been returned to the defendant (Lucett v Clark Litt 241 (178), in an action against a carrier for non-delivery of a writing (Jolley v Taylor 1 Camp 113) in an action against a telegraph company for failing to deliver a telegram (Reliance Lumber v Western Union Tel Co, 41 Am Rep 64). In an action for conspiracy in restraint of trade no notice to produce the alleged agreement is necessary (State v Deany 65 Kun 292) nor is a notice required under the conditions of a contract in writing in an action for breach of warranty of machinery (Nicholas & Co v Charlebois 10 N D 146). In an action in contract it is held that the pleadings imply notice as to the orders and letters constituting the contract (App v Colchester 12 S D 218 (1m)). So the rule is the same where the writing is a proper matter of defence and the advice a party may understand that it will come in question (Helton v Sarage 20 Me 199) or the action is brought on a written contract in possession of the defendant which is fully described in the complaint (Dana v Conat, 30 Vt 246 Burr Jones & Co). If the note, he is charged with forging, passing, or delivery is of the same kind with the others which he has disposed of or retained in his possession he had no effect that, if practicable to procure it, evidence will be given of the counterfeit character and of having passed them as true. It is notice in law that which a party is as much bound both in civil and in criminal cases as he is in effect. Notice in fact is notice in form. See U S v Doeblen 1 Bold W 519, 41 (1m). It seems settled therefore that on a charge of larceny or of forgery express notice is necessary and the principle would also extend to other charges, but the nature of the charge will determine the application of the principle. Wignore § 1207. R v Fluorthy 1 C & P 251 256. But in an action for reason with intent to defraud the insurer notice to produce the policy was required. R v Wilson 6 Cox Cr 139. See also R v Fluorthy, 10 Cox Cr 579 (182). If the maker of a note or cheque or the acceptor of a bill does not as defendant in an action deny by his plea the making or acceptance the plaintiff who is not bound to produce the instrument as part of his case since it is admitted on the record may object to the defendant's giving secondary evidence of its content, for the purpose even of identification unless a notice to produce has been duly served. Gooder v Dimow 3 Q B 356. Dwyer v Collins 21 L J Ex 225, Tuf

Secondary evidence of mortgage cannot be given unless notice to produce is given to the mortgagee clause (2) not applying to a case against mortgagee. Manning Po v Ma Shue 81 Ind Crs 373 = A I R 192, Ring 7. Ma Le v Ma Shue U B R 1907 14 Cr Ev 13. See also Dimonath v Rana Ram, 6 P 101. 97 Ind Crs 318 = 1926 P 512. In another case it is held that in an action to produce it oral evidence is admissible under a 65 (a) read with proviso (2) of section 66 of the Evidence Act. Mi Amin v Mi Gwih 9 Bur L J 22 = 31 Ind Crs 893. See also Bihadur Singh v Mahadeo Singh 36 Ind Cas 696. Sahn 17 A I J 711. Duarka v Kamanand 41 A 592 = 51 Ind Crs 97. No notice to defendants to produce the original was necessary to render secondary evidence admissible where the defendant from the nature of the case must have known that they would be required to produce the original. Mahammad v Nannarain 7 C L 790. It is doubtful if a pro forma defendant who is not interested in suit property or in the decision of the case is an adverse party within the meaning of proviso (2). Durgabai v Jagannath A I R 1929 All 650. Proviso para (3)—When the opponent has obtained fraudulent possession of it, etc. The opponent's fraudulent suppression of a document in possession, or of a document collusively secreted by a third person (who thus virtually acts as the opponent's agent) should be exempt from the requirement of notice, because this suppression amounts to a refusal to produce, and the only object of a notice is to make it clear that the opponent's failure to produce amounts to a refusal. This exception is generally recognized Hignine § 1207. Thus in odium spoliationis a notice need not be given to the adverse party to produce a paper of which he has fraudulently or forcibly obtained possession, as where after action brought, he has received it from a witness in fraud of a subpoena duces tecum Letts v Cool, 4 Esp 256 Taylor § 453. The same rule is applicable when the loss was by stealing instigated by the opposite party. Doe v Lees 7 Bing 724. No notice is necessary where a letter which has once been used in evidence in the litigation was sent out of the state by the counsel of the party against whom it was used without the consent of the other party. Mitchell v Jacobs 17 Ill 235. If the document was obtained by the adverse party from the one seeking to use it by fraudulent or forcible means of any character (Gray v Kenaham 2 Mills Const (S C) 65) such as obtaining a deed for the alleged purpose of recording it (Davis v Spooner, 3 Pick Mass 284), or a conspiracy by which a letter was taken from its possessor (Medly v People 49 Ill App 218) it is not necessary to give notice to produce writing. A defendant having put in evidence what purported to be a letter to himself, signed by the plaintiff, and having asserted that this was all of the letter which he received at that time though at other times he had received other letters from the plaintiff it was proper for the Court to allow the plaintiff to show that the paper produced did not contain the whole of the letter as written and that something material had been cut off from the top. It was not necessary for the plaintiff to give notice to produce the other letters. Robinson v Cutter, 163 Mass 377, Burr Jones § 223.

Proviso para (4)—When the adverse party has the original in Court a notice to produce is rendered unnecessary by proof that the adverse party or his solicitor has the original instrument in Court for the object of the notice is not—as was formerly thought (Bate v Kenney 1 C M & R 38, Cook v Hean 1 M & Rob 201, Doe v Grey, 1 Stark R 284 Exall v Patridge ibid)—to give the opposite party an opportunity of providing the proper testimony to support or impeach the document, but it is merely to enable him to produce it if he likes at the trial and thus to secure the best evidence of its contents. Taylor § 456. In Duyer v Collins 7 Ex Ch 639, an action was brought by the indorsee against the acceptor of a bill of exchange, to which the defendant pleaded inter alia, that the bill was given for a gaming debt. On the trial, before the Lord Chief Baron, the defendant proceeded to prove his plea, and for that purpose gave evidence of the gaming and swore that the only bill he ever gave to the drawer of the bill which was declared on was by way of payment of the debt then incurred. The defendant's Counsel, being required to prove that the identical bill declared upon was that which was given on that occasion called for the bill which the plaintiff's counsel declined to produce. The plaintiff's attorney having admitted that the bill was in his possession and in Court, the defendant's counsel called for its production which being refused he then offered to give secondary evidence of its contents. The plaintiff's counsel objected that there ought to have been a previous notice to produce and the Lord Chief Baron after consulting the Judges ruled it in favour of the defendant. In that case Lord Chief Baron Parke said: "The next question is whether the bill being admitted to be in Court proof evidence is admissible on its non production, or whether a previous notice to produce was necessary. On principle the answer must depend on the reason why notice to produce is required. If it be to give his opponent notice that such a document will be used by a party to the cause, so that he may be enabled to prepare evidence to explain or confirm it, then no doubt a notice at the trial, though the document is in Court is too late. But if it be merely to enable the party to have the document in Court, to produce it if he likes, and if he does not, to enable the opponent to give parol evidence,—if it be merely to exclude the argument that the opponent has not taken all reasonable means to procure the original (which he must do before he can be permitted to make use of secondary evidence) then the demand for the production at

S 66 III INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT

pleading we must presume the plaintiff notices that he had received, and he in his possession, obligation amounting to more than 150 dollars, he was forced then to come prepared to produce them, Harden v Kretzinger, 17 Johns (N.Y.) 293. It is also held in Gamble 10 A & I 597, R v Flucorthy 10 Cox Cr 57 (1842) No notice to produce is necessary in an action to recover the amount of a forced note which has been returned to the defendant (Lucett v Clark) Litt Sel Cas (178) in an action on a carrier for non delivery of a forced note (Jolley v Taylor 1 Cr 113) in an action on a telegraph company for failing to deliver a telegram (Helme Lumber v Western Union Tel Co, 41 Am Rep 67) in an action for conspiracy (State v Drenay, 65 Kan 292) nor is a notice required under the conditions of a contract in writing in an action for breach of warranty of machinery (Nicholas & Co v Charlesboro, 10 N D 146) In an action in contract it is held that the pleadings imply notice as to the orders and letters connected with the contract Tipp v Colchester, 12 S D 218 (Iowa) So the rule in the case where the writing is a proper matter of defence and the adverse party is understood that it will come in question (Helnor v Sarage, 20 Me 197), or fully described in the complaint Dana v Conal, 30 Vt 246 Burr Jones, 22 Conn 171. If the note he is charged with forging passing or delivery is of the same kind with the others which he has disposed of or retained in his possession he had no counterfeited character and of having passed them as true. It is notice in law to which a party is as much bound both in civil and in criminal cases as to notice in effect. Notice in fact is notice in form notice in law notice in effect either is sufficient. Per Baldwin J in U S v Doebley 1 Bold W 519 & (Iowa) It seems settled therefore that on a charge of larceny or of forgery express notice is necessary and the principle would also extend to other charges but the nature of the charge will determine the application of the principle. Wigmore § 120, R v Hauorth 4 C & P 231 256 But in an action for person with intent to defraud the insurer notice to produce the policy was required. R v Kilson 6 Cox Cr 139 See also R v Flucorthy, 10 Cox Cr 579 (1847) If the maker of a note or cheque or the receptor of a bill does not as defendant in an action deny by his plea the making or acceptance the plaintiff, who is not bound to produce the instrument as part of his case since it is admitted on the record, may object to the defendant's giving secondary evidence of its content, for the purpose even of identification unless a notice to produce has been duly served. Goodred v Brown 3 Q B 356 Dayer v Collins 21 L J Ex 229, Tay § 452

Secondary evidence of mortgage cannot be given unless notice to produce is given to the mortgagee clause (2) not applying to a case against mortgagee. Maung Po v Ma Shue 84 Ind Cas 373=A I R 192, Ring 7 W L 576 Shue U B R 1907 14th Qr IV 13 but see Dionath v Rama Rao, 6 P M 97 Ind Cas 348=1926 P 512 In another case it is held that in a suit for redemption when the mortgagee is in possession of the mortgage deed and is to produce it oral evidence is admissible under s 65 (a) read with proviso (1) of section 66 of the Evidence Act. U Amin v U Gurh, 9 Bom L J 32=41 Ind Cas 892 see also Bhadur Singh v Mahadeo Singh 36 Ind Cas 696 Sahn v Sheo A W N 1888 147 Dwarika v Ramanaud, 41 A 592=71 Ind Cas 17 A I J 711 No notice to defendants to produce the original was necessary to render secondary evidence admissible where the defendants from the nature of the case must have known that they would be required to produce the original. Mahammad v Amnaraun 7 C L 790 It is doubtful if a pro forma defendant who is not interested in suit property or in the decision of the case is an adverse party within the meaning of proviso (2) Durgabati v Jagann A I R 1925 All 650

Proviso para (3)—When the opponent has obtained fraudulent possession of it etc The opponent's fraudulent suppression of a document in

possession, or of a document collusively secreted by a third person (who thus virtually acts as the opponent's agent) should be exempt from the requirement of notice, because this suppression amounts to a refusal to produce, and the only object of a notice is to make it clear that the opponent's failure to produce amounts to a refusal. This exception is generally recognized Higgin § 1207. Thus in odium spoliatoris a notice need not be given to the adverse party to produce a paper of which he has fraudulently or forcibly obtained possession, as where, after action brought, he has received it from a witness in fraud of a subpoena duces tecum Leeds v. Cool, 4 Esp 256 Taylor § 453. The same rule is applicable when the loss was by stealing instigated by the opposite party Doe v. Lees 7 Bing 724. No notice is necessary where a lease which has once been used in evidence in the litigation was sent out of the state by the counsel of the party against whom it was used without the consent of the other party. Mitchell v. Jacobs, 17 Ill 235. If the document was obtained by the adverse party from the one seeking to use it by fraudulent or forcible means of any character (Gray v. Kenaham, 2 Mills Const (S. C.) 65) such as obtaining a deed for the alleged purpose of recording it (Davis v. Spooner 3 Pick Mass 284), or a conspiracy by which a letter was taken from its possessor (Melby v. People, 49 Ill App 218) it is not necessary to give notice to produce writing. A defendant having put in evidence what purported to be a letter to himself, signed by the plaintiff, and having asserted that this was all of the letter which he received at that time, though at other times he had received other letters from the plaintiff it was proper for the Court to allow the plaintiff to show that the paper produced did not contain the whole of the letter as written, and that something material had been cut off from the top. It was not necessary for the plaintiff to give notice to produce the other letters Robinson v. Cutter 163 Mass 377, Burr Jones § 223.

Proviso para (4).—When the adverse party has the original in Court a notice to produce is rendered unnecessary by proof that the adverse party or his solicitor has the original instrument in Court for the object of the notice is not—as was formerly thought (Bate v. Kuney 1 C. M. & R. 33, Cook v. Hean, 1 M. & Rob 201, Doe v. Grey, 1 Stark R. 284, Exall v. Pritchard, ibid)—to give the opposite party an opportunity of providing the proper testimony to support or impeach the document, but it is merely to enable him to produce it, if he likes at the trial, and thus to secure the best evidence of its contents. Taylor § 456. In Dwyer v. Collins 7 Ex Ch 639 an action was brought by the indorsee against the acceptor of a bill of exchange to which the defendant pleaded, inter alia, that the bill was given for a gaming debt. On the trial, before the Lord Chief Baron the defendant proceeded to prove his plea, and for that purpose gave evidence of the gaming, and swore that the only bill he ever gave to the drawer of the bill which was declared on was by way of payment of the debt then incurred. The defendant's Counsel being required to prove that the identical bill declared upon was that which was given on that occasion called for the bill which the plaintiff's counsel declined to produce. The plaintiff's attorney having admitted that the bill was in his possession and in Court, the defendant's counsel called for its production which being refused he then offered to give secondary evidence of its contents. The plaintiff's counsel objected that there ought to have been a previous notice to produce and the Lord Chief Baron after consulting the Judges ruled it in favour of the defendant. In that case Lord Chief Baron Parke said: The next question is whether the bill being admitted to be in Court prior evidence was admissible on its non production, or whether a previous notice to produce was necessary. On principle the answer must depend on the reason why notice to produce is required. If it be to give his opponent notice that such a document will be used by a party to the cause so that he may be enabled to prepare evidence to explain or confirm it, then no doubt a notice at the trial, though the document is in Court is too late. But if it be merely to enable the party to have the document in Court, to produce it if he likes, and if he does not to enable the opponent to give prior evidence—if it be merely to exclude the argument that the opponent has not taken all reasonable means to procure the original (which he must do before he can be permitted to make use of secondary evidence) then the demand for the production at the

possession, or of a document collusively secreted by a third person (who thus virtually acts as the opponent's agent) should be exempt from the requirement of notice, because this suppression amounts to a refusal to produce, and the only object of a notice is to make it clear that the opponent's failure to produce amounts to a refusal. This exception is generally recognized Wignie § 1207. Thus in odium spoliatoris a notice need not be given to the adverse party to produce a paper of which he has fraudulently or forcibly obtained possession, as when, after action brought, he has received it from a witness in fraud of a subpoena duces tecum. Leeds v Cool, 4 Esp 256. Taylor § 453. The same rule is applicable when the loss was by stealing instigated by the opposite party. Doe v Rees 7 Bing 724. No notice is necessary where a lease which has once been used in evidence in the litigation was sent out of the state by the counsel of the party against whom it was used without the consent of the other party. Mitchell v Jacobs, 17 Ill 235. If the document was obtained by the adverse party from the one seeking to use it by fraudulent or forcible means of any character (Gray v Kennaham, 2 Mills Const (S C) 65) such as obtaining a deed for the illegal purpose of recording it (Davis v Spooner 3 Pick Mass 284), or a conspiracy by which a letter was taken from its possessor (Medley v People, 49 Ill App 218), it is not necessary to give notice to produce writing. A defendant having put in evidence what purported to be a letter to himself, signed by the plaintiff, and having asserted that this was all of the letter which he received at that time, though at other times he had received other letters from the plaintiff, it was proper for the Court to allow the plaintiff to show that the paper produced did not contain the whole of the letters written, and that something material had been cut off from the top. It was not necessary for the plaintiff to give notice to produce the other letters. Robinson v Cutler, 163 Mass 377. Burr Jones § 223.

Proviso para (4)—When the adverse party has the original in Court a notice to produce is rendered unnecessary by proof that the adverse party or his solicitor has the original instrument in Court for the object of the notice is not—as was formerly thought (Bate v Kinsey 1 C M & R 39. Cook v Hearn, 1 M & Rob 201, Doe v Grey, 1 Stark R 284. Exall v Partridge, ibid)—to give the opposite party an opportunity of providing the proper testimony to support or impeach the document, but it is merely to enable him to produce it, if he likes, at the trial, and this to secure the best evidence of its contents. Taylor § 456. In Duyer v Collins 7 Ex Ch 639, an action was brought by the indorsee against the acceptor of a bill of exchange, to which the defendant pleaded, inter alia that the bill was given for a gaming debt. On the trial, before the Lord Chief Baron, the defendant proceeded to prove his plea, and for that purpose gave evidence of the gaming and swore that the only bill he ever gave to the drawer of the bill which was declared on was by way of payment of the debt then incurred. The defendant's Counsel, being required to prove that the identical bill declared upon was that which was given on that occasion called for the bill which the plaintiff's counsel declined to produce. The plaintiff's attorney having admitted that the bill was in his possession and in Court, the defendant's counsel called for its production which being refused he then offered to give secondary evidence of its contents. The plaintiff's counsel objected that there ought to have been a previous notice to produce, and the Lord Chief Baron after consulting the Judges ruled it in favour of the defendant. In that case Lord Chief Baron Parke said. The next question is whether the bill being admitted to be in Court prior evidence was admissible on its non production, or whether a previous notice to produce was necessary. On principle, the answer must depend on the reason why notice to produce is required. If it be to give his opponent notice that such a document will be used by a party to the cause, so that he may be enabled to prepare evidence to explain or confirm it then no doubt a notice at the trial, though the document is in Court is too late. But if it be merely to enable the party to have the document in Court, to produce it if he likes, and if he does not to enable the opponent to give prior evidence,—if it be merely to exclude the argument that the opponent has not taken all reasonable means to procure the original (which he must do before he can be permitted to make use of secondary evidence) then the demand for the production at the

S 66 trial is sufficient. If this (the former) be the true reason, the necessity of the reasonable length of notice would not be the true necessity to produce the document—a comparatively simple inquiry—but the true necessity to procure evidence to explain or support a very complicated one depending on the nature of the plaintiff's case and the document itself and its bearing on the case, and in practice such matters have never been inquired into but only the time with reference to the custody of the document and the residence and convenience of the party to whom notice has been given and the like. We think the plaintiff's alleged principle is not the true one on which notice to produce is required but that it is merely to give a sufficient opportunity to the opposite party to produce it and thereby secure if he pleads the best evidence of its contents and a request to produce immediately is quite sufficient for that purpose if it be in the Court. It would be emendatory to the administration of the law if the plaintiff's objection had prevailed. Higmore Case 1st 227.

Proviso para (5) When the adverse party or his pleader has admitted loss of the document. The rule requiring notice to the opponent proceeds on the assumption that the opponent has possession of the document the object being to know its demand and refusal to produce. So the requirement of notice does not apply to the proponent unless he is proceeding on the theory that the opponent has possession for example if he is accounting for the document as lost or destroyed and not as in possession of the opponent notice is unnecessary. It follows that where the document is admitted by the opponent to have been destroyed or lost or even out of his possession no notice is necessary, for it is no longer in the possession of the opponent but of him. Higmore § 1203. In such a case the notice could be unnecessary. Ex v Hamworth 1 C & J 201. Foster v Pointer 4 C & P 718. Hou v Hall 11 East 276. Doe Spilly 3 B & Ad 152. Taylor § 15. A party however can not under this exception call witnesses to prove the destruction of a document that has been traced into the hands of his opponent and then show its contents by secondary proof without serving a notice to produce because notwithstanding evidence to the contrary the document may still be in existence and many rate the opponent may dispute the fact of its destruction. Doe v Morris 3 A & J 16. Taylor § 15. Where by the proponent's evidence the document is traced to the opponent's hands—as by the presumption from mailing—and the opponent denies the receipt of it then even taking the opponent's testimony at its highest value the whereabouts of the document becomes unexplainable mystery and the case is virtually one of loss, so that the proponent should be allowed to prove the contents without having given notice while if we take the opponent's testimony as false and assume that he has in truth received the document, his denial is express refusal to produce which equally puts the plaintiff in the position of being equally unable to obtain the document so that notice is unnecessary. Higmore § 1203.

Proviso, para (6)—When the person in possession of the document is out of the reach of, or not subject to the process of the Court. Section 65 lays down that secondary evidence may be given of the existence condition or contents of a document, when the original is shown or appears to be in the possession or power of any person who is out of the reach of or not subject to, the process of the Court and when after the notice mentioned in section 66, such person does not produce it. There is therefore a clear legislative enactment that notice or a reasonable notice must be given, but that is qualified by s. 66 clause (6) which dispenses with notice. Mr Jackson argues that there must be evidence of a refusal to produce the original document. I do not see that that is required by the Act at all and I do not think that it is requisite. Per Morris J in Ralli v Guru Kim 9 C 939 (944). So secondary evidence of the contents of a letter is admissible under section 66(6) when the opposite party is out of the jurisdiction and did not comply with the summons to produce the document and when the service of notice upon his pleader who appeared for him at the last moment at the hearing of the suit would have been nugatory. Mellus v Vicar Apostolic 2 M 290. In Haranand v Ram Gopal 27 C 639 (648)=3 C W N 429 Lord Hobhouse said. His proof of the Sikhur records is secondary evidence, and by sections 65 and 66 of the Evidence Act secondary evidence may be given of public documents, which they are under section 71 without notice to the adverse party, when the person in possession of the document is out of the reach of or not subject to the process of the Court, which is the case here. See also Hunund v Ram Gopal, 2 Bom L R 562.

Court may dispense notice in a fit case. It will be observed that under this section besides the specified cases in which notice is not required, the Court has power of dispensing with the notice 'in any case in which it thinks fit.' This is a relaxation of the procedure in force in English Court. Cun Li 225. An express waiver of notice by agreement of counsel pro lite or other wise, suffices to exempt from notice, and there may be an implied waiver. A special exception is sometimes provided for the benefit of seamen. Hignost 1207. Under section 66 of the Indian Evidence Act a certified copy of a mortgage deed is admissible in evidence only after notice is given to the party in possession of the original to produce the same. But under the proviso to s. 66 the Court can dispense with notice for sufficient reason as for instance where the mortgagee denies the existence of the mortgage itself. Dinanath v Ram Rai 97 Ind Cts 348 = A I R 1926 Pat 512 = 6 Pat 542. Where it appeared that the original letters were in the possession of parties interested in opposing the plaintiff's claim but the plaintiff did not take steps to call upon them to produce them. Held that there being no question of the genuineness of the document these steps should have been waived by the Court and the document admitted in evidence under s. 66 of the Evidence Act. Habnam v Hemnath, 19 C W N 1069.

Proof of signature and handwriting of person alleged to have signed or written document produced

67 If a document is alleged to be signed or to have been written wholly or in part by any person, the signature or the handwriting of so much of the document as is alleged to be in that person's handwriting must be proved to be in his handwriting.

Principle. The introduction in evidence of a writing is not accomplished when the document is produced in Court. There is still a preliminary matter to be attended to before the writing can be received. This is the authentication of the writing or the proof of its genuineness. McLachlan's Li §§ 277-279. Most documents bear a signature, or otherwise purport on their face to be of a certain person's authorship. Hence a special necessity exists for separating the external evidence of authorship from the mere existence of the purporting document. A letter or a contract contains upon itself no indications of ownership, when it is claimed that Doe wrote it or rode it all can appreciate that this element is missing and must be supplied by evidence. But a document purports in itself to indicate its authorship, and the perception that this element is nevertheless missing and must still be supplied is likely not to occur. There is a natural tendency to forge it. Thus it has constantly to be emphasised by the judicial requirement of evidence to that effect. Thus it is that in the tradition of the common law a wise emphasis has been placed upon the necessity of supplying the logical element of authenticity for writings. The general principle has been enforced that a writing purporting to be of a certain authorship cannot go to the jury as possibly genuine merely on the strength of this purport, there must be some evidence of the genuineness or execution of it. Hignore § 2130, Horne's Trial 25 How St Tr 78. Pfaff v Vanhatsenburg, 2 Camp 439.

General Principle of Authentication. The foundation on which rests the necessity of authentication is not any artificial principle of evidence but an inherent logical necessity. Thus if as a part of some facts asserted Doe's letter is offered, what is involved in the assumption of the offer is (a) a letter written (b) by Doe thus a letter alone without the fact that it is Doe's is not receivable simply because it is not the thing offered. By one of the many rules of Evidence Doe's letter may be admissible but whatever the particular rule of Evidence may be, the element of Doe's connection with the letter is logically

S 67 assumed in all. This logical element, and all the mental tendency to forget the importance of proving it exists wherever any personal connection with a corporeal object is assumed in the offer. The necessity of authentication, therefore applies equally well to chattels—to a knife, a horse, a coat etc. whenever it is asserted to be connected with a person. This process of authenticating chattels is ordinarily referred to as identifying them, but the two ideas are distinct, and different principles of evidence are applied. Identification presupposes that two objects, apparently different, have been referred to and the issue is whether they are in fact one and identical not separate objects. Authentication however presupposes a time a place, or other known conditions. Thus, the object itself, when offered is not relevant unless it is the object that was in fact thus associated with those conditions. Hence the evidencing of those conditions is necessary, and the principle of authentication requires that some evidence connecting the object with those conditions be introduced before or at the time of offering the object itself. Ignore § 2129

Scope of the section Besides the question which arises as to the contents of a document there is always the question, when it is used as evidence, is it what it purports to be? In other words is it genuine? The evidence upon this point is dealt with in ss 67–73 Mal by Li 60 Sections 67 to 73 of the Evidence Act govern cases both of primary and secondary evidence. Kasimullah v Gudar Koeri, 82 Ind Cas 306. The nature of the evidence will depend to a large extent on the nature of the document. If it is a mere memorandum, such as the entry in a diary mentioned in s 32 (b) it must be proved that the diary was really that of the person whose statements it is said to contain. If it is a letter, it must be shown who wrote it, or at any rate who signed it for a signature to a document turns the whole document into a statement by the person who signs it. If it is an agreement it must be shown who executed it. Mal by Li p 60. Direct evidence of the hand writing is not necessary under this section. Neelanta v Juggobundhoo 12 B L R App 18. This section does not require the subscribing witnesses to a document necessarily to be produced. Nor does the Act require the writer of a document to be examined as a witness. Abdool Ali v Abdoor Rahman, 21 W R 429. The proof of hand writing and signature under this section must be by any of the recognised modes of proof, and, amongst others, by statements admissible under s 32 of the Evidence Act. Abdulla v Gumbai, 11 B 690. The execution of a document cannot be deemed proved as it is required by the Evidence Act merely because it is proved in the sense of the definition of “proved”. That definition of the word “proved” must be read along with s 67 of the Act until it is proved that the signature purporting to be that of the executant is in the hand writing of the executant the Court cannot proceed to consider whether the execution is proved. In other words section 67 makes proof of execution of a document something more difficult than proof of matter other than the execution of a document. Salai v Mt Tanur Bano 107 Ind Cas 564=A I R 1928 A 303. But it was never intended by s 67 of the Evidence Act that direct evidence of handwriting was always necessary but that section merely stated with reference to deeds what was the universal rule in all cases that the person who makes an allegation must prove it and lays down no new rules as to the kind of proof to be given. It was never intended by s 60 either to exclude circumstantial evidence of a thing which could be seen, heard or felt. Where the signatory of a risk note admitted having signed it held that the fact of execution of the document was properly proved. Karali v The East Indian Railway 48 C L J 32=111 Ind Cas 792=A I R 1928 Cal 498.

Under s 67 of the Evidence Act no particular kind of proof is required for the purpose of establishing the fact of execution, it must nevertheless be shown to the satisfaction of the Court that the mark or signature denoting execution was actually fixed to the document by the person who professed to execute it. A Court is not bound to treat the registration endorsement as conclusive proof of the fact of execution. If there are suspicious circumstances attending the execution of the document such endorsement cannot be resorted to for the purpose of holding that the execution has been proved. Jogannath v Dhuraya 5 O L J 191=16 Ind Cas 279. Under this section a document can be proved by any witness. Nambemmal v Raghava Chariar, 71 Ind Cas 390. Where a register alleged to belong to a particular association is produced in order to prove that certain members of the association took part in a meeting of the association and put their signatures on register in token of attendance it must be proved by oral testimony that the register was in fact a register of attendance kept for the purpose of recording the names of the persons who were present at meeting on a date appearing over their names and it must further be shown that the signatures were in fact those of the persons whose names so appeared Sarup Singh v Emperor 83 Ind C 22=1925 Lah 299 In delivering the judgment Efforde J said "There is no evidence as to who wrote down the names which appear on the page in question It is suggested that the names or signatures were written out by the persons themselves under the date which appears at the heading of the paper But no witness has been produced to identify these signatures The learned Sessions Judge has considered that the mere fact that a person's name appears on such a document is proof that he signed it It is obvious that when this register was produced it was necessary to show by oral testimony that it was in fact a register of attendance kept for the purpose of recording the names of the persons who were present at a meeting on the date appearing over their names The next essential step was to show that the signatures were in fact those of the persons whose names so appeared This is done in most cases by producing the writer himself but as in the present case the writers were the accused persons and could not give evidence some persons ought to have been produced who actually saw the signatures being written, or a person who was acquainted with their handwriting to prove those signatures or they could have proved by comparing the handwriting of the signatures in question with any writing proved to the satisfaction of the Judge to be genuine As no witness was called to testify to this document in any way whatsoever, it is obvious that these essential requirements were not attempted to be fulfilled The document accordingly is not admissible in evidence in the absence of oral proof of its nature and authorship, and even if it were admitted it does not prove the presence of the petitioners at the meeting in the absence of proof of the identity of their signatures" A certificate is not admissible in evidence if the writer of the certificate is not produced in Court and examined as a witness Peter v Mahomed, 22 Ind C 651 The ordinary method of proving handwritings are (1) by calling as a witness a person who wrote the document or saw it written, or who is qualified to express an opinion as to the handwriting by virtue of section 17 of the Evidence Act, (2) by a comparison of the handwriting as provided in section 73 of the Evidence Act, and (3) by admission of the person against whom the document is tendered A document does not prove itself, nor is an unproved signature proof of its having been written by the person whose signature it purports to bear Per Moolerjee J in Sarojini v Han Das, 26 C W N 113 at p 119, see also Gunga Pershad v Inderjit, 23 W R 390 P C To prove the execution of a bill of sale executed in their favour by the plaintiff's father the defendant called a Kazi who deposed that the vendor came before him accompanied by witnesses, and acknowledged the execution of the deed which was then registered The lower appellate Court found it was sufficiently proved On special appeal to the High Court it was contended that the execution was sufficient direct evidence of the handwriting of the executant was not necessary under section 67 Nillanto v Jagabandhoo 12 B L R Ap 18, see also Haria v Manal Chand 27 Ind C 866, Lahiri v Bala, 77 Ind C 793=18 N L R 85

Signature Signature is a formality which is almost universal Sometimes, but less rarely, sealing is substituted for signature, and sometimes both are used If a person cannot write and has no seal, he generally makes a mark, and some other person writes his name Mark P p 60 All that is required is that the signature must be by a person who is conscious of his act a mere mechanical movement of the hand is not sufficient Kalee Tara v Nobin 21 W R C R 81 The signature may be stamped Jenkins v Gainsford, 3 Sw & Tr 93 The signature must be made with the intention of executing a document Re Meyer (1903) P 353 An assumed name or initial may be considered as a mark In bonis Saury, 15 Jur 1012, In bonis Redding, 2

S 68 Roberts 339, Nauab Sher Mahomed v Dy Commissioner, 58 Ind Cas 131=7 O L J 106. A mark is a mere symbol and does not convey any idea to a person who notices it, often even to the person who makes it. Nimal v Saratmani, 2 C W N 612=25 C 911, Rajendra v Jogendra, 11 M I A 67. The use of pen and ink is not necessary for signing. Jenkins v Gainsford, 3 Sw & Tr 93. In that case Sir Cresswell Cresswell said: "Whether a mark is made by a pen or some other instrument cannot make any difference: neither can it in reason make a difference that a facsimile of the whole name was impressed on the Will instead of a mere mark or cross. The mark made by the instrument or stamp was intended to stand for and represent the signature of the testator. In the case where it was held that sealing was not signing, the seals were affixed by way of a signature. So execution of a document can be made by affixing a mark on it." Taylor v Denning 3 Nev & P 228, Baler v Denning, 8 Ad & Ell 94, Donely v Broughton, (1891) A C 135.

68 If a document is required by law to be attested, it shall not be used as evidence until one attesting witness at least has been called for the purpose of proving its execution, if there be an attesting witness alive, and subject to the process of the Court and capable of giving evidence.

Proof of execution of document required by law to be attested

"Provided that it shall not be necessary to call an attesting witness in proof of the execution of any document, not being a will, which has been registered in accordance with the provisions of the Indian Registration Act, 1908, unless its execution by the person by whom it purports to have been executed is specifically denied" 4

General Nature and Policy of these Rules. The general notion of preference which insists that a particular witness shall be called before another can be called rests on the supposed excellent position of that particular witness to obtain knowledge of the matter more accurately than any other person. His opportunities of knowledge it must be supposed have been not only better than those of others but so much better that it would be a palpable risk of injustice to proceed in the trial without endeavouring to obtain him. Moreover such a rule should be applied only where the class of witnesses thus preferred can be designated with some precision and certainty, because the party required to call him must in fairness be able to know beforehand in order to summon them, the person or persons to whom the rule will be applied by the Court on the trial. Finally, such a rule obviously assumes nothing as to the precise nature of the witness's testimony. He may on appearing affirm or deny the existence of the fact in question, he is required to be used but without any assumption that he will say the one thing or the other thing and merely with the assumption that whatever he can contribute will be worth hearing. In other words, such a rule is a rule imposed by the law by way of insuring a supply of trustworthy testimony which otherwise the partisan interests of either side may fail to furnish. Wigmore § 1266

History of the rule. As regards the requirement says Professor James Bradley Thayer that the proof of the execution of an attested document must be by the witnesses if they can be had this, also, has a clear and very old origin. Such persons belonged to that very ancient class of transaction or business witnesses, running far back into the old Germanic law who were once the only sort of witnesses that could be compelled to come before Court. Their allowing themselves to be called in and set down as attesting witnesses was understood to be an assent in advance to such a compulsory summons. Proof by witnesses

* This proviso has been added by the Indian Evidence (Amendment) Act, 1926 (XXXI of 1926)

could not be made by those who merely happen casually to know the fact. However exact and full the knowledge of any person might be, he could not, in the old Germanic procedure, be called in Court as a witness, unless he had been called at the time of the event as a pre-appointed witness. It was a part of such a system and in accordance with such a set of ideas that witnesses formally allowed their names to be written into deeds in large numbers. When jury trial, or rather proof by jury, as it originally was came in the old proof by witnesses was joined with it, when the execution of the deed was denied, and the same process that summoned the twelve, summoned also these witnesses. The phrase of the precept to the sheriff was summone duodecim (etc., etc.,) cum aliis. The presence of these witnesses was at first as necessary as that of the jury. Great delays and embarrassments attended such a requirement where the number of witnesses might be so great the jury was cumbersome enough in any way. Accordingly in 1318 the presence of the witnesses was made no longer absolutely necessary, they must still be summoned, but the case might go on without them. After another century and a half the process against the witness became no longer a necessity. It was not issued unless it was called for. After still another century, in 1562-63 process against all kinds of witnesses was allowed, requiring them to come in not with the jury or as a part of the jury, but to testify before them in open Court, and then the old procedure of summoning such witnesses with the jury seems to have died out. Such process against witnesses says Cole (1 Inst 6 b published in 1628) referring to the old process 'has vanished'. There was never a time when such witnesses, the regular transaction witnesses, could not in one way or the other be summoned and compelled to come in. As regards ordinary witnesses to the jury, compulsory process seems not have existed before 1562 (St 5 Eliz c 9 s 6). Since 1518 the attendance of the transaction witnesses might be dispensed with if they could not be got, but the necessity of summoning them existed for most of this long period. As late as the early part of the eighteenth century it was doubtful whether a deed could be proved at all if the attesting witnesses came in and denied it. Half a century later Lord Mansfield, while reluctantly yielding to what he stigmatized as a captious objection, that you must produce the witness declared that 'It is a technical rule that the subscribing witness must be produced and it cannot be dispensed with unless it appeared that his attendance could not be produced. And still a generation later, in 1815 Lord Ellenborough (in R v Harringworth 4 M & S 350) in asserting the same thing savagely thrust out all arguments against this doctrine, and slammed the door on them. 'The rule' he said 'is universal that you must first call the subscribing witness. If any general rule is to prevail, this is certainly one that is as fixed formal and universal as any that can be stated in a Court of Justice.'" Thayer Prel Tr Et pp 502, 503.

Reason and Policy of the old Rule. Strictly speaking there is no sufficient reason to maintain the original rule as stated by Lord Ellenborough (in R v Harringworth 4 M & S 350), as a part of the new and ratiocinative system of evidence that began to be formed by the end of the 1700's. So on this point there is considerable difference of opinion among the great Judges. Not being able to make a departure from long tradition, insufficient and inconsistent reasons for enforcing the rule have been laid down in support of it. The rule is thus stated by Lord Ellenborough L C J in R v Harringworth 4 M & S 350. 'In as much as they are plighted witnesses, the knowledge they have upon the subject is essential, and if it can be procured must be forthcoming'. See also Barnes v Trompously, 7 T R 265. In Gerapuli v Wieler 10 C B 690, 696 his attendance was insisted upon because 'he is the witness agreed upon between the parties'. Whynau v Garth 8 Exch 803. Some of the Judges assigned the reason of the rule to the convenience of cross-examining an attesting witness as to the circumstances of the execution. In Manuvers v Portan 1 Esp 241, Manley L C J said 'The rule was founded on the principle that there should be an investigation from the subscribing witness of what took place at the time of the execution of the instrument. The same reason is reiterated by Le Blanc J in Call v Dunning 4 Ex 54 where he said "A fact may be known to the subscribing witness not within the

S 68 knowledge or recollection of the obligor, and he is entitled to avail himself of all the knowledge of the subscribing witness relative to the transaction." See also per Altwist J in Abbot v Plumble 1 Doug 216. The objections to this reason are numerous. First it is inconsistent with the rule it elf, for the rule applies even where fraud, duress, and time are not in issue and even where the maker himself is competent as a witness. Again the attesting witness is in practice not usually a person who knows anything about the circumstances preceding the document's execution or knows more than any other person who by being present could be a qualified witness. Finally if the witness does possess special knowledge about some affirmative issue, the opponent is the proper person to call the witness, if he desires him. So this rule has no justification in its original broad form. Wignmore § 1283.

Reason of the departure from the old rule, and Principle underlying the section. "We do not purpose to meddle with the preappointed evidence of execution required either by the Legislature or by persons creating powers but we think it deserving of serious consideration whether this formal proof of the execution of written documents may not in other cases be dispensed with, where the execution is either admitted or capable of other proof. The principle on which the necessity for producing the attesting witness rests is that the witness is supposed to be conversant with all the circumstances under which the deed was executed. But it is notorious that in practice the attesting witness in the majority of instances knows nothing of the transaction, the instrument having been prepared a clerk, a servant or a neighbour is called in to attest it. Added to which as parol testimony is not admitted to contradict or vary the terms of a written instrument the occasions are few indeed where the evidence of the attesting witness goes further than to prove the execution of the writing. On the other hand the necessity of calling the attesting witness, where the execution of the document is not the real matter in dispute and where there are no concomitant circumstances to be inquired into is often attended with difficulty and expense and sometimes leads to the defeat of justice. Cases have occurred where in tracing a title numerous witnesses from distant parts have been rendered necessary to prove the formal execution of deeds though their execution was not really in dispute and the handwriting to all might have been proved by a single witness and doubtless would have been admitted but for the difficulty which it was thought could by the existing rule be thrown in the way of the party alleging title. It also sometimes happens in the course of a cause that the adversary's case renders it necessary to give in evidence a document which it was not supposed would be required, or a document is produced by a witness on his subpoena which turns out contrary to the expectation of the party requiring it to be attested the attesting witness is not at hand yet the signature of the party might be easily proved or the witness producing the instrument may have heard him admit the execution nevertheless the document cannot be received and the party requiring it loses his cause. When the genuineness of the document is not really in dispute it is clear that the parties ought not to be limited to any particular witness to prove the execution. When the genuineness is in dispute the party producing it will be sure to call the attesting witness and the absence of the latter would throw the greatest discredit on the instrument. We therefore recommend that except in cases where the evidence of attestation is requisite to the validity of the instrument an attesting witness need not be called. Common Law Procedure Commission Second Report (1853) p 23, Wignmore Cases p 246.

Attestation of documents—calling of witnesses. No document can be used in evidence unless its genuineness has been either admitted or established by proof and this proof should be given before the document is accepted. Sections 65 to 72 lay down some elaborate provisions as to the calling of attesting witnesses when the genuineness of the document has to be proved. Varley p 61. Those sections have no direct bearing on the question as to whether the attestation is according to law. Bal Krishna v Narain Shah 13 N. L. R. 21. Section 72 lays down that an attested document not required by law to be attested, may be proved as if it was unattested. Section 68 is applicable to cases where a document is required by law to be attested Kumari v Ghugi 109 Ind Cas 57 But even in such a case it is not necessary to call an attesting witness in proof of the execution of the document, not being a will required by law to be attested, unless its execution by the person by whom it purports to have been executed is specifically denied Lalho Tevari v Lalitkoeri 101 Ind Cas 622 = A I R 1927 Pat 403 To prove wills required by law to be attested, an attesting witness should always be called, if there be an attesting witness alive, and subject to the process of the Court and capable of giving evidence Tula Singh v Gopal Singh 1 P L J 369, Karimulla v Gudar, 82 Ind Cas 306 Where all the attesting witnesses are unavailable, it is sufficient to prove the hand writing of one and the execution of the document by other evidence (Id s 69) But execution of a document will be sufficiently proved when it is admitted by the party himself who has executed the document (Id s 70) So also where a document is thirty years old the Court may in its discretion presume the genuineness and due execution as well as attestation of the document (Id s 90) The Court shall presume also that every document called for and not produced after notice to produce, was attested, stamped and executed in the manner required by law (s 89) This presumption cannot be rebutted by the party who has not produced it, after due notice, in as much as he cannot use it afterwards as evidence without the consent of the other party or the order of the Court (s 164) When the attesting witness denies the execution of a document or does not recollect it its execution may be proved by other evidence (Id s 71)

Scope of section 68 The object of placing more than one attestation upon a document whether at the parties voluntary instance or by requirement of law is ordinarily not to demand the combined testimony of all at the trial but merely to provide by way of caution a number of witnesses, so that the contingencies of death, removal of residence and the like may be guarded against and one witness at least may be available But a main object in statutes requiring attestation as an element of validity is to surround the act of execution with certain safe guards the object of securing evidence for litigation is a secondary one Wigmore § 1804 In Wright v Tatnam 1 A & E 3, 23 Tindal C J said "It may be observed, however that the Statute of Frauds did not look primarily to the mode of proving the Will when contested, but to the security of the testator at the time of the execution of the Will the statute intending that three witnesses should be in the nature of guards or securities to protect him in the execution of his Will against force or fraud or undue influence The proof of the Will by the three witnesses supposing it should afterwards come in contest only is in incidental and secondary benefit, derived from the mode of attestation It is well settled that in an action at law it is sufficient to call only one of the subscribing witnesses, if he can speak to the observance of all that is required by the statute" Doe v Lewis 7 C & P 574 In Bullen v Michel 4 Dow 297, 331, Lord Eldon said "They usually call one witness leaving it to the other side, if they think proper, to call the other witnesses According to English common law the rule was the same so far as other documents required to be attested were concerned Holdfast v Douling 2 Str 1251 But in English Courts of Chancery, the practice seems to have been to call all the required number of attesters at least unless the Chancellor's discretion was exercised to the contrary Wigmore § 1304 see also Ogle v Cool 1 Ves Sr 177 Grayson v Allinson 2 Ves Sr 454 460, Binfield v Lambert 1 Dick 337 Bad v Butler 1 Dick 337 Poncel v Cleaver, 2 Bro C C 449 504 Fitzherbert v Fitzherbert, 1 Bi C C 231, Carrington v Payne 5 Ves Ir 404, 411 Bootle v Blundell 19 Ves Ir 494 Winchelsea v Manchope, 2 Russ 441 Tatham v Wright 2 Russ & Wyl 1 & 16 According to section 68 of the Evidence Act to prove the execution of a document required by law to be attested, at least one of the attesting witnesses must be called to prove the execution of the document if any such witness be available A proviso to this section has been added by Act 31 of 1926 Now it is not necessary to call the attesting witness in proof of the execution of a registered document, not being a Will unless its execution by the person by whom it purports to have been executed is specifically denied Lalho Tevari v Lalit Koeri, 101 Ind Cas 622 = A I R 1927 Pat 403 This section applies only to cases where a document is required to be attested There is no rule of law in force in the Punjab which requires bahis entry to be attested at all Kanwar Ram v Ghugra, 108 Ind Cas 57 = A I R 1928 Lah 118. A mortgage deed signed by the mortgagor was attested by three witnesses. In a suit on mortgage its execution was not specifically denied but the plaintiff sought to prove the same. Two of the attesting witnesses having been dead the third was called, but he deposed that he attested the deed in the absence of the executant. It appeared however that one of the attesting witnesses who were dead had appeared before the sub Registrar and attested the mark by the executant. The execution was also spoken to by the writer of the document who was examined as a witness. Held that under this section it was not necessary to prove the attestation because the execution of the mortgage was not specifically denied. Yalub Khan v Guljar Khan, 52 B 219 = 30 Bom L R 565 = 111 Ind Cas 287 = A I R 1928 Bom 267. An account book is not a document which required by law to be attested and this section has no application to a case in which such account book is produced in evidence. Emperor v Anboda Prasad A I R 1930 All 39. There is no law which requires the attestation of a sale deed so far as the Punjab is concerned. This section has therefore no application to sale deeds in that province. Ukharaja of Farukot v Anant Ram A I R 1929 Lah 1. Out of the three attesting witnesses being alive the plaintiff called one witness and when he failed the plaintiff proceeded to prove the document by other evidence. Held there was a full compliance with the provisions of ss 68 and 71. Hanson Ali v Gurudas Kapali A I R 1929 Cal 188 = 33 C W N 248 = 49 L L J 16. Where no attempt is made to prove a mortgage deed either by calling in an attesting witness or even by putting any question to the scribe of the deed, who was examined as a witness, regarding the attesting witnesses or attestation, the document cannot be used as evidence. Juan v Dalip Singh, A I R 1929 All 389 = 27 A L J 599. The amendment by Act 31 of 1926, is a provision relating to procedural law and not a substantive law and therefore must be taken to be retrospective in operation. Thayammal v Muthu Kumar Suami A I R 1929 Mad 881. Where the executant of a mortgage deed, the writer of the deed and the attesting witnesses have all died, having regard to the new definition of attestation in s 3 F P Act and to the varied mode of proving a registered document as amended by s 68 Evidence Act, it is sufficient to satisfy the Court that the execution which was not specifically denied was so probable that a prudent man might under the circumstances of the case to act upon the supposition that it was so executed. Paramal v Abdul A I R 1929 Sind 235. To satisfy the requirement of this section an illiterate attesting witness who put his mark in the mortgage deed can be called. Chunayyal v Poona 12 A L J 1114. Sections 68 to 71 of the Evidence Act deal with the manner in which the fact of execution may be proved by witnesses or by admission and have no direct bearing on the question as to whether the attestation was according to law. The sections proceed on the assumption that the attesting witnesses referred to are attesting witnesses within the meaning of the law requiring the document to be attested. If the fact that there are any valid attesting witnesses is denied it has to be proved like any other disputed fact. If the execution is admitted no other proof of mere execution is required and if the document on its face purports to have been attested by the required number of attesting witnesses and if it is not denied that they were attesting witnesses then the question of valid attestation does not arise or if it be considered that it arises then the maxim omnia praesumentur rite esse acta comes in. If however it is denied that the attestation was according to law the person relying on the deed as an attested deed must prove this like any other fact which is not admitted. Even if due attestation is not denied but evidence on the subject is given the Court cannot ignore the evidence. There can be no due attestation without execution, and if due attestation is not proved or disproved, the fact of execution is of no avail so far as the validity of the deed as a mortgage deed is concerned. Lalishan v Naram Sha 13 N L R 21. By the terms of this section when its provisions are not complied with a document cannot be used as evidence at all as a document either requiring attestation or in fact attested but this does not prevent it from being used in evidence as something else or for any other purpose. Section 68 is subject to the limitation

S 68

117, that if the documents were tendered in some other proceeding for the purpose of proving the handwriting of the scribe, it could not be objected to upon the ground that no attesting witness being called to prove it, it could not be used in evidence at all Moti Chand v Lalla Prosad, 10 A 256=16 A L J 121=11 Ind Cas 596 The law as laid down in s 63 of the Evidence Act is imperative and does not on the face of it admit of any relaxation except in the cases provided in ss 69, 70 and 71 of the Evidence Act Sadhanya v Gora Chandra Paul, 35 C L J 473=27 C W N 131=65 Ind Cas 86 Where a mortgagor admits having signed the mortgage sought to be enforced but couples it with a denial of the presence of the attestors at the time of signing the mortgage, the mortgagees must prove the execution of the mortgage by calling at least one attesting witness to prove the attestation Ajaya Chandra v Kailas Chandra, 36 C L J 373=27 C W N 263=70 Ind Cas 532 Where there is no proof of execution of a Will the identification of the handwriting of the attestors does not prove execution by the testator Khan Chand v Ali Jawahar, A I R 1923 Lah 174 The direction in section 68 of the Evidence Act is mandatory and there is no distinction drawn by the section, between documents which are the basis of a suit and those whose production is required for a collateral purpose, so far as their admissibility is in question Azadh Ram v Mahbub, 79 Ind Cas 725=10 O L J 525=A I R 1921 Oudh 525 Section 68 of the Act applies both to primary and secondary evidence Sheik Karimullah v Gudar, L R 5 A 636=A I R 1925 All 56 The provisions of s 68 are mandatory and it is not controlled by s 90 The mere fact that the only surviving attesting witness is considered hostile by the party does not relieve him from the duty of examining him as a witness, nor is it enough that summonses and warrants had been issued, upon the witness and the witness had failed to appear but the process of the Court such as are mentioned in Order XVI rule 10 Civil Procedure Code, have all got to be exhausted Gobinda Chandra Pal v Pulin Behari 31 C W N 215=93 Ind Cas 147=A I R 1927 Cal 102 In a mortgage suit the plaintiff may to rebut this evidence of the only attesting witness who gives evidence, call the writer to prove that the document was executed by the mortgagor and attested by two attesting witnesses It is not necessary in such a case that the writer should also be an attesting witness Lalshman v Krishnaji, 105 Ind Cas 769=29 Bom L R 1425

Attestation, meaning of In this Act there is no definition of this word 'attestation' In the Transfer of Property Act, there was also no definition of the term attestation The definition of 'attested' has been newly added to the Transfer of Property Act by Act XXV of 1926 That definition has been taken verbatim from section 63 of the Indian Succession Act (XXXIX of 1925) "Attested in relation to an instrument means and must be deemed always to have meant attested by two or more witnesses each of whom has seen the executant sign or affix his mark to the instrument, or has seen some other person sign the instrument in the presence, and by the direction of the executant or has received from the executant a personal acknowledgment of his signature or mark or of the signature of such other person, and each of whom signed the instrument in the presence of the executant but it shall not be necessary that more than one of such witnesses shall have been present at the same time and no particular form of attestation shall be necessary (Section 3 of the T P Act) In Byram v White 14 Jur 919=2 Rob Ecc Rep 315, D. Lushington observed 'Attest' means that persons shall be present and see what passes and shall when required bear witness to the facts' So 'attest' means merely to act as a witness which might be done without subscription Rickets v Lophus 4 Y & C 919, Freshfield v Reed, 9 M & W 401, Burdett v Spilsbury, 10 Cl & F 340, Hudson v Parler, 1 Rob 14, Ford v Kettle L R 9 B D 139 But upon the construction of the Act it is clear that no attestation will satisfy the requirements except through the outward mark of subscription Per Sir C Cresswell in Charlton v Hindmarsh 23 L J P 132 'To attest is to bear witness to a fact Take an example, a notary public attests a protest, he bears witness not to the statements in that protest, but to the fact of the making of those statements, so I conceive the witness in a Will bears witness to all that the statute requires attesting witnesses to attest, namely,

S. 68 that the signature was made or acknowledged in their presence" Hudson v Parker, 1 Rob 14 (26) In Roberts v Phillips, Lord Campbell Chief Justice, enunciated the same rule as regards the word "attested" that the witnesses should be present as witnesses and see it signed by the testator. And the principle was given effect to in the House of Lords in Burdett v Spilsbury, 10 Cl & F 310. There the Lord Chancellor summed up the conclusion in these words: "The party who sees the Will executed is in fact a witness to it, if he subscribes as a witness he is an attesting witness. The attestation of certain mortgage deeds by two witnesses required by section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act is attestation of the actual fact of the execution." Shamji Patter v Abdul Hadji, 16 C W N 1009 P C. The witnesses must see and be conscious of the act done and be able to prove it by their own evidence: they must be both mentally and bodily present, for if not they might be asleep or intoxicated or of unsound mind. Per Dr Lushington in Hudson v Parker, 1 Rob at p 24. In Kellett (1864) 3 S & J 578 Sir Gorell Barnes said: "You cannot be a witness to an act that you are unconscious of." In my view, at the end of the transaction the witness should be able to say with truth 'I know that this testator or testatrix signed this document'. A witness should be present at its execution and should testify that it has been executed by the proper person. Freshfield v Reed, 9 M & W 104; see also Sharp v Bach, 8 Q B D 111. Ramu v Laxman Row 33 B 41=10 Bom L R 913, Dahchand v Latu, 41 B 405, Badi v Abdul, 35 A 256. Sashubhusan v Chandra 33 C 681, Harabibi v Ram Hui 30 C W N 361 (P C). Again in the cases of Lord v Kettle, 9 Q B D 139 and Roberts v Phillips 1 L & B 150=24 L J Q B 171, it was held that to attest an instrument was not merely to subscribe one's name to it as having been present at its execution but included also essentially the presence in fact at its execution of some disinterested person capable of giving evidence as to what took place. These cases contemplate as a requisite of a good attestation that the document must have been executed in the presence of an attesting witness who subscribed his name to the instrument in token of this circumstance. Sarunigga Begam v Borada Kant, 37 C 526=11 C L J 563=14 C W N 794, see also Ganga Parshad v Ishri Pershad, 45 C 748=27 C L J 548. Deonaram v Kalur, 24 A 319 (F B). Priantishna v Jadunath 2 C W N 603, Grindia v Bejoy, 26 C 246=3 C W N 84, Diononoo v Danbehary 7 C W N 160, Sashubhusan v Chandra Peshkar, 4 C L 41=33 C 861.

In William v Margus of Bath L R 1 Eq 17 (24) it was ruled by Romilly J R that co-executants cannot be regarded as attesting witnesses because they do not sign the deed for the purpose of attesting the execution, but with the object of conveying the interest they have in the property to transfer. The same view is supported by the case of Seal v Claridge 7 Q B 516 where Lord Selborne held that a person who is a party to a deed cannot be regarded as an attesting witness on the ground that if the person for whose benefit the instrument is executed is allowed to be an attesting witness, the very object of attestation, namely the prevention of fraudulent mal practice, may be completely defeated. The principle on which the rule is based was clearly set forth in the case of Amuel v Woodworth 58 Ohio 86. "The true reason of the disqualification is that to permit a grantee to attest as a witness the execution of an instrument made to himself or take its acknowledgment as an officer, where its attestation and acknowledgment are necessary to give it validity, would be against public policy, and practically defeat the real purpose of the law which is to prevent the perpetration of frauds on grantors and afford reasonable assurance to those who deal with or on the faith of such instruments that they are genuine and represent bona fide transactions." This view was emphasised in the case of Donoran v Saint Anthony Co 5 N D 595 (Am) where it was observed that if the contrary view were maintained the provisions of a statute requiring the execution of a mortgage to be attested by two witnesses, might be nullified, and as illustration it was observed that "a mortgage may be given by two persons to a third the mortgagee may attest and the mortgagors one for the other then a person may give one mortgage to two persons, these two may furnish the attestation an interpretation of the statute which renders such a contingency possible is clearly inadmissible, because, there would be no guarantee of the bona fides of the transactions" This line of reasoning appears to be based on good sense, and is consistent with the principles of justice, equity and good conscience, according to which the Indian Courts are bound to decide Per Moolerjee J in Sunirigun Begum v Baroda Kant Miller 11 C L J 563 (572)=37 C 326=14 C W N 974 S 68

Presence meaning of—Signature of a Purdanashin lady—how to be attested Succel in his Law Dictionary states, that when A executes a deed in the presence of B, and B signs his name on the document as a token of his having witnessed A's execution, B is said to attest the execution. The Standard Dictionary defines attestation to be the subscription by a person of his name to a written instrument, to signify that the same was executed in his presence. See also Body v Halse (1892) 1 Q B 203. Now the question is when may an instrument be deemed to have been executed in the presence of a witness. It may be generally stated as the result of the decisions, that presence involves two ideas, namely, mental cognition of the act and physical contiguity. In other words the person in whose presence the act is done must be able mentally to know what is being done and what is done in the presence of a person, must take place in physical proximity to him, though it is impossible to lay down any inflexible rule as to what degree of proximity is essential. This may be illustrated by a reference to three leading decisions on the subject which will show, to what extent judicial decisions have gone. In one of the earliest cases on the subject, Casson v Dade, 1 Bro C C 99, it was held that when the testatrix sat in her carriage opposite to the window of the attorney's office, in which the Will was attested, the attestation was valid because the testatrix might see the witnesses through the windows of her carriage and of the office. Again in Newton v Clavie, 2 Curt 320, a testator intending to execute a codicil signed the same while lying in bed, there being present in the room the two witnesses who attested the codicil, the curtains at the foot of the bed were however drawn at the time to screen the testator from the fire place, the result was that one of the witnesses could not actually see the testator sign his name nor could the testator see that witness subscribe the codicil as attesting it. Sir Herbert Jenner held that the codicil was validly attested as the testator and the witness signed their names in the presence of each other. In the case of Re Percy 1 Rob 278, Sir Herbert Jenner first expressed the opinion that he would be prepared to hold, if necessary, that where the testator is blind, the witnesses may be said to have attested in his presence, provided the position of the witnesses be such that the testator, if he had his eye sight, might have been able to see them sign. The principle deducible from these cases clearly supports the view that where, according to the custom of the country, purdanashin ladies are unable to appear before male witnesses, a document which by independent testimony is conclusively proved to have been executed by a purdanashin lady, may reasonably be deemed to have been attested by witnesses who were present outside the purdah, and who before attestation satisfied themselves that there was no fraud and that the document had been actually executed by the lady screened off from their gaze. Sunirigun Begum v Baroda Kant, 37 C 526=11 C L J 563. This view has also been adopted by Biel J in the case of Harmongal v Ganouli Singh 13 C W N 40 and by Stephen and Chatterjee JJ in Isi Prasad v Gunga Prasad, 11 C W N 165. A mortgage deed was taken for execution behind the purdah to a purdanashin lady. Her son came from behind the purdah and said that it had been signed by her. The witnesses thereupon affixed their signatures to the document, though none of them saw her sign it. Held that there was no valid execution of the document as it was not attested as required by section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act. Rai Ganga Pershad v Isher Pershad 22 C W N 697=48 C 748=34 M L J 547 P C, see also Hua Bibi v Ram Hari, 5 Pat 58 (P C)=89 Ind Cas 659=A I R 1925 P C 203. A mortgage executed by a purdanashin lady was attested by her husband and another witness. The husband actually saw the signature being made and the other witness was outside the screen in the same room with the lady and he knew her voice and heard her say yes when the document was explained to her. Held that the document was duly attested in accordance with law. Rukmani v Nilmani 19 C W N 1309. See also Syed Zahir v Mathusudan, 4 Pat L W

5 68

117 = 15 Ind. Cas 691 Padarnath v Ram R 196 = 66 Ind
99 P C = 17 A 171 Bhu Radha Kishore v Jagadhin not necessary that the attes- witnesses s L R 196 = 66 Ind
sign the document Kavandabai v Ganga 16 N L R 196 = 66 Ind

The object of attestation is that some was signed voluntarily Samyugar v made should The attesting to show whether made should in bonis Murphie
bons Strae

[illegible]

Robert v. Phyllis, Davies v. Hemlota Davi, 1-29 Ind Cys 743, Martin v B 357, son (1907) 2 fr R 480, Altes 3 B 357, low execution Fernandez v Dayamoni, 5 C 576,
C R 322, Bissonth v Dayamoni, 5 C 576,
C L R 303 The witnesses must sign is such Attestation by a scribe A scribe may be an attesting witness if he puts his signature in such after seeing the execution of the document. Paramasa v

Krishna 41 W 535-43 Ind C 933, Jagannath v Bayrang 15 C 61-62 Ind
Cys 97 T R Kum v Md Karam 5 Bu L J 65-A. I R 1927 Smd 118, Appasame
Dhanadas v Ramonath, 19 S L P 321-A. I R 1927 Smd 118, Abinash v
Khalasa 26 Ind Cys 409 Jagendra of the scribe to sign is not an attesting witness must be shown or presumed. Badi v Abdul, 35 A 281 Terapanayan Dasaiah 32 C W N 1228 The intention of the scribe to sign is proved to have signed witness must be shown or presumed. Badi v Abdul, 35 A 281 Bryan v White, 2 Rob
v Madhu Karuppi, 19 Ind Cys 389-24 M L J 534 Bryan v White, 2 Rob
1 Ind 315. A competent attesting witness is one who is proved to have signed the document qua witness in recognition of a document and whose name or of which he had received the execution of a document and in whatever manner is as a who is present at the deed, for whatever purpose and in whatever manner is as a appears at all on the deed, for whatever purpose and in whatever manner is as a mitter of it is a good attesting witness. Abinash v Krishna, 32 C W N 1228, see also Rajnarayan v Abdul, 5 C W N 451, Jagannath v Bayrang, 11 W 535, Damayee v Boubahary 5 C W N 160, Jagannath v Krishna, 41 C 61. Where the name of the scribe upon who wrote the document appeared under a separate heading styled "scribe" apart from the signature of the only other person who signed as a matter of construction, capable of being read signature of Abinash v Dasaiah 32 C W N 1228 see also Ram Bahadur
v Appala 29 C W N 699-31 Ind Cys 370 Datchand A. I R 1927 Smd
Arab v Mangal C L R 152 Dharmdas v Ramonath A. I R 1925 Oudh 734. A
Arab v Samyul v Manath 2 O W N 853-A. I R 1925 Oudh 734. A

scribe who executes the mortgage deed on behalf of the mortgagor cannot be a competent attesting witness. Rajani v Panchananda 23 C W N 90=48 Ind Cns 720, Paban v Ralhal 34 C L J 498 Upendra v Hukam, 46 C 522, Sristidhar v Rashakali, 49 C 438, but see Pran v Jadu 2 C W N 603. In a case, the scribe of a document which was required by law to be attested, signed his name at the end of the body of a document but above the executant's signature. Held, that such signing did not constitute the scribe an attesting witness within the meaning of this section. Bahadur v Balchand, 5 N L R 3=1 Ind Cns 179, but see Ram Sahu v Gauri Shankar, 39 Ind Cns 153. Where a person who has signed a deed as a scribe subsequently asserts that he signed as a witness the onus of proving this assertion lies very heavily on him. Nageshwar v Barlu 4 Pat L J 511=53 Ind Cns 79. A Court will be loath to hold that in any case a scribe who ever he wrote his name, could be considered to sign the document as an attesting witness unless he actually said so in the document. There is a very great difference between an attesting witness and a scribe and it would seem to me that it would lead to attempts to evade the plain words of s 59 and would also lead to constant difficulties thereafter if the law was not strictly observed since parties might think that they were executing a valid mortgage if only one outside person was brought in to witness the document and evidence would have to be called to show that the scribe as a matter of fact signed as an attesting witness. Per Macleod C J in Dakh Chand v Shivram, 14 B 403=22 Bom L R 136=55 Ind Cns 616. A scribe who executes a document for and on behalf of the executant is not a person who sees what passes or "sees it executed," when he himself does the very thing to which he subsequently signing as a witness he professes to bear witness. Sristidhar v Ralsha 1 Ind, 63 Ind Cns 507.

Attestation by a Sub Registrar The registration of his Will by a testator and his signature to a certificate of admission of execution, testified by the signature of the Sub Registrar, and of a witness is a sufficient attestation to satisfy the requirements of section 63 of the Succession Act. Amarendha v Kashi, 27 C 169. If a testator, on presenting his Will for registration admits his signature on the Will to be his before a Registrar and is identified before him by a witness and both the identifier and the Registrar signed their names on the Will as witnesses to the admission of the testator, such attestation is sufficient to satisfy the requirements of s 63 of the Succession Act. Nitya v Nagendra 11 C 129, Sarada v Triguna 1 Pat 300 Rajendra v Menola 1 Pat L R 267, Hortosundari v Chander, 6 C 17=6 C L R 303, In re Roymonce 1 C 150 Harendra v Chandra, 16 C 19 Mohammad v Ali Haidar, 12 O L J 1= A 1 R (1925) Oudh 337 Mu Syed v Tanyaba 1 O L J 591=26 Ind Cns 547, Theresa v Frances 45 B 989=23 Bom L R 399. But a Sub Registrar before whom execution of a document was admitted cannot be taken to be a good attesting witness in the absence of proof that he affixed his seal or signature in the presence of the executant. Abmash v Daswath, 32 C W N 1223, but see Radha v Nripendra, 47 C L J 118.

Personal acknowledgment "What is the plain meaning" asked D. Iushington in Hudson v Parler (1844) 1 Rob 11 at p 25 "of acknowledgment, a signature in the presence of witnesses? What do the words import but this: 'Here is my name written. I acknowledge that name so written to have been written by me, hear witnesses? How is it possible that the witness should swear that my signature was acknowledged unless they saw it?' They might swear that the testator said he acknowledged a signature but they could not depose to the fact that there was an existing signature to be acknowledged. In a later case of Blake v Blake, (1882) 7 P & D 102 at p 107 per J. J. A. observed. What is in law a sufficient acknowledgment under the Statute? What I take to be the law is correctly laid down in Jarman on Wills (4th Ed p 108=6th Ed p 113) in the following terms: 'There is a sufficient acknowledgment unless the witnesses either saw or might have seen the signature, nor even though the testator should have expressly declared that the paper to be attested by them is his Will and I may add in my opinion it is not sufficient even if the testator were to say 'My signature is inside the paper' unless the witnesses were able to see the signature. But the view expressed by Jessel M J was not adopted in certain cases. When the attesting witnesses to a Will duly executed on the face of it did not recollect having seen the testator's signature to the Will when they subscribed their names as witnesses the Court held that it was at liberty to judge from the circumstances of the case whether it was probable that the testator's name was on the Will or not at the time of the attestation, and being of this opinion it was pronounced for the Will. Guillan v Guillan 15 A T 200-29 L J P 311 (see also Beckett v Hume 21 L J N S 100 where Lord Penance said: 'The doctrine of Guillan v Guillan is this: that if the testator produces a paper and gives the witnesses to understand it is his Will and gets them to sign their names that amounts to an acknowledgment of his signature, if the Court is satisfied that the signature of the testator was on the Will at the time. In Blake v Blake (1852) 7 P & D 110 Jessel M J considered the case of Guillan v Guillan and Beckett v Hume and observed: 'I cannot find one word in the judgment of Guillan v Guillan to show that Sir C Cresswell was of opinion that if the witnesses were unable to see the signature the testator saying he had signed would be sufficient. I do not think that the decision bears out the interpretation put upon it by Lord Penance namely that there was any new doctrine laid down in that case different from the doctrine of Hudson v Larley supra. The existence of any such doctrine rests entirely upon the statement of Lord Penance in Beckett v Hume (supra) and as I think there was no sufficient ground for that statement I am of opinion that the case of Beckett v Hume is no authority. In the same case Brett J observed: 'It has been brought to this. Where the witnesses cannot see there cannot be an acknowledgment but that when the signature is there and they see or have opportunity of seeing it, then if the testator says this is my Will or words to that effect that is sufficient acknowledgment, although he does not say this is my signature. See also Wright v Anderson, (1851) 9 P D 119 at p 153. In Dunnegey v Pasalo, (1859) 13 P D 102 at p 103 (also J J took a similar view. Similarly in Holt v Genge (1812) 3 Carr 160 at p 172. See H J Just and. The production of a Will by the testator it having his name upon it, and a request to witness to attest it would be a sufficient acknowledgment. In In the Goods of Thompson, 4 N C 613 the same learned Judge also said: 'When a paper is produced by a testator to the witnesses with his name signed there to and they have an opportunity of seeing his name and they attest the same by subscribing the paper they being present at the same time, this is sufficient acknowledgment of his signature by the testator. See also Edmund v Phagendras, 15 Bom L R 209-19 Ind Cas 401. Manichai v Hormuzi 1 B 547. Huro Sundari v Chunder Kant 6 C 17. Nitya Gopal v Nageswara Nath, 11 C 49, Amarendra v Kashi Nath 27 C 169. Attestation in the presence of a testator on acknowledgment of signature or execution is sufficient attestation. Amcer Chand v Mohanandi 6 C L J 153. Muttonath v Jitendra 19 C W N 1295. Sabitra v Sati 19 C W N 1297-29 Ind Cas 743. The definition of attested has been added by the Transfer of Property Amendment Act XXVII of 1926 since the passing of that Act attestation by a witness can be made if he receives a personal acknowledgment from the executant, of his signature. Prior to the passing of that Act the mortgagor was to put his signature in the mortgage deed before the attesting witnesses. A mere acknowledgment of his signature was not sufficient, Inde Shanu Pattar v Abdul Kadir 31 M 215 affirmed in 35 M 607 P C, Sahedha v Rajaram 11 A L J 757, Hirabibi v Ram Hari, 5 Pat 58 (P C)=A I R 1925 P C. Arjun Chandra v Kailash Chandra 27 C W N 263, Ravi v Lakshmanrao 33 B 41. Badri v Abdul 35 A 254. Radha v Chum 14 A L J 361=35 Ind Cas 197. Sam Rao v Vannayee, 46 M 61 (81). Parama sua v Krishna 41 M 535. Abdul Karim v Salimam 27 C 190, Girindha v Bijoy 26 C 246. Ahemchand v Maltoo 10 N L R 71. Pubbidas v Sahub Khan 18 C L R 282, Quah Cheng v My Po, 66 Ind Cas 589. Godanary v Samrat 68 Ind Cas 195, Chikambaram v Subbaraghara 16 Ind Cas 207. Anrappa v Bheerappa 44 B 231. In re Vetalapathi 8 Ind Cas 887. Periannal v La Thau 43 Ind Cas 916. These rulings have now been made obsolete by Act XXVII of 1926. Prior to the passing of that Act, the law was the same as regards attestation of a deed of gift by a witness on the acknowledgment of the donor. Such attestation was held to be not valid attestation. Ide Amarappa v. Raghava 44 B 231, Saheda v. Rajah Ram 11 A L J 757 = 21 Ind Cas 85. In re Ichmapallu Peda, 9 M L T 57 = 8 Ind Cas 587, Baynath v. Buaya 2 Pat 52(61). These rulings are no longer good law. S 68

S 68.

Section 68 before amendment by Act XXXI of 1926 By Act XXXI of 1926 the proviso has been added to the section. Before this amendment under the provisions of this section evidence could not be admitted to prove the signature of the attesting witnesses until the absence of all the attesting witnesses had been duly accounted for. Sumanidin Singh v. Kaniz Fatima 11 Ind Cas 225. Where only one attester proved a mortgage bond attested by more than two witnesses and when its due execution was not denied held that having regard to s. 68, the document may be taken as properly proved. Annad Kishore v. Kance Ram 29 C 355 = 6 C W N 395. Under the provisions of the old section 68 evidence could not be admitted to prove the signature of the attesting witnesses until the absence of all the attesting witnesses had been accounted for. Sumanidin v. Kaniz 11 Ind Cas 225. A mortgage bond purported to be executed by three persons who were all dead at the time of the suit. The signature of each of them was represented by an irregular scribble such as might be made by an illiterate person and against each of these marks there was a statement that it was the mark of one of the executants the name being given in each case. These statements were proved to have been written by a deceased professional bond writer who wrote the whole document in the ordinary course of his business. The two attesting witnesses also were dead and the signature of each of them was satisfactorily proved to be in his handwriting. Held that there was sufficient proof of the execution of the bond and that the statement in writing of the deceased bond writer was relevant under s. 32(2) of the Evidence Act. Haria v. Manalchand 11 N L R 9 = 27 Ind Cas 866. Where the only living witness of a document was illiterate and on being examined denied its execution. Held that the document could be proved by other evidence. Badr Prasad v. Gambhu, 26 Ind Cas 500. Section 68 of the Evidence Act is imperative. So long as there is a witness alive and subject to the process of the Court no document which is required by law to be attested shall be used in evidence until one such witness has been called. The fact that, when called he will prove hostile does not excuse the plaintiff of his duty. Tula Singh v. Gopal Singh, 1 Pat L J 369. Sections 68 and 69 read together were intended to lay down how a document which was required by law to be attested could be proved and the intention was, that if the provisions of the sections as to proof were complied with the document, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, must be considered proved, and that it was not the intention of the legislature that an attesting witness or some other witness should have to prove further that the document was in fact signed by the mortgagor in the presence of at least two attesting witnesses. Ram Das v. Muma Lal, 14 A L J 1011 = 39 A 109, see also Shib Dnyal v. Sheo Ghulam 15 A L J 164 = 39 A 211 = 38 Ind Cas 691. Where a mortgage bond was produced regularly signed and attested and it was proved that the signatures of all the attesting witnesses who were dead were in their handwriting and that of the mortgagor was in his handwriting, held that there was a presumption of its due execution and it lay upon the other side to rebut it. Uttam Singh v. Hulam Singh, 15 A L J 167 = 39 A 112 = 38 Ind Cas 651. It is not necessary that two attesting witnesses should be called when two are alive nor that even assuming that one only need be called he should not least be made to prove that another attesting witness besides him-self saw the execution. Tenlata v. Mathu, 39 M L J 463 = (920) M W N 512 = 58 Ind Cas 801. Mere proof of admission of the genuineness of the signature of the executant of a document does not dispense with the proof of its proper attestation if the document is one required by law to be attested before it can effectuate a transfer. Naram Singh v. Deputy Commissioner, 55 Ind Cas 701. The evidence of the attesting witness to a mortgage deed that he saw the executant sign is under section 68 of the Evidence Act, sufficient to prove the execution of the mortgage and the document can be accepted by Court as prima facie sufficiently proved to be a valid mortgage. This prima facie proof may be rebutted by proof on the other side that the other witness or witnesses who has or have apparently attested the document did not really see its execution. Venkata Reddy v. Muthu Pambullu 39 M L J 463 = (1920) M W N 512. In a suit upon a mortgage bond which was attested by four attesting witnesses, including one of the defendants who was alone alive at the date of the trial the plaintiff is bound to summon and examine the defendant who was the attesting witness. The fact that he was a defendant will not absolve the plaintiff from calling an attesting witness, the provision of section 68 being mandatory. Dhwa Singh v. Moti Lal, 2 Pat L T 614 = 63 Ind Cas 266. In order to prove a mortgage one of the attestors if alive must be called and execution proved and it must also be proved that the execution was in the presence of two attesting witnesses and if all the attesting witnesses decide the requirements of the law would be satisfied by any evidence showing that the document was executed in the presence of two attesting witnesses. Perumal Chettiar v. Raghava Chettiar, 14 L W 563. Where evidence of the execution of a deed is available which if tendered would satisfy the requirements of s 68 of the Evidence Act, the Court is justified in refusing to draw the presumption under s 90 of that Act nor can such presumption be invoked in favour of the deed nor would such presumption be justified in favour of the authority of a person to sign for an illiterate executant. Raghubar v. Sanual 8 O I J 23 = 61 Ind Cas 125. Where the only living attesting witness to a mortgage deed who had to be and was called by the mortgagee to depose to execution and attestation in a suit brought by the latter upon the mortgage was got at by the opposite side and in cross examination denied the clear evidence he gave in examination in chief about execution as well as attestation. Held that the sworn evidence given by the witness in examination in chief can be acted upon by the Court. Thanuon v. Bommaladerava, 14 L W 344 = (1911) M W N 747.

S 68

The death of attesting witnesses to a document must be proved by proper legal evidence not by hearsay. The fact that an attesting witness cannot be found must be proved to the satisfaction of the Court by evidence of a strict, diligent and honest search. A witness is subject to the process of the Court if it can be compelled to attend the Court to give his evidence. Asoomah v. P. S. R. Chetti, 1st Bur L T 114 = 61 Ind Cas 637.

To prove a deed of gift the production of a witness who identified the donor and also the attesting witnesses when the deed was being registered and who was known personally to the Sub Registrar together with an entry in favour of the donee in the village records in succession to the donor, is sufficient compliance with the provisions of the law. Pantab Bahadur v. Ramdas 60 Ind Cas 234 = 2 U P L R 100.

Where an attester denies having witnessed the execution of a document it is open to the parties to let in other oral evidence to show that the attester did as a matter of fact see the execution and was an attesting witness. Sashimul hi v. Von Mohun 67 Ind Cas 87. The production of one attesting witness satisfies the requirement of section 68 of the Evidence Act and from a mere failure to do more than is required of the mortgagee and to produce both the witnesses even if he knows where the other is it cannot be inferred that the mortgagee is intentionally keeping back the other and that there his evidence would damage the plaintiff's case. Lakshminarayan v. Mondari Zahurul A I R (1923) Nil. 322. Except in the case of an admission as under section 70 at least one attesting witness should be examined to prove the execution of the document. The mere fact that the document was allowed to go in at the trial without objection cannot take the place of proof of execution of the document. Purnan Prasad v. Bijn Kuer 5 Pat L T 7 = 101 Ind Cas 277 = A I R 1927 Pat 131. But the question of attestation being a mixed question of law and fact cannot be raised for the first time in second appeal. Trulands Thelan v. Subramania Iyer, 97 Ind Cas 611 = 1926 M W N 559. Evidence of attestors to mortgage deed is indispensable unless it is impossible to produce them. Karimulla v. Gular Kocer A I R 1925 All 56.

Required by law to be attested. The term "required by law to be attested" means required by law of the country where the property is situate.

Elu abeth May Toomey v Bhupendra Nath Bose, 7 Pat 520=111 Ind Cis 57= A I R 1928 Pat 304 In that case Dawson Miller C J said "It was next contended that the indenture of 20th June 1926 was not properly proved as neither of the attesting witnesses to Mr Macrae's signature had been called nor had the handwriting of either of such witnesses been proved as provided by s 68 and 69, of the Evidence Act. It may be stated that Mr Macrae executed the document in England. It was then sent to India to be executed by the other trustees. It is admitted that such a document does not require attestation in this country. All that was necessary therefore was to prove the signature of Mr Macrae which was done, but it was argued that his signature required registration under English law, and as Mr Macrae executed the document in England it was one which by law is required to be attested. Whatever conflicting views may have been expressed as to the proper law to apply to contracts in relation to law where the lex loci contractus and the lex loci rei sitae or as Professor Dicey calls it, lex situs differ it seems to be generally agreed by Storey Dicey, Weistat and other text writers that in so far as the formalities of alienation or conveyances are concerned the law applicable is that of the country where the land is situated, (see, Dicey Conflict of laws Ch 23 and Appendix Note 17) The case of Adams v Clutterbuck 10 Q B D 403 supports this view and no case has been drawn to our attention which conflicts with it. Similarly in Robinson v Bland, 2 Burr 1079 Lord Mansfield said "In every disposition of contract where the subject matter relates locally to England, the law of England must govern, and must have been intended to govern. Thus as to conveyances or Wills of land, the local nature of the thing requires them to be carried into execution according to the law here." So also in Butchistie v Tardil, 5 B & C 451, Abbott C J said "The rule as to the law of the domicile has never been extended to real property. Is there any authority that the law of England as to any lands in England, is to adopt the law of a foreign country?" The English tribunals are equally liberal in regards their respects to foreign law where the immovable property is situated in a foreign country. In Waterhouse v Stansfield, 10 Hare, 251, Turner V C said "When the law of a foreign country places a restraint upon the alienation of the property of a debtor situate in such country, an equity arising here on a contract entered into in respect of such property cannot be enforced against the lex loci rei sitae."

A surety bond, so far as it creates a mere money or personal liability, does not require to be attested, and s 68 does not therefore apply. Sanatan v Dina Nath, 26 C 223=3 C W N 228

An unattested mortgage document cannot be proved even as containing a personal covenant to pay. Section 68 of the Evidence Act excludes it. Madras Deposit and Benefit Co v Poonnaiah Ammal 18 M 29. It is impossible to view the question of the execution with reference to the covenant to pay as severable from the execution of the document in so far as it creates a security. Vinappa v Chinnu Muthu, 2 M L J 175=17 M L J 213=30 M 251

In order to prove a sale deed, it is not necessary, under this section to examine a marginal witness, as the sale deed is not a document which is required by law to be attested. Gopal v Bishunath, 10 Ind Cis 64

This section only applies to cases where a document is required to be attested in the manner provided by law and it can not be admitted in evidence unless one of the attesting witnesses is examined. Mathura Prasad v Chhedi Lal, 13 A C J 553=29 Ind Cis 363

The provision of this section does not apply to the Will of a Hindu, and so an admission by the defendant, in a suit by the testator was held to be relevant in a later suit to prove the Will. Nayban Bibi v Sayyad Para 1 O C 408

Waiver of objection Where no objection was taken to the admissibility of a mortgage deed in the Court of first instance on the ground that the deed had not been proved by the examination of one attesting witness at least as provided in s 68 of the Indian Evidence Act the objection must be considered to have been waived and could not be taken in appeal. Tonnammal v Kalathura, 13 M L J 143

S 68

Effect of document not properly attested A document which is inoperative as a mortgage by reason of its not being properly attested can not take effect as creating a charge under section 100. Transfer of Property Act Debendra Chandra v Behari Lal, 16 C W N 1077=15 Ind Cas 666, Roxmudi v Kali Nath 33 C 935=1 C L J 219 Samoo Putter v Abdul 31 M 215, Collector of Muzapur v Bhagwan Prasad 35 A 161 (F B)=11 A L J 141=18 Ind Cas 311, Anantaram v Yussuff 31 M L J 133=36 Ind Cas 903, Pinnath v Jadu, 32 C 729, Ramnarayan v Adhunda 44 C 388 (P C) Official Receiver v Irtihadas A I R 1927 Sind 66, Khemchand v Mallool, 10 N L R 81, Pribidas Sahibhan, 93 Ind Cas 660=18 S L R 282, Narayan v Lal Jmaldas 7 Bom L R 931

But a mortgage which is not attested or attested by only one witness is admissible as evidence of a personal covenant to pay the amount contained therein whether such a mortgage is registered or unregistered. Pulala Vietu v Thiruthi palli 32 M 410 (I B) (Madras Deposit and Benefit Co v Oonamalar 19 M 29 overruled), Sada Kannu v Padepathi, 30 M 284, Ram Narayan v Adhundanathi, 44 C 388 (P C), Sonatur v Dinonath 26 C 222, Dhana v Nastulla 92 Ind Cas 948 Tafaladdi v Mohan, 26 C 78, Dullim v Behari, (1919) Pilt 279 Konu v Fum of M 43 M L J 475 Mathura v Cheddi 13 A Lee J 553=29 Ind Cas 363, Keri v Clara Burton 4 C L J 510, Dullim v Behari 1919 Pat 279, Quah Chang v My Po 66 Ind Cas 589

Transfer of property Amendment Act (XXVII of 1926) whether retrospective The Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act (XXVII of 1926) was passed in order to declare what the meaning of the word 'attested' is in the Transfer of Property Act and in no sense alters or amends the law. It is retrospective in its operation and applies to pending actions. Per Devadoss J in Balaji Singh v Challa Gangamma 51 M L J 641=99 Ind Cas 113 So this Act applies to cases pending in the appellate stage at the date of its passing. Mohammad v Kashanpadaya, 96 Ind Cas 775=A I R 1926 All 725 But in Gujanandan v Hanuman Das, 49 A 25=99 Ind Cas 161=24 A L J 921=A I R 1927 All (F B) a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court, held that the Act is not retrospective in its nature and is such it does not apply to documents executed prior to its coming into force (Walsh J C J and Mukherji J dissenting), see also Sheo Dutt v Ganga 100 Ind Cas 651 Act XXVII of 1926 was amended by Act X of 1927 and in the definition of the word "attested" after the word means, the words and shall be deemed always to have meant was inserted. "This amendment was necessitated by a ruling of the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad to the effect that the present definition does not apply in the case of instruments attested before the passing of Act XXVII of 1926. — Vule Statement of Objects and Reasons of Act X of 1927 The Calcutta High Court decided the case of Radho Mohan Dutt v Arjendra Nath Nandy 105 Ind Cas 122=31 C W N 160 (n) on the 23rd June 1927. In that case B B Ghose and Roy JJ held, (1) that in view of the definition of the word 'attested' in the Amendment of Act XXVII of 1926 given a retrospective effect by Act X of 1927 the Sub Registrar before whom the executant admitted execution of the deed was a good attesting witness (n) that by Act X of 1927, the definition of the word 'attested' in the Amendment Act XXVII of 1926 has been made applicable to transactions (however ancient they may be) that took place before the amendment and to which the Transfer of Property Act is applicable. But in another case of the same High Court decided on the 3rd May 1927, i.e. after the passing of Act X of 1927 Panton and Miller JJ held that Transfer of Property Amendment Act (XXVII of 1926) is not retrospective in its operation. Achar v Sayer, 103 Ind Cas 662=A I R 1927 Cal 763=31 C W N 128 (n) It seems that Act X of 1927 was not brought to their lordship's notice and as such they did not consider the effect of that Act. The Repealing and Amending Act (XII of 1927) was passed on the 8th September 1927. By section 2 and Schedule of that Act sections 3 and 4 and the Schedule of 'The Repealing and Amending Act 1927 (X of 1927) were repealed. Now the question is what is the effect of this amendment. All the three amending Acts came to the consideration of a Divisional Bench of the Madras High Court in Palanappa Chettiar v Rya gopala I ambarathar A I R 1923 Mad 773. In that case the Court observed

If that Act had retrospective effect the attestation in the present case would be adequate but it was held by a Full Bench in the Allahabad High Court in Girja Nandan Kaluar v Hanuman Das, A I R 1927 All 1=49 A 25 (F B) that Act 27 of 1926 had no retrospective effect and this was followed by a Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Nepa v Saye Paramanul, A I R 1927 Cal 763. The same point was considered by the Bombay High Court in Matlal v Karambhar, A I R 1928 Bom 16, but was not decided on the ground that Act 10 of 1927, which had been passed before the decision in that case made the definition of "attested" retrospective. The judgment is a very brief one and there is no discussion at all of the effect of Act 10 of 1927, it being remarked that the 1926 Act was merely a case of bad drafting which has now been amended by the 1927 Act so as to run in the ordinary form. A contrary view was held by a single Judge of this Court in Balaji Singh v Gangamma, A I R 1927 Mad 87. However, what we have now to consider is not Act 27 of 1926, but the latest Act 12 of 1927. Under Act 10 of 1927, Act 27 of 1926 was amended as follows: "In s 2, in the definition of the word 'attested' after the word 'means' the words 'and shall be deemed always to have meant' shall be inserted. This in turn gave the definition retrospective effect, and, had that amendment stood alone, there would have been no doubt whatever on the question. That amendment was, however, inserted in this Act in the middle of a large number of amendments relating to the military and an force and s 1 of that Act was enacted at the same time which prescribes as follows—

"This Act shall not affect the validity, invalidity, effect or consequence of anything already done, suffered or any right, title, obligation or liability already acquired, accrued or incurred, or any remedy or proceeding in respect thereof or any release or discharge of or from any debt, penalty, obligation, liability, claim or demand or any indemnity already granted or the proof of any past act or thing."

"This saving clause which possibly was enacted with a view to saving the amendments in the Acts relating to military and air force must also apply to the amendment of s 3, T P Act, and consequently it would appear that after making the new definition retrospective the Legislature determined that that should not affect the validity, invalidity, effect or consequences of anything already done or suffered or any proceeding in respect thereof. It would therefore seem to exclude any inference with any transaction already effected or any proceeding taken in connection therewith. Consequently, the mortgage deed which was executed in 1917 if not valid at that date, would not be validated by this Amending Act. This fact seems to have been recognized by the Legislature, for five months later Act 12 of 1927 was enacted which is a general Repealing Act and under which portions of over 100 Acts are repealed and amongst these are ss 3 and 1 of Act 10 of 1927. By repealing s 4 of Act 10 of 1927 that Act would have its retrospective effect restored but in Act 12 of 1927, the saving clause contained in Act 10 of 1927 is repealed almost verbatim. This saving clause, therefore enacts that the repeal of ss 3 and 4 of Act 10 of 1927, which would have made that Act retrospective, is not to have that effect for Act 12 of 1927 cannot revive or restore any right, title, etc. The effect therefore of this legislation would seem to be to provide that the new definition of 'attested' is not to have retrospective effect so as to prejudice any existing right or any act done in the past. If therefore, Lx A, the mortgage deed was not valid when executed for want of proper attestation the subsequent legislation will not make it valid. But the view expressed by their Lordships in this case is no longer good law as it was overruled by implication in a subsequent Full Bench case of Jeerappa Chettiar v Sulramanya A I R 1929 Mad 1=55 M L J 791 (F B). In that case the question referred to the Full Bench for decision was—

"Whether Acts 27 of 1926, 10 of 1927 and 12 of 1927 are retrospective in their nature so as to apply to documents executed on a date prior to their coming into force."

Court—Trotter C J on behalf of the Full Bench answered the question as follows: "The Acts are retrospective. We should have thought that Acts

- S 69 27 of 1926 and 10 of 1927 showed a clear intention that they were to be regarded as retrospective but the terms of Act 12 of 1927 preclude further discussion. See also S M Fom v R M Tom, 7 R 772=109 Ind Cas 169=A I R 1925 Rung 101, Phayammal v Muthu Kumar Saami, 30 L W 677=A I R 1929 Mad 841=17 M L J 788, Parganah v Jagannath, 27 A L J 1091=118 Ind Cas 663=A I R 1929 A 680

Proviso The words 'specifically denied' mean specifically denied by the party against whom it is sought to be used. So far as any rule of pleading requires that the execution of a document named in the declaration must be expressly traversed the failure to plead in denial must under such a rule, be equivalent to a confession of the allegation of execution in the declaration, and thus the execution is not in issue on the trial and as such the rule laid down in the section does not apply. In Cool v Fransuell 8 Faunt, 450 Gibbs C J said 'In cases where non est factum is not pleaded, I never yet heard it contended that it was necessary to call the subscribing witnesses.' Similarly Lord Ellenborough C J in Williams v Gills, 2 Camp 519 said "The defendant by refraining from the plea of non est factum' has only admitted so much of the deed as is expanded upon the record, and if the plaintiff would avail himself of any other part of the deed he must do it by the attesting witness in the common way. See also Gillet v Abbott 7 A & E 783

69 If no such attesting witness can be found, or if the document purports to have been executed in the United Kingdom, it must be proved that the attestation of one attesting witness at least is in his handwriting and that the signature of the person executing the document is in the handwriting of that person

Principle 'It has long been unquestioned that the attestation of an attesting or subscribing witness to a document may be used when the attester is unavailable in person as evidence of the document's execution and according to the orthodox form of preferred witness rule the attestation must even be used in preference to other testimony.' Wigmore § 1505. The reason is that the attestation is in effect the extrajudicial statement of the attester to the fact of due execution admitted under the hearsay exception and being admissible so far as concerns the Hearsay rule it is governed, so far as concerns the rule underlying section 68, by the general principle in regard to the number of attestors required to be called. It is short if one attester suffices on the stand one attester suffices when allowed to speak extrajudicially in the attestation clause. Wigmore § 1306. 'Proof of the signature of a deceased subscribing witness is presumptive evidence of everything appearing upon the face of the instrument relative to its execution as it is presumed the witness would not have subscribed his name in attestation of that which did not take place. The attestation comes in by way of substitution for his oath. Per Nelson C J in Loosee v Lossee, 2 Hill 609. The act of attesting an instrument is regarded as a written declaration of the subscribing witness to which the law, in the event of his death or absence yields a reluctant credit by way of necessary substitute for his oath. Mr Hill's Note on the case Wigmore § 1505. So this extrajudicial statement expressed or implied is always, when the attester is unavailable, admissible by exception to the Hearsay rule. The question there is not merely whether it is admissible but whether it is preferred to any other testimony to the maker's execution. It is assumed that the attester is personally unavailable, and that the rule of preference is therefore to that extent disposed of so that if nothing more belonged to the rule use could now be made of any competent testimony to prove the maker's execution. Is it, then, further a part of the rule of preference that, before thus going to other testimony the attester's hearsay must be used? Stated in this way, the precise and singular nature appears of the supposed requirement of proving the attester's signature. That a preference should be given to any extrajudicial statement over testimony on the stand under cross examination is an extraordinary measure, assuming for such a statement a value not at all to be attributed ordinarily to such statements. Nevertheless, such a preference unquestionably existed as a part of orthodox common law rule in England. Wigmore § 1320. But this section requires that the signature of the maker also as well as that of the attester must be proved. This contention means in effect that another witness to the maker's signature must be called, for (as has just been noted) the attestation is the attester's testimony to the fact of execution, i. e. the placing of the signature by the purporting maker. If, then, it is necessary to call a second witness to the maker's signature, this must be on the supposition that the testimony of the attestation taken alone, does not go far enough in its implied or expressed statements. This is indeed the ground upon which in part the above contention has been rested. It argues first, that the attestation, while asserting execution by a person of a certain name does not sufficiently identify that person with the party in the case. It argues further more, from the point of view of policy, that a person might be bribed to make a false attestation to a forged maker's signature and then to abscond, leaving it feasible to prove the document against a deceased person by establishing the attester's genuine signature. Wigmore § 1513. Whitelocke v. Musgrove 1 Cr. & M. 520. In that case Bayley B said: "I have always felt this difficulty that that proof alone (of the subscribing witness's handwriting) does not connect the defendant with the note. What is the effect which, with the greatest degree of latitude can be given to the attestation of the subscribing witness? It is that the facts which he has attested are true. Suppose an attestation of an instrument which describes the person executing it as A B of C in the county of York. Then the utmost effect you can give to the attestation is to consider it as establishing that A B of C in the county of York executed the instrument. But you must go a step further and show that the defendant is A B of C in the county of York, or in some manner establish that he is the person by whom the note appears to be executed. Now what does the subscribing witness in this particular case attest? Why, that this instrument was duly executed by a person of the name of Francis Musgrove. There may be many persons of that name, and if you do not show that the defendant is the Francis Musgrove who executed the instrument, you fail in making out an essential part of what you are bound to prove. It is not sufficient for the subscribing witness merely to prove that he saw the instrument executed. Why? Because it is an essential part of the issue which you are bound to prove, that the instrument was executed by the defendant in the suit. It seems to me, therefore on principle, that you must give some evidence of the identity of the defendant with the party who has signed the instrument. Wigmore § 1513. If the document was executed outside the county, the presumption is that the subscribing witnesses are non residents and the rule does not apply [McLinn v. O'Connor 27 Cal. 239 (1st)] and in such cases it is sufficient to prove the handwriting of the party to the instrument. Lurr Jones § 529.

Attorney's Hearsay Statement—How admissible. Upon the general principle already noted at p. 468, the attorney's hearsay statement cannot be used unless the attester is unavailable for the purpose of giving testimony in person. The question is what is the circumstantial guarantee of trustworthiness (Id. p. 468) that the attester did not sign his name as attester to a document which he did not see executed by the purporting maker? The circumstances tending to trustworthiness seem to be four. (1) The occasion is a formal one, and the statement requires a writing, and there is commonly a radical disinclination to take part in a false transaction of such a sort. (2) The concoction of a false document will either fix an innocent party with a false obligation or will divert legitimate heirs of their rights and there is a natural repugnance to giving assistance in such a wrong. (3) The making of a false attestation, whether or not it is in criminal law a forgery or a perjury is popularly supposed to be such and the attester would probably be at least an accomplice in a forgery, so that substantive sanction deterring from a crime would probably operate to prevent a false attestation. (4) The attester knows that he is liable at any time to be called upon in Court to substantiate his attestation, and not only in his falsity likely there to be exposed by the opponent's witness, but he will there be obliged either to commit perjury by swearing to the fact of execution or to undergo the disagreeable ordeal of recanting and confessing his falseness. — There is thus a combination of circumstances which easily accounted for the establishment of this exception to the Hearsay rule. Higmore § 108

S. 69

Scope of the section By the strict rule of the common law the primary or best evidence to prove the execution of a deed or other writing, required by law to be attested is generally the testimony of subscribing witnesses if available or if not then proof of his handwriting, if that is feasible. Although the rule under discussion was declared by Lord Ellenborough to be a fixed, formal and universal as that can be stated in a Court of Justice (Per v. Haringworth 1 Muhl & S. 325) yet it has several qualifications and exceptions. The rule does not apply if the subscribing witness is dead (Adam v. Kerr, 1 Bos & P. 360), or can not be found (Salmon v. Roberts 9 M & W. 167 = 11 L. J. 1 v. 150. Parler v. Hosham 2 Immt. 223. Burt v. Walker 4 Barn & Ald. 697) or is without the jurisdiction of the Court (Prince v. Blodturn 2 East 250. Grubb v. Edwards 2 Moody & R. 399. Baynes v. Brompshay 7 L. R. 265). Nor does the rule apply if the attesting witness is insane (Beunet v. Taylor, 9 Ves. 351. Clarke v. Child 3 Camp. 293. Adam v. Kerr 1 Bos & P. 360) or incompetent (Goss v. Tracy, 1 P. Wms. 289) or otherwise incapable of being produced as a witness (Clarke v. Courtney, 5 Pat. (U.S.) 313. Steph. Dig. I., tit. 66. Nor does it apply if the instrument is lost and the name of the subscribing witness be unknown. Keeling v. Ball Penke Ad. Cas. 89. Hewitt v. Morris, 5 Jones & S. 18, Burr Jones § 728, Taylor § 1551. An attesting witness who is not within the jurisdiction of the Court is universally regarded as unavailable and proof of that fact lets in secondary evidence. It is equally well settled that when a document produced at a trial discloses that the execution and attestation occurred in a foreign country it is to be presumed at least in the absence of contrary evidence that the subscribing witness is then out of the jurisdiction of the country. Boswell v. First Nat. Bank 16 Wyo. 161 (1st), Burr Jones § 529. In Clerk v. Courtney 5 Pat. (U.S.) 319. Storey I said: 'Where the subscribing witness is dead or cannot be found, or is without the jurisdiction or is otherwise incapable of being produced the next best secondary evidence is the proof of his handwriting, and that when proved affords prima facie evidence of the execution of the instrument, for it is presumed that he would not subscribe his name to a false attestation. If upon due search and enquiry no one can be found who can prove his handwriting there is no doubt that resort may then be had to the proof of the handwriting of the party who executed the instrument, indeed such a proof may always be produced is corroborative evidence of its due and valid execution though it is not except under the limitations above suggested primary evidence. In order that a case may attract the operation of this section it must be proved that no such attesting witness can be found.' In other words, before a party can rely upon this section he must ask the Court to exhaust all process of the Court as by adopting the procedure laid down in Order 16 rule 10, C P C for the arrest of the witness and for the attachment of his property. Shah adl Begum v. Syed Mahomed Qasim, 7 Pat. 312 = 110 Ind. Cas. 756 = 4 I. R. 1928 Pat. 356.

A mortgage has to be proved in cases where the mortgagor does not admit execution. If no attesting witness can be found s. 69 applies, but if found and he denies execution section 71 comes into play. Where the fact of execution has been admitted before the Registrar the Court of fact can consider it. Balnram v. Kamaha 1924 Nag. 367. Sections 68 and 69 of the Evidence Act read together were intended to lay down how a document which was required by law to be attested, could be proved, and the intention was that if the provisions of the sections as to proof were complied with the document in the absence of evidence to the contrary, must be considered proved, and that is was not the intention of the legislature that an attesting witness or some other witness should have to prove further that the document was in fact signed by the mortgagor in the presence of at least two attesting witnesses. Ram Dei v. Minna Lal 14 A. L. J. 1041 = 39 A. 109. When the Court of first instance comes to a finding as to a document having been legally proved within the meaning of this section, it cannot be legally interfered with by the appellate Court specially when no objection was taken to the admissibility of the document at the time of the hearing. Manch Konda v Achi Appalaswamy, 32 Ind Cas 760 A man who puts his mark on a mortgage deed as a witness is an attesting witness within the meaning of s 69 of the Evidence Act. Churani Lal v Poona 12 A L J 1114 The requirements of s 69, with reference to proving the attestation of at least one attesting witness when all the attesting witnesses are dead, are sufficiently complied with by proof of the handwriting of the scribe and by the fact that some of the attesting witness is signed by the pen of the scribe. Kishna Jua v Bishnath, 31 A 615=10 A L J 217 All the witnesses and the executants of a mortgage deed, on which the executants had made marks only having died, evidence was given to prove the handwriting of some of the marginal witnesses and the Court was asked to presume execution as the document had been admitted by one of the executants in certain other document tendered in evidence and proved. Held, that the evidence adduced did not comply with the requirements of s 69 of the Evidence Act and the document could not be taken to have been proved. Gobardhan v Hari Lal, 11 A L J 379=19 Ind Cas 121=35 A 361 In England it is recognized that there is a distinction between proof of the handwriting of a person and presumptive and other evidence that a document had been executed. The Indian Law does not appear to allow a party to rely on presumptive or other evidence of execution where he is unable to comply with the provisions of s 69 of the Evidence Act. Ibid Under the provisions of this section evidence could not be admitted to prove the signature of attesting witnesses until the absence of all the attesting witnesses had been duly accounted for. Suamudin v Kanur 11 Ind Cas 221 see also Nampurumal v Irahara, 14 L W 563 This section no doubt requires proof that the signature of the executant is in his handwriting but this fact may be proved indirectly by a contemporaneous admission of execution made by an executant or by other relevant facts, such as his subsequent conduct, just as well as by the evidence of a witness who directly swears to his signature. Such an admission recorded by the Sub Registrar in his registration endorsement can be accepted in evidence as proof of execution. Jyuthia v Jagannath, 20 O C 15=38 Ind Cas 605 In the expression 'it must be proved that the attestation of one attesting witness at least is in his handwriting' 'handwriting' could probably be held to include in the case of marks made by his mark. Whitley Stiles, Vol II p 894, see also Piran Krishna v Jadhawan, 2 C W N 603

Diligence necessary, if witness is absent. Although it has been held in many cases that secondary evidence is admissible where the subscribing witness is proved to reside beyond the jurisdiction of the Court yet the mere temporary absence of the witness beyond the jurisdiction of the Court (Wills v Felt 8 Johns (N Y) 121] or his absence in a distant part of the country are not sufficient. McLard v Johnson 4 Bibb (Ky) 731 The absence of the witness is sufficiently accounted for if, after diligent enquiry he cannot be found. Clark v Sanderson 3 Binn, Pt (192) Cumtiffe v Sefston 2 East 182 Cosby v Perry 1 Launt 361 Dulley v Summer 5 Mass 438 Morgan v Morgan 9 Bing 359 Francis v Curtis 2 Car & P 296 Laight v Dor, A & L 22 Whitelock v Musgrove, 1 C & M 511 What is due diligence must of course depend somewhat upon the circumstances of each case. The proof should show satisfactorily that a reasonable honest and diligent inquiry has been made. After such proof is given the decision of the question depends to a considerable extent upon the sound discretion of the Court. Jackson v Burton 11 Johns (N Y) 61 Such an enquiry should be in due reason (Wills v Felt 8 Johns (N Y) 121] and in good faith at the place of residence of the witness, if known, and of the persons most likely to know of his whereabouts. Jackson v Hallion, 13 Wend (N Y) 178 The answers to such inquiries are treated as part of the res qd fac and may be given in evidence. Greenleaf Fr § 574 What is sufficient proof of the search for an absent witness in order to admit secondary evidence of the signature depends somewhat upon circumstances. When the witness has a fixed residence within the country the rule should be more strict than where the defendant had no fixed residence, was a labouring man, working about from place to place, as he could obtain employment Gallagher v London Assur Corp 149 P 25 Parties will be required to use a less degree of effort to produce the subscribing witness if the proof shows that the witness is seeking to avoid appearing Wardell v Fermor, 2 Cramp 282 If it is shown that there is collusion between the witness and the adverse party, or that such party has prevented the attendance of the witness, the rule will not be enforced Wills v Trust 8 Johns (N Y) 121, Burr Jones § 529, see also Thannesa v Bonma Deirara, (1912) M W N 747 Death of attesting witness must be proved by legal evidence Amoomeah v Chetti, 61 Ind Cas 637

S 70

Attester must be Competent at the time of Attestation If the attester was at the time not qualified as a witness his statement is not admissible The usual instance of this has been the case of a disqualification by interest Sune v Bell 1 R 371 If the attester was then qualified, but has since become disqualified to take the stand, his attestation is receivable because it speaks as from a time when he was qualified Wagnone § 1510

70 The admission of a party to an attested document of its execution by himself shall be sufficient proof of its execution as against him, though it be a document required by law to be attested

Admission of execution by party to attested document

Scope of the Section Section 22 and section 65 (b) of the Evidence Act relate to admission as to the contents of a document Whitley Stokes Vol II p 594 The term 'admission' in this section relates only to the admission of a party in the course of the trial of a suit, and not to the attestation of a document by the admission of the party executing it Ibdul Karim v Salman 27 C 190 Budha v Senan 7 N L R 85 The expression 'execution by himself' is evidently distinguished from the execution by witnesses which is known as 'attestation' Jhama v Deobu, 2 N L R 10 (16) 'Section 70 of the Indian Evidence Act lays down that the admission of a party to an attested document of its execution by himself shall be sufficient proof of its execution as against him though it be a document required by law to be attested Now the question that immediately arises on the application of this section is as to what is meant by execution' and as I understand the law the word 'execution' there means the party by affixing his signature or mark has signified his assent to the contents of the document and if a party admits that he has done this then he admits execution I do not think that the admission of execution can be taken to mean an admission not only of the signature or mark in token of assent by him but also that all the legal formalities connected with the document have been complied with Nor do I see any reason for holding that where a party admits execution within the meaning of this section he must necessarily be taken to admit that the document has been attested as required by s 59 of the Transfer of Property Act Per Crump J in Jagannath v Raju 24 Bom L 1296 = 47 B 147 = 76 Ind Cas 73 So section 70 of the Evidence Act is not sufficient to dispense with the necessity of proof of attestation by two witnesses to make the mortgage bond valid under s 59 of the Transfer of Property Act the only object of s 70 being to make the admission of the executant sufficient proof of execution Jogendra v Nitai 7 C W N 384 But in Satschandra Nitai v Jogendra 24 C W N 1044 = 24 C I 1 175 Mr Justice Woodhouse said "That decision (Jogendra v Nitai supra) is open to this construction that even when the executant admits execution his admission or proof of execution or signing only does not dispense with proof of attestation If this be the meaning of that judgment I am unable to agree with it I think that the admission of the executant has the effect of dispensing with the proof of attestation as against him I say if the admission of execution is to be understood only in the sense of an admission of signing then there is no necessity of section 70 at all regard being had to the general provisions of the Evidence Act relating to admission This is also indicated by the last words of section 70 though it be a document required by law to be attested' This view is approved in Nitai v Sanchandra 22 C W N 444 = 41 Ind Cas

934, Paban Khan v. Bodal 34 C L J 493 Ishwari Lal v. Mussamat Nanhi, 64 Ind Cas 11=19 A L J 815=44 A 127, Ajrun Singh v. Kalai Rath 2 Pat 317=74 Ind Cas 150=1923 P 436, Benoybhusan v. Dhruendia Nath, 38 C L J 114=74 Ind Cas 178, Imji Rhu v. Va tung, 1 Rang 557, Nagesuar v. Buchu, 4 Pat L J 511=53 Ind Cas 79, Priyanath v. Bissessai 1 C W N 600, Dhanua Lal v. Shambhu 47 Ind Cas 9, Nagesuar v. Buchu 4 Pat L J 511. But in a recent case the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council has held that this section applies to a document duly executed Hua Bibi v. Ram Han, 30 C W N 364 (P C)=5 P 53 P C =23 A L J 815=52 I A 362=2 O W N 641=6 P L T 71=27 Bom L R 1114=42 C L J 148=89 Ind Cas 679=49 M L J 240 (P C)=A I R 1925 P C 203. This section applies only to document which is duly attested Mg Po Gyi v. Mg Min Din 5 Rang 561=104 Ind Cas 386=A I R 1927 Rang 233. See also Vadia v. Dna 11 Ind Cas 785, Naram v. D C, 55 Ind Cas 501. So admission can not make valid a document which is invalid in law Sheikh Kachru v. Md Ali 1 C L J 577. No admission of execution is effectual under this section unless it amounts to an acknowledgment of the formal validity of the instrument Ajrun Chandra v. Kailash Chandra, 36 C L J 373. The admission by a mortgagor of the execution of a mortgage deed before the Court, does away with the necessity of proving its execution but not with the necessity of such attestation as is required by law Pandurang v. Bilaji 14 C P L R 42. Under this section the admission of execution of a mortgage is sufficient proof as against the executant himself but there is no authority for the proposition that the document is for that reason binding upon the other defendants who were not parties Ajrun Singh v. Kali Rath, 2 Pat 317=74 Ind Cas 150=1923 P 436 Goddhan v. Harilal 35 A 364=19 Ind Cas 121. Where a party to an attested document admits its execution a third party is not bound by it Nagesuar v. Beela Singh 1 Pat L J 511, Nibaran v. Ram Chandra, 22 C W N 444=44 Ind Cas 984. An admission by the representative of a party to an attested document cannot be treated as an admission of the party to an attested document of its execution by himself Benoy Bhusan v. Dhruendianath, 74 Ind Cas 178=38 C L J 114. There was a clear admission of execution in the written statement. The attesting witness called stated that the executant did not sign the deed in his presence. Held that the document must be taken to have been proved Ramlal v. Must Septi 94 Ind Cas 558=A I R 1926 Pat 295.

Admission when to be made. The term "admission" in this section relates only to the admission of a party in the course of a trial of a suit Abdul Karim v. Saliman, 27 C 190. Such admission can be made by a party in his pleadings or in his examination Raymangal v. Mathura 30 Ind Cas 576=99 A I=13 A L J 881 Must Surja v. Motulhar 13 N L R 197 Budha v. Saruan, 7 N L R 85, Harilal v. Phalur 34 Ind Cas 231=19 O C 23. But in Nagesuar v. Buchu Singh 4 Pat L J 511=53 Ind Cas 79, Atkinson J said "I am of opinion that Abdul Karim v. Saliman supra and Raymangal v. Mathura 38 A I=13 A L J 881=30 Ind Cas 576 which decided that an admission under section 70 of the Evidence Act of 1872 to be admissible in evidence can only apply to an admission in fact made in the course of legal proceeding then pending before a Court of Justice cannot be supported on principle or authority. It authority were needed to refute such a proposition I think authority may and can be found in the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Konar Dooganath v. Ramchander Sen 1 I A 52=2 C 241 in Humpleton v. Wallis, 27 Ch D 251=54 L J Ch 1175 and also in Gobindhan Das v. Harilal, 19 Ind Cas 121=35 A 364=11 A L J 379. In my opinion an admission under section 70 is admissible in evidence even though it be an admission not made in the course of legal proceedings then pending before a Court of Justice, but which may be an admission made antecedent to the institution of legal proceedings. This construction of section 70 of the Evidence Act as to what constitutes an admission to be admissible in evidence is in harmony with the definition of an admission contained in sections 17 to 20 inclusive of the Evidence Act itself, and is in accordance with the general principle. But in a later Privy case it has been held that this section relates to the admission of the party in the course of the proceedings in which

S 71 the document is produced made either in the proceedings or in the evidence Banum Prasad v Bignu Kwar 8 Pat L 17=101 Ind Cas 277=A I R 1927 Pat 131, see also Deorao v Dhandrao, 109 Ind Cas 576=A I R 1928 Nag 244, Hanital v Phalun Bag 19 O C 23=31 Ind Cas 281. An admission can be made in a written statement Ram Lal v Septi 91 Ind Cas 558=A I R 1926 Pat 295=1926 P II C C 117, Iyerati v Esmail A I R 1929 Cal 441=49 C L J 317. But an admission of execution of a document before a Sub Registrar does not amount to an admission of a valid execution which is the admission referred to in section 70 of the Evidence Act. Prihdas v Sahib Khan 93 Ind Cas 660=18 S L R 282=A I R 1926 Sind 90, Deorao v Dhandrao, 109 Ind Cas 576=A I R 1928 Nag 244, Bulha v Saman 7 N L R 8.

Proof when attesting witness denies the execution

71 If the attesting witness denies or does not recollect the execution of the document, its execution may be proved by other evidence

Principle The notice of the rule of Preference for the attesting witness is that of the general desirability in furtherance of truth of obtaining his knowledge on the subject. What may be the tenor of witness's testimony remains to be seen. The object of the law is to obtain his knowledge, irrespective of the side in whose favour it may bear. The rule is satisfied by calling him, and by making his testimony available for the trial. If his testimony fails to evidence the execution the present rule says nothing about the consequences—whatever any other rule may say. The present rule's force is absolutely spent when witness is produced for examination. So the attester's positive denial of the facts of execution, contradicting the statements implied or expressed in his attestation leave the proponent still free to prove by other testimony if he can this fact of due execution. A permission demanded not only by principle but also by policy, in as much as the proponent might otherwise be defeated of his rights by a corrupt attester. Ignore § 1302.

Scope of the section The party seeking to prove an instrument may examine his witnesses to the acts of execution performed the date the place the signature sealing if it is made under seal and delivery by the maker or his acknowledgment of it as the case may be the subscription by the witness or witnesses and generally the compliance with the usual and formal requisites. It may happen that the subscribing witness cannot or will not testify to the complete execution. In such case the party seeking to prove the instrument may cross-examine the subscribing witness (Bouman v Bouman 2 M & R 501) or corroborate or add to his testimony by other evidence (Whitaker v Salisbury 15, Pick Mass 534. If a party who calls a witness to prove a particular fact be disappointed in the result of the testimony it is competent for him to prove the fact by other testimony. 3 Stark L 1632. If the subscribing witness fails to establish the execution as where he does not remember the act or denies the attestation the party calling him to prove the instrument is, by a positive rule of law, not concluded by his testimony. He may establish the fact by other testimony. Talbot v Hodson, 71 Mont 251. Whitaker v Salisbury, 15 Pick (Mass) 534. In other words, the execution of the instrument, even though it be a Will may be established by competent evidence against the positive testimony of the subscribing witnesses. Walter of Gottrel 95 N Y 329. The party who would establish a deed must lay his ground work by the production of the subscribing witnesses if their testimony can be obtained. If they fail to establish the execution of it the party who thus calls them, by a positive rule of the law is not to be concluded by their testimony, but will be permitted to establish the fact by other testimony. [Whitaker v Salisbury, 15 Pick (Mass) 534]. It would be contrary to justice that the treachery of a witness should exclude a party from establishing the truth by the aid of other testimony. (1 Stark L 147). This section applies to all attesting witnesses whether the documents require attestation or not. Lord L 251. When in a mortgage suit it was found that one of the attesters was dead and the other either denied or did not recollect the execution of the document, the execution of the same can be proved by other evidence Lalshman v Gokhul, 1 Pat 54=(1922) Pnt 415. A statement of the attesting witnesses to a mortgage deed that they signed the blank paper and not the completed deed is sufficient to attract the operation of this section and entitles the mortgagee to prove execution by evidence other than that of the attesting witnesses Dmabandhu v Sanatan, 48 Ind Cas 624. "If one of two or more attesting witnesses being called, denies or does not recollect the execution of the document, it is not very clear whether other evidence can be given to prove it, if there be another attesting witness alive, subject to the process of the Court and capable of giving evidence, who is not produced Field Ev 7th Ed 227. It is not intended by enacting this section to depart from the rule of English law that the evidence of the other witnesses should not be introduced unless the absence of the other attesting witness is satisfactorily explained in the case where one of the two attesting witnesses has been called and has denied execution Ayeranti v Mohammad, 49 C L J 317=A I R 1929 Cal 44.

If the attesting witness denies. Sometimes a witness turns round upon the party who calls him and denies his own signature. This ordinarily happens when he has been bribed by the other side. Here it would defeat justice if the party so injured were not allowed this license Nort Ev 254. As pointed out in Brahmadat Tevari v Chandan Bibi 20 C W N 192 (193)=34 Ind Cas 686, the mere fact that the attesting witnesses to a document repudiate their signatures or make statements suggesting that they attested at the instance of persons other than the executant, does not invalidate the document if it can be proved by evidence of a reliable character that they have given false testimony. In discussing the evidence adduced in support of a Will which was attested by four witnesses, two of whom had died and the other two deposed practically in favour of the objector, Hookerjee and Breachcraft JJ observed "This however, does not compel the Court to pronounce against the Will. It was ruled in the case of Abu Ashore Dass v Joy Doorga Dass, 22 W R 189, that the mere fact that attesting witnesses to a Will have repudiated their signatures, does not invalidate the Will if it can be proved by evidence of a reliable character that they have given false testimony. To the same effect is the decision of the Judicial Committee in Cooper v Baelle 4 Moo P C 419. The principle is well settled that when the evidence of the attesting witnesses is vague, doubtful or even conflicting upon some material point the Court may take into consideration the circumstances of the case and judge from them collectively, whether the requirements of the statute were complied with, in other words the Court may, on consideration of the other evidence or of the whole circumstances of the case, come to the conclusion that their recollection is at fault, that their evidence is of a suspicious character or that they are wilfully misleading the Court, and accordingly disregard their testimony and pronounce in favour of the Will Young v Richards, 2 Curt. 371, Burgoyne v Shouler, 1 Rob 5. So the fate of a document is not necessarily at the mercy of attesting witnesses Maharajal v Anjumanumissa, 48 Ind Cas 538=50 C L J 667. In Bootle v Blunde, 19 Ves Jr 491, 507, Lord Eldon said "If they had all denied their attestations, but it be proved by circumstances that they unjustly denied it, the Will might be proved to be a good Will by other circumstances." In Abbot v Plumble, 1 Dong 216 Mansfield L C J observed "It was formerly doubted whether if the subscribing witness denies the deed, you can call other witnesses to prove it, but no longer." "If they disavow having seen it executed, other persons who saw it executed, or can prove the party's handwriting may be called so too, even if they prove contrary to what their attestation purport, namely, that the party did not execute it. Per Lord Kenyon, C J in Ley v Ballford, 3 Esp 173 note. "The attesting witness's testimony is not indeed conclusive for the party may go on to prove him untrustworthy and may call other witnesses to prove the execution. Per Lord Ellenborough C J in R v Harringworth, 4 M & S 950, see also Hudson's case, Skinn 79 Dayrell v Glascock, Skinn 413 Austin v Hills, Buller N P 261 Pike v Bradbury, Buller N P 261, Richie Otisfield 2 Stra 1096, Lowce v Jolliffe, 1 W Bl 365. In Pile v Bradbury Buller N P 261 "the first and second witnesses denying their hands, it was objected he should go no further, for it was argued that though,

S 71 if you call one witness who proves against you, you may call another, yet if he prove against you too, you can go no further, but the Chief Justice admitted him to call other witnesses to prove the Will and he obtained a verdict' Wigmore § 1302 If the witnesses deny execution either through collusion or absence of recollection it is open to the plaintiff to prove execution by other evidence Sheik Karimullah v Gudar, L R 5 A 686=A I R 1915 All 56, Baliyam v Kamaha, A I R 1924 Nag 367, Aylati v Mohammad 49 C L J 347=A I R 1929 Cal 441 Where the attester denies attestation and the other attestors are dead, what is required under s 71 is only proof of execution not execution in the presence of attesting witnesses Lalla v Darsan, 74 Ind Cas 839, Paleshuari v Santar Dayal, 74 Ind Cas 969 Where the only living attesting witness of a document was illiterate and on being examined denied execution Held, that the document could be proved by other evidence Badi Prasad v Gambhir, 26 Ind Cas 500 A scribe who has signed the document but who was not present at the time of its execution could not be an attesting witness Ram Sahu v Gouri Shankar, 39 Ind Cas 153 The mere fact that the only surviving attesting witness is considered hostile by the party taking his stand on the document, does not relieve him from the duty of examining him as a witness Gobinda v Pulin 31 C W N 215 Tula Singh v Gopal Singh, 1 P L J 369 If he denies the execution, other oral evidence is admissible to prove execution Basdeo v Rashidbhai, 104 Ind Cas 344, Lakshman v Gokul 1 Pat 154 Sashu Mukhi v Monmohani, 67 Ind Cas 87 Lakshman v Krishna Ji, 29 Bom L R 1425=105 Ind Cas 769, Coles v Coles L R 1 P 70, Pullington v Gray, (1899) A C 401, Dayman v Dayman, 71 L T 699

Does not recollect If the witness's testimony on the stand wholly fails through lack of recollection, may not his signature and attestation, on being proved by himself or some one else suffice as an implied testimony to the facts of due execution? To use the attestation in this way is to use a hearsay (i.e. extra judicial) statement, but for this case a well recognized exception to the Hearsay rule exists (vide notes under section 69) A failure of memory, so far as it involves a general mental disability, organic in its nature, and analogous to insanity, should excuse entirely from production of the person and of his deposition But a mere casual failure of memory as to the facts of execution obviously cannot excuse, for it cannot be ascertained except after production to testify—When it appears after such production, other principles come into play (a) the witness may adopt his attesting signature as record of past recollection and upon the faith of it verify the facts of execution as thus known to him to have occurred (b) if he fails to do this his signature may be otherwise proved, and his attestation taken as sufficient evidence of the facts of execution, (c) in any case upon his failure to recollect the fact of execution may be proved by other qualified persons Wigmore § 1315 The first question is, may not the attester, though not actually recollecting the circumstances adopt his signature as a record of past recollection and base his testimony on the faith of his signature which he would not have put there had he not witnessed the execution? That he may is clear by the principle of Recollection vide s 119 infra Wigmore § 1309, Per Bailey J in Vaughan v Hubbard, 8 B & C 16 But where the attesting witness becomes incapable to recall to his memory the circumstances of the execution of the document the proponent may, if he can, prove the facts of execution by other witnesses. Because it could never have been the design of the Statute to vacate a Will which was duly executed, whenever the witnesses to it have forgotten any material circumstances attending the attestation They are indeed always called upon to prove the Will not because the statute requires that they shall prove compliance with all the requisites of the law, but because they would most likely prove or disprove them and because upon principles of common law the attesting witness to every instrument must be produced if living and within the power of the Court Per Thelker J in Clarke v Dhanarani, 10 Leigh 13, 3. The Court will not allow the defective memory of the illiterate witnesses to overturn the Will Smith v Smith, (1866) 1 P & D 113 In Thompson v Hall (1852) 2 Rob 126 at p 132 Dr Lushington said "The character of the witnesses the length of time which has elapsed since the transactions took place the nature of the facts deposed to,—whether they are likely or not to have made an impression on the minds of the witnesses, are circumstances to be taken into account, to which is to be added this consideration also, whether the case admits of the principle—the presumption—omnia rite esse acta’ “The maxim omnia præsuntuntur rite esse acta’ says Lindley L J in Harris v Knight, (1890) 15 P & D 170 at p 179 ‘is an expression, in a short form of a reasonable probability, and of propriety in point of law of acting on such probability. The maxim expresses an inference which may reasonably be drawn when an intention to do some formal act is established, when the evidence is consistent with that intention having been carried into effect in a proper way but when the actual observance of all due formalities can only be inferred as a matter of probability. The maxim is not wanted where such observance is proved nor has it any place where such observance is disproved. The maxim only comes into operation where there is no proof one way or the other, but where it is more probable that what was intended to be done was done as it ought to have been done to render it valid rather than that it was done in some other manner which would defeat the intention proved to exist, and would render what is proved to have been done of no effect.” See also Cooper v Beckett, 3 Curt 648=4 Moo P C 419, Wright v Sanderson, (1894) 9 P & D 149 Lloyd v Roberts (1898) 12 Moo P C 158. The presumption applies with more or less force according to the circumstances of each case. Vennombe v Butler, (1864) 3 S & T 580, Harris v Knight (1890) 15 P & D 170 (184). To prove the due execution of a Will for the purpose of getting probate of it, strict affirmative proof of due attestation is not absolutely necessary and if from circumstances the Court can reasonably come to the conclusion that the Will has been duly executed, probate may be given. Sibo Sundari v Hemangini, 4 C W N 204, Anna Cholan v Ramaswamy 30 M L J 55 (P C)=20 C W N 673 (675). In Blake v Blake, (1882) 7 P & D 102 Holker L J said “If the witnesses so come forward to prove the Will has been in doubt, or could not remember whether they did or did not see the testator sign, the fact that everything appears to have been rightly done would entitle the Court to come to the conclusion that they did in fact see her sign. For the application of the doctrine see Blake v Knight 3 Curt 547, In re Moore, (1901) P 44 Wordhouse v Balfour, (1887) 13 P & D 2, where the recollection of the witness was blank as regards circumstances of the execution. Woolmer v Daly 2 Lah 773. The same rule is applicable in the case of other documents required by law to be attested. One of the attesting witnesses A to a mortgage bond deposed that he was present, saw the execution and became an attesting witness, the other witness B stated that at the request of the mortgagor, he became an attesting witness but had no recollection of any other circumstances in connection with the execution of the document. On the same day, when the document was later on presented for registration B identified, the executant who, in his presence admitted execution before the registering officer. Held that the inference might legitimately be drawn that the requirements of the law as laid down in section 59 of the T P Act were fulfilled. Benoybhusan v Dhurendro 38 C L J 114. In delivering the Judgment Mr Justice Mookerjee said “The principle applicable to cases of this character was considered by this Court in Jogendra Nath v Nilai Charan, 7 C W N 384 by the Allahabad High Court in Ram Der v Munnatal, 39 A 109, Uttam Singh v Hukam Singh, 39 A 162 Shub Dayal v Sheo Ghulam, 39 A 241, and by the Madras High Court in Venkata v Muthai, 39 M L J 463. It was ruled by this Court that it might fairly be presumed that both signed as attesting witnesses after execution of the document by the mortgagor and that such presumption might be made on the principle enunciated in section 114 of the Indian Evidence Act. In that case upon the face of the Will, without a memorandum of attestation, there was a signature of the testator at the foot, as also the subscription of two witnesses. It was ruled by Dr Lushington that in the absence or death of witnesses prima facie the presumption is that the testator signed in the joint presence of the two persons and they subscribed in his presence. This principle was applied by the Allahabad High Court in the three cases mentioned where reference was made to Wright v Sanderson, 9 P D 149. These decisions were followed, as based on sound principle by the Madras High Court in the case mentioned before. Reference may in this connection be made to the decisions in Blake v Blake 7 P D 102, Harris v Knight, 15 P D 170 and In re Francis v Perrett (1902) P 205. No doubt is pointed out in Strong v Hardel, (1915) 1 P 211, the question is one of inference from the surrounding circumstances, and cases are conceivable where the Court may decline to draw the inference by reason of proof of facts which show the requirements of the law were not in contemplation of the parties.

S 73

Proof of document
not required by law to be attested

72 An attested document not required by law to be attested may be proved as if it was unattested

Principle and Scope This section embodies section 37, Act II of 1855. For a long time it was held that when a document was attested, one at least of the attesting witnesses must be produced. Dos v Dufford 2 M & S 62. In Hardel v Fermour 2 Camp 282, 284, Lord Ellenborough said that it did not depend on the nature of the deed to be proved it must depend upon the possibility of procuring the attendance of the attesting witness, not upon the testimony he is likely to give." See also Higgs v Dixon 2 Stark 180. Streeter v Bunlett 5 C B 562. But as this worked great hardships to suitors, the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict C 125, s 26) and the Indian Evidence Act of 1855 introduced the present reasonable practice. Porter v Porter 255. Those Acts restricted the rule to documents required by law to be attested. Re Riche L R 32 Ch D 35. This provision is applicable, only if all the parties are before the Court, and in ex parte proceedings the attesters should yet be called. Worthington v Moore 61 L T 338, Re Reay 3 W R 312 (Eng), Taylor Ev § 1839 42, Phip Ev 4th Ed p 484. So documents which do not fall under s 568 may be proved by other evidence. Pule Dattani v Juggabundhu, 23 W R 293.

73 In order to ascertain whether a signature, writing or Comparison of sig seal is that of the person by whom it pur-nature, writing or seal ports to have been written or made, any with others admitted signature, writing or seal admitted or proved or proved to the satisfaction of the Court to have been written or made by that person, may be compared with the one which is to be proved, although that signature, writing or seal has not been produced or proved for any other purpose.

The Court may direct any person present in Court to write any words or figures for the purpose of enabling the Court to compare the words or figures so written with any words or figures alleged to have been written by such person.

*[This section applies also, with any necessary modifications, to finger impression.]

Principle In proving a document or a signature two distinct kinds of evidence offer themselves—first testimony by a person who saw the act of writing or some circumstance leading up or pointing back to that act; secondly, evidence of the kind of handwriting. The difference is that in any and all ways of the second mode there is involved the establishment of a personal type or character of writing and an estimate based on comparison, that the disputed writing belongs to the type. By this mode there is always an inference from the type to the genuineness of the disputed instance. The evidential fact, the type of handwriting, involves an inference from a kind of habit or skill of handwriting to an act done, the specific handwritings) Wigmore §§ 1991, 383, 99 We resort to testimonial evidence when we ask a witness, who possesses a knowledge of a certain type of handwriting, to say whether the disputed document is in that type of handwriting We resort to circumstantial evidence when we furnish the tribunal directly with a knowledge of the type, so that it may apply it for itself Wigmore § 1996 Here first of all questions of relevancy arises The specimens, to afford a fairly trustworthy inference, must of course be genuine, and they must also be numerous and representative enough to serve as an adequate basis for inference to the general style Ibid

* This paragraph was added to s 73 by the Indian Evidence Act 1899 (5 of 1899)

Scope of the Section By section 45, handwriting and signature of a person can be proved by an expert Section 47 admits the opinion of any person, acquainted with the handwriting of the person by whom it is supposed to be written or signed that it was or was not written or signed, by that person In addition to the modes of proving handwriting which have already been noted under ss 45 and 47 there remains direct comparison of the disputed document with an undisputed one If the signature etc., of the document, with which that in dispute is to be compared, is admitted by the party to be genuine the comparison is the more satisfactory If it be proved genuine to the satisfaction of the Judge with whom the decision of this collateral issue rests (Birch v Ridgway, 1 F & F 270) the comparison can be instituted (Egan v Cowan, 3 Law Times 223) A party may under clause, (2) be made to write for the express purpose of comparison (Doe v Wilson, 10 Mood 530) Here the comparison will be less satisfactory, as a person may feign or alter the ordinary character of his writing with the very view of defeating a comparison Cobett v Ashmole, 4 F & F 490 Formerly, comparison could only be made between the disputed document and one in evidence for the purpose of the cause But the present latitude seems a wise extension, as there is still sufficient guarantee of the genuineness of the document with which the disputed document is to be compared Vori Ex 251—256 The competency of this kind of evidence has been seriously doubted in the Courts of England, and until overruled by legislature the Courts have declared such evidence inadmissible The first objection made to the admission of this kind of evidence is that writings offered for the purpose of comparison with the document in question might be spurious, and therefore the standard must be proved to be genuine, and collateral issue is at once entered "The difference between letters which have been received in correspondence and papers put in a witness's hand," it was argued in Mudd v Suckermore, 2 P & D 18 "is two fold First, when a correspondence has taken place with a witness before any controversy commenced no suspicion of fraud can attach, and the knowledge of the handwriting acquired thereby is the strongest evidence short of ocular proof second such a correspondence may be shown to be acted upon But in the other case, there is nothing but the oath of the witness in the cause to be depended upon, so that on fifty documents put into a witness's hand for the purpose of comparing with the writing in question fifty distinct issues would arise as to their genuineness In the second place it is said that specimens might not be fairly selected "If such evidence was admissible, it was argued by counsel in Mudd v Suckermore supra 'how easy it would be, out of hundreds of specimens of a man's writing collected at different periods of his life to produce ten or twelve in Court that would correspond sufficiently with a forged signature to deceive the most experienced witness' The third objection is that jurors might not be able to read, and therefore it would be impossible to call on them to make the comparison In answer to these arguments Mr Best says "There certainly was great weight in the first objection particularly when taken in connection with the general rules of common law practice So long as parties to a suit were allowed to mask their evidence till the very moment of trial, so long would it have been highly dangerous to permit either of those to adduce ad litem, for the purpose of comparison, a number of supposed specimens of handwriting which the opposite party, having had no previous notice of the intention to adduce, would not be in a condition either to answer or contradict specimens which might not be fairly selected or even be the handwriting of the party to whom they are attributed Best Ex § 239 But as has been pointed out by Sergeant Storr while arguing in Mudd v Suckermore, (1836) 2 P D O 20 the inconvenience of collateral issues

S 73. already exists where a witness speaks to the genuineness of handwriting from an impression derived from a letter he has received. The correctness of this knowledge depends on the genuineness of that letter, and even where he says he saw the party write, his knowledge depends on the issue whether or not he did see the party write. As to the second objection Mr Best says "It is not always easy to obtain unfair specimens, and, should such be produced, it would be competent to the opposite party to encounter them with true one" Best on Ev § 238. Concerning the third objection, Mr Best says "It does not seem satisfactory logic to protect a jury which can read from availing themselves of that means for the investigation of truth because other juries might, from want of education, be disqualified from so doing, if some men are blind that is no reason why all others should have their eyes put out" Best on Ev § 238. This last argument against jurors loses all its force in India in as much as no civil cases are tried here by jurors and a very few important criminal cases are tried with the help of jurors. Moreover the jurors are always selected from persons who are literate. Finally it may be argued with great force that proof of handwriting by comparison is really the best evidence on the subject. As to comparison by juxtaposition on the one hand, and where the standard exists only in the mind of the witness on the other it has been pointed out in the latter case the characteristics of the standard are indistinct shadowy and uncertain while in the former they appear in all the distinctness of visible characters. In one case you compare existing tangible realities, in the other a visible reality with an invisible, intangible impression in the mind. Woodman v Dane 52 Me 9. "It is more satisfactory" said Duncan J in Farmer's Banl v Whitehall 10 Serg & R 110 (Am) "to submit a genuine paper as a standard and let the jury compare that with the paper in question and judge of its similitude, than the evidence continually received, of allowing a witness who has seen the party write once to compare the disputed paper with feeble impression and transient view the writing may have made in his memory." "Another singular opinion" said Woodward J in Hyde v Woolfoll, 1 Iowa 159 (Am) (referring to the English cases in which it was held that impression is allowable only with writings properly in evidence in the cause) "has been that the standard writing must be one used in and connected with the case. But how can this be held necessary when we look at the object of the standard. It is of no consequence what the writing you compare is, all you want is a genuine handwriting, and it is as respects the nature of the evidence not material what instrument it is nor whether the paper be blank in all except the signature nor whether the writing be connected with the case or not."

In England the controversy was set at rest by enactment of Stat 17 & 18 Vict C 125 as well as 28 & 29 Vict C 18 which allow comparison of hands with a proved handwriting. Under the statutory laws as well as under this section as well as ss 45 and 47 it seems clear, first, that any writings the genuineness of which is proved to the satisfaction not of the jury, but of the Judge (Egan v Conan 30 L T 223) may be used for the purpose of comparison although they may not be admissible in evidence for any other purpose in the cause (Birch v Ridgway 1 F & F 270, Cresswell v Jackson, 2 F & T 24) and next, that comparison may be made either by witnesses acquainted with the handwriting or by witnesses skilled in deciphering handwriting, or without the intervention of any witnesses at all by the jury themselves (Cobbet v Aylmister, 4 F & T 190) or in the event of there being no jury by the Court. Atport v Mul, 4 C & P 267. The comparison may be instituted "by the Court" by any one the Judge, the jury, an ordinary witness, or an expert. Arbon v Russell 3 F & F 152. Nort F 236. So far as the comparison by an ordinary lay witness is concerned, if the learned writer's meaning is, that he can compare by putting the document in juxtaposition it is clearly erroneous. Such comparison by witness is not only barred by the opinion rule because "where it is merely opinion on similitude of the writing collected from barely comparing them the jury may compare them as well as any body else and any two people may think differently." Per Jates J in Brookbowl v Woodley, Peake N P 21. Note. Similarly in Doe v Suckermore 5 A & F 719 Denman L C J said "If the proved document and the controverted are both in Court, and the witnesses speak to their resemblance or difference from immediate observation, they seem to perform a task for the jury which every one of them, even though illiterate, might well perform for himself.' So it is clear that on principle, comparison by a lay witness should not be allowed, even in the presence of the tribunal. But this rule does not apply in the case of an expert witness, because 'he does what possibly the jury may be incompetent to do.' Ibid, Wigmore § 1997. The question of comparison of signature is distinct from question of admissibility. Ahyyraddin v Emperor, 53 C 372=92 Ind Cas 412=27 Cr L J 266=A 1 R 1926 Cal 139. The word "purports" in this section does not limit the scope of the section to such documents only as are signed or contain some intrinsic statements of the identity of the writer. Any document alleged by a party to be in the handwriting of a particular person may for purposes of proof be compared with other writing or signature admitted or proved to the satisfaction of the Court to have been made or written by that person. Veera Raghava v Souri Aiyangar, 35 M L J 609=48 Ind Cas 68=24 M L F 477. In delivering the judgment in the case the Court observed: "This case turns solely on the meaning to be given to the word 'purports' in section 73 of the Evidence Act. Different views have been taken by Jenkins C J in Barindia Kumar v Emperor, 37 C 467=14 C W N 1114 and by Chandrasekharai and Batchelor JJ in Emperor v Ganpat, 15 Ind Cas 649=14 Bom L R 310. We are inclined to agree with the latter. We do not discover any object in limiting the scope of the section to documents which are signed or contain some intrinsic statement of the identity of the writer, and apparently in English law all that is necessary to render proof by comparison admissible is a dispute as to the writing." In the second portion of the section under construction the word used is "alleged," as from the context it is clear that no contradiction between the two words could have been intended, the impression left on the mind is that the two must have been used to express the same idea. So under this section, it is not necessary that the writing which is in dispute must itself in terms express or indicate that it was written by the person to whom the writing is attributed. The word "purports" in this section means "alleged." When an anonymous writing is produced and ascribed by the prosecution to a particular person, then the case for the prosecution must be taken to be that, having regard to the admitted documents, and the comparison between them and the disputed writing, the prosecution alleges that the disputed document purports to have been written or made by the accused. Emperor v Ganpat Ballabhna, 14 Bom L R 310=15 Ind Cas 649=13 Cr L J 505. But in Barindia Kumar v Emperor, 37 C 467=14 C W N 1114 at p 1138 Jenkins C J said: "In applying the provisions of section 73 of the Evidence Act it is important not to lose sight of its exact terms. It does not sanction the comparison of any two documents but requires that the writing with which the comparison is to be made, or the standard writing as it may be called, shall be admitted or proved to have been written by the person to whom it is attributed, and next the writing to be compared with the standard writing must purport to have been written by the same person, that is to say the writing itself must state or indicate that it was written by that person. The section does not specifically state by whom the comparison may be made though the second paragraph of the section dealing with related subjects expressly provides by way of contrast that in that particular connection the Court may make the comparison. In this case we are told that a comparison was made by the learned Sessions Judge out of Court after the conclusion of the arguments, but whether with the assistance of the Assessors or not does not appear. If there was no submission of this question to the Assurers it may be a question how far this was not an irregularity. The result has been that on a comparison so conducted the learned Sessions Judge, without in all cases observing the precise terms of the section, has held certain writings to be those of one or other of the accused without having invited or heard arguments from their counsel on this point. I cannot think this was a proper course to pursue, a comparison of handwriting is at all times as a mode of proof hazardous and inconclusive, and especially when it is made by one not conversant with the subject and without such guidance as might be derived from the arguments of counsel and the evidence of experts

S 73

In Steenmully Phoollee Bibee v Gobind Chander Roy, 22 W R 272, it was said by the Court that 'a comparison of signature is a mode of ascertaining the truth which ought to be used with very great care and caution'. In this case no expert has been called to assist the Court, and not because no expert was available, there is, it is well known a Government expert as to handwriting and certain of the documents in this case bear a stamp which shows that they have been submitted to him. It is true that the opinions of experts on handwriting meet with their full share of disparagement at times but at any rate there is this use in their employment that the appearances on which they rely are disclosed and can thus be supported or criticized wherever an opinion formed by a Judge in the privacy of his own room is subject to no such check. And that the aid of an expert may be of value was clearly the opinion of so distinguished a Judge as Mr Justice Blackburn who in R v Harvey, 11 Cox C C 546 refused to allow a comparison to be made without the help of experts "see also Saigum v Hari Das, 26 C W N 119. But comparison of signature is one of the modes of proving handwriting. Although where there is no other evidence, such proof would be regarded hazardous and inclusive it cannot be regarded as an error in law to base the conclusion on such proof alone. Pasupuleti Venkamma, 11 M L T 421=14 Ind Cas 741.

But before a Judge allows documents to go to the jury for the purpose of comparison of handwriting under this section it is his duty under section 295 of the Criminal Procedure Code to find whether these documents are admitted or proved. The record of the case should contain a note of such finding. Queen Empress v Lalsing Rat Un Cr C 491 Queen Empress v Lalsing Rat Un Cr C 452. But in a trial by jury where the Judge allowed certain documents to go upon the record which were not proved under the requirements of s 73 of the Evidence Act, for the purpose of comparison with the disputed handwriting, held that there was no such irregularity of procedure as to warrant an interference in revision. Whether the documents were proved or not it was for the jury to decide. Queen Empress v Lalsing Rat Un Cr C 452.

English law and origin of the rule. Although all proof of hand writing except when the witness wrote the document himself, or saw it written is in its nature comparison,—it being the belief which a witness entertains upon comparing the writing in question with an exemplar formed in his mind from some previous knowledge (Doe v Sulermore 5 A & E 781 per Patteson J) the law until the year 1854 did not allow the witness or even the jury, except under certain special circumstances actually to compare two writings with each other, in order to ascertain whether both were written by the same person. Taylor § 1869. But to the common law rule excluding proof of the hand writing by comparison there were two exceptions. The first was the case of a document already in evidence. It was competent for the Court and jury to compare the hand writings which were in evidence in the cause for other purposes, and which were admitted or proved to be in the hand writing of the supposed writer. Best Et § 239, Griffith v Williams 1 C & J 47 Doe v Perry v Newton 5 A & E 514. The case of Perry v Newton supra decided by the Court of King's Bench in 1836 is always cited as the leading case to support this exception, although the exception did not arise in the case at all. On the trial of an action of ejectment the defendants produced the alleged Will of one B on which they rested their title. The genuineness of B's signature was disputed. The counsel for the plaintiff in cross-examining one of the defendants witnesses put into his hands some letters which the witness said he believed to be in B's hand writing. It was afterwards proposed to submit these letters to the jury, that they might compare them with the signature in the Will. The letters were not in evidence for any other purpose. The Judge refused to allow them to be put in and on appeal the full Court sustained the ruling. Lord Deuman C J said 'This is a point on which we ought not to raise any doubt. The comparison is unavoidable. There being two documents in the cause one of which is known to be in the hand writing of a party, the other alleged, but denied to be so no human power can prevent the jury from comparing them with a view to the question of genuineness, and therefore it is best for the Court to enter with the jury into that inquiry, and to do the best it can under circumstances which can not be helped. The best rule is that comparison of writings by the jury shall not be allowed in any case where it can be avoided." Another exception to the rule was the case of ancient documents. "When a document is of such a date that it cannot reasonably be expected to find living persons acquainted with the hand writing of the supposed writer, either by having seen him write or by having held correspondence with him, the law, acting on the maxim lex non cogit impossibilia allows other ancient documents, which are proved to have been treated and regularly preserved as authentic, to be compared with the disputed one." Best on Ev § 240, Roe v Raulings 7 East 282 (n) Doe v Pater, R & M 141, Doe v Davies 10 Q. B. 311, Moorewood v Wood, 14 East 327, Barr v Harpur, 1 Holt 420, Brune v Raulins 7 East 282, Cranford and Lindesay Peetages, 2 H. L. C. 557, Solita v Yarron M & R 133, Bromage v Luc 7 C. & P. 548. With these exceptions comparison was not allowed in England Macferson v Thorntes, Peake N. P. 29, Brookford v Woodby 9 Peak. N. P. 30, Gariels v Alexander, 4 Esp. 37. In Eagleton v Kingston 8 Ves. 473 (1803) Lord Eldon said "I very lately I never heard of evidence in Westminster Hall of comparison of hand writing by those who had never seen the party write, though such evidence had been frequently received in the Ecclesiastical Courts." See also Hade v Brougham, 3 Ves. & Ber. 172, Regina v Morgan 1 M. & R. 131, Clement v Trilledge 4 Car. & P. 1, Allport v Meek 4 Car. & P. 267, Waddington v Cousins 7 Car. & P. 595, contra Per Lord Kenyon in Allebrool v Roach 1 Esp. 351 in which case he said "Some Judges have doubts for the policy of that rule of evidence respecting the allowing of the jury to prove comparison of hands, because often at a distance from the metropolis the jury are composed of illiterate men, incapable of drawing proper conclusions from such evidence. For my part I have always been inclined to admit it and shall do so in this case." See also Riell v Braham, 4 Term R. 497, King v Cator 1 Esp. 117.

The subject at last came before the Court of King's Bench in the well known case of Mudd v Suclermore 5 Ad. & C. 703. In that case the Court being evenly divided in opinion the judgment went against the admissibility of the evidence, and the rule for new trial was discharged. A few years after the decision the English Parliament in 1854 adopted the views of the dissenting Judges in Mudd v Suclermore, by enacting a statute in these terms "Comparison of a disputed writing with any writing proved to the satisfaction of the Judge to be genuine shall be permitted to be made by witnesses, and such writings and the evidence of witnesses respecting the same may be submitted to the Court and jury as evidence of the genuineness, or otherwise of the writing in dispute." Stat. 17 & 18 Vict. ch. 125, sec. 27. Next year in India Act II of 1855 was passed, section 48 of which ran as follows "On an inquiry whether a signature writing or seal is genuine, any undisputed signature, writing or seal of the party whose signature writing or seal is under dispute may be compared with the disputed one, though such signature writing or seal be on an instrument which is not evidence in the cause." Although the English Act was confined to civil suits, the Indian Act applied both to civil and criminal cases. Goodet Es p. 201, Queen v Annanulla 6 W. R. Cr. 5, Queen v Bakhore Choubey 5 W. R. 98 Cr. Under either Act the comparison may be made, not merely by witnesses acquainted with the hand writing but by experts skilled in deciphering, and in all cases the general resemblance may be traced, not only by conformity of composition, whether of language or of words, but by minute details of correspondence or difference, such, for instance as the shape of particular letters or the orthography of the words. Science too is allowed to bring its material aid of which the resort to magnifying glasses which frequently occurs on trials, may be taken as example. Where the party whose hand writing is in dispute is in Court the obvious test might be applied of calling on himself to write. His presence however would not exclude the reception of evidence by comparison. Before the passing of the Act II of 1855 such comparisons were not allowed in India. Annagurubala v Krishnaswami, 1 M. H. C. R. 457.

S 73.

In 1865, Stat 28 & 29 Vict C 18, was passed, section 8 of which runs as follows "comparison of a disputed writing with any writing proved to the satisfaction of the Judge to be genuine, shall be permitted to be made by witnesses, and such writings, and the evidence of witnesses respecting the same, may be submitted to the Court and jury as evidence of genuineness, or otherwise, of the writing in dispute." Section 1 of the same Act provides, that the above enactment, in common with certain other clauses relating to evidence—shall apply to all Courts of Judicature, as well criminal as all others, and to all persons having, by law or by consent of parties, authority to hear, receive, and examine evidence, whether in England or in Ireland. Taylor § 1869. The Indian Evidence Act found place on the Statute Book in 1872.

Comparison of writing etc, meaning of. All evidence of handwriting, except where the witness actually saw the document written, is in its nature, comparison of handwriting for it is nothing less than the belief which the witness entertains upon comparing the writings before him with the exemplar in his mind, derived from some previous knowledge of the hand. Woodward J in Frazer v Brown 43 Pa St 12 (Am). But this is not what is properly known as comparison of handwriting. "By comparison is meant," says Starkie "a comparison by the juxtaposition of two writings, in order by such comparison, to ascertain whether both were written by the same person." Starkie Et Part IV p 654. "Comparison of handwriting is where other witnesses prove a paper to be the handwriting of a party, and the witness is desired to take the two papers in his hand compare them, and say whether they are or are not, the same hand writing. There the witness collects all his knowledge from comparison only, he knows nothing of himself he has not seen the party write nor held any correspondence with him." Per Duncan J in Cone v Smith 6 Serg & R 568, Burdick v Hunt, 43 Ind 337, Lawson Expert & Op Ev 383. This as has been remarked, is a distinct and separate a thing from the comparison which a witness called to testify to handwriting, makes between the exemplar in his mind, as an external, visible and tangible object is distinct from a mental impression or memory. It is the distinction between what is objective and what is subjective. Woodward J in Frazer v Brown, 43 Pa St 12.

The genuineness of the standard. Wherever proof of handwriting by comparison is permitted it will be found that care is taken that the standard of comparison shall be genuine. The reason of the rule is obvious. Under the English Statute as well as under this section comparison of a disputed writing is allowed only with a writing proved to the satisfaction of the Court to be genuine. For it is plain that if there be any controversy as to the genuineness of the specimens with which the comparison is to be made, all the evils pointed out by the opponents of this species of proof become apparent, and a number of collateral issues are in each case at once raised. Therefore the handwriting used as a standard must be established by clear and undoubted evidence. Strict proof of its genuineness is required in order that no reasonable doubt shall remain. Nothing sort of the evidence of the person who saw the person write the paper (Richardson v Newcombe, 21 Pick 317. Mugge v Adams 13 S W R 330 (Tex)) or his admission of its genuineness or evidence of equal certainty, should be sufficient for that purpose. Unless this is adhered to the law is open to a multitude of collateral questions. Kaler v Haines 6 Whit 291 (Am). In a New Hampshire case decided in 1852, it was said "If there is any controversy as to the genuineness of the specimens they are excluded and for the obvious reason that collateral issues would at once be raised upon them should a different course be taken." Boorman v Sinton 55 N H 90 (Am). The signature of a party to an appeal or appearance bond, which when filed, becomes a Court record, is presumed to be genuine, and may be used as a standard without further proof. Saure v Dawson, 2 Mart 202 (Am). "When the identity of anything is fully and certainly established you may compare other things with it which are doubtful, to a certain whether they belong to the same class or not, but when both are doubtful and uncertain comparison is not only useless as to any result but clearly dangerous and more likely to bewilder than to instruct the jury." Per Coulter J in Deque v Hare 7 Pa. St 125 (Am). A document to be admissible against an accused person should be proved to be a document in the handwriting of an accused person by comparison with an admitted or proved specimen of his handwriting, in the light of the testimony of expert witnesses Pulinbehari v King Emperor 16 C W N 1105=16 Ind Cis 257, Queen Empress v Tulsaye, Rat Un Cr C 491

S 73

Photographic copies of document Ordinarily photographic copies of admitted documents are not allowed to serve as specimens of admitted signature or disputed signature Vide Mc Cullough v Mum, 2 I R 194 C A Such copies are secondary evidence Ibid But it is held in Massachusetts that magnified photographic copies of the signature in dispute and of admitted genuine signatures of the same person are admissible in evidence when accompanied by competent preliminary proof that the copies are accurate in all respects except as to size and colouring 'They were capable' said Merriell J, 'of affording some aid in comparing and examining the different specimens of handwriting which were exhibited on trial It is not dissimilar to the examination with a magnifying glass Propositions are so enlarged thereby to the vision that faint lines and marks, as well as the genuine characteristics of handwriting which perhaps could not otherwise be clearly discerned and appreciated, are thus disclosed to observation and afford additional and useful means of making comparisons between admitted signatures and one which is alleged to be only an imitation Under proper precautions in relation to the preliminary proof as to the exactness and accuracy of the copies produced by the art of the photographer we are unable to perceive any valid objection to the use of such proposed representations of original and genuine signatures as evidence competent to be considered and weighed by a jury' Marcy v Barney, 16 Gray 160 Letter press copies might under some circumstances be useful as well as the originals, or in default of them Wigmore § 2019

Court may direct person to write Any person whose handwriting is in dispute, and who is present in Court, may be required by the Judge to write in his presence and that such writing may be compared with the document in question Doe d Deane v Wilson 10 Moo P C 502 503 Cobbett v Kilminster 4 F & F 490, Taylor § 1871 To prove the handwriting of a person in a particular document a party may ask the Court to have the handwriting of that person to be taken in Court for the purpose of comparison The result of the comparison is the determination of an issue arising in the case and is quite distinct from the determination of the question of admissibility or otherwise of evidence and consequently is within the province of the jury and not of the Judge Khyi ruddin v Emperor 42 C L J 504

Finger impression In Batari Hazam v Emperor, 68 Ind Cas 978=1 P 242, Sir John Bucknill J of the Patna High Court strongly deprecated the practice of taking the finger impression of an accused person in a Court of Law, see also Jassuam v Emperor, 77 Ind Cis 423 (P) But in a later case of the same High Court it is held that under this section the Court has power to take the finger impression of an accused person Zahur v Emperor, 6 Pat 623=106 Ind Cas 212=8 Pat L T 847=A I R 1928 Pat 103 see also Emperor v Nga Tun, 2 Bur L J 270=1 Rang 759 (F B)=83 Ind Cis 668=A I R 1924 Rang 115 (F B) Public Prosecutor v Kandasami 50 M 462=A I R 1927 Mad 696 Section 5 of Act 33 of 1920 authorised the Magistrate to direct the thumb impression to be taken Superintendent v Hirambala 30 C W N 373=43 C L J 79, Basgul v Emperor, 6 P 301=104 Ind Cis 626

Comparison of handwriting—Value of A comparison of handwriting is at all times as a mode of proof hazardous and inconclusive and especially when it is made by one not conversant with the subject and without such guidance as might be derived from the arguments of counsel and the evidence of experts Sarajini v Hari Das 26 C W N 75 Balakram v Md Said 77 Ind C 872 In Phoode Bibee v Gobind Chunder Roy, 22 W R 272, it was said by the Court that a comparison of signature is a mode of ascertaining the truth which ought to be used with very great caution Gupta v Emperor, 76 Ind Cis 425 Barindra v Emperor, 14 C W N 114=37 C 467 A comparison of writings has consequently been deemed a mode of ascertaining truth which ought to be

S 73 used with very great caution (Nabin Krishna v Rasul Lal, 10 C 1047 (1051), and Kurali Prasad v Anantaram, 8 B L R 490 (502)=16 W R P C 16), specially if no skilled witness has been called to make the comparison R v Siliclock (1894) 2 Q B 766 R v Harey 11 Cox C C 546, Doe v Suclermore 5 A & E 703 (734), Rajendra Nath v Jogendra Nath 14 M I A 67=7 B L R 216=15 W R 41, Ramesh Chandra v Rajani 21 C 1=20 I A 95, Ambika Charan v Naresuan, 29 C W N 75=85 Ind Cis 552, Galstaun v Sonatun, 78 Ind Cis 668 Abdul Ali v Abdoor Rahman 21 W R 429, Abdulla v Gann, 11 B 690, Babu v Parmesuar 64 Ind Cis 234, Puan v Girish 9 W R 450. We must bear in mind that although from the dissimilarity of signatures, a Court may legitimately draw the inference that a particular signature is not genuine because it varies from an admittedly genuine signature, yet resemblance of two afford no safe foundation that one of them is genuine Sarojini v Hari Das, 26 C W N 113=34 C L J 373, Batahu v Parmesuar, 64 Ind Cis 234. If two signatures are exactly identical, there is room for suspicion that the one in question may be a copy or careful imitation of the genuine signature. It is a fact well known and may be readily verified that no two signatures, actually written in the ordinary course of writing them are precisely similar. The character of a person's signature is generally of uniform appearance and the resemblance between the one and another signature of the same person is thus apparent but the coincidence is seldom known where a genuine signature of a person superposed over another genuine signature of the same person is such a facsimile that one is a perfect match to the other in every respect. There is generally diversity in the marks of the pen, the size of the letter the level of the signature and space it occupies that stands as a guard over the genuine signature and characterises it as a true signature Sarojini v Hari Das, supra, see also Lallah Jha v Bibi, 21 W R 436. But as was observed by Coleridge J in Doe v Suclermore, 5 A & E 703 (705) 'the test of genuineness ought to be the resemblance not to the formation of letters in some other specimen or specimens but to the general character of the writing which is impressed on it as the involuntary and unconscious result of constitution, habit or other permanent cause and is therefore itself permanent. Again as Sir John Nicoll said in Robson v Roche 2 Ad 53 p 79. But such evidence is peculiarly fallacious where the dissimilarity relied upon is not that of a general character but merely of particular letters for the slightest peculiarities of circumstance or position, as for instance the writer sitting up or reclining or the paper being placed upon a harder or softer substance or on a place more or less inclined—nay, the material as pen ink etc being different at different times are amply sufficient to account for the letters being made variously at the different times by the same individual. Independently however, of anything of this sort few individuals write so uniformly that dissimilar formations of particular letters are grounds for excluding them not to have been made by the same person Galstaun v Sonatun 78 Ind Cis 663=A I R 1925 Cal 485.

PUBLIC DOCUMENTS

74 The following documents are public

Public documents—

documents—

(1) documents forming the acts or records of the acts—

- (i) of the sovereign authority,
- (ii) of official bodies and tribunals, and
- (iii) of public officers, legislative, judicial and executive, whether of British India, or of any other part of Her Majesty's dominions, or of a foreign country,

(2) public records kept in British India of private documents—

Scope of the section This section is merely an interpretation clause and is important because certain modes of proof are prescribed in regard to public documents as distinguished from private documents. Cum Fe 11th Ed p 166 It is not always easy to determine whether a particular writing is a public or private document. In Sturla v Iccera 5 App Cas 623, the question arose as regards the meaning of the word "public documents." In delivering the judgment Lord Macleburn said "It is an established rule of law that public documents are admitted for certain purposes. What a public document is, within the sense is of course the great point which we have now to consider. Public documents are admissible, and I think I can hardly state it better than by quoting what Mr Baron Parke said in delivering the opinion of the Judges in the case of The Irish Society v The Bishop of Derry 12 Cl & F 611. Now my Lords, taking that decision, the principle upon which it goes is, that it should be a public inquiry a public document and made by a public officer. I do not think public there is to be taken in the sense of meaning of the whole world. I think an entry in books of a manor is public in the sense that it concerns all the people interested in the manor. And an entry probably in a corporate book concerning a corporate matter or something in which all the corporation is concerned, would be public within that sense. But it must be a public document and it must be made by a public officer. I understand a public document there to mean a document that is made for the purpose of the public making use of it and being able to refer to it. It is meant to be where there is a judicial or quasi-judicial duty to inquire as might be said to be the case with the bishop acting under the writs issued by the crown. That may be said to be quasi-judicial. He is acting for the public when that is made, but I think the very object of it must be that it should be made for the purpose of being kept public, so that the persons concerned in it may have access to it afterwards [Liams v Urban District (1899) 1 Ch 241].

The term is generally understood to include all such documents as Acts of Parliament and Parliamentary papers, bye-laws, all records whether judicial or non-judicial the process of any Court of law probates of Wills and letters of administration papers belonging to or issued by the departments of State, Royal Commissions Municipal Corporations and trading companies, entries in all public registers, Royal proclamations and all other acts of State. Pouell v 248 In this connection it should be borne in mind that the term "public" as applied to documents is used in English law in two distinct senses. It may mean that the statements contained in the document to which it is applied are admissible as a form of testimony, either against all the world or against some class of persons, of the facts stated therein (Ibid ss 35 37 and ss 40 43) or it may mean that the document is one of those originals of which are kept in some special custody for the benefit of the public or of some particular class of persons, and are therefore not ordinarily produced in Court, like a private document, but proved by means of some kind of copy. When we speak of a public document in the first sense we are regarding it as a medium of proof when in the second, as a document for which on public grounds a special mode of abduction is provided. There are many documents which are public in both senses, there are many others which are only public in the latter sense. A Will for instance is a public document for the purpose of abduction, the proper mode of proving it in Court being the production of the probate merely, but it is not a public document in the other sense, and any recitals of fact contained in the Will which forms part of it are no more admissible to prove those facts against strangers than are the recitals contained in any deed of assignment which must be proved by the direct oral evidence of witnesses. On the other hand a register of births which is equally a public document for the purpose of abduction (the entries in it being provable by certified copies) is also a public document in the other sense, being admissible as a medium of proof against all persons of the births recorded in it. Wills Act 2nd Ed 233 In the Indian Evidence Act, to avoid confusion, the term "Public documents" have been used only in the second sense. All descriptions of public documents have this characteristic that they are kept in some special custody and provable by means of a copy without production of the original. Wills Act 2nd Ed 407 A public

S 74 document is one prepared by a public servant in the discharge of his public official duty. The mere fact that it is kept in an office does not lead to the inference that it is a public document. Mahitab Din v Karar Singh, 107 Ind Cas 618 = A I R 1928 Lah 640. Where a letter received from the Comptroller of the Military Accounts in reply to the warrant of attachment acknowledging the same was relied on to prove knowledge of the judgment debtor as regards the existence of the decree held, that the letter was a public document under s 74 of the Evidence Act and that the same, did not require proof. Sheikh Edu v Isha Lal, A I R 1928 Oudh 488.

Acts or Records of the Acts In Queen Empress v Arumugam, 20 M 189 (F B) the question was whether reports made by a Police Officer in compliance with sections 157 and 168 of the Criminal Procedure Code are public documents within the meaning of this section. In answering the question in the negative Shephard J said "Section 74 of the Evidence Act defines public documents, and if any of these reports is a public document, it must be because it forms the act or the record of the act of a public officer. It is necessary to examine the language of the 74th section more closely in considering the report which the subordinate police officer is under section 168 of the Code directed to send to the station house officer. It is a report of the result of the investigation held under the provisions of the chapter XIV of the Code. No doubt there may in this instance, be said to be a record of acts done by a public officer. Nevertheless, I do not think the report is a public document within the meaning of section 74. In construing that section, I think it may fairly be supposed that the word 'acts' in the phrase documents forming the acts or record of the acts' is used in one and the same sense. The act, of which the record made is a public document, must be similar in kind to the act which takes shape and form in a public document. The kind of acts which section 74 has in view is indicated by section 78 of the same Act. The acts there mentioned are all final completed acts as distinguished from acts of a preparatory or tentative character. The enquiries which a public officer may make whether under the Criminal Procedure Code or otherwise may or may not result in action. There may be no publicity about them. There is substantial distinction between such measures and the specific act in which they may result. It is to the latter only in my opinion, that section 74 was intended to refer. Unless this line of distinction is drawn I do not see where the right of discovery is to stop. If the report which a subordinate police officer sends to his station house officer may be inspected before the trial what is there to prevent inspection of the report which any other officer furnishes for the information of the Public Prosecutor? It is true that the police officer acts in performance of a statutory duty, but section 74 makes no distinction between such acts and other official acts. When a Civil Surgeon reports to a Magistrate as to the age of a person he is merely giving his expert opinion and is not making a record of his act in official capacity for the use of the public within the meaning of s 74 and consequently such a document is not admissible without proof. Abdul Halim v Saadat Ali 1 Luck 733 = 108 Ind Cas 817 = A I R 1928 Oudh 155. The acts mentioned in this section are all final completed acts as distinguished from acts of a preparatory or tentative character. The section does not make a distinction between statutory duties and other official acts. Pahaya v Government 7 Mys L J 189. A circular by which the Director General of Posts and Telegraphs notified that stamps of a certain kind would soon be issued to Post Offices for sale to the public was not an 'act or record of act of a public officer within the meaning of this section. Felayudam v Emperor, 1929 M W N 193 = 115 Ind Cas 509 = 30 Cr L J 183.

Plaints and written statements decree, etc In Shahada Mahamed v Danie Wedgebarry 10 B L R App 31, certified copies of plaint and written statement in a former suit were tendered in evidence. But the certified copy of the plaint was admitted on the ground that it was a public document whereas the certified copy of the written statement was not admitted. Now the question is whether the decision of Pontifex J in that case is correct. Mr Field says "It is clear that in this case the written statement was rightly rejected but the plaint was improperly admitted. Both were private documents, and neither should have been admitted' Ticht 7th L. p. 236. W. Woodhouse adds "The correctness however of this decision so far as it held the plaint to be admissible has been for a long time doubted and has not been followed on the original side of the Calcutta High Court. The decision it is submitted is erroneous, there being no principle upon which the case of a plaint can be distinguished from that of a written statement. Both are acts or records of acts of private parties and not of a public tribunal or its officers." The general statement of law as made by Fidd and Woodhouse JJ is correct but in this connection it should also be borne in mind that it was at one time the practice in Bengal for the Lower Courts to set out the substance of the pleadings in their judgments and this practice was removed by circulars issued by Sudder Duanys Bhaya v. Pande, 3 C. L. J. 22, 1 N. P. 101; Purbath Dey v. Purna Chandra 9 C. 586. The English law as to records is thus stated by Taylor. The next class of public documents to be mentioned is that of the records of Courts of justice, and other judicial writings. As to the records of the Supreme Courts, and of the old Superior Court and the quasi records will embrace depositions, (Higgin 1 B. & C. 109) affidavits, bills and answers (Ever v. Ambrose 1 B. & C. 109) decrees filed in the old Court of Chancery, rules of Court, judgments, which, although not strictly records, partake in such a manner that they can be proved by copies to the same extent as records. Indeed, for all practical purposes, generally to the same rule of evidence. Indeed, for all practical purposes, for convenience, the general term 'records' will alone be used as to the documents just mentioned. Taylor § 1534. The records of another Court may be proved without production; thus Green v. Gilbert "Records, being the precedents of the Exchequer which every man has a common right to have removed from place to place to serve a private purpose, and the common repository from whence they ought not to be removed of some other Court, and this is the Treasury of Writs of law is plainly agreeable to all manner of reason and demand a record to serve his own occasion but the Exchequer might demand it, but both could not possess it and therefore it must be kept in one certain place." Besides, these records by being daily removed use of affidavit to direct it to be taken off the file for the purpose" But Prof Wigmore says 'this would hardly be the ruling at the present day.' Wigmore § 1215. A deed offered in the other Court for purposes of proof was regarded as a part of the record, temporarily at least Buller N P 253, Wymar's Case, 5 Co Rep 71, the question depends largely on the nature of other proceedings and of the document Handley v Fillingh 21 A K March 24. Writs of execution and warrants of commitment until they are returned must be proved by actual production, though after their return, they become matters of record, and are consequently provable by copies B N P 231. With respect to writs of summons under the Rules of the Supreme Court, they may be proved by the production either of the originals, or of the copies by the officer of the Court under Ord V rr 12 & 13 or if the original be lost, by copies authenticated by the Court or a Judge, and any one of these documents will furnish proper evidence of the institution of the action, to which they relate R v Scott, L R 2 Q B 415=45 L J M C 259. The pleadings in an action may be proved either by producing the originals or by means of the copies filed with the officer of the Court under Ord X L I r 1 R v Scott, L R 2 Q B D 415, Taylor § 1536. In later cases it has been held that a plaint is not a public document and must be proved in the ordinary way Manbodi v Hirasai 93 Ind Cr 650=A I R 1926 Nag 339, Parkeshwar Prasad v Debendra Prasad, 92 Ind Cr 181=7 Pat L T 267=A I R 1926 Pat 180. But in this connection the following observation of Ellenborough C J in Ramsbottom v Ducloux, 2 M & S 567, 567 should be borne in mind 'The judgment roll imports incontrovertible verity as to all proceedings which it sets forth, and so much so that a party cannot be admitted to plead that the things which it professes to state are not true. Every part of the record, as long as it remains on the files of the Court, must be taken to speak absolute verity. All papers filed in a suit, in which a compromise is confirmed by a decision, form part of the record. Such record is public document Bhagani v Georoo 25 W R 68, see also Lalita v Surnomoyee C C W N 353, Mongal Sen v Hya Singh 1 A L J 369. The deposition of a witness is part of the record of the acts of an official tribunal within the meaning of this section and as such is a public document Salhina v Laddan Saheba 20 C L J 218 Chandeswar v Deshevar, 101 Ind Crs 239=5 P 777, Harinand v Ramgopal 27 C 639=4 C W N 429. But a certified copy of the deposition of a witness would not come by itself in any case it would be necessary to adduce evidence proving the identity of the person who gave the deposition Brayaballav v Akhoy C C W N 251=93 Ind Crs 15. Proceedings of a Court of Justice may be proved by a Court officer deposing to what took place in his presence and also to an uncertified record thereof. Such proof is secondary evidence, under s 63 of the certified record,—the record being a public document under s 74 Haranan v Ramgopal 4 C W N 429=27 C 630 P C A Robolari 14 A L J 183=81 Ind Crs 225=25 Cr L J 917, see also 1919 Pat 4 Shyam v Anwar 3 M 670=13 A L J 935, 30 Ind Crs 52, but 1919 Pat 4 Shyam v Anwar, 69 Ind Crs

S 74

being copies
being

at the instance of the collector in his capacity as a holder of a trust estate is a private document, and its accuracy has to be established Preonath v Durga, 11 C L J 578=16 C W N 578

Other Public Documents Letters between district authorities are public documents as they form records of the acts of public authorities. Hence they are admissible in evidence under s 74 Prithee Singh v Court of Wards, 23 W R 272. Registers giving details of the government revenue chargeable thereon at the time of settlement, produced from the collectorate are public documents Lalmohan v Nandalal, 15 C L J 191. Every entry in the register of inventions and every document entered and recorded in that register is a public document. Certified copies of these are admissible in evidence Sannath v Butler, 4 A L J 11=A W N 1907, 23. The Loan Register of the Public Debt office in the Bank of Bengal is a public document Chandi Charan v Baisakh, 31 C 231=8 C W N 125. An examined copy of a quinquennial register is evidence without the production of the original Oody Monee v Bisho mith, 7 W R 14, see also Ramnandan v Jyogbind, 75 Ind Cas 955=2 P 839. A collector's register kept under Bengal Act VII of 1876 is also a public document Soshi Bhuvan v Gush Chunder 20 C 940 see also Pertapodai v Huri Das, 22 C 112. Collector v Sherih Inulad W R (1864) 358. Records of the proceedings of a Municipal Board are public documents and the officer who is authorised to deliver copies of public documents in the course of his official duties is for such purposes a public officer. Reference under s 46 of Act I of 1879, 19 A 293 (T B)=A W N 1897 61. Municipal registers of deaths and births are public documents Amsul-Rehman v Beni Ram, 59 P R 1901. Probate of a Will is never proved by the production of the original Will. A copy of the Probate granted in Australia is admissible in evidence in India. Such a copy is the copy of the Will and of the endorsement made thereon by the Registrar of probate showing that the Will has been filed and proved in Court granting the probate. The Will when so recorded and endorsed is a public document under section 74 (11) of the Evidence Act which may be proved by secondary evidence under section 65(e). In the matter of the application of Adya 11 Ind Cas 261. A thasra prepared by the patwar of a village is a public document Dajit v Pariah 3 O C 205. Ayalut accounts prepared from time to time by village officers for administrative purposes, are to some extent public documents. Siva Subramanya v Secretary of State, 9 M 285.

Records of confession made by magistrate, are probably admissible under s 74 of the Evidence Act. Queen Empress v Sundar Singh 12 A 595=A W N 1890 199, Gobinda v Emperor, 69 Ind Cas 257=23 Cr L J 673. When oral information is given to a police officer in charge of a station as to the commission of a cognizable offence, and it is reduced to writing by him under s 151 Cr Pro Code, such writing is a public document under s 74. Abdul Rahman v Queen Empress U B R (1893 1896), Vol I 21. A notice under s 107 Criminal Procedure Code is a public document. Anjad v Lalshmi, 23 Ind Cas 529=18 C W N 644. A report of a Kotwal in connection with the appointment of a mohant, is a public record Baldeo v Gobind 36 A 161=23 Ind Cas 18=12 A L J 179. A dal-hatnama is a public document Mahammad v Ram 25 Ind Cas 529, Sitaram v Emperor 7 L R 173 Cr. The certified copy of an order of the Probate Court to the effect that letters of administration be granted to the person named with a copy of the Will annexed of the deceased testator is admissible, the latter being a public document within the meaning of this section Habiram v Hem Nath 19 C W N 1068. Registers proposed and kept under Land Registration Act are public documents. Ramnandan v Jyogbind 2 Pat 839. The history of a district attached to a settlement record being compiled under the direction of a Settlement Officer is a public document and is provable by the production of a certified copy Muhammad v Sultan Singh A I R 1924 Lah 639=75 Ind Cas 1010. A report in the B form under s 173, Criminal Procedure Code is a public document within the meaning of this section Channemore v Government 7 Mys L J 231. The crop cutting report of the Deputy Collector made under s 40 Bengal Finance Act, should be considered a public document and is evidence of the amount of crops produced by the land Hargobind Singh v Kishen 7 Pat L T 671=

S 76 Ind Crs 966=A I R 1926 P 436, Kishun Deyal v Ishuarnath 8 P L T 74=A I R 1927 Pat 167 A school master is an 'executive officer' of Government within the meaning of s 74 clause (1) (iii) of the Indian Evidence Act Bhanudas v Krishnabai, 28 Bom L R 1225=50 B 716=A I R 1927 Bom 11

Registers which are not public documents Census registers are not public documents within the meaning of this section Emperor v Bhawanrao 6 Bom L R 535 A certificate granted by the Board of trade is not a public document under s 74 of the Evidence Act In the matter of the collision of Ara, 5 C 568=5 C L R 331 An anumati patra is not a public document Krishna Kishore v Kishori Lal 14 C 496=14 I A 71 P C It is doubtful whether jummabandi is a public document Alhya Kumar v Shama Charan, 16 C 586 Ramchunder v Bunsheedhar, 9 C 741, but see Tara v Abinash 4 C 79 Fulhan v Register prepared by a patwari is not a public document Bai Nath v Sulhu 18 C 534 Where a copy of a Will certified by the Registrar General of Ceylon to be a true copy made from the record filed in his office was sought to be put in evidence the Will not being a public document within the meaning of s 74 of the Evidence Act, in the absence of evidence that the copy in question was compared with the original, it was held inadmissible as secondary evidence of the contents of the document Ponnammal v Sundaram 23 M 499=10 M L J 310 A document purported to be a report by a village mukd Thuan to the mohari in charge of the central office (in which entries in the village registers are copied into another register), informing him that on the day after the entry of the marriage of B and A, F (former husband of B) had come to the writer and stated that he had not divorced B The writer accordingly desired the mohari not to take action of this report of the marriage of B and A Held that such a document is not a public document within s 74 of the Act Fau Ahmad v Crown, 1 P R 1914 Cr =139 P L R 1914=23 Ind Crs 696

Public records kept in British India of private records A mortgage deed registered according to law is under clause (2) a public document Bani Prasad v Sobai Lal, 7 O C 327 The returns in the custody of the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies constitute public record of private documents within the meaning of section 74, sub section 2 and secondary evidence thereof is admissible In the matter of Anurita Bazar Patila, 21 C W N 1161 (F B)=26 C L J 459

Public documents—value of Under s 71 of the Evidence Act, documents forming records of the acts of public officers are public documents, but they do not furnish proof of all facts to which they refer Kupa v Bhawan Prasad, 105 Ind Crs 853

Private documents 75 All other documents are private

Notes All documents which are not public documents are private documents Private documents include documents such as contract memorandum letter etc If it becomes necessary to prove the contents of the private document it must be produced or its absence accounted for Burr Jones § 201

76 Every public officer having the custody of a public document, which any person has a right to inspect, shall give that person on demand a copy of it on payment of the legal fees therefor, together with a certificate written at the foot of such copy that it is a true copy of such document or part thereof, as the case may be, and such certificates shall be dated and subscribed by such officer with his name and his official title, and shall be sealed, whenever such officer is authorized by law to make use of a seal, and such copies so certified shall be called certified copies

Explanation—Any officer who, by the ordinary course of official duty, is authorised to deliver such copies, shall be deemed to have the custody of such documents within the meaning of this section S 76

Scope of the Section A person's right to get a copy of a public document depends upon his right to inspect it. The question whether a person has a right to inspect any particular document is rather difficult to solve. There is no general provision on the subject to be found in any enactment in force in British India, although there are some special provisions applicable to particular cases. Field Lr 7th Ed 232. In England, the right to inspect public documents varies with respect to their nature. There is a common law right to inspect many. As to others it rests upon particular Acts. Nort El 255. But this section saves and excludes all such documents as the Government has a right to refuse to show on the ground of state policy, privileged communication etc. Nort 257, Taylor Lr § 1483. As regards special enactments which give right to inspect and take copies, vide the Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1909), the Criminal Procedure Code, (Act. V of 1898) the Indian Registration Act (XVI of 1908), the Administrator General's Act (III of 1913) the Indian Companies Act (VII of 1913), the Oudh Land Revenue Act (XVII of 1867), etc.

It might have been supposed that for the lawful custodian of documents in official custody, an authority could be implied from the very nature of his office, to furnish copies that should be receivable in evidence. The certifier must be the lawful custodian of the particular document. The authority must of course exist at the time of certifying, a certificate for example from one whose office had expired would have no standing. The deputy officer may properly certify for the chief officer nominally having custody. The officer's authority rests on his custody of the original, this custody, however enables him to speak, not merely to the correctness of the copy, but also to the existence and genuineness of the original. The great obstacle, to the use of a register as evidence of a record of private deed, was the registrar's inability to speak to the genuineness of the deed, and special means to qualify him in this respect had to be provided. This obstacle does not exist for an official record for it is originally prepared and thereafter preserved in the office, and although it may not have been prepared by the chief officer or custodian himself still his knowledge of the affairs of the office is transacted by his subordinates is sufficiently direct to suffice a personal knowledge. The result is clear enough for documents actually having their inception within the office, such as a book of account, a Court roll or an ordinary official register. But many kinds of documents preserved in official custody, are prepared within the premises of the office by private persons and are then filed or deposited in the office under a requirement of law—such as bonds or affidavits of various sorts. In some of these instances, no doubt the document is customarily acknowledged before the officer or other wise verified by him before filing, in others—affidavits, for example—there has been already a due verification certuned by some other officer. Wigmore § 1677.

The loan register of the public debt office in the Bank of Bengal is a public document, within the meaning of s 74 of the Indian Evidence Act. Any person is entitled to inspect the same and to obtain certified copies thereof under this section who can show a prima facie case that he has an interest for the protection of which liberty to inspect must be given. Chandi v Bostab 8 C W N 125=31 C 284 Muller v The Eastern and Midland Railway L R 38 Ch D 92, Rer v Justice of Staffordshire, 6 A & E 84. This section allows certified copies to a person who has a right to inspect the document. Anuar v Faral 84 Ind Cas 487, see also Bank of Bombay v Suleman 32 B 466. Neither in the Cr Pro Code nor in the Evidence Act is there any provision dealing or limiting the right of private persons interested in criminal proceedings to inspect public document in the hands of third parties. A right to inspect public documents is, however assumed in s 76 of the Evidence Act. It may be inferred that the Legislature intended to recognize the right generally for all persons, who can show that they have an interest for the protection of which it is

S 77. necessary that liberty to inspect such documents should be given Queen v Ammugon, 20 M 189=7 M L J 167 see also, Subramania v Govt of Mysore, 7 Mys L J 195 6 Mys L J 513 Whether any person has a right to inspect a particular public document is a question not dealt with by the Evidence Act and altogether outside its scope Emperor v Mutha, 30 M 466 Sections 76 and 77, refer to public documents, and are not applicable to Jabalas Hurcehur v Churn, 22 W R 355

77 Such certified copies may be produced in proof of the contents of the public documents or parts thereof by production of certified copies of the public documents of which they purport to be copies

Principle The record of a Court should not be taken away from its place of custody into another Court. The principle of this irremovability has been judicially sanctioned on grounds of policy. The removal into another Court as evidence would make it impossible for the time being for others to use the records there would be a serious risk of loss, and there would be a constant additional wear and tear upon the document Wigmore § 1215 The usual mode of proving the record of another Court is by production of a certified copy. But the copy is not produced in such cases because it is better evidence than the original, it is received only on the ground of convenience, as a substitute for the original record. The reception of a copy avoids the inconvenience of removing the original record from place to place Bullow v Thomas 19 Gratt, 14, 18 For reasons similar to those applicable to judicial records documents belonging to any public office need not be proved, but may be otherwise proved. Their removal for production in evidence would delay and hinder the official use of the files would make it impossible for other persons to consult the absent documents would subject them to risk of loss and would injure them by constant wear and tear Wigmore § 1218 Per Lord Mansfield in Jones v Randall Cowp 17, Per Lord Ellenborough in Hennel v Lyon 1 B & Ald 182 184 Per Lord Abinger in Mortimer v McCallan 6 M & W 58 69 Per Pollock C B in Doe v Roberts, 13 M & W 523, 530 Now a paper offered as a copy but not supported by any person's testimony in Court is a hearsay—i.e., extra-judicial—statement, obnoxious to the Hearsay rule. Hence some person must be called to the stand to verify the paper as the copy that it purports to be. A paper offered anonymously as a copy, or offered without calling some witness to verify it, is inadmissible. But there are exceptions to the Hearsay rule under which copies made by specific classes of persons may be admitted. Under the exception for official statements copies made by officers lawfully authorized to give copies—i.e., exemplified, certified, attested or office copies are receivable Wigmore § 1281 The reason for the exception is thus stated by Buller J 'Here a difference is to be taken between a copy authenticated by a person trusted for that purpose for there that copy is evidence without proof, and a copy given out by an officer of the Court who is not trusted for that purpose, which is not evidence without proving it actually examined. The reason of the difference is that where the law has appointed any person for any purpose the law must trust him so far as he acts under its authority' Trial at Nisi Prius by Buller J p 229, Wigmore § 1677 Blad v Braybrook 6 Stark 8 Appleton v Braybrook, 6 M & S 37 The officer's authority rests on his custody of the original his custody however, enables him to speak not merely to the correctness of the copy but also to the existence and genuineness of the original Wigmore § 1677 So in order to allow this exception to the Hearsay rule the principle of trustworthiness of the statement is satisfied. The Necessity principle is satisfied by the fact that the certifier cannot be called to testify to the genuineness of the copy without great inconvenience and loss to public departments.

Scope of the section "In this section the term used is 'may' This then is one and usually the most convenient mode of proof of public documents. The act is not compulsory. It does not exclude any other mode of proof. If then a certified copy—a term sufficiently explained in the preceding section—should from want of some formality fail as a certified copy, it may still be used in evidence as an examined or sworn copy, if it has been examined with the original by any one who can swear to the comparison with the original and to the accuracy of the copy. Rid v. Margeson 1 Comp 169. Not P. 258. But this opinion of Mr Norton contravenes the clear provision of section 65 according to which, in cases of public documents only certified copy of the same are admissible as secondary evidence. In such a case no other secondary evidence is admissible. In Krishna Kishore v. Kishorilal, 11 C 487=111 A 71. Sir B. Parrot said: "If then the anumati patra was a public document within the meaning of s 71 of the Act which in their Lordships' opinion it was not, no secondary evidence would have been admissible except a certified copy." The party who wishes to give evidence of the contents of any public document must take care to obtain the proper kind of copy which is made admissible by the particular title. Such copy in fact is raised to the rank of primary evidence. Powell P. 240. Where a document is a public document it can be proved by producing certified copy of the same. Dalvi v. Pratap 3 O C 205. This section does make copies admissible which have been unlawfully issued. Anuar v. Ta el, 54 Ind Cns 487=2 R 391. A document in order to become a public document must be shown to have been prepared by a public servant in the discharge of his duties. Mahabadi v. Karar, 107 Ind Cns 618. A certified copy of the order of a Court passed upon a compromise should be received in evidence if offered in proof of compromise under this section as it is a copy of a document forming the record of an act of a public judicial officer. Mangal Singh v. Hira Singh 1 A L J 369. Where oral information is given to a police officer in charge of a station as to the commission of a cognizable offence and it is reduced to writing by him under s 154 Cr Pro Code such writing is a public document under s 71 of the Evidence Act, and its contents may be proved by a certified copy under s 77. Rahman v. Queen Empress, U B R (1893 1896) Vol I 21. The crinal jamabandi is a statement of the amount due under s 45 of Act VIII of 1873 from every occupier of land assessed to water rate. It contains particulars of the area and of the land in respect of which the rate is due. It is a public document within s 74 of the Evidence Act. The porchas distributed to the cultivators are also public documents. If produced in original the jamabandis do not require to be further proved. The contents of the jamabandi could also be proved by the production of certified copies furnished as provided by ss 76 and 77 of the Evidence Act. Umrao Singh v. Ram Singh, L R 3 A 536 (Rev)=1 U P L R (B, R) 26, see also Ramlal v. Ghasiram, 71 Ind Cns 825.

Proof of other official documents

78 The following public documents may be proved as follows —

- (1) Acts, orders or notifications of the Executive Government of British India in any of its departments, or of any Local Government or any department of any Local Government,— by the records of the departments, certified by the heads of those departments respectively, or by any document purporting to be printed by order of any such Government

- (2) The proceedings of the Legislatures,— by the journals of those bodies respectively, or by published Acts or abstracts, or by copies purporting to be printed by order of Government

S 78

- (3) Proclamations, orders or regulations issued by Her Majesty or by the Privy Council, or by any department of Her Majesty's Government — by copies or extracts contained in the London Gazette, or purporting to be printed by the Queen's Printer
- (4) The Acts of the Executive or the proceedings of the Legislature of a foreign country,— by journals published by their authority, or commonly received in that country as such, or by a copy certified under the seal of the country or sovereign, or by a recognition thereof in some public Act of the Governor General of India in Council
- (5) The proceedings of a municipal body in British India,— by a copy of such proceedings, certified by the legal keeper thereof, or by a printed book purporting to be published by the authority of such body
- (6) Public documents of any other class in a foreign country,— by the original, or by a copy certified by the legal keeper thereof with a certificate under the seal of a notary public, or of a British Consul or diplomatic agent, that the copy is duly certified by the officer having the legal custody of the original, and upon proof of the character of the document according to the law of the foreign country

Official Printed copies There is no reason why an officer may not be authorized to give printed copies as well as written copies, nor has there been any doubt that such authorized copies were admissible. Yet it can not be said that such an authority has ever been implied from the nature of an office. An official printer's copies have been usually regarded as admissible, but the official printer's authority though in general one, is express rather than implied. The objections that have been made in connection with the use of printed copies have chiefly had their source, not so much in a doubt of any of those principles, as in the difficulty of presuming the authenticity of a printed copy purporting to be an official one. In general, where an official printer is appointed his printed copies of official documents are admissible. Higmore § 1681. The reason for their correctness is thus stated by Tilghman C J in Buddis v James 6 Binn 326 "Confidential persons have been selected to compare the copies with the original rolls and superintend the printing." The most frequent application of the principle however is to the evidencing of the statute law domestic and foreign. Upon the theory of Judicial Notice no evidence of domestic law need be offered.

Documents required to be certified Copies of documents required by section 78 or 86 of the Evidence Act to be certified are not admissible in evidence

when they are not certified Ram Pershad v Rattan Chand 4 Ind Cas 329 S 78
= 87 P L R 1909

Clause (1) Under this clause printed proclamation of pence is admitted because 'such things as these in print as are of a public nature, as a public act of Parliament may be given in evidence without comparing it with the record' Dupays v Shepherd 12 Mod 216 Under section 196, Cr Pr Code, the sanction of the Local Government is made essential and his sanction must be conveyed in an order signed by the Chief Secretary to the Government An order signed by Deputy Secretary on behalf of the Chief Secretary is not legal Md O.ullah v Beni Madhab 36 C L J 180=26 C W N 878 Notification published in the Fort St George Gazette fixing the date of municipal election is proof of the order of the Government fixing the election Commissioner of Madras v Ekambara 53 M L J 603=A I R 1927 Mad 980 This clause does not prove the authority of the promulgation of a notification by the Governor with his minister when the notification does not purport to say so Nalder v Corporation of Madras, 99 Ind Cas 18

Clause (2) Entries in the legislative journals, are admissible to prove the proceedings of the legislature, because the entry is an officer charged with the duty of making such a record The general principle is undisputed, So far, then, as the proceedings of the Legislature are relevant to be proved the journal is admissible If the proceeding, for example, consists in the receipt or acceptance of a report or a petition, the statements in the report or petition may be inadmissible but the fact of its receipt or the mode of its treatment may be relevant, and therefore may be evidenced by the journal Wigmore § 1662 Under this clause, the text of an Act is published in the Gazette must be taken to be the authorized text of the Act Brindaban v Mahabir 97 Ind Cas 316 Subramania v Shanmugam, A I R 1926 Mad 65=46 M L J 363 Bhagat v Rupishore, 7 Ind Cas 409 As regards the value of Hansard report, vide The Englishman v Lajpat Rai, 37 C 760=14 C W N 713

Clause (3) This clause corresponds to the English Documentary Evidence Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict Cap 37) as amended by Stat 45 & 46 Vict C 9, which is in force in British India and other colonial possessions To prove the treaty of alliance of 1703 between Portugal and England, London Gazettes of May 24 and July 14 1703 were received Captain Quelch's Trial 14 How St Tr 1084 In R v Holt, 6 T R 436 Asheurst J said 'The gazette is an authoritative means of proving all acts relating to the King and the State' In the same case Buller J added 'The gazette, which is published by royal authority is admissible to prove any thing done by his Majesty in his character of King or which has passed through his Majesty's hands' In the same case also Lord Kenyon L C J observed 'That the gazette is evidence of many acts of State is not doubted These documents are addresses of different bodies of subjects received by the King in his public capacity They then become acts of state, and of such acts, announced to the public in the gazette it is admitted that the Gazette is evidence' Wigmore § 1684 see also Kirwan v Corbun 5 Esp 231 Vanoneson v Doruel 2 Camp 44 R v Gardner 2 Camp 513, Att Gen v Fleakstone 8 Price 92, Bradley v Athu, 4 B & C 301

Clause (4) Depositions in a foreign Court are public documents Haramund v Ramgopal 4 C W N 429=27 C 639 P C see also In re Rudolph Stalman 15 C W N 1053

Clause (5) This clause brings the records of proceedings of a Municipal body in British India within clause (2) of sub-section (1) of section 74 as the records of the acts of an official body Reference under section 46 of Act I of 1879 19 A 293 (F B) A certified copy of such a record is admissible under this section Alshoy v Commissioners of Bogra Municipality 37 C L J 589 A legitimate way of proving the proceedings of a Municipal body in British India is by a copy of such proceedings certified by the legal keeper thereof or by a printed book purporting to be published by the authority of such body as laid down by this clause Syed Motram v Cuttack Municipality, 17 C W N 531=14 Cr L J 91=18 Ind Cas 651 Corporation of Calcutta v Promotha Nath Mallick, 16 Cr L J 659=30 Ind Cas 643

THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT

872

S 79

Clause (6) The mere presence on a document of the impression of a seal such as was in the use by the Hulldan, or High Court of the Burmese Government, is no sufficient proof of the correctness of the document as a copy of the existence of an original or of the genuineness of the transaction to which it purports to testify. Such evidence can be manufactured without any great difficulty and the Courts must be on their guard against its acceptance unless under proper tests and safe guards. Ma Me Zet v Maung Saing, U B R (1897—1901) Vol II 404. Copies of attendance and leave registers, kept in the Native State of Hyderabad are not admissible in evidence under this clause. Shamsheer v Mohammad, 90 Ind Cas 329. The words 'diplomatic agent' in this clause are very wide and prima facie cover the Resident of Hyderabad who is the Political Agent of the Government of India. Maharaj Bhannuday v Krishnabai, 28 Bom L R 1225=50 B 716=A I R 1927 Bom 11. Copies of attendance and leave register kept in Native States are not admissible. Shamsheer v Mohamed, A I R 1926 Oudh 29.

PRESUMPTIONS AS TO DOCUMENTS

79 The Court shall presume every document purporting to be a certificate, certified copy or other document which is by law declared to be admissible as evidence of any particular fact and which purports to be duly executed in British India, or by any officer in alliance with her Majesty, who is duly authorized thereto by the Governor General in Council, to be genuine.

Presumption as to genuineness of certified copies certified by any officer in alliance with her Majesty, who is duly authorized thereto by the Governor General in Council, to be genuine.

Provided that such document is substantially in the form and purports to be executed in the manner directed by law in that behalf.

The Court shall also presume that any officer by whom any such document purports to be signed or certified, held, when he signed it, the official character which he claims in such paper.

Presumptions as to documents. Sections 70 to 90 deal with certain presumptions as to documents. All these presumptions are based on the ancient and well known maxim omnia præsumentur rite esse acta (All acts are presumed to have been done rightly and regularly). Co Litt 6b 332. The rule is applicable to public and official acts as well as to ancient deeds and private acts. Where the acts are of an official nature, or require the concurrence of official persons a presumption arises in favour of their execution. In these cases the ordinary rule is omnia præsumentur rite et solemniter esse acta done probetur in contrarium (Co Litt 232, Tan Omeron v Douel 2 Camp 41, Doe v Evans 1 Cr & M 46)—every thing is presumed to be rightly and duly performed until the contrary is shown. Per Stony J in Bank of United States v Davidridge, 12 Wheaton (U S) R 69, 70, Davies v Pratt 17 C B 183. Upon the same principle proceeds the rule that deeds, wills and other attested documents which are more than thirty years old and are produced from the proper custody, prove themselves and the testimony of the subscribing witnesses may be dispensed with although of course it is competent to the opposite party to call him to disprove the regularity of the execution. Best on Presumptions p 81, Re Airey (1897) Ch 169. Broom's Legal Maxims 722. These presumptions however are not conclusive. But in certain cases the Court may presume certain things (vide ss 79-81, 89). In the former case the Court is empowered to throw the burden of proof on whichever party it please, to presume a fact or to call for proof of it, as it thinks best. Cum, Pr 87, Safiquunnisa v Shabhan Ali, 26 A 381 (586)=31 I A 21=7 O C 290=6 Bom L R 750, Raghuuath v Holi Lal, 1 A L J 121 (123). The presumption mentioned in this clause is not a hard and fast presumption incapable of rebuttal, a presumptio juris et de jure. Imperor v Srimas, 7 Bom L R 969 (974)=3 Cr L J 32. The word 'may presume' in s 90, ought generally to be construed in more rigorous of the senses allowed by section 1. Meher v Niu Muhammad 110 P L R 1902 Safiquunnisa v Shabhan Ali, 7 O C 290, Ramien v Verappa 11 M L J 69. In cases in which the Court "shall presume" a fact a presumption is not conclusive, but rebuttable. Of course there is no option left to the Court, but it is bound to take a fact as proved until evidence is given to disprove it, and the party interested in disproving it must produce such evidence if he can. Sections 79 to 90 contain the principal presumption as regards documents. Of course certain presumptions as regards documents may also be raised under section 114 (Rule s 114 (iii-a)).

Principle. There is a well known maxim of English law, omnia presumuntur rite esse acta—this is an inference of reasonable probability arising out of the experience of mankind. The law assumes that any act done in public or any formal act privately performed will be done in due form by the person authorized to do it. Harris v Knight 15 P D 170, Poultt Pr 391. Thus there is a presumption that a public officer acting in execution of a public trust will do his duty. Per Lord Ellenborough in R v Verelst, 3 Camp at p 433, per Coleridge J in R v Whitson, 1 A & L at p 611, per Blackburn J in Haddington v Roberts, L R 3 Q B 379. But care must be observed that confusion does not arise between the two presumptions—that of the regularity of the official acts and that of the authority from acting in an official capacity. The latter deals with the question of what original authority is to be presumed; the former, taking the authority for granted, assumes the regularity and order of the acts until the contrary appears. It has long been held that one's appointment to office may be presumed, until the contrary appears from the fact that one has acted in an official capacity. Berryman v Wise 4 T R 366, R v Gordon 1 Lech 515 R v Leitch 3 Camp 132, Marshall v Lamb 5 Q B 115, Plummer v Brisco, 11 Q B 46.

Scope of the section. The authority to certify a copy implies that the terms set forth by the officer as representing the original in his custody must be a literal copy, not merely the substance or the effect, of the original's terms. Higmore § 1678. A certified copy of an original in a public office proves prima facie the original to have been of file in the public office when it was made, and for this plain reason, the officer's certificate recorded to it the exactity of a deposition, he certifies 'that the preceding copy is faithfully drawn from the original, which exists in the office under my charge'. U S v Higgins, 14 Pet 334 346. So certified copies of depositions are admitted without any further evidence. Duncan v Scott, 1 Camp 100 102. The reason for admission of such certified copies is thus given by Lord Ellenborough in the above case: "If it is suspected that some one personated G, and that his signature is forged, I will send to chambers for the original examination, otherwise the copy so attested and delivered, must be received and relied on." The same rule is applicable to certificates and other documents as well. Certificates and other documents made by persons entrusted with authority for the purpose are evidence of the facts which they are required to certify to to the extent of their authority. Per Sparkey C J in Neuman v Doe, 4 How Miss 555 Higmore § 1670. This section is applicable to certificates, certified copies or other documents which purports to be certified by any officer in British India or by duly authorized officers in any Native State in alliance with His Majesty. The presumption that the document itself is genuine, of course includes the presumption that the signature and the seal (where a seal is used, see section 76, ante) are genuine. Field v Th Ed 241. So if a duly certified copy, made evidence by statute of a lease in official custody, had been offered, it may be that no proof would have been necessary of the signatures or handwriting of those commissioners who had executed the original lease or of the town officers signing it, such a

S 80. duly authenticated copy of a public document showing an official act done by commissioners in discharge of a lawful duty and produced from proper custody having been made competent evidence, proof of handwriting or signatures is necessarily dispensed with, such proof would indeed be impossible in relation to a copy. Com v Richardson, 112 Mass 71, 73. The only requirement for raising this presumption is that such document is substantially in the form and purports to be executed in the manner directed by law in that behalf. The registering officer's certificate is not necessary to prove the certificate of registration the genuineness of which is to be presumed under this section. Muhammad v Sahara, 71 Ind C 19 805. But this presumption does not arise where sanction under s 196 Cr Pro Code is signed by the Deputy Secretary instead of by the Chief Secretary as required by that section. Md Ozuallah v Ben, 36 C L J 180-26 C W N 878-50 C 135. It is doubtful whether this section is applicable to copies given before the passing of the Indian Evidence Act. Jukir Ali v Rajchunder, 10 C L R 469 (476).

Presumption of proper official character. The presumption is that one who is to have acted in an official capacity possessed the necessary and proper capacity and authority. Lanson Pie Et Rule 13. In Re Murphey 8 C & P 310 Colledge J said "with regard to the last objection these trustees are public officers. They all acted as such before signing of this rate, and I cannot say that there is no evidence that they are trustees. If the proof of their once acting is not enough would proof of ten times be so? Where is the line to be drawn? I think it is evidence to go to the jury that they were trustees. In Berryman v Wise 4 Lein Rep 366 Duller J said "In the case of all peace officers, justices of the peace, constables etc it was sufficient to show that they acted in these characters without producing their appointments." Similarly in McGohey v Alston 2 M & W 206, Baron Parke said "The rule is that all public officers, who are proved to have acted as such, are presumed to have been duly appointed to office until the contrary is proved." In Bank of the United States v Dandridge, 12 Wheat 64 Mr Justice Story has given an exhaustive view of the principle underlying this section. "By the general rule of evidence," said he "presumptions are continually made in cases of private persons of acts even of most solemn nature, when those acts are the natural results or necessary accompaniments of other circumstances. In aid of this salutary principle the law itself, for the purpose of strengthening the infirmity of evidence and upholding transactions intimately connected with public peace and the security of private property indulges its own presumptions. It presumes that every man in his private and official character does his duty until the contrary is proved, it will presume that all things are rightly done unless the circumstances of the case overturn this presumption according to the maxim, omnia presumuntur rite et solemniter esse acta donec probetur in contrarium. Thus, it will presume, that a man acting in a public office has been rightly appointed, that entries found in public books have been made by the proper officer."

80 Whenever any document is produced before any Court, purporting to be a record or memorandum of the evidence, or of any part of the evidence, given by a witness in a judicial proceeding or before any officer authorized by law to take such evidence or to be a statement or confession by any prisoner or accused person, taken in accordance with law, and purporting to be signed by any Judge or Magistrate, or by any such officer as aforesaid, the Court shall presume—that the document is genuine, that any statements as to the circumstances under which it was taken, purporting to be made by the person signing it, are true, and that such evidence, statement or confession was duly taken

Principle This section merely gives sanction to the maxim omnia praesumuntur rite esse acta with regard to documents taken in the course of judicial proceedings R v Viran, 9 M 224 (227) The maxim omnia praesumuntur rite esse acta finds, perhaps, its best application in sustaining the validity of judicial proceedings They are presumed to be regular Lauson Pre Ev Rule 10 When a deposition is taken in open Court, or by a Magistrate, there is a degree of publicity and solemnity which affords a sufficient guarantee for the presumption that everything was formally, correctly, and honestly done Nort Ev 261

Scope of the section The statement as to which this section says that certain presumptions shall be drawn, are statements or confessions taken in accordance with the law This section does not render inadmissible any particular kind of evidence but only dispenses with the necessity for formal proof in the case of certain documents taken in accordance with law This section does not operate to render it admissible Queen Empress v Viran, 9 M 224-2 Weir 125 Under this section of the Act, the Court presumes certain facts concerning a document purporting to be a record of the evidence But it must purport to be signed by a Judge or Magistrate, and where the person taking the deposition omits to claim the position of a Judge or Magistrate, the presumption that he is so does not arise The defect may be supplied by oral evidence The certified copy should also show on the face of it that it is a copy of a part of the record in a specified proceeding Crown v Ali Shue, 1 L B R 268 This section does not deal with the admissibility of documents referred to therein but simply dispenses with the necessity of their formal proof by raising the presumption that everything in connection with them had been legally and correctly done: (1) that the document purporting to be recorded evidence or statements or confessions are genuine (2) that the statements as to the circumstances under which they were taken made by the officer who affixed his signature are true, and (3) that the evidence etc., was duly taken Podam Prasad v Emperor, 50 C L J 106-33 C W N 1121-119 Ind Cas 193-A I R 1929 Cal 617 (F B) Under this section a presumption has to be made as to the genuineness of the statement recorded No presumption can be made however, regarding the identity of the deponent Where the document containing the deposition is a very old document one can turn to the deposition itself to find out whether there is inherent evidence of the identity of the deposition Bhagat Prasad v Sher Khan, 94 Ind Cas 985-A I R 1926 Oudh 489 see also Queen Nuseenuddin 21 W R Cr 5, Queen v Durga, 11 C 550 Though there is no oral evidence to identify the deponent of a deposition made more than 60 years ago it does not render the provisions of s 80 of the Evidence Act inapplicable thereto, nor would the absence of the signature of the presiding Judge to a copy of such deposition preclude the presumption that the copy is a true copy Sorabji v Mata Din 7 O L J 512-60 Ind Cas 437

Record or memorandum of evidence The mode of recording depositions in civil cases are to be found in Order 18 rr 5 6 C P Code and in criminal cases in ss 356 359 360 361 Cr Pro Code Rule 5 of Order 18, runs as follows "In cases in which an appeal is allowed the evidence of each witness shall be taken down in writing in the language of the Court, by or in the presence and under the personal direction and superintendence of the Judge not ordinarily in the form of question and answer but in that of a narrative and, when, completed shall be read over in the presence of the Judge to the witness and the Judge shall, if necessary correct the same, and shall sign it" Rule 6 runs as follows "Where the evidence is taken down in a language different from that in which it is given and the witness does not understand the language in which it is taken down, the evidence as taken down in writing shall be interpreted to him in the language in which it is given" As regards the effect of non-compliance of the formalities laid down in these two sections Richardson J in Elahi Baksha v Emperor, 2 C W N 616-45 Ind Cas 825-27 C L J 377-45 Ind Cas 285, said: "The contention relating to the deposition of the appellant in the proceedings by Mohan and others"

S 80

taken is that the formalities required by rr 5 and 6 of O 18, C C P were not observed. It is not disputed that the evidence was not given on oath. But it is said that after the deposition had been written down by the Munsif it was not read to the witness in the presence of the Judge. Upon that it is argued that the deposition is not legally a deposition at all and the Judge was wrong in allowing it to go to the jury. In support of the contention reference is made to the cases of Empress v Mayadeb Gossami, 6 C 762 and Kamatrupattan Chetty v Emperor, 28 M 308. If as a matter of fact, the appellant's deposition was not interpreted and read over to him in the prescribed manner, the cases cited support the contention advanced unless the rule laid down is to be confined as it seems to have been in the past, to prosecution for perjury. Our attention however, has also been drawn to the case of Bogra v Emperor 34 M 141 where a different note, and as it seems to me the true note, is struck. The cases of Empress v Mayadeb 6 C 762 and Kamatrupattan v Emperor 28 M 308, have been followed in other cases for instance Empress v Jogendra Nath 42 C 240=18 C W N 1242. Speaking for myself however, with great respect I am not sure that I clearly understand the principle of those decisions. Under section 80 of the Indian Evidence Act the deposition of a witness taken in accordance with law and purporting to be signed by a Judge or Magistrate proves itself. No other proof is required in the production of the deposition. I should have thought that a provision requiring a deposition to be read over to a witness was in its nature directory and that if it were not complied with in a particular case, the deposition, while it might perhaps lose the benefit of section 80 of the Evidence Act, might still be proved in some other way. As at present advised I can see no reason why even in a prosecution for perjury failure to comply with the provisions of rr 5 and 6 of Order XVIII should render a deposition entirely inadmissible in evidence and why if section 80 cannot be called in aid the deposition should not be proved for instance by the Judge who took it down, or by the admission of the deponent. But in later Calcutta cases it has been held that the provisions of these two rules are not directory but mandatory. So the omission to observe the formalities of these two rules renders the deposition inadmissible in evidence against the deponent on his subsequent trial for perjury. Section 91 of the Evidence Act excludes the oral evidence of its contents. Emperor v Nautab Ali, 51 C 235=25 Cr L J 1027=81 Ind Cas 803=A I R 1924 Cil 705. See also Jyotish Chandra v Emperor 36 C 955=14 C W N 82, Mohendia v Emperor 12 C W N 845=9 Cr I J 116. In re Nallari 42 M 461=50 Ind Cas 561, Inam Din v Amatulla, 59 Ind Cas 830=1 Lah 361. Kamatrupattan v Emperor 28 M 308. The practice is common when a witness understands English to hand his deposition to him to read over. The practice is a sufficient compliance therewith for all purposes and a deposition so read over by the witness proves itself under this section. Ramesh v King Emperor 23 C W N 361=29 C L J 513=50 Ind Cas 660. Clause (I) of section 360 of the Criminal Procedure Code lays down that 'as the evidence of each witness taken under sections 356 and 357 is completed, it shall be read over to him in the presence of the accused if in attendance, or of his pleader if he appears by pleader and shall if necessary be corrected. The object of this section is to give the witness an opportunity of correcting his statement. Ramdhani v Emperor 4 P L W 11=19 Cr L J 169. In re Olhoy 7 C L R 393. The provisions of this section are obligatory and not merely mandatory. Ananda v Emperor 42 C 97. Jyotish v Emperor, 36 C 955, Horonath v Sama Ma, 25 C W N 119=38 C L J 281, Huralal v Emperor, 28 C W N 963=52 C 159, contra Mohiuddin v Emperor 4 Pat 489=26 Cr I J 811, Ibaid v Emperor, 26 Cr L J 669. Miyeth v Emperor 3 Rang 612=27 Cr L J 87. Jaquea v King Emperor, 5 Pat 63=27 Cr L J 184, Abdul Rahman v Emperor 5 Rang 73=31 C W N 271. Section 80 of the Evidence Act contemplates that the deposition which it is proposed to use as evidence should have all the guarantees of authenticity which the law prescribes, one of them being that the Magistrate shall sign it only after it has been read over to the witness in the presence of the accused or his pleader, in order that the witness and the accused may have an opportunity of pointing out mistakes. Tunya v

Emperor, 12 Bar L T 167=10 L B R 16=51 Ind Cts 666=20 Cr L J 706 see also Ngai Sam v K E U B R 1912, 1st Qr 123 Section 509 of the Criminal Pro Code does not enact that a deposition of a medical witness shall be taken and attested by the Magistrate in the presence of the accused. What it provides is that the deposition, if so taken and attested, may be put in evidence in the Sessions trial. Therefore, that the deposition was taken and attested by the Magistrate in the presence of the accused cannot be presumed under s 80 of the Evidence Act. Queen Empress v Popp Singh 10 A 174=1 W N 1888 11, but see Kachali v Q E 18 C 129. This section is applicable to the depositions made before the Commissioners. Uttamchand v Empress, P L 1, 1900 63 Cr. Previous disposition, fulfilling all the formalities is admissible in a subsequent case. Queen Empress v Samiappa, 15 M 63=2 Weir 79 Cr.

Confession of accused taken in accordance with law. A confession by an accused recorded by a Magistrate is admissible under this section, even though the Magistrate who recorded it ultimately came to the conclusion that he had no jurisdiction to try the case. Emperor v Banlo Behary 10 C P L R Cr 16. If when a document is tendered in evidence at a trial purporting to be a confession of the accused it is found to contain the memorandum required by s 161(3) a presumption arises under this section that all the necessary formalities purporting to have been performed have in fact been performed and the document is admissible in evidence without further proof. If, however the memorandum does not appear or is defective the document is inadmissible unless, the defects can be cured by the examination of the Magistrate who recorded it under s 33. The provisions of s 164(3) render it incumbent on a Magistrate who is called on to record a confession to explain to the person who is to make it that he is not bound to make a confession at all and that if he does so it may be used as evidence against him. Further the Magistrate should only record the confession if upon examination of the person making it, he has reason to believe that it will be made voluntarily. Where the memorandum at the foot of a confession does not conform with the form as laid down the defect is curable if it is of form and not of substance. If as a matter of fact the statement was duly recorded that is to say after the required explanation had been given but the Magistrate has failed to embody that fact in the certificate such a defect would be curable. If the explanation had not in fact been made the statement could not be held to have been duly made and s 533 cannot be appealed to. Protap v Emperor, 6 Lah 415=7 Lah L J 482=A I R 1925 Lah 605=93 Ind Cts 978=27 Cr L J 514 see also Queen v Shuja, 1 B 219 (222). Ahenam v Emperor 6 Lah 59, Queen v Piram, 9 M 224. The word Magistrate in s 26 includes Magistrates in native states and a confession made before such a Magistrate is admissible in evidence certainly under s 74 as against the persons by whom they were made. Gouinda v Emperor 69 Ind Cts 257=23 Cr L J 673, Queen Empress v Sundar Singh 12 A 595 but see Emperor v Dhanka 24 Ind Cts 169=16 Bom L R 261. Confessional statements though retracted are admissible in evidence. Section 80 of the Evidence Act makes it clear that it is not necessary that the recorder of the confession should always be examined. Gujah Mayhi v Emperor, 2 Pat L J 80. So far as s 80 of the Evidence Act is concerned the Court is bound to make the presumptions specified in that section in respect of the document purporting to be a confession of the accused. San Bau v Crown 1 L B R 340 (F B). But a confession recorded by a Magistrate during the course of a police investigation without a certificate as required by s 164 cannot be admitted under s 80 without proof of its having been made. Emperor v Radhe, 7 C W N 220, Reg v Shuja, 1 B 219. No presumption can be made under the section where the confession is recorded in English and not in the language in which it was made. Baua v King Emperor 10 O C 112=6 Cr L J 94. A Magistrate may make what the police may not a record of any statement whether a confession or not made to him before judicial proceedings commence. Section 80 of the Evidence Act expressly provides for proof of the document distinguishing it from a record of evidence, as well as s 533 Criminal Procedure Code. Lalu v Empress, 2 P R 1893 Cr.

S 81. Dying declarations A dying declaration is not admissible in evidence without proof that the deceased actually made the declaration. Even if it bears a Magistrate's attestation it is not admissible under s 80 where the Magistrate was not the committing Magistrate. The person who took the statement should be subject to cross examination as to the dying man's state of mind when he made it and as to other circumstances. Reg v Pata Aduji 11 B H C 247, see also Hashmi v Empress, 9 P R 1900 Cr = P L R 1900 p 49. When a dying declaration has appended to it a certificate that it has been read over to the deponent and declared to be correct, and this is signed by the Magistrate who recorded the statement, s 80 of the Evidence Act creates a presumption that the circumstances under which it is stated to have been taken are true, the mention by the Magistrate being a judicial proceeding. In re Karrupan Samban 16 Cr L J 759 = 31 Ind Cas 359.

81 The Court shall presume the genuineness of every document purporting to be the London Gazette or the Gazette of India, or the Government Gazette of any Local Government, or of any colony, dependancy or possession of the British Crown, or to be a newspaper or journal, or to be a copy of a private Act of Parliament printed by the Queen's Printer, and of every document purporting to be a document directed by any law to be kept by any person, if such document is kept substantially in the form required by law and is produced from proper custody.

Principle The intolerable inconvenience of having to prove the genuineness of printed matter purporting to be published by the Government has led to a general concession by judicial decision or by statute that such purporting publications, at least when in the form of the standard official documents constantly issued and referred to are to be assumed genuine. Two principles however are in fact usually involved, first the admissibility of a copy proved to be printed by official authority as hearsay evidence of the contents of the original, and, secondly, the presumption of genuineness of a particular printed document purporting to be of such official origin. The two questions are seldom separated either in decisions or in statute: a sanction of the former principle has usually been regarded as carrying with it a sanction of the latter also. Wigmore § 2150. In general then, where an official printer is appointed his printed copies of official documents are admissible. It is not necessary that the printer should be an officer in the strict sense, nor that he should be exclusively concerned with official work: it is enough that he is appointed by the Executive to print official documents. As for authentication of his copies, it is enough that the copy offered purports to be printed by the authority of the government: its genuineness is assumed without further evidence. Wigmore § 1684. In Biddes v James 6 Binn 326 Tilghman C J said: 'Confidential persons have been selected to compare the copies with the original rolls and superintend the printing. The object of this provision was to furnish the people with authentic copies and from their nature printed copies of this kind either of public or private laws, are as much to be depended on as the exemplification verified by an officer who is the keeper of the record. I am for admitting the printed copies authorized by the Legislature either of this or any other state whether the law be public or private. But the question whether the copy of a Government Gazette or any other publication can be treated as evidence of the contents of the original is not one relating to proof of documents but to the admissibility of the secondary evidence. Jeremiah v Vas, 36 M 457 = 12 Ind Cas 961.

Gazette In R v Holt, 6 T R 436, Ashhurst J said "The gazette is an authoritative means of proving all acts relating to the king and the state" In the same case Bullen J said "The Gazette, which is published by royal authority is admissible to prove anything done by His Majesty in his character of king or which has passed through his Majesty's hands" See also Captain Quelch's Trial, 14 How St Tr 1084, Kirwinn v Cockburn, 5 Esp 234, Van Omeron v Dowick, 2 Camp 44, Stat 31 & 32 Vict C 37, ss 2, 5 But the entire gazette must be produced Rez v Loue, 15 Cox 286 Under the provisions of this section the genuineness of the gazette must be presumed, though it is not formally tendered at the trial Bawa Sarup v Emperor, 7 Lah L J 264=88 Ind Cas 22=26 P L R 566=26 Cr L J 1078=A I R 1925 Lah 299 In R v Forsyth Russ & R 274 the reporters say "The Judges seem to think that the production of the Gazette would be sufficient, without proof of its being bought of the Gazette printer or where it came from"

Newspaper Printed matter in general bears upon itself no marks of authorship other than contents But there is ordinarily no necessity for resting upon such evidence, since the responsibility for printed matter under the substantive law, usually arises from the act of causing publication, not merely of writing and hence there is usually available as much evidence of the act of printing or of handing to a printer as there would be of any other act, such as chopping a tree or building a fence There is therefore no judicial sanction for considering the contents alone as sufficient evidence For the newspaper and this like, special question arises Suppose, for example, that the publication of a libel is to be proved, and that the libel is alleged to have been communicated to J S It is simple enough to prove that J S read a copy of the paper containing the libel, but how shall the defendant's publication of that copy be proved? Here the process would be to bring home to him the issuance on that day of a certain copy (either by the testimony of one who bought at an office proved to be the defendant's or by some statutory method), then the identity between the copy and the one read by J S will suffice as evidence that the two issued from the same press, i.e. the defendant's Wigmore § 2150 In Gathercole v Miall 15 M & W 319, 336, Alderson B thus laid down the rule "The question is whether there is reasonable evidence that this is a copy of the individual paper which has been produced and which has been shown to have been published by this defendant"

We must use our own common sense, and remember that, with respect to newspapers, not one but a great variety of copies, are published for general circulation among the public at large If you compare an instrument in one or two parts and find the one is an exact copy of the other, you would have no difficulty in saying it was printed from the same materials and from the same type

So I say here with respect to a newspaper If you find it in general corresponds it is evidence from which the jury may infer that the paper is printed from the same type as the paper which is produced, and if so, it is printed by the defendant" Wigmore § 2150 In England St 38 Geo III C 78, re enacted in G & 7 William IV C 76 requires a daily deposit of a newspaper at the stamp office See also R v O'Connell, 5 State Tr N S 1, 538 Such provision is made in India by the Press and Registration of Books Act (XXV of 1867), s 11A of which enacts "The printer of every newspaper in British India shall deliver at such place and to such officer as the Local Government may by notification in the local official Gazette direct and free of expense to the Government, two copies of each issue of such newspaper as soon as it is published" In G G Jeremiah v F S Vas 2 M W N 576=10 M L T 506=12 Ind Cas 961, it has been held that the presumption of genuineness of the newspaper, under s 81 of the Indian Evidence Act, does not also raise a presumption that it was printed and published by the person by whom it purports to be In delivering the judgment in that case Sundara Aiyar J said

It is contended that under section 81 of the Evidence Act, the Court is bound to presume the genuineness of every document purporting to be a newspaper or a journal and that inasmuch as Exhibit A, in the case bears the name of the accused as the printer and publisher the presumption of its genuineness would include a presumption that the accused is the printer and publisher of Exhibit A, and that, therefore, it was unnecessary for the complainant to let in any evidence

§ 82 of the publication of Exhibit A by the accused Mr Osborne for the appellant contends that the section applies only to public documents, and that in any event, it provides only that the Court should presume that a document purporting to be a newspaper or journal is that it is the particular newspaper or journal, and not that it was printed or published by a particular person. His first contention appears to be supported by a note of Messrs Amner Ali and Woodroffe in their commentaries on the Evidence Act, 1st Ed p 125 that the section refers to public documents, but it is very doubtful whether the language of the section supports it. If the punctuation may be taken to throw any light on the question, the existence of a comma, after the word 'journal' is against the appellant's contention. Even otherwise, the natural import of the words of the section does not appear to favour the view that the phrase 'printed by the Queen's Printer' not only qualifies the expression 'private Act of Parliament', but also 'newspaper or journal'. It is however unnecessary in this case to discuss the question further, as I am of opinion that the presumption of the genuineness of a newspaper does not include a presumption that it was printed and published by the person by whom it purports to be. Such apparently, is not the English Law. According to that law, the proper way to prove the publication of a libel where evidence is not given that a particular paper compiled of was published by the accused, is to prove the statutory declaration made by the accused that he is the printer and publisher of the journal in question. In Gathercole v Mall, 15 M & W 319 Parle B was of opinion that as the defendant had been proved by the regular statutory evidence to be the printer and publisher of the paper the witness's evidence that the copy he saw was similar to the one produced in Court was sufficient to show that it was published by the defendant. According to section 7 of Act XXV of 1867, the production of an authenticated copy of a declaration made under that Act is admissible to prove that the person mentioned in the declaration is the publisher of the journal to which the declaration relates. Section 81 would apparently authorise and require the Court to presume that any document purporting to be a copy of the journal in question is in fact such and this would prove that the declarant under Act XXV of 1867 is the publisher of the paper produced in Court. Section 7 of Act XXV of 1867 expressly provides the mode of proving that a particular person is the printer and publisher of a newspaper. Jeremiah v Pas, supra. Even if newspapers are admissible in evidence without formal proof, the paper itself is not proof of its contents. It would merely amount to an anonymous statement. Beua Sarup v Emperor 88 Ind Cis 22=7 Lah L J 261=26 P L R 568=20 Cr L J 1078

§ 82 When any document is produced before any Court, purporting to be a document which by the law in force for the time being in England and Ireland, would be admissible in proof of any particular in any Court of Justice in England or Ireland, without proof of the seal or stamp or signature authenticating it, or of the judicial or official character claimed by the person by whom it purports to be signed, the Court shall presume that such seal, stamp or signature, is genuine and that the person signing it held, at the time when he signed it, the judicial or official character which he claims, and the document shall be admissible for the same purpose for which it would be admissible in England or Ireland

Origin of this section This section consolidates ss 9, 10 11 of Stat 14 15 Vict C 99 known as Lord Brougham's Act. Section 9 of that Statute runs as follows. Every document which by any law now in force or hereafter to be in force is or shall be admissible in evidence in any particular in any Court of Justice in England or Wales without proof of the seal or stamp or signature authenticating the same, or of the judicial or official character of the person appearing to have signed the same, shall be admitted in evidence to the same extent and for the same purposes in any Court of Justice in Ireland, or before any person having in Ireland by law and consent of parties authority to hear, receive and examine evidence without proof of the seal or stamp or signature, authenticating the same, or of the judicial or official character of the person appearing to have signed the same. Section 10 runs as follows: "Every document which by any law in force or hereafter to be in force is or shall be admissible in evidence in any particular in any Court of Justice in Ireland, without proof of the seal or stamp or signature authenticating the same or of the judicial or official character of the person appearing to have signed the same." Section 11 runs as follows: "Every document which by any law now in force or hereafter to be in force is or shall be admissible in evidence of any particular in any Court of Justice in England or Wales or Ireland without proof of the seal or stamp or signature authenticating the same or of the judicial or official character of the person appearing to have signed the same shall be admitted in evidence to the same extent and for the same purposes in any Court of Justice of any of the British Colonies or before any person having in any such colonies, by law or by consent of parties authority to hear, receive and examine evidence without proof of the seal or stamp or signature authenticating the same or of the judicial or official character of the person appearing to have signed." The words 'British Colony' as used in this Act shall apply to the Islands of Guernsey, Jersey, Alderney, Sark and Man, and to all other possessions of the British Crown, wheresoever and whatsoever (vide s 19 Ibid) So British Colony included British India. But section 11 of Lord Brougham's Act was repealed in India by the Indian Evidence Act section 2 and schedules and from the Statute Book by Statute Law Revision Act of 1875. The Indian Evidence Act has repealed section 11 above but has given effect to the object of that section by enacting this section.

Scope of the English law. There are many instances where records are kept by persons occupying public office, or engaged in occupations of a public nature. These records, though somewhat similar in kind to those of which the Court may take judicial notice, do not usually have a sufficient degree of publicity to bring them within the limits of that class of matters. They are, however, deemed to have sufficient guarantee of reliability to render them admissible if offered in evidence. The fact that they are kept for reference by a person having no interest to falsify them, and that, if untrue, they would be readily discovered and corrected, makes them worthy of evidence. The element of duty also enters into the case. Usually the person keeping the record is under some obligation official or otherwise to keep them and this brings them close to those entries in account books which are admitted because made in the regular course of business pursuant to duty. The application of this exception to the hearsay rule in the early cases caused the admission of acknowledgments of deeds made before a Court of record, enrollments of deed, fines and recoveries, and many records of similar nature. Smart v Williams 1 Salik 280. Lynch v Clarke, 3 Salik 151. It is necessary conditions to the admissibility of a public record or document that it shall have been intended to be open to public inspection. The mere fact that the record is made by a public officer, even though he be acting pursuant to duty, does not make it one intended to be public. A confidential report will therefore be excluded. Sturley v Freese, 43 Law T N S 209. Lord Blackburn in that case discussed very fully the elements which are necessary to make a document public within the meaning of this exception. He says at page 214: "What a public document is within that rule is of course, the great point which we have now to consider. I do not think that 'public is to be taken there as meaning the

S 82. whole world. I think an entry in the books of a manor is public, in the sense that it concerns all the people interested in the manor, and an entry in a corporation book concerning a corporation matter or something in which all the corporation is concerned would be public within that sense. But it must be a public document and it must be made by a public officer. But I think that the very object of it must be that it should be made for the purpose of being kept public, so that the persons concerned in it may have access to it afterwards. The proper mode of proving such a document even by the Common Law of England was by means of examined copy, that is, a copy taken on behalf of the party generally by some clerk or other private person who produces it in the witness box and proves that he has copied it accurately from or examined it with the original and that it is correct. Lynch v. Clerk 3 Salk 151. Reed v. Lamb 29 L. J. 152, Mortimer v. McCallan, 6 M. & W. 511, Will v. 2nd Ed pp 107, 108. The cases do not throw much light on the question what evidence if any it is necessary in such a case to give of the original, but it seems that whereas judicial notice would be taken of the existence, authenticity and custody of those of wide public importance established within the jurisdiction of the Court, such as the journals of the Houses of Parliament or the books of the Bank of England and especially of such as are recorded and kept in the pursuance of statutory provisions of which the Court will take judicial notice, such as land tax assessments, some evidence would be necessary on these points with regard to documents of less notoriety, such as the rolls of a manor Court. In case of the latter descriptions the witnesses who proved the examined copy or some other person should ordinarily give some evidence to verify the original document. In order to put the admissibility of copies of public documents on a clearer and more settled footing Lord Brougham's Act, (Stat 14 & 15 Vict. C. 99) by section 14, enacted that—

‘Whenever any book or other document is of such a public nature as to be admissible in evidence on its mere production from the proper custody, and no statute exists which renders its contents provable by means of a copy, any copy thereof or extract therefrom shall be admissible in evidence in any Court of Justice or before any person now or hereafter having by law or by consent of parties authority to hear receive and examine evidence provided it be proved to be an examined copy or extract, or provided it purport to be signed and certified as a true copy or extract by the officer to whose custody the original is entrusted, and, which officer is hereby required to furnish such certified copy or extract to any person applying at a reasonable time for the same upon payment of a reasonable sum for the same, not exceeding four pence for every folio of ninety words.’

The section does not define what is intended by the words “of such a public nature as to be admissible in evidence on its mere production from the proper custody.” It has been held that the parish registers of baptisms, marriages and burials which have been kept in pursuance of canon and statute law answer his description (Re Hall's Estate (1852) 22 L. J. Ch. 177, Re Porter's Trusts (1856) 25 L. J. Ch. 688) but it seems doubtful whether it could be held to comprise the rolls of manor courts or the books of old corporations or any others which ordinarily require some verification as aforesaid. Wills Evidence 2nd Ed 408, 409. So this Statute does not deal with documents which are provable by means of copies under any other statutes. Before this General Act several statutes had enacted provisions with regard to the proof of particular public documents by means of certified and other copies but in consequence of the omission of any provisions dispensing with the proof of the genuineness of such copies the beneficial effect of the enactments was much diminished. In order to remove the inconvenience the Statute 8 & 9 Vict. c. 113 by section 1, enacted that—

‘Whenever by any Act now in force or hereafter to be in force any certificate, official or public document or proceeding of any corporation or joint stock or other company or any certified copy of any document bye-law entry in any register or other book or of any other proceeding, shall be receivable in evidence of any particular in any Court of Justice, or before any legal tribunal or either house of Parliament or any committee of either house, or in any judicial proceeding the same shall respectively be admitted in evidence, provided they respectively purport to be sealed or impressed with a stamp, or sealed and signed, or signed alone, as required, or impressed with a stamp and signed, as directed by the respective Acts made or to be hereafter made, without any proof of the seal or stamp where a seal or stamp is necessary, or of the signature or of the official character of the person appearing to have signed the same, and without any further proof thereof in every case in which the original record could have been received in evidence.' The general result of these two Statutes seems to be this that, save where some statutory provision requires some other and special mode of proof, the proof of an examined copy or the mere production in Court of a copy purporting to be certified by a person purporting to have the due custody of the original will be sufficient prima facie proof of public document, except in cases where verification of the original was necessary by the common law before an examined copy could be given in evidence. Wills 2d Ed pp 409 410. Where the copy is signed and certified as the section 14 supra provides, it is admissible on its mere production in Court. R v Weaver, L R 2 C C 85. The register of parliamentary voters of a borough and the poll books were provable under that section by copies. Keed v Lamb, 6 H & N 75. The bye laws of a railway company duly made and allowed under Stat 8 & 9 Vict 20, ss 103 111, may be proved by a certified copy under the hand of the secretary of the company in whose custody they are. Motteram v E Counties, 7 C B N S 53—29 L J M C 57. As to proof of bye laws of a municipal corporation under Stat 45 & 16 Vict C 50, s 24, vide Robinson v Gregory, (1900) 1 K B 534. For a complete list of Statutes which contain provision making certified copies evidence, vide Roscoe's Digest of the Law of Evidence, Eighteenth Ed Vol I pp 98 100. For an exhaustive list of documents which are provable in England by means of certified copies under particular Acts of Parliament vide §§ 1602 1609 of Taylor on the Law of Evidence, Wills on Evidence 2d Ed Appendix A pp 422 460.

Scope of the section. The object of this section is to give currency in the Courts of India to the presumptions which, with regard to certain classes of documents, are recognised in the English Courts. Such documents are declared by this section to be admissible in India as they would be in England, and it is no more necessary in Indian Court, than it would be in an English Court, to prove the seal or signature or to prove that the person signing held the office which he claims. Chun Et 11th Ed 175. The chief magistrate of the city of Glasgow being a person lawfully authorized to administer oaths a declaration as to the execution of a power of attorney taken before him and authenticated by his certificate and the common seal of the city of Glasgow and by a Notarial certificate is sufficient proof of the execution. In the goods of Henderson, 22 C 491. Both the declarations purport to have been made under section 16 of the Statutory Declarations Act, 1855 (5 & 6 Will IV C 62), see also In the goods of John Eliot Woodroffe's Ex 8th Ed 567, In the goods of William Abbot ibid, In the goods of Henderson, ibid. In the goods of Henry Pacler ibid, In the goods of H W Agor, ibid, In the goods of William Cornell ibid. In the goods of Henry Francis ibid, In the goods of Anna Hinde ibid. On an application for letters of administration to the estate of a deceased who was domiciled in Scotland and to whose estate one P had been appointed executor datus qua Father the application being made by one K under a power of Attorney granted by P, such power not having been executed and authenticated in the manner provided by s 85 of the Evidence Act. Held that the application must be refused. In the goods of A J Primrose 16 C 776. In delivering the judgment Norris J said 'Section 85 of the Evidence Act provides that the Court shall presume that every document purporting to be a power of attorney, and to have been executed before and authenticated by a Notary Public or any Court, or Judge, Magistrate, British Consul or Vice consul, or Representative of Her Majesty or of the Government of India was so executed and authenticated. This power of attorney is not executed before or authenticated by any of the persons mentioned in the section, and in order to comply with the provisions of the section, the power of attorney

S. 83 must be executed before or be authenticated by one of those persons. Therefore, I am reluctantly obliged to refuse this application." It is submitted that Norris J did not consider whether this section is applicable. Section 83 of the Evidence Act is an enabling section, its object being to add facilities to prove powers of attorneys and not to exclude any other mode of proof than that allowed by that section. Hoodroffe I, 5th Ed 567. In a similar case in the Madras High Court Mr Justice Shepherd said "A question has been raised as to the proof of the execution of the power of attorney under which the petitioner in this matter seeks to act. The power of attorney does not purport to have been executed in the presence of a notary public or any other of the persons designated in section 83 of the Evidence Act, but with regard to the execution by each of three executors, one of the attesting witnesses has made a declaration before a notary public to the effect that he witnessed the execution of the power of attorney by one of the executors, and that the signature of the other attesting witness is the proper signature of the person bearing that name. To each of the declarations is appended a certificate signed and sealed by the notary public. In similar circumstances it has been held in Calcutta that, in as much as the execution is not proved in the manner indicated in section 83 of the Evidence Act the application for letters of administration ought to be refused (In the goods of A J Primrose 16 C 776). In arriving at this decision, Mr Justice Norris seems to have assumed that the provisions contained in section 83 is of an exhaustive character and no other mode of proving the execution of a power of attorney is admissible. That assumption however is in my opinion not warranted by the language of the section, nor can it have been intended to exclude other legal modes of proving the fact in question viz the execution of the power of attorney. I can not see why the fact should not be proved by an affidavit made before a person competent to administer an oath. The Evidence Act is expressly declared not to apply to affidavits. Seeing that the declarations are made in the form prescribed by the statute of 1833 and before officials competent to administer an oath I am of opinion that they ought to be received as evidence of the facts therein stated. I am told that it has been the practice here, as apparently it was in Calcutta to receive such declarations and I cannot say that the practice is erroneous." But certificates issued by the Manchester Chamber of Commerce that there was a natural strike of coal miners and consequent stoppage congestion and disorganisation are not admissible as they are neither public records under s 35 nor are documents of the nature mentioned in s 82. Girdhardas v Kerauka 28 Bom L R 232=93 Ind Cas 622=A I R 1926 Bom 253. A Register of Births and Deaths kept under Madras Act III of 1899 is a public document and a certified copy of an entry in it is admissible under this section and section 35(5). Krishna Chariar v Krishna Chariar, 38 M 166=(1913) M W N 355=13 M L T 385=24 M L J 517=19 Ind Cas 452.

83 The Court shall presume that maps or plans purporting to be made by the authority of Government were so made, and are accurate, but maps or plans made for the purposes of any cause must be proved to be accurate.

Principle The general ground of reception is that such documents contain the results of inquiries made under competent public authority and concerning matters in which the public are interested. Phipson, 313. The very office of a surveyor is to run lines and establish boundaries for the purpose of applying the terms of grants and patents and thus of perpetuating the settlement of boundaries. It is therefore a natural implication that he has the duty and the authority to make a written return of his doings. Wigmore § 1665. So these maps are admissible in evidence as an exception to the Hearsay rule (vide s 36). The presumption is that public officers do as the law and their duty require them. Lauson Pre Et 67. "It is a recognized principle that a person acting in the capacity of a public officer is prima facie taken to be so. The fact does not of itself prove any title, but only, that the person fills the office." Per Patteson J in Bowley v Barnes, 8 Q B 1037. The well known maxim of omnia presumuntur rite esse acta S. 83

Scope of the section. This section is applicable only to maps and plans purporting to be prepared by the Government. Vadakkuvijedath v Nilambar, 9 M L J 415. This section does not deal with the question of the admissibility of a private map. If such a question arises in a litigation, the answer must depend upon the relevancy of the map in relation to the question in controversy. Shib Charan v Nil Kantha Mahato 16 Ind C 15 747=17 C L J 612. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, settlement records and maps may be properly judicially received in evidence as correct when made. Marung Ya Gyua v Ma Ngue 2 L B R 56. A map prepared by an officer of Government in the course of proceedings for the settlement of land forming the silted bed of a certain river is not one admissible in evidence under ss 36 and 83 but it is a map, whose accuracy must be proved by the party producing it, before it can be admitted in evidence. Kanto Prashad v Jagat Chandra 23 C 335. In a boundary dispute, a survey map, if not conclusive evidence is valuable evidence which should be considered. Gudadhar Banerjee v Tara Chand 15 W R 3, Ranee v Gureedhar 20 W R 243. A map prepared by an officer of Government, while in charge of a khas mahal the possession by the Government being only that of a private proprietor, does not come under this section so as to raise a presumption of the accuracy. Jumrajoy v Duarkanath 5 C 287=4 C L R 571. Ram v Bansulhar, 9 C 741. Where it was established that an Amin, making a thal bust map at a revenue survey had no authority to determine what lands were debutter but only to lay down and to map boundaries held that this map could not be treated as raising a presumption of correctness within this section, on the question as to the amount of debutter land in one of the villages mapped. Where statements as to what lands were debutter appeared on the face of the map to have been made as pointed out by agent on behalf of the proprietor of the mouzra and the principal tenants, in the presence of the agent of the holders of the estates in the neighbouring mouzras, held that this section has not the effect of making those statements evidence. Jarad Kumari v Lalon Moni 18 C 221=17 I A 145 P C. Accuracy of Amin's map means accuracy of drawings and measurement. It has no reference to correctness of boundaries, etc., in relation to rights of parties. Omuria v Kalee 25 W R 179. A map prepared by private arrangement by a Deputy Collector for the settlement of the silted bed of a river does not fall within the purview of this section. Rahimuddin v Bhabangana Debi, 19 Ind Cas 572. But where maps and plans and statements were made by patuaris who were government servants by the authority of Government for a public and not a private purpose such maps must be presumed to be accurate under this section. Rahimatullah v Secretary of State 113 P L R 1913=112 P W R 1913=63 P R 1913=18 Ind Cas 799. No presumption of accuracy can be made with regard to maps not falling within this section. Madhabai v Gaganendra, 9 C W N 111. Under this section a thalbust map must be presumed to be correct. Niamutoolah v Himmul 22 W R 519 see also Photal v Ranee 19 W R 361 P C. The fact of a later Government survey map having been prepared does not affect the presumption of accuracy under this Act of an earlier superseded map. Joggesur Singh v Byrant Nath 5 C 822=6 C L R 519. A copy of a map prepared by an Amin employed by Government, was tendered in evidence for the plaintiff in a suit for possession. It was admitted by the Subordinate Judge at the trial but was ultimately rejected by him as the copy was not proved. An interlocutory order was made by the High Court giving the plaintiff liberty to prove the map on the hearing of the appeal and directing the original to be called for from the Collector's office. This procedure was affirmed by their Lordships of the Privy Council. Dinamani v Brojomohini 29 C 197 (190)=29 I A 24 P C. But a map prepared for the purpose of a suit is not admissible under this section in the absence of proof of its accuracy. Mahesari Hiratal 1 N L R 121.

The question whether a map is a public document within s 74 Evidence Act, is prima facie a question of fact, and the mere circumstances that the map

- S 84. in question was treated as public document in some other litigation, to which the plaintiff was not a party does not bind the plaintiff. A map prepared at the instance of the Collector in this capacity as the holder of a trust estate, is a private document and its accuracy has to be established. This section has no application to such a map. Pronath v Durga Tarun 11 C L J 578=10 Ind Cas 376=16 C W N 317. Where the plaintiff's estate formed portion of a parganah in which the Government and other landlords were interested and the Government prepared a chitta of the whole property and set down against each plot to which of those various estates it belonged. Held that although the chitta does not come under this section and cannot be regarded as a public document, yet it may be used in evidence under s 13 of the Act. Narendra Kishore v Ka v Lalul 2 Ind Cas 513. A map prepared in 1872 under the direction of the Government acting not in its sovereign capacity, but as the land lord of certain holding is admissible in evidence if not under this section under section 13 of the Act. Upendra v Chairman of the Calcutta Corporation, 16 C W N 116.

Maps and surveys made in India for revenue purposes are official documents prepared by competent persons and with such publicity and notice to persons interested as to be admissible and valuable evidence of the state of things at the time they are made. They are conclusive, and may be shown to be wrong, but in the absence of evidence to the contrary they may be judicially received in evidence as correct when made. Jagadindra Nath v Secretary of State 30 C 291=7 C W N 193=5 Bom L R 1 see also Sateowri v Secretary of State, 22 C 252, Mann Thun v Maran, 41 Ind Cas 247, Shyama Sundari v Jogobundhu, 16 C 186, Sarat Sundari v Secretary of State 11 C 781. Deenan Ram v Collector of Shahabad 14 B L R 221 note. Ram Jeon v Collector of Shahabad 19 W R 127. Abdul Hamid v Kanchandara 7 C W N 842 (S 1). Chittas made by Government for its own private use in connection with resumption proceedings are nothing more than documents prepared for the information of the Collector and are not evidence against private persons for the purpose of proving that the lands described therein are or are not of a particular character or tenure. They are admissible neither under the section nor under s 13 when it is not known whether they were noted on for the purpose of resumption proceeding or if in fact reliance was placed upon them by Government for the purpose of resumption proceedings. Upendra Nath v Radha Gobinda, 98 Ind Cas 85=A I R 1927 Cal 189. Where entries are made in the thallust without enquiry and where they were immediately contradicted, no reliance can be placed on it. Jogadindra v Hemanta Kumari, 15 C W N 887 P C=14 C L J 319. Renell's map was made 22 years or so before the decennial settlement on which the permanent settlement proceeded. If it be referred to as evidence, there is a presumption of its accuracy under this section in respect of such matters as to which it is admissible in evidence. Secretary of State for India v Ananda Mohan, 34 C L J 205, see also Naresch Narayan v Secretary of State, 71 Ind Cas 1048=32 M L T 162=50 C 416=45 M L J 444=28 C W N 453 P C. Hiridas Achariya v Secretary of State 43 Ind Cas 361=26 C L J 590=22 M L T 133=20 Bom L R 49 (P C). Secretary of State v Kalkha, 15 C L J 281.

84 The Court shall presume the genuineness of every book

Presumption as to collections of laws and reports of decisions purporting to be printed or published under the authority of the Government of any country, and to contain any of the laws of that country, and of every book purporting to contain reports of decisions of the Courts of such country

Principle Vide section 38

Scope of the section The words "any country" are wide enough to include India Great Britain and other foreign countries and as such the Indian Acts, British Statutes as well as foreign law can be proved by the authorised edition of the Statute of that country. This section deals with statute law as well as judge-made law. When the Indian Evidence Act was enacted in 1872 there was no provision in any other Statute which enabled the Court to ascertain the case law from the authorised Report. The authorised as well as unauthorised reports were in existence at that time and it seems by this section those unauthorised reports were presumed to be genuine. So according to this section as well as section 38 reports of cases recognised by the Courts of a country will be evidence and be relevant and receivable. North v. 202, see also notes under section 38.

85 The Court shall presume that every document

Presumption as to powers-of attorney purporting to be a power of attorney, and to have been executed before, and authenticated by, a notary public, or any Court,

Judge, Magistrate, British Consul or Vice-Consul, or representative of Her Majesty, or of the Government of India, was so executed and authenticated Principle The genuineness of certain purporting official seal impressions need not be evidenced otherwise than by the production for inspection of the document bearing them. What is the significance of this rule? What is it that Courts actually do, evidentially, when they accept such seals with no further evidence? When a document bearing a purporting official seal—a notary's certificate to a power of attorney, for example—is offered in Court, the acceptance of it for the offered purpose involves the assumption of four things namely (1) that there is an official of that name, (2) that this is genuinely his seal impression (3) that this seal impression was affixed by him and further more (4) that it is allowable to receive this hearsay official statement as testimony to the fact stated by him. The first three of these elements go to the matter of the genuineness of the document that is to say, the document purports to be that of J S, a notary, asserting a certain fact, and the net result of the first three elements is that we accept as a fact that J S a notary, did make this written assertion. If there were a signature only, with no seal, and the document was similarly accepted, the second and third elements would merge (i.e. the purporting J S's signature is accepted as written by him) it is only in the case of a seal that they are distinct (for it might be his seal impression and yet another person might have affixed it). Thus it is that the second and third elements are always judicially united, i.e. any presumption of genuineness, whenever made covers both elements. Hence, in effect the situation, for seal or signature alike, is reducible to the following elements and is so in practice treated (1) that there is an official of that name (2) (3) that this document was genuinely executed by him. Now the remaining element (4) that this hearsay statement of his is admissible is obviously concerned with the Hearsay rule.

Of these, the elements (2) and (3) are obviously pure questions of authentication, i.e. the acceptance of the document signifies that we have some how assumed that this document was genuinely executed by one J S. What is the true nature of the process? Is it the process of Judicial Notice? It is sometimes dealt within the terms. But this seems clearly unsound. In the first place the principle of judicial notice i.e. of assuming the truth of an allegation without any evidence (vide s 56) rests on the conceded notoriety of the fact alleged as being too well known to need evidence, obviously this can never be the case with the specific act of executing a particular document. In the next place the doctrine of judicial notice applies as soon as the general allegation is made without any evidence whatsoever in its support it would follow that as soon as the party alleged by counsel that J S had executed an alleged document the Court must notice that as a fact and no production of a purporting seal or signature would be necessary but this is obviously not the practice. Further more it is conceivable that a Court might judicially know what the design of a certain public seal was but this would not of itself enable the Judge to declare that the specific impression offered in Court was genuine or forged. It would seal, then, that what is actually done is not done by virtue of any doctrine of judicial notice. It is, on the contrary, a simple instance of declaring that sufficient evidence of genuineness exists, on the general principle of Authentication. The fact constituting this sufficient evidence is the existence upon the document of an impression or writing purporting to be the official seal or signature, and this may well serve as sufficient evidence because the forgery of the seal or signature would be a crime and detection would be fairly easy and certain. On the other hand the element (1) noted above namely, that I S who has thus genuinely executed this document is the official that he purports to be, is a real result of the principle of Judicial Notice. This element is wholly separable from that of the authenticity of the paper. Higmore § 2161

S 85

Scope of the section The Court takes judicial notice of the seals and signature of the persons mentioned in this section [vide section 57, cls (6) and (7)] This section authorises a Court to presume the genuineness of the execution and authentication of a power of attorney when such execution was done before and authentication was done by any of the officials mentioned in this section. The section is an extension of the provisions contained in the Registration Act with reference to powers of attorney executed for the purpose of procuring the registration of conveyance or other such instruments. Chun Li 11th Feb 178 Where a power of attorney was neither executed before nor authenticated by any persons mentioned in this section, letters of administration to the estate of a deceased person by virtue of that power of attorney cannot be granted. In the goods of A J Primrose 16 C 776 (779). But so far as presumption of due execution and authentication of a power of attorney is concerned, this section is not exhaustive. In re Sladen, 21 M 492 contra, In the goods of A J Primrose, 16 C 776. When a document purporting to be a power of attorney and to have been executed before and authenticated by a Notary Public is produced before the Court an affidavit of identification as to the person purporting to make the power of attorney being the person named therein is unnecessary. In the goods of Mylne 9 C W N 986=33 C 625. A registered power of attorney is admissible in evidence to prove the agency under this section and unless its genuineness is suspected in which case proof of its execution can be called for the agent should be allowed to appear and act within the meaning of Order III, rule 2 of the C P Code. Habib un nissa v Mushavaff 18 O C 372=33 Ind Cas 661. In the goods of Mylne supra A power of attorney executed in England before a Justice of the Peace and authenticated by his signature alone without his official seal was accepted. In the goods of Bridson Nov 19th 1889, per Holton J cited in Woodhoffs Ev 81h Ed 573.

Power of attorney No definition of the term "power of attorney" is given in the Act. According to section 2 (21) of the Indian Stamp Act "power of attorney" includes any instrument (not chargeable with a fee under the law relating to Court fees for the time being in force) empowering a specified person to act for and in the name of the person executing it. So a power or letter of attorney is a writing authorising another person who in such case is called the attorney of the party, appointing him to do any lawful act in the stead of another as to receive debts or dividends sue a third person transfer stock or give possession upon a deed of feoffment. It is either general or special, i.e., general in respect of the conduct of all affairs of a person, as where he leaves the country special in respect of any one or more named matters, as to receive money. This instrument gives the attorney authority to act in his name exactly as the party giving it would himself do until revocation. Bail of Bengal v Ramanatham, 43 C 527, Venkataramana v Narasimha 39 M 141=24 M L J 180=1913 M W N 73=19 Ind Cas 137. Pernanand v Sat Prasad 33 A 487=19 Ind Cas 617 (F B), Reference under the Stamp Act s 46 15 M 386, Raghu v Ramchunder 10 W R 39=11 B L R 55 (F B). Jojo v Mohammad, 80 Ind Cas 467, Bryant v Banque-du Peuple, A C (1893) 170. A power of attorney which was executed in England without a stamp but a stamp was fixed in British India is a valid instrument. In the goods of the Adam 23 C 187. Where the endorsement on the deed as registered stated that the person who presented the document for registration had a special power of attorney authorising him to do so it must be presumed that the power of attorney was a proper power under s 33 of the Registration Act Section 34 of the Registration Act imposes upon the registering officer the duty of enquiring as to the due execution of the document, and by s 35, he registers the document on being satisfied as to the various particulars mentioned, so that when the question of execution is raised the presumption from registration of omnia presumuntur rite et solemniter acta applies, and further all defects in his procedure are expressly cured by section 87 of the Act Seth Kanhai Lal v. The National Bank of India, 28 C W N 689=40 C L J 1 P C, Baynath v. Jamal, 28 C W N 1029, Chhotey v. Collector, 44 A 514= L R 49 I A 375=27 C W N 437 P C, Kristonath v. Brown 14 C 176 Jambu v. Muhamad, 43 I A 22=37 A 49=19 C W N 282 As regards deposit of original instruments creating powers of attorney, Vide section 4 of the Powers of Attorney's Act (VII of 1882) Powers of attorney should be strictly construed Krishna v. Tribhuban 114 Ind Cis 305=A I R 1929 Oudh 12, Bani of Bengal v. Ramanathan, 43 C 527=43 I A 48

Notary Public In the interests of commerce the rules of evidence have been so extended that the acts of notaries public in the discharge of their duties under the law merchant are judicially noticed in all Courts, and their proper official acts under the law merchant are prima facie sufficiently authenticated by their seals Hutcheson v. Mannington 6 Ves Jr 823 Brooke v. Brooke 17 Ch D 833 Coole v. Wilby, 25 Ch D 769 The omission of a notary to affix his seal of office to his certificate of his acts, at common law, did not affect the validity of the certificate made by the officer At common law, notaries were authorized to provide themselves with seals and authenticate their official acts with them, and when so authenticated their certificates of such acts were received in evidence by the Courts of all civilized countries without further proof and were prima facie evidence that the recitals contained therein were true but if not authenticated, proof had to be made of the notary's official character before it could be received in evidence Burr Jones Esq § 110 (1) A power of attorney executed in British Honduras before a Notary Public was held to be provable in Court of equity by the production of the Notary's certificate under his hand and seal Armstrong v. Stockhams 24 L J Ch 176, Haywood v. Stephens, 36 L J Ch 136, Taylor Esq § 1566 So also an affidavit sworn before a Notary public is also receivable Haggit v. Ineff, 24 L J Ch 120 under s 133 of the Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881) the Governor General in Council is authorized to appoint notaries public within any local area and by s 139 of the same Act power is given to the same authority to make rules for notaries public

86 The Court may presume that any document purporting to be a certified copy of any judicial record of any country not forming part of Her Majesty's dominions is genuine and accurate, if the document purports to be certified in any manner which is certified by any representative of Her Majesty or of the Government of India * [in or for] such country to be the manner commonly in use in that country for the certification of copies of judicial records

† [An officer who, with respect to any territory or place not forming part of Her Majesty's dominions, is a Political Agent

* These words in s 86 were substituted for the words resident in by the Indian Evidence Act (1872) Amendment Act 1891 (3 of 1891), s 8

† This paragraph was added to s 86 by s 4 of the Indian Evidence Act 1899 (5 of 1899) in substitution for the paragraph added by s 8 of the Indian Evidence Act (1872) Amendment Act 1891 (3 of 1891)

S 86 therefor, as defined in section 3, clause (40), of the General Clauses Act, 1897,* shall for the purposes of this section, be deemed to be a representative of the Government of India in and for the country comprising that territory or place

Principle The theory of judicial records is that the judgment roll, as finally made up embodies in itself alone the entirety of the controversy as adjudicated and thus supersedes the miscellaneous mass of oral and written pleadings, motions, and orders, which have gone to make up the proceedings. Wigmore § 2450 The doctrine about producing the original of a document, or accounting for its absence, permits copies to be used when the original is not obtainable, the application of this to the production of the original judicial records of domestic tribunal is well established Ibid The usual modes of authenticating foreign judicial records are, either by an exemplification of a copy under the Great Seal of a State in as much as Courts recognize, without other proof than inspection, the seals of state of other nations which have been recognized by their own sovereign (Greenleaf Ev 479) They may be authenticated by a copy proved to be a true copy by a witness who has compared it with the original or by the certificate of an officer properly authorized by law to give a copy, which certificate must itself also be duly authenticated Buttrick v Allen 8 Mass 273, Parlard v Bailey, 6 Foster 152, Church v Hubbard 2 Cranch 228, Greenleaf Ev § 514 The law on the subject is thus stated by Marshall C J in Church v Hubbard 2 Cr 186 236 The sanction of an oath is required for their establishment unless they can be verified by some other such high authority that the law respects it not less than the oath of an individual The consul has not sworn he has only certified that they are truly copied from the originals To give to this certificate the force of testimony it will be necessary to show that this is one of the Consular functions to which to use its own language, the laws of this country attach full faith and credit So this section authorises the representatives of his Majesty or the Government of India in or for such country to give such certificate So if the copy is merely certified by an officer of the Court without other proof it is inadmissible Appleton v Lord Braybrooke 2 Stark 6 M & S 31 Thompson v Stewart 3 Conn 171

Scope of the section This section does not exclude other proof Vallabdas v Irawankar 30 Bom L R 1519=113 Ind Crs 313=A I R 1929 Bom 21 So a document purporting to be a certified copy of a deposition in a suit in a Court in Cutch is admissible in evidence where the certificate is to the document being a true copy was given by a higher officer than the trial Judge Ibid If the copy is certified under the hand of the Judge of the Court his handwriting may also be proved Henry v Adey 3 East 221 Buchanan v Raeler, 1 Campb 63 If the Court has a seal, it ought to be affixed to the copy and proved, even though it be worn so smooth as to make no distinct impression Cavan v Start, 1 Stark 525, Indt v Allen, 3 Campb 215 n And if it is clearly proved that the Court has no seal it must be shown to possess no other requisites to entitle it to credit Blair v Lord Braybrooke 2 Stark 7 Parlard v Hill, 7 Cowen 131 If the copy is merely certified by an officer of the Court, without other proof, it is inadmissible Appleton v Lord Braybrooke, 2 Stark 7 So this section says that if a copy of a foreign judicial record purports to be certified in a given way the Court may presume it to be genuine and accurate It does not exclude other proof The assertion of Bala Bishu that Ram Dax sued Chuni and that she gave evidence before Moonshi Mah in his presence is primary evidence of those matters His proof of the ad huc records is secondary evidence and by ss 65 and 66 of the Evidence Act, secondary evidence may be given of public documents which they are under section 71 without notice to the adverse party when the person in possession of the document is out of the reach of or not subject to the process of the Court, which is the case here Per Lord

Hobhouse in Hararnund Roy v Ramgopal, 1 C W N 129=27 C 639=2 Bom L R 562, see also Monmohun v Grish, 8 Mad Jur 14. But the provisions of this section is mandatory. Murl Das v Achut Das, 92 Ind Cas 138=A I R 1924 Lah 493=5 Lah 105. So copies of documents required by section 79 or 86 of the Evidence Act to be certified, are not admissible in evidence when they are not duly certified. Ram Pershad v Rattan Chand, 87 P L R 1909=4 Ind Cas 929. The certificate required by law under this section cannot be dispensed with merely because it can be obtained at any time. The mere fact that copies of depositions of a Court of a native State were forwarded by the Resident in due course does not make them admissible without his certificate. Murl Das v Achut Das, supra. So also where the records of a German Court were not authenticated in accordance with the Indian Evidence Act but in the manner prescribed by the English Extradition Act which is applicable in this country the records were admissible under it. In the matter of Rudolph Stalman, 15 C W N 1053=14 C L J 375=12 Cr L J 305. This section contains an instance of documents to which s 65 cl (f) seems to refer. Hurish v Prosonno 22 W R 303.

Section 11 of the Civil Procedure runs as follows "The Court shall presume, upon the production of any document purporting to be a certified copy of a foreign judgment, that such judgment was pronounced by a Court of competent jurisdiction unless the contrary appears on the record but such presumption may be displaced by proving want of jurisdiction." The presumption is a rebuttable presumption. Hadjee Kaseem v Hadjee Isup 6 C W N 829=29 C 509, Molony v Gibbons, L R 32 Ch D 131. Udhe v Puan 41 P L R 1910, Ramanathan v Lakshmanan, 24 M L T 241, Sita Devi v Gopal Saran, 9 Pat L T 397=111 Ind Cas 762=A I R 1923 Pat 375, Ishri Prasad v Sri Ram 25 A L J 887=105 Ind Cas 186=A I R 1927 All 510.

In para 1 for the words "resident in" the words "in or for" have been inserted by the Indian Evidence Act (1872) Amendment Act 1891. This amendment was necessary for the decision in Ganee Mahomed v Tarine Charn, 14 C 546. In that case it was doubted whether the notification in the Calcutta Gazette of the 8th April 1879 by the then Deputy Commissioner of Cooch Behar regarding the mode of certifying copies of judicial records as correct copies after the Governor General in Council had under s 434 of the Civil Procedure Code notified that decrees of Cooch Behar Courts might be executed as if they were decrees of British Indian Courts was a compliance with the provisions of s 86 of the Evidence Act, when there was a representative of the Government of India resident in Cooch Behar. The notification referred to above is of no use when there is no representative of the Government of India in Cooch Behar so that certified copies of judicial records of Cooch Behar cannot then be received in evidence in British Indian Courts under s 86 of the Evidence Act.

87 The Court may presume that any book to which it

Presumption as to books maps and charts

may refer for information on matters of public or general interest, and that any published map or chart, the statements of which are relevant facts and which is produced for its inspection, was written and published by the person and at the time and place, by whom or at which it purports to have been written or published.

Scope of the section In proving matters of public or general interest the declarations will not be confined to those which are merely oral. Thus in England ancient maps showing public roads and the boundaries between counties towns parishes and manors are admissible when it is proved that they have been made or recognized by persons having knowledge of the subject who are since deceased. Hammond v Bradstreet 10 Ex 390, Pipe v Fulcher 28 L J Q B 12, Reg v Milton, 1 C & K 58. But this section authorises a Court to presume, that a book on matters of public or general interest and any published map or chart was written or published by the person and at the time and place by whom or at which it purports to have been written or published. A Court is justified in referring to books published long before the suit in which the usage of the institution and its history are described both being matters relevant to the suit Augustine v. Medley 10 M 211 see also Murthy v. Shukh Mohamed 28 C L J 106 18 Ind Cas 541 where it has been held that reference may legitimately be made to the work of Mr Crooks on Castes and Tribes on the Northwestern Provinces and Oudh as an authoritative custom prevalent among the Fraki sect of Mohammedans.

S. 89

88 The Court may presume that a message, forwarded from a telegraph office to the person to whom such message purports to be addressed corresponds with a message delivered for transmission at the office from which the message purports to be sent, but the Court shall not make any presumption as to the person by whom such message was delivered for transmission.

Presumption as to telegraphic messages

Scope of the section This section allows the Courts to treat telegraph messages received as if they were the originals sent with the exception that a presumption is not to be made as to the persons by whom they were delivered for transmission and unless the non production of the originals is accounted for, secondary evidence of their contents is inadmissible Shunaram v. Fnamu, U B R (1897 1901) Vol II 384 Before the section can be utilized, there must be legal proof that the message had been forwarded from the telegraph office to the person to whom such message purports to have been addressed. In the absence of such evidence the telegram cannot be held to have been proved Thadur Singh v. Emperor 1 Ind Cis 210. The Court is forbidden by the express provisions of this section to make any presumption as to the person by whom the telegram was sent Paradarayulu v. Emperor, 12 M 855=51 Ind Cas 343. But in n. Borhry case it has been held that this section merely embodies the fact that a telegraph office makes no enquiries and is in no way responsible for the identity of a sender of a message much less for the truth of the contents. It is not open to the prosecution on the single evidence of the telegram to ask the Court to presume that it was sent by a supposed sender. But there is nothing in the section to prevent the telegram once admitted from being considered along with the rest of the evidence. Emperor v. Abdul Gani 49 B 873=27 Bom L R 1373=91 Ind Cis 690=A I R 1926 Bom 71.

Presumption as to due execution etc of documents not produced

89 The Court shall presume that every document, called for and not produced after notice to produce, was attested, stamped and executed in the manner required by law.

Principle A circumstance sometimes treated as an extrajudicial admission though in theory distinct in nature is the opponent's destruction or suppression of the instrument in question Wignore § 2132. Preliminarily to proof of contents (of a lost document), and involving proof of execution stands proof of the pre existence in the state of a valid instrument. This is a rudimental principle which is not contested. Now there is no specific proof of execution and what was there also? (The other party to the alleged agreement had burnt the paper.) Every thing is to be presumed in odium spoliatoris and had it certainly appeared that the destroyed paper purported to be an agreement such as is attempted to be established it would have sufficed for the admission of subsequent evidence of its contents. It seems clear on principle that, 1

there be no subscribing witness the act of destruction is itself the best evidence of which such a case is susceptible, because it has put it out of the party's power to submit the paper to witnesses of handwriting, and the act of a spoiler is in its nature equivalent to a confession. But, before he can be fixed with the character of a spoiler, the purport of the paper must be proved to have been what is surmised to have been. There are few men who have not papers which it would be not only innocent but prudent to destroy. If the paper destroyed were shown to have been an agreement for the land, it would raise a presumption of identity sufficient to dispense with the ordinary proof of execution and let in the contents of the paper (as proved by another witness). (But the witness to destruction appeared not to have read the paper destroyed and thus to be unable to identify it.) I would seem, therefore, that the plaintiff, in making out a circumstance to stand for proof of execution ought to have shown a competent degree of knowledge (of identity) in the witness drawn from the declarations of him who destroyed the paper or some other source equally satisfactory if such there were. Had that been done it would have produced a presumption of identity and consequent execution. Higmore § 2132. So this section proceeds on the maxim omnia præsumentur contra spoliatorum (Every presumption is made against a wrong doer.)

Scope of the section. There is a presumption also in favour of innocence whence it might be assumed that everything had been done which the law required. Execution attestation and a proper stamp, therefore will be presumed if the party who has possession of the instrument refuses or neglects to produce it on notice. Hart v Hart 1 Hure. Cressy v Anderson 1 Stark 35. Vort. Et 265. If a man by his own tortious act, withhold evidence by which the nature of his case would be manifested every presumption to his disadvantage will be adopted. 1 Smith L. C. 10th Ed 353. 1 Vern 19. According to the same principle if a man withhold an agreement under which he is chargeable after a notice to produce, it is presumed as against him to have been properly stamped until the contrary appears. Crisp v Anderson 1 Stark N P C 35. Marine Investment Co v Harbide, L R 5 H L 624. This section is restricted to cases, where a notice is delivered to the adverse party. It does not extend to cases, where a summons to produce is delivered to a stranger to the suit. Hart. Et p 68. See also Umud Ra v Sayyad Ibid, 38 A 494 = 21 C W N 265. So where any document is not produced after due notice to produce, and after being called for it is presumed to have been duly stamped (Clovenadence v Carrel 18 C B 44) unless it be shown to have remained unstamped for some time after its execution. Marine Investment Company v Harbide L R 5 H L & 1 App 624. Steph Dig. Et. Art 96. Whitley Stokes Vol II p 900. The Act contains no rule as to when alterations and interlineation shall be presumed to have been made (a) in the case of a will (b), in the case of other document. In case (a) they are presumed to have been made after the execution of the will. Simmons v Radall 1 Sun N S 136. In case (b) they are presumed to have been so made that the making would not be an offence. Gordon's Case Deir S1 & P 502 per Jervis C J. Stokes Anglo Indian Code Vol II p 900. Where the attesting witnesses of a mortgage deed where it was proved that the mortgagor had executed the deed and that it had been returned to him at the time of the sale of the mortgaged property to the mortgagee and where the mortgagor failed to produce the deed before the Court though called upon to do so. Held that the execution of the mortgage deed was in view of s 89 of the Evidence Act satisfactorily established irrespective of the provision of s 68. Jang Bahadur v Chanbay Singh, 41 Ind C.R. 171.

90 Where any document, purporting or proved to be

Presumption as to document-thirty years old

thirty years old, is produced from any custody which the Court in the particular case considers proper, the Court may presume that the signature and every other part of such presume that the

S 90. document, which purports to be in the handwriting of any particular person, is in that person's handwriting, and, in the case of a document executed or attested, that it was duly executed and attested by the persons by whom it purports to be executed and attested

Explanation - Documents are said to be in proper custody if they are in the place in which, and under the care of the person with whom, they would naturally be, but no custody is improper if it is proved to have had a legitimate origin, or if the circumstances of the particular case are such as to render such an origin probable

This explanation applies also to section 41

Illustrations

(a) A has been in possession of landed property for a long time. He produces from his custody deeds relating to the land, showing his titles to it. The custody is proper

(b) A produces deeds relating to landed property of which he is the mortgagor. The mortgagor is in possession. The custody is proper

(c) A, a connection of B, produces deeds relating to lands in B's possession which were deposited with him by B for safe custody. The custody is proper

Principle The reason for this specific and simple rule are two fold. First after a long lapse of time, ordinary testimonial evidence from those who saw the documents' execution is practically unavailable and a necessity always exists for resorting to circumstantial evidence. Secondly the circumstance of age—or long existence—of the document together with its place of custody, its unobtrusive appearance, and perhaps other circumstances suffice in combination as evidence to be submitted to the jury. Wigmore § 2137. In Doe v Baulings 7 East 291 Lord Ellenborough said 'Ancient deeds proved to have been found amongst deeds and evidences of law may be given in evidence although the execution of them can not be proved' and the reason given is that it is hard to prove ancient things and the finding them in such a place is a presumption that they were fairly and honestly obtained and received for use and are free from suspicion of dishonesty. Wigmore § 2137. Wynne v Tyrrell 4 B & Ad 376, Andews v Motley, 32 L J C P 123, 131

Scope of the section The general rule is this, that an ancient document proves itself (Doe v Burdett 1835, 4 A & E 1 19), or in other words it is presumed that it was written, signed sealed, delivered attested and stamped as the case may be by persons, in the mode, and at the time and place, that it purports to have been, provided always that it is produced from proper custody, and that the appearance of it when inspected is not inconsistent with its authenticity. Walth v Winchester 3 Bing N C 183, 200. But in as much as the proof of a document always involves the identification of the parties to it, the rule must be understood subject to this that if an ancient document does not itself state or otherwise identify the names or characters of the parties to it, some sort of evidence will be necessary before it will be admissible. Hills Et 2nd Ed 384. The rule is applicable not only to documents in general (R v Farringdon, 2 F R 166 Chelsea Water Works v Couper, 1 Lsp 375 Marsh v Collnell, 2 Lsp 664) but also to Wills (McKenure v Fraser, 9 Ves Jr 5 Ranchiff v Pealups, 6 Dow 149, Doe v Passingham 2 C & P 449, Doe v Deakin 3 C & P 402 Doe v Burdett 1 A & E 1 19). 'The principle is that the witnesses may be presumed to have died' Doe v Hooley, 8 B & C 22 24. The attesting witnesses need not be called even if in fact he is living. Doe v Burdett, 1 A & E 1 19. While it may be objected that documents of this class may be fabricated and that they are not corroborated or authenticated as any part of the res

gestae, yet it may be answered that the fabrication or forgery of documents purporting to be ancient is not likely to escape exposure, when subjected to the tests of public trials and is not to be presumed Burr Jones § 305. The inherent difficulty of furnishing strict proof of the execution of ancient documents is another consideration which has influenced the Courts to relax the general rule and to admit under proper restrictions, ancient documents purporting to constitute part of a transfer of title or act of ownership Bristow v Cormican, 3 App Cas 653. "The proof of ancient possession is always attended with difficulty. Time has removed the witnesses who could prove acts of ownership of their personal knowledge and resort must necessarily be had to written evidence." Malcomson v O'Dea, 10 H L Cas 593. The conditions to which such a document is subject in order to authorize its introduction are (1) it must have been in existence for the period of thirty years, (2) it must have come from the proper custody—i.e. from some place where it would be natural to find a genuine document such as the one in question, (3) the document must in appearance be free from suspicion i.e. "on inspection, it must exhibit an honest face." Burr Jones § 303. This rule is of general application (Wynne v Tyndall) and the cases illustrate it in connection with many different kinds of documents, including settlements (Doe v Samples 8 A & E 151), Wills (Doe v Wooley, 5 B & C 221), bonds (Jehsa v Couper, 1 Esp 275) memorials (Riggs Miller v Wheatley, 28 L R 144), leases (Plaxton v Dare 10 B & C 17) agreements (Wyllon v Thornbury 29 L J M C 109) cases stated for counsel's opinion (Meath v Winchester, 3 Bing N C 183), steward's books containing entries of the receipt of rents (Wynne v Tyndall 1 B & A 376) and letters (Doe v Baynon 12 A & E 431), Wills En. 2nd Ed p 385. The presumption of genuineness of a document 30 years old can only dispense with the necessity of its proof but the question of sufficiency of evidence is not affected thereby. Baldeo Misu v Bharos Kunbi, 95 Ind Cas 261=A. I R 1926 All 537. With regard to the proof of ancient documents the proper rule is that if they are more than thirty years old, they need not be proved, provided they have been so acted upon or brought from such a place as to offer a reasonable presumption that they were honestly and fairly obtained and preserved for use, and are free from suspicions of dishonesty. Vithal Mahadev v Dandialal 6 B H C A C 90 see also Deputy Commissioner v Mahesh Balsh 6 O C 102. This presumption is not allowed to prevail where it is inconsistent with the title which such documents profess to create. Lutceffonussia v Goor Sarin 18 W R 485. The rule regarding the proof of documents more than thirty years old is that they need not be proved provided they have been so acted upon, or brought from such a place as to offer a reasonable presumption that they were honestly and fairly obtained and presumed for use and are free from suspicion of dishonesty. Harri Dhangou v Bara Dasee 5 B H A C 135. In order to establish the authenticity of an ancient document it is not necessary to show that it was accompanied by possession. Disheshur Bhattacharya v George Henry Lamb, 21 W R 22. Under this section the map may show the time of its preparation. Preshnath v Durga Parani, 14 C L J 578=10 Ind Cas 76=16 C W N 317. Although a presumption under s 90 of the Evidence Act may be made with respect to a pedigree filed at the time of the Local Settlement of the Province and found on the Settlement file, on the ground that it was more than 30 years old and that it was produced from proper custody yet before such pedigree can be admitted in evidence, it must be shown that it is admissible under cl 5 or, cl 6 of s 32 of the Evidence Act. Witham Porshil v Phulau Singh, 14 Ind Cas 339.

In practice a Court does not generally decide whether it will make the presumption or not under this section, until all the evidence in the case is before it. Ibrahim v Rini Aaram 10 A L J 87. Where the document is more than thirty years old and is produced from proper custody the Court may under this section presume its genuineness and more particularly that of the signature appearing on it. Bhupati Singh v Khetal Singh 21 Ind Cas 271. Nim Mahamad v Allah Nasar 5 P W R 1915=, P I R 1915=27 Ind Cas 542. Gulab v Mahamad 35 Ind Cas 593. Darula v Vallia 49 Ind Cas 419. The Will in dispute having been duly registered and the document being over thirty years old, it must under this section be presumed that it was a genuine document, and the fact that it was registered raised the presumption that the testator was of sound mind at the time of the execution of the Will. Babu Badri Prasad v Annapurna Kuer 6 O L J 311=52 Ind Cas 837

S 90

A Will of 1873 which was registered, was acknowledged before the Registrar. The original Will was not produced in Court. An old man who gave the evidence, swore that he was the person who identified the testator before the Registrar. He also swore that he was present at the execution of the Will though his name did not appear as a formal attesting witness in the document. All the attesting witnesses are dead. Held that presumption as to duly attesting the Will arose under s 90 of the Evidence Act. Khageswar Singh v Somnath Bhattacharyya, 33 C L J 382=63 Ind Cas 518

From Kaboya receipt, the Court is entitled to presume that the person named therein as purchaser has obtained possession through the Court. When that document was over 40 years old, although it is possible that physical possession of the land may not have been given to the purchaser, there is no reason why the Court should presume that no possession was given. Pandurang v Sasappa A I R 1923 Bom 364. Assuming that a document which is produced apparently from proper custody, was executed, still if there are circumstances which show that it was not acted upon as one would have expected a document of that nature to be acted upon, the presumption as to the title created by such document falls down. Mahadeo v Inghtra 1925 Bom 293. In the case of a document more than 30 years old executed by an illiterate person but registered therein, from these two circumstances a presumption of its being genuine. Bhim Sanjar v Mani Ram 9 O & A L R 893. A deed more than 30 years old and executed before the Transfer of Property Act, even if not signed by the executant but only by some scribe at his instance will be presumed to be genuine. Gaya Singh v Suraybah A I R 1924 All 832. If one is dealing with a document some thirty years old the main fact that the proof of consideration is not at all satisfactory is by itself a slender ground for holding that the document known to have come into existence was entirely unreal. Sailaya Nath v Kaya Desheencase 51 C 135=39 C L J 380=81 Ind Cas 493. Where a Will was more than thirty years old and all the attesting witnesses except one were dead and the surviving attesting witness spoke against the due attestation of the Will. Held, in the circumstances of the case that presumption as to its genuineness and proper attestation might be drawn under s 90. Shyam Sunder v Jagannath 28 O C 91=85 Ind Cas 553=A I R 102 Oudh 465. The document was more than 30 years old and was produced from proper custody and all the witnesses were dead. Held that the presumption must be made under s 90 of the Evidence Act that the attestation was duly made. Mahamed Hasan v Ali Hader 12 O I J 1=85 Ind Cas 509. A partition chattu purporting to be more than 30 years old was produced in Court by a collectorate officer who deposed that the Record keeper of the collectorate directed him to produce it in Court. Held the presumption of genuineness under s 90 cannot be raised as there was no proof that it was in the collectorate before production nor did the proof establish that the collectorate custody was proper custody within section 90. Purna Chandra v Radhakrishnan 90 Ind Cas 722. Where all the executants are dead the scribe is dead, the persons who purport to have been the attesting witnesses are dead, the deed is registered and the executant admitted execution and receipt of consideration according to the endorsement of the Sub Registrar who is also dead there is a very strong case for applying the presumption permitted by this section. Tal Bahadur v Rameshwar 105 Ind Cas 581=A I R 1927 Oudh 710=10 W N 965. All that can be presumed under this section is that a document was executed by the person who purported to be the executant but the Court cannot presume the correctness or genuineness of every statement appearing in the document. Khetra Mohan v Bhurab Chandra, 95 Ind Cas 1021=A I R 1927 Cal 229. Abdul Ghani v Iqbal Mahomed 111 Ind Cas 361. Genuineness of jamia ul Uloom papers more than seventy years old can be presumed under this section. Asad Kishore v Imdiyat Coomar, 15 C L J 129.

S 90.

Purporting Section 90 of the Evidence Act, does not enable a Court to presume that unsigned accounts, which do not purport to be in the handwriting of any particular person or persons were written by the authorised accountants of the temple to which the accounts, purport to relate, nor does section 114 of the Act any further help the matter Nama Pillai v Ramanathan, 33 M L J 84. Section 90 of the Evidence Act, says that a document which is more than 30 years old and purports to have been preferred or signed by a particular person was in fact prepared or signed by such person. But where a party producing such a document cannot show and the document itself does not purport to show who prepared or signed it, the mere fact of the document being more than 30 years old does not make it admissible without proof under s 90 of the Evidence Act. Charittar v Kailash Behari 3 Pat L J 306=4 Pat L W 213=44 Ind Cas 423=(1918) Pat 145. By 'Purporting' is meant 'stating itself to be,' but this statement being hearsay would be concluded were it not for this section which contains an excellent provision if it is not misunderstood Mark Et p 68.

Thirty years—Mode of reckoning Since the chief reason for the rule is the impossibility of obtaining living testimony to the signing or to the handwriting the necessity does not arise until time has made such testimony unavailable. At first under the English Common law, this requirement was satisfied by the simple and indefinite motion that the deed must be ancient. In some of the old books the average age of a man was computed to be sixty years, and as a witness attesting a document must be of age it was supposed that an attesting witness would be dead at the end of forty years. So a forty years old document was considered an ancient document. Gilbert Evidence, 100, Benson v Olue, Binnbury 280 Clarkson v Woodhouse, 3 Doug 169. But this reckoning was too strict, because the witnesses were more likely to have been mature persons and therefore at least thirty years of age, and another thirty years would suffice to bring them near the end of the spin. So ever since the second half of 1700 S, the period of thirty years has sufficed to constitute an ancient document. Dean of Ely v Stewart 2 Atk 44, Onychund v Baker, 1 Atk 21, 49 R v Faringdon, 2 L R 466, 471 R v Ryton, 5 T R 259 Chelsea Water Works v Cowper, 1 Esp 275, March v Collnett 2 Esp 665, Wigmore § 2138. The period of thirty years signifies of course the period in which the specific document has been in existence. The purporting date is of itself nothing for any body may have forged the written date. Accordingly this existence of the document thirty years ago must be somehow shown. Forbes v Hale 1 W Bl 532, Wigmore § 2138. Hence in the case of a Will the period of thirty years is reckoned not from the testator's death, but from the date of execution of the instrument. Doe v Wolley, 8 B & C 22. In applying the presumption allowed by s 90 of the Evidence Act, the period of thirty years is to be reckoned not from the date upon which the document is filed in Court but from the date on which it having been tendered in evidence its genuineness or otherwise becomes the subject of proof. Minu Sreea v Rhedoy Nath 5 C L R 135. But in another case it has been held that where a document is not thirty years old when it was produced, there is no presumption as to its genuineness on the ground that it was 30 years old at the time when the case was tried and the evidence was recorded. Churany Lal v Kallu, 12 A L J 507. Under this section a Court can presume the genuineness of a document which was not thirty years old either on the date of the suit or on the date of its production but was thirty years old on the date when arguments were heard. Mahadeo v Nasiban 51 Ind Cas 363. The period of thirty years mentioned in this section is to be reckoned from the date when its genuineness is put in controversy and not from the date when it was exhibited in Court. Ladha Singh v Hukam Debi 4 Lah 233=75 Ind Cas 77 see also Gosala Kanda v Pul Cherla 82 Ind Cas 487. Thirty years shall be counted from the date of its genuineness being subjected to proof. Fonda Rishi v Pichu Rishi A. I R 1925 Mad 184.

Proper custody The Court added that it was only necessary to show the age of over thirty years and that they came from a natural and reasonable custody and from a place where they must reasonably be expected to be. Burr Jones § 303, Sreekant v Rynaram, 14 V. R. 1, Anu v Rama.

S. 90 1901 Proper custody does not necessarily mean the most appropriate custody, the custody of the person entitled in law to hold the document, but either that or any other custody which in the circumstances of the case appear to the Court to be consistent with its genuineness. Doe v Phillips, 8 Q. B. 159, Doe v Keeling, 11 Q. B. 881. Lilly & Co. v. 2nd Ed. 355. In Meath v Winchester 3 Bing N. C. 183, 200, Tindal, C. J. said "It is not necessary that they should be found in the best and most proper place of deposit. If documents continue in such custody there never would be any question as to their authenticity. But it is when documents are found in other than the proper place of deposit that the investigation commences whether it was reasonable and natural under the circumstances in the particular case to expect that they should have been in the place where they are actually found. For it is obvious that whilst there can be only one place of deposit strictly and absolutely proper there may be various and many that are reasonable and probable though differing in degree, some being more so, some less. And in these cases the proposition to be determined is whether the actual custody is so reasonably and probably to be accounted for that it impresses the mind with the conviction that the instrument found in such custody must be genuine." "It is not necessary that the custody from which an ancient document comes should be strictly according to the legal right, it is enough if it be brought from a place of deposit where in the ordinary course of things such a document, if genuine might reasonably be expected to be found." Wigmore § 2139. The question is therefore especially one to be left to the determination of the trial Court on the circumstances of the particular case (Doe v Keeling, 11 Q. B. 881). Various meanings of definition have been suggested by way of guidance (Doe v Samples, 3 Nev. & P. 254=8 A. & E. 151 154) but none can be regarded as fixed. The general principle is conceded on all hands, and has received varied application according to the facts of each case. Wigmore § 2139. Mere absence of attestation is not fatal to the admission of an ancient document coming from proper custody. Mohesh Roy v Boodhun, 18 W. R. 315, see also G. H. Grant v Bynath 21 W. R. 279. A proper custody means the custody of the person who would have been the proper person to keep it. Thaloor Pershad v Bashmatty Koer, 24 W. R. 423.

It is not necessary that the documents should be found in the best and most proper place of deposit. The section insists only on a satisfactory account of the origin of the custody and not on the history of its continuance. Tayudin v Gouvid 5 Bom. L. R. 144=27 B. 452. Although a person appointed manager by the Court of the property of an insane person ought to restore a document in his possession as such manager to the proprietor when he is removed from the management his failure to do so does not have regard to the explanation to s. 90, make the custody of the document improper within the meaning of the Evidence Act. Shyama Charan v Abhram 3 C. L. J. 306=10 C. W. N. 733=33 C. 511. A record keeper's custody is a proper custody. Ekconree v Kylash, 21 W. R. 45. so also the custody of an old servant of the family where he is in possession of several other papers of the family. Harchintamani v Mool Lal shaman, 11 B. 89.

The English cases sanction a liberal construction of what may be deemed proper custody. The practice of conveyancing in England the complication of transactions and titles affording multiplied means of exposing falsehood, and the careful preservation of muniments by the owners of estates, have made a rule convenient and beneficial in England which cannot be applied so indulgently in India without encouraging forgery and fraud. Consequently, in the Indian Courts ancient documents brought in, without possession to support them, and without proof of any acts done in connection with them, would generally have almost no weight as a ground of inference. Timangangavda v Rangangavda 11 B. 94 note=P. J. 1878 240. The custody of a pattah more than thirty years old, in favour of the female holder's father, such holder having been in possession of the land ever since the father's death for forty years without interruption was held to be a natural and proper custody within the meaning of section 90 of the Evidence Act. Trailolia Nath v Shurno chingoni 11 C. 539. Mere proof of the production of a document more than thirty years old from the record of a Collector's office (even assuming the proceedings of such office to be as good for this purpose as those of the Court) where it had been previously filed would not raise a legal presumption in favour of its genuineness, but it must be shown that it had been so filed in order to the adjudication of some question of which the Collector had cognizance, and that it had come under the cognizance of the Collector Gudadhur Pal v Bhyrubi Chandra Bhattacharjee 5 C 918 As to documents so old that they cannot be proved by direct evidence, proof of custody must be given Gouparoy v Wooma Soonduree Debta 12 W R 472 If the custody thereof, so far as the witnesses can speak to it has been and is the custody in which judging from the purport of the document itself and the other circumstances of the case it would naturally be expected to reside then the document ought to be treated as authentic to such extent as to become admissible in evidence between the parties Chundra Kant v Brojonath 13 W R 109 Whether the custody of a document is a proper one under section 90 of the Evidence Act, is a question to be decided upon the circumstances of each case Rai Dinomoni v Jogatchander 23 Ind Cas 773 Where documents sixty years old are produced from proper custody, that is, from the custody of the lessees who are in possession of the mouza under the documents the presumption under s 90 of the Evidence Act applies to them and they should be admitted without proof Ramlal v Satya Narayan, (1921) Pat 49=1 Pat L T 474=5 Pat L J 563=57 Ind Cas 786 Where a mortgage deed more than 30 years old comes from custody of the mortgagee, the presumption of proper execution readily arises and it is proof of the mortgage Ramachari v Sadho Saran A I R 1924 All 869 The mere fact of a certain document having been produced from a Court where it had been filed does not necessarily bring that document within the requirements of this section Ryendia v Gopal, 4 Pat 67=A I R 1925 Pat 442

May presume It is in the discretion of a Court whether it will raise the presumption, in favour of a document for which s 90 provides But this discretion is not to be exercised arbitrarily, but must be governed by principles which are consonant with law and justice And while, on the one hand great care is requisite in applying the presumption, on the other hand, it is clear that very grave injustice may be perpetrated, if an ancient document coming from proper custody is rejected by a Court capriciously or for inadequate reasons Golinda Harra v Protap Narain 29 C 740 When a document, which is over thirty years old has been tendered under s 90 of the Act it is for the Court to determine which is a matter for judicial discretion, whether it will make the presumption mentioned in the section or will call upon the party to offer proof of the document, stating its reasons in the latter event, and, in the former, whether the presumption has been rebutted or not Srinath Patra v Kuloda, 2 C L J 592 The effect of the presumption is weakened by circumstances which tended to raise doubts as to its authenticity Madan Mohan v Kumar Rameswar 7 C L J 615 The presumption allowed by this section is not a presumption which the Court is bound to make Hamman v Ramcharitar A W N 1901, 28 As to the presumption which a Court may make under s 90 of the Evidence Act, the power thereby given must be exercised with great discretion in a country where documents are written on such material as para bark and palm leaf, and where in Burmese time neither parties nor witnesses were ever in the habit of attaching their signatures so that the term execution is rather a convenient expression than a correct description of the actual proceeding Ma Lon v Maung Uyo U B R (1892 1896) Vol II, 350 A Court is not bound to presume the genuineness of the signature of a document upwards of thirty years old even though produced from proper custody Uggor Kant v Hurro Chunder, 6 C 209 Under section 90 of the Evidence Act read with section 4 of the same Act, the Court has a discretion to call for proof of a document although it be more than thirty years old and purports to come from proper custody and that under the circumstances of the present case the discretion was rightly exercised Safiqunnisa v Shaban Ali Khan, 7 O C 290 The words "may presume" in this section ought generally to be construed in the more rigorous of the sense allowed by s 4 and in view of the danger of a blind acceptance of a document as genuine for all purposes, merely because it purports to be more than 30 years old and is produced from the proper custody,

S 90 before any such document can be held rightly entitled to receive the benefit of the presumption for which s 90 makes provision, it should as a rule not be found wanting when adjudged by the very reasonable test laid down in Barkun v Lalhun, 9 C L R 427, namely, as to whether it has been produced on these previous occasions when it would naturally have been produced if in existence at the time, and as to whether it has ever been acted on previously to its production in Court. Mehar Anu v Nur Muhammed, 110 P L R 1902. So it is not obligatory, under this section upon a Court to assume that the document produced is genuine merely because it purports to be thirty years old and is produced from proper custody. The Court has a discretion in the matter, but the discretion must be judiciously exercised. Imrit Chaman v Sridhar Pandey, 15 C L J 7. Husain v Basit, 110 Ind Crs 415=5 O W N 424. Whether the Court should presume the genuineness of the last document depends upon the special circumstances of each case. Ponnambalath v Kasoth, 21 M L J 931. This section leaves it to the discretion of the Court whether or not in certain circumstances it will make the presumption there contemplated. Tika v Mahabir Prasad 19 O C 92=36 Ind Crs 629. The question of making a presumption with regard to the genuineness of a document under this section is one in which the Court has to exercise its discretion and when that discretion has been exercised with due care and the presumption allowed by law has been made an appellate Court should be slow to interfere with such discretion. Mahomed v Rahim 57 P W R 1915=44 Ind Crs 559. The presumption arising under this section can be applied to a deed executed by an illiterate person whose signature has been made by some other person on his behalf. Sher Ahmed v Ibrahim, 52 Ind Crs 314. The raising of a presumption under this section as to the genuineness of a document is a matter which is eminently within the discretion of the trial Court. Har Prasad v Bhatnagar, 61 Ind Crs 959. Where the evidence of the execution of a deed is available which if tendered would satisfy the requirements of s 68 of the Evidence Act the Court is justified in refusing to draw the presumption under s 90 of that Act nor can such presumption be invoked in favour of the deed nor would such presumption be justified in favour of the authority of a person to sign for an illiterate executant. Raghubar v Sanwal 8 O L J 23=3 U P L R (J C) 9=61 Ind Crs 125. The presumption referred to in this section is one which the Court is not bound to make and notwithstanding that the elements mentioned in that section are satisfied the Court may require the document to be proved in the ordinary manner. Where the plaintiff did not rely upon such presumption but adduced evidence in order to prove the genuineness of a document but such evidence was disbelieved by the Court they cannot complain if such presumption was not made by the Court. Surendra Nath v Sambhu Nath, 104 Ind Crs 219=A I R 1927 Cal 870. Under the circumstances mentioned in this section the Court may presume that it was duly executed and attested by the persons by whom it purports to be executed and attested. The section does not say that the Court must presume the document to be genuine. Nararappa v Thimmiah 7 Mys L J 57. In the case of documents more than thirty years old, the genuineness of which is disputed it is necessary for the Court to consider the evidence external and internal of the document in order to enable them to decide whether in any particular case they should or should not presume proper signature and execution. The Court is not bound to make the presumption merely because of the alleged age of the document. Mansukh Pana v Ankambar 31 Bom L R 1279=A I R 1930 Bom 39.

Unsuspecting appearance A third requirement is that the document must in appearance be unsuspecting. Wigmore § 2140. "On inspection it must exhibit an honest face otherwise it is not such an ancient document that its countenance will pass muster. Age will not sanctify our marks of fraud." Per Jackson in Hill v Nisbit 58 Ga. 586 589, Wigmore § 2140. When a document is suspicious, on the face of it and when the very place of importance has been erased and re-written presumption under this section does not arise. Dahle v Meier v Bharo Kumbi 95 Ind Crs 261=A I R 1926 A 537. Where a document more than 30 years old purporting to come from proper custody, is required by the Court before which it is produced to be proved and is left unproved, and there are circumstances both external and internal, which throw great doubts upon the genuineness of the document the Court can in the exercise of the discretion vested in it under s 90 of the Evidence Act decline to admit it to evidence without formal proof and their Lordships of the Privy Council will be always slow to overrule the discretion executed by a Judge under s 90 Shafiq un nissa v Shafan Ali, 6 Bom L R 750

Old Copies The use of a copy of an old deed, instead of the original raises two or three questions somewhat different in their bearings, the significance, moreover, of the circumstance that an old original deed offered has been recorded is connected with the question of record copies and the two sets of questions may not be considered together. It may be assumed at the outset that the general principle requiring the original to be produced or else accounted for as lost or the like, has been satisfied, because if it is not, a copy is of course inadmissible on grounds irrespective of the present question. It may further be kept in mind that, by statute or otherwise, the official record (or a copy therefrom) of a lawfully recorded deed the original having been accounted for or disposed with, is receivable to prove the execution and contents of the original, but this rule does not enable one to use an unauthorized record. Thus, when the record is unauthorized some other mode of proving the deed must be resorted to. Keeping these principles in mind the various situations may be distinguished into four: (1) an alleged ancient original lost the contents testified to orally, or copy proved by incompetent witness on the stand (2) an alleged ancient original lost an alleged ancient non official copy offered, (3) an alleged ancient original lost an alleged official record copy offered though not made in pursuance of law Wigmore § 2143. This section applies to copies as well as originals. Proof of proper custody of a document is required as a condition of its admissibility before it can be taken to be an ancient document but no particular mode of proof has been prescribed by the Act Arishnasami v Anantharajan 4 Mys L J 264, Saryu Dey v Ram Hurakh 18 Ind Cas 250. This section of the Evidence Act does not make it incompetent for the Court to draw any presumption as to the genuineness of an ancient document merely because a copy of the same and not the original was produced in evidence Ponnam baleth v Haronath, 21 M L J 931. The use of the words "is produced" in s 90 of the Evidence Act, does not limit the operation of the section to cases in which the document is actually produced in Court. The presumption of this section is therefore applicable to a copy of a document which had been lost and was more than 30 years old Ishri Prasad v Lalpuri Kunwar, 22 A 291-A. W N 1900 82 Sheo Lal Singh v Choudhury Goor Naram 7 Ind Cas 218, Nanu Nan v Kantam Ashta 2 L W 509=29 Ind Cas 386. But this section cannot apply unless it is shown that the original has been lost or destroyed Jijoyamba v Vengalashnu 7 M L J 117=5 Ind Cas 827. Where there is no evidence at all as to the making of a private copy of a document more than 30 years old, proof would be necessary that it was compared with the original before it would be admitted in evidence Hota Perra v Venka Krishna, (1923) M W N 454=73 Ind Cas 66.

Where the alleged ancient original is lost and proof of its contents (including the purporting signatures) is offered to be made by one who having seen it before its loss, recollects its contents or took a copy, the difficulty in assuming genuineness is that the element of unsuspicious appearance can never be furnished since the original is lacking perhaps also the element of natural custody will usually also be lacking Wigmore § 2142. As regards such a copy Madras High Court said: "But there is absolutely no proof of the document. The writer is unknown and it does not even purport to be written by any particular person. The date of its making is also unknown and, therefore it can not be said with any certainty that it is thirty years old nor does it purport to be thirty years old. If, therefore the document is to be admitted in evidence it must be proved some way or another. It has not been proved by any witness and the presumption in section 90 cannot apply for that only relates to documents which purport or are proved to be thirty years old, and are produced from proper custody. This is not one of such documents and therefore, the limited presumption of section 90 can not apply. One of the cases relied on by the Government Agent for admitting Exhibit F is Ponnam baleth Porappan v Karoth Santharan, 12 Ind Cas 453, but from the brief judgment of that case, it does not appear that the copy was not proved but, on the contrary it would appear that there was some evidence adduced in regard to the copy. Where the alleged ancient original is lost and an ancient purporting copy is offered, made by a private hand, and the purporting maker being unknown and deceased it seems to have been long accepted that this suffices, and the copy may be received under the ancient document rule. Higmore § 2113. The same rule is applicable where an alleged ancient original is lost and an alleged official record copy offered, though not made in pursuance of law. Ibid. When a copy of a document is exhibited in a suit and the original document is not produced, though the original purports to be more than thirty years old, the presumption which, under s 90 of the Evidence Act, may be made where a document over thirty years old is produced from proper custody, ought not to be made. Appathura v Gopala, 25 M 674. This section is not limited to cases in which the document is actually produced in Court and consequently secondary evidence of an ancient document is admissible without proof of execution of the original when the document is shown to have been lost and to have been last heard of in proper custody. Suam Singh v Karim Dalsi, 99 P R 1910=128 P W R 1910=186 P L R 1910=8 Ind Cas 353. In the case of a copy of a document 30 years old s 90 Evidence Act, empowers the Court to presume that the copy is in the hand writing of the person in whose hand writing it purports to be. Though this section does not refer to stamps, when the Court of first instance has drawn a certain presumption which the law empowers it to draw, and especially when that presumption has reference to stamping, a Court of appeal ought not lightly to interfere with the exercise of the discretion vested in the Court of first instance. Manabikrama v Nillambur, 31 Ind Cas 579. Where the production of the original document is a physical impossibility, the Court is entitled to raise a presumption under s 90 of the Evidence Act regarding the same on the production of certified copy. Raj Bahadur v Bindeshri, 50 L J 219=46 Ind Cas 344. The presumption mentioned in this section is applicable to copy produced. Banuarial v Duvaniath 29 C L J 577=52 Ind Cas 825. Jakkam Reddi v Subramania Aiyar 16 L W 839. Subramanya v Seethayya 16 L W 462=(1922) M W N 614=46 M 92. Court may presume genuineness of signature authenticating a copy. Seethaya v Subramanya Somayajulu 56 Ind Cas 146=52 M 453=31 Bom L R 756=19 C L J 566. So it is clear that the presumption under this section with regard to documents 30 years old arises in the case of copies as well as originals. If the copy is proved to be a true copy a presumption may be made in favour of the genuineness of the original. By Ashore v Beni Prasad, 6 O W N 880=A I R 1929 Oudh 483. The Court may presume the genuineness even of an unregistered document thirty years old from a copy of such document if the original is proved to have been duly executed, and further it is also proved that the original is since lost. But such a presumption can only be made after a careful consideration of all the circumstances of the case. By Raj v Basant, 118 Ind Cas 154=A I R 1929 Ali 561.

S. 90

In some cases it has been held that no presumption can be made under this section, in favour of any document unless such document itself is produced before the Court invited to make the presumption. The production of copy is sufficient. Sripaya v Kanhaiyalal, 15 N L R 192=53 Ind Cas 947. Nathuram v Jagannath 55 Ind Cas 426=16 N L R 106 see also Appathura v Gopala 25 M 674. But in view of the decision in Seethaya v Subramanya, 56 Ind Cas 146=52 M 453=31 Bom L R 576=49 C L J 566=33 C W N 578 (P C.) the above cases may not be considered as good law.

Presumption of genuineness whether presumption of executant's authority to sign or grant. Where the executant of a document purports to sign it on behalf of others the fact that it is more than thirty years old, though it would under the provisions of section 90 of the Evidence Act raise a presumption in favour of the genuineness of the document would not dispense with proof of the authority of the executant to sign it on behalf of others so as to bind them or those claiming under them Ubiack Rai v Dalhal Rai, 3 C 557 Where it is not shown that the executant of an ancient document was entitled to grant such a document, mere production of it would be no proof of title Uggar Kant v Hurro Chander, 6 C 209 The provisions of s 90 of the Evidence Act merely establish that the document was executed by the persons whose signatures it purports to bear, but that can not and does not prove the authority of the executants to bind other persons Maharam v Telamuddin, 15 C L J 220=16 C W N 567, Sheo Andan v Ram Lagan, 13 A L J 921, Kashi Singh v Ram Narain, 19 O C 321, Lolman v Ganga, 60 Ind Cas 96

This section does not prove the authority of the person who has made the grant, the genuineness whereof is presumed by the Court under the provisions of that section Kashi Nath v Jagat Kishore, 20 C W N 643=23 C L J 583=35 Ind Cas 298 The presumption that arises under s 90 of the Evidence Act only extends to the genuineness of old documents coming from proper custody it does not further go to the extent of holding that the document was in fact executed by persons possessed of the requisite authority Parakeswar Pal v Sush Chandra 27 C W N 964 Although in the case of sale deeds more than 50 years old the presumption of law was that they were executed by the persons who purported to execute them, there was no presumption that the scribe who signed these documents for the executants had authority from the executants to do it Haji Shaikh v Sukhrum Singh A I R 1923 All 420=73 Ind Cas 989, Raman Kant v Bhimnandan, 50 C 526=1924 Cal 82=85 Ind Cas 220

But the Allahabad High Court in a Full Bench case has held that the presumption permitted by s 90 of the Evidence Act in the case of a document purporting to be 30 years old that it was duly executed by the party by whom it purported to be executed includes the presumption that when the signature of the executant purports to have been made by the pen of the scribe, the latter was duly authorized to sign for him Haji v Sukhrum 22 A L J 857=1925 All 1=47 A 31 (F B), Balkoran v Mt Dulai, 24 A L J 920=97 Ind Cas 292

Genuineness presumed or not presumed by original court Where the Court of first instance presumed a document to be genuine under s 90 of the Evidence Act, it was competent for the first appellate Court to hold that it should not be presumed to be genuine and to reject it without calling for further proof of the same Ramesh v Veerapperdyan, 11 M L T 69=(1912) 1 M W N 117 The Appellate Court should always be extremely slow to overrule the discretion exercised by a Judge under s 90 of the Evidence Act Shafiqunnissa v Shabim Ali 26 A 581 (P C)=9 C W N 105=6 Bom L R 750=7 O C 290=31 I A 217=8 Scr 674, Rani Dinamoni v Jagatechunder 23 Ind Cas 773 When the reasons assigned by the lower appellate Court as to the applicability of the provisions of s 90 of the Evidence Act are erroneous in law the High Court can interfere in second appeal Inrit v Sridhar, 15 C L J 7 In Paranwara Zaidia v Subramania 26 Ind Cas 117, Sankaran Nair J said "The presumption which the Court has to raise under section 90 Evidence Act as to the genuineness of a document 30 years old, is one of fact and stands on the same footing as any other piece of evidence and the question being one of fact the High Court, in second appeal will not interfere with a finding given on it by the lower Court But in the same case Tyabji J said Such a presumption is one of law and the High Court can in second appeal interfere and see if the findings of the lower court are correct Where it did not appear from the record that the District Munsiff had drawn the presumption under this section in receiving certain documents in evidence and the Appellate Court refused to apply the presumption and decided the question of genuineness of the documents on the evidence Hid that the Appellate Court acted rightly Methyia Chetti v Vayya Dyan 108 Ind Cas 412

Ancient document—Corroborative evidence It is well settled that mere production of an ancient document unless supported by some corroborative

S. 90 evidence of acting under it is not entitled to any weight. A ancient deed must be corroborated by evidence of ancient or modern corresponding enjoyment or by other equivalent or explanatory proof, it is then presumed to have constituted part of the actual transfer of property mentioned, because this is the usual course of such transactions in brief though absence of proof of possession does not affect its admissibility, it undoubtedly affects the weight to be attached to the document. Suoromoy v Swendra, 42 C L J 14=89 Ind Cas 747=A I R 1925 Cal 1189

Suspicious circumstances Where there were circumstances giving rise to grave suspicions as to the genuineness of the Will alleged to have been executed by the last male owner the presumption allowed by this section of the Evidence Act could not be drawn. Gujar Singh v Meher Singh, 34 Ind Cas 168=97 P W R 1916. A Will purported to be executed in 1887 was brought to light for the first time in 1907 when it was produced in a Court of law. In 1910 an application for probate in respect of it was made but it was ultimately withdrawn. At that time only one of the attesting witnesses was said to have been alive yet no further attempt was made to bring the Will into Court till some ten years later when even that attesting witness was dead. There was no reasonable explanation about the delay after 1910 in making the application for probate. There was no evidence as to the custody of the Will before 1907, held that the applicant cannot get the benefit of s. 90. Channulal v Mt Puna 75 Ind Cas 660=1923 Nag 169

Rule should be applied with proper care and caution The rule laid down in s. 90 of the Evidence Act as to proof of execution of documents thirty years old ought to be applied with special care and caution. Pratolia Nath v Sharno Chugom 11 C 539. The presumption of genuineness under this section in respect of a document alleged to be more than thirty years old must be applied with caution. Ganhai Bibi v Ghulam 82 P L R 1909=4 Ind Cas 923. Amur v Nur Mohammed 82 P R 1902=110 P L R 1902. There is a very considerable danger in accepting documents without care and caution simply because they purport to be more than thirty years old. Ghulam v Allah Din, 241 P L R 1913=19 Ind Cas 964. Before a Court is justified in making a presumption in favour of the genuineness of any such document it should be satisfied alundi that there is good ground for accepting it as a true document. Jesa Lal v Mussamat Ganga Devi 81 P R 1913=321 P L R 1913=20 Ind Cas 868=211 P W R 1913. The rule of presumption embodied in this section is one to be applied with exceeding caution in India. Sripaya v Kanhaiya Lal 15 N L R 192=53 Ind Cas 947 see also Ugrasanti v Hurro Chunder 6 C 209 (221), Gobinda v Protap 29 C 740, Shaukh Husain v Gorendhan Das 21 B 1. Gobinda v Putin, 31 C W N 215, Vaidyanath v Natera, 41 M L J 310. Lakman v Ganga 60 Ind Cas 96, Hur Prasad v Bikram, 61 Ind Cas 959. The presumption contained in this section has always got to be applied with a good deal of caution. Regardless of the question as to whether the document in question forms the foundation of the party's right or whether it was sought to be used as a piece of evidence, the Court may, in a proper case rely upon the presumption contained in this section. Gobinda v Putin Behary, 31 C W N 215=93 Ind Cas 147=A I R 1927 Cal 102

Explanation This is to provide for cases in which the custody is not perhaps, that where it might most reasonably be expected, but yet sufficiently reasonable to constitute such custody not improper. Thus in the two first illustrations (a) and (b) the documents are produced from their natural place of custody in (c) the documents ordinarily would be with the owner B but under the circumstances A's custody is proper. In the Bishop of Meath v The Marquis of Winchester 3 Bing N S 183 a document relating to a Bishop's see might be produced either by his descendants or his successors in the see. So an unexpired lease is admissible, if it be produced by the lessor. Plaxton v Dare 10 B & C 17, or of the lessee. Hall v Ball 3 M & G 212

CHAPTER VI

OF THE EXCLUSION OF ORAL BY DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE

91 When the terms of a contract, or of a grant, or of

Evidence of terms of contract, grants and other dispositions of property reduced to form of document any other disposition of property, have been reduced to the form of a document, and in all cases in which any matter is required by law to be reduced to the form of a document, no evidence shall be given in proof of the terms of such contract, grant or other disposition of property, or of such matter except the document itself, or secondary evidence of its contents in cases in which secondary evidence is admissible under the provisions hereinbefore contained

Exception 1 — When a public officer is required by law to be appointed in writing, and when it is shown that any particular person has acted as such officer, the writing by which he is appointed need not be proved

Exception 2 — Will admitted to probate in British India] may be proved by the probate

Explanation 1 — This section applies equally to cases in which the contracts, grants, or dispositions of property referred to are contained in one document and to cases in which they are contained in mere documents than one

Explanation 2 — Where there are more originals than one one original only need be proved

Explanation 3 — The statement in any document whatever, of a fact other than the facts referred to in this section, shall not preclude the admission of oral evidence as to the same fact

Illustrations

(a) If a contract be contained in several letters all the letters in which it is contained must be proved

(b) If a contract is contained in a bill of exchange, the bill of exchange must be proved

(c) If a bill of exchange is drawn in a set of three, one only need be proved

(d) A contracts, in writing with B, for the delivery of indigo upon certain terms. The contract mentions the fact that B had paid A the price of other indigo contracted for verbally on another occasion

* These words in s 91 Exception 2 were substituted for the words "under the Indian Succession Act" by the Indian Evidence Act Amendment Act, 1872 (18 of 1872) s 7

- S 91. Oral evidence is offered that no payment was made for the other indigo
 The evidence is admissible
 (e) A gives B a receipt for money paid by B
 Oral evidence is offered for the payment
 The evidence is admissible

Principle This rule is based upon an assumed intention on the part of the contracting parties, evidenced by the existence of the written contract to place themselves above the uncertainties of oral testimony, and on a disinclination of the Courts to defeat this object. When persons express their agreements in writing, it is for the express purpose of getting rid of any indefiniteness, and to put their ideas in such shape that there can be no misunderstanding, which so often occurs where reliance is placed upon oral statements. Written contracts presume deliberation upon the part of the contracting parties, and it is natural that they should be treated with careful consideration by the Courts, and with a disinclination to disturb the condition of matters as embodied in them by the act of parties. McKeheys' Ex § 291 "One of the most common and important of the concrete rules subsumed under the general notion that the best evidence must be produced, and that one with which the phrase 'best evidence' is now exclusively associated, is the rule that, when the contents of a writing are to be proved, the writing itself must be produced before the tribunal, or its absence accounted for before testimony to its contents is admitted." Greenl Ex § 563 (a), Dinomoy v Roy Luchmut, 7 I A 8, 15 Taylor Ex §§ 391, 401 "The rule with regard to writings is that oral proof can not be substituted for the written evidence of any contract which the parties have put into writing. And the reason is that the writing is treated as considered by the parties themselves as the only repository and the appropriate evidence of their agreement." Per Couch C J in Kedar Nath Dutta v Shamlat, 11 B L R (O C J) 405 and cited with approval by Lord Curzon in M Subramanian v Lutchman, 50 C 338 = 38 C L J 41 = 28 C W N 1 = 44 M L J 602 = 50 I A 77 P C

• Scope of the section It is likewise a general and most inflexible rule that, wherever written instruments are appointed, either by the requirement of law, or by the contract of parties to be the repositories and memorials of truth any other evidence is excluded from being used, either as a substitute for such instruments or to contradict or alter them. This is a matter both of principle and policy of principle, because such instruments are in their own nature and origin, entitled to a much higher degree of credit than parol evidence of policy, because it would be attended with great mischief if those instruments, upon which men's rights depended, were liable to be impeached by loose collateral evidence. Starkie on Ex p 649 cited in Kashunath v Chandu Chanan, 5 W R 68 (69) "Returning now to the rule says Ab Taylor, "which requires the contents of a document to be proved by the document itself, if its production be possible, it will be found that the cases on the subject may be arranged in three classes, the first class relating to those instruments which the law requires to be in writing, the second, to those contracts which the parties have put in writing, and the third to all other writings the existence or contents of which are disputed, and which are material to the crime." Taylor § 393

In the first place oral evidence can not be substituted for any instrument which the law requires to be in writing such as records public documents, official examinations, deeds of conveyance of lands Wills other than nuncupative promises to pay the debt of another and other writings mentioned in the Statute of Frauds. In all these cases the law having required that the evidence of the transactions should be in writing no other proof can be substituted for that as long as the writing exists and is in the power of the party. Greenl Ex § 86 In the second place, oral proof can not be substituted for the written evidence of any contract which the parties have put in writing. Here the written instrument may be regarded in some measure as the ultimate fact to be proved especially in cases of negotiable securities and in all cases of written contracts, the writing is tacitly agreed upon, by the parties themselves, as the only repository and the appropriate evidence of their agreements. The written contract is not collateral, but is of the very essence of the transaction

If for example, an action is brought for the use and occupation of real estate, and it appears by the plaintiff's own showing that there was a written contract of tenancy he must produce it, or account for its absence, if he were to make out a prima facie case, without any appearance of a written contract, the burden of producing it, or at least of proving its existence, would be devolved on the defendant. Breuer v Palmer, 3 Esp 213, confirmed in Ramsbottom v Tunbridge, 2 M & S 434, R v Rauden, 8 B & C 703 Strotter v Boor 5 Bing 136 per Parke J. But if the fact of the occupation of land is alone in issue without respect to the terms of the tenancy, this fact may be proved by any competent oral testimony, such as payment of rent, or declarations of the tenant, notwithstanding it appears that the occupancy was under an agreement in writing, for here the writing is only collateral to the fact in question. R v Inhabitants of Holy Trinity 7 B & C 611 Doe v Haney, 8 Bing 230 241. The same rule applies to every other species of written contract. Green v Evans § 87. Save and except the above two classes of writings, there is a third class of document which contains any writing, the existence of which is disputed and which is material either to the issue between the parties, or to the credit of witnesses. The contents of such writings should be proved in accordance with the provisions of section 61 supra, "I have always" says Lord Tenterden, in Vincent v Cole, 1 M & M 253 "acted most strictly on the rule, that what is in writing shall only be proved by the writing itself. My experience has taught me the extreme danger of relying on the recollection of witnesses however honest as to the contents of written instruments they may be so easily mistaken, that I think the purposes of justice require the strict enforcement of the rule." But where the writing does not fall within either of the three classes already described, there is no ground for its excluding oral evidence. As for example, if a written communication be accompanied by a verbal one, to the same effect, the latter may be received as independent evidence, though not to prove the contents of the writing, nor as a substitute for it. Thus, also, the payment of money may be proved by oral testimony, though a receipt be taken. Randall v Cohen, 4 Esp 213 Jacob v Lindsay, 1 East 460 Doe v Cartwright, 3 B & A 326, vide Expt 3 to this section. In stating that oral testimony can not be substituted for any writing included in either of the three classes above mentioned, a tacit exception is made in England in favour of the parol admissions of a party, and of his acts amounting to admissions, both of which species of evidence are always received as primary proof against himself and those claiming under him although they relate to the contents of a deed or other instrument, which are directly in issue in the cause. Earle v Pelen, 5 C & P 512, per Parke B, Neuhall v Holt, 6 M & W 662, Slatterie v Pooley, 6 M & W 664, Bethell v Blencowe, 3 M & Gr 119 Howard v Smith, 3 M & Gr 251. "The reason" says Mr Baron Parke, "why such statements or acts are admissible without notice to produce, or accounting for the absence of the written instrument, is that they are not open to the same objection which belongs to parol evidence from other sources, where the written evidence might have been produced, for such evidence is excluded from the presumption of its untruth arising from the very nature of the case, where better evidence is withheld, whereas what a party himself admits to be true, may reasonably be presumed to be so." Taylor § 410. But in India oral admissions as to the contents of a document are not relevant, until the party proposing to prove them shows that he is entitled to give secondary evidence of the contents of such documents under the rules hereinafter contained, or unless the genuineness of a document produced is in question (vide s 22). When the existence, condition or contents of the original have been proved to be admitted in writing by the person against whom it is proved or by his representative in interest secondary evidence may be given of the existence condition or contents of the said original. [vide section 65(b)] Whereas in section 92 the legislature has prevented oral evidence being adduced for the purpose of varying the contract as between the parties to the contract, no such limitation are imposed under section 91. Having regard to the juxtaposition of sections 91 and 92 and the deliberate omission from section 91 of such words of limitation it must be taken that even a third party if he wants to establish a

- S. 91. particular contract between certain others, either when such contract has been reduced to a document or when under the law such contract has to be in writing, can only prove such contract by the production of such writing. Sanjivani Ayangar v Chenchu Mulahar 1 I R 1928 Mad 179=109 Ind C1s 18. A binding family arrangement dealing with immovable property of the value of Rs 100 or upwards can be made orally. If made orally there being no document no question of registration arises. If however it is in fact reduced to the form of a document it is a question of fact in each case to be determined on a consideration of the nature and phraseology of the writing and the circumstances in which and the purpose with which it is written. If the terms are not reduced to the form of a document registration is not necessary and while the writing cannot be used as a document of title it can be used as a piece of evidence e.g., as corroborative of other evidence or as an admission of the transaction or as showing or explaining conduct. Ramgopal v Pulshi Ram 26 A L J 912=A I R 1928 All 641 (1 B). The object of s 10A of the Dekkan Agriculturists Relief Act being to set out the real nature of the transaction by admission of oral evidence which would be otherwise excluded by the ordinary law it may be taken that the legislature intended that the section should override not merely section 92 but also where necessary section 91 of the Evidence Act. Rasappa v Thyaga 31 Bom L R 1266. This section prohibits the reception of the evidence in proof of the terms of the document except the document itself. It does not prohibit the reception of evidence to prove the mere fact of partition even though there is an unregistered partition deed. Binnu Chetty v Panchammal (1926) M W N 15=92 Ind Cas 1028=A I R 1926 Mad 102. A receipt for money does not fall under this section. Sardar Singh v Iqbal Narain 27 O C 380=A I R 1925 Oudh 257. Where in a suit upon a promissory note executed by the Jarta of a joint Hindu family the plaintiff wanted to have a decree on the original cause of action against all the members of the family namely the debtors oral evidence is admissible to prove this different cause of action. Hari Mohan Ghosh v Sourendra Nath 41 C L J 535=89 Ind C1s 1025=A I R 1925 Cal 1153. Where the question is as to the extent or area of the Mahal settled with the defendants it is not the duty of the Court and it would be contrary to its duty to admit any antecedent documents for the purpose of corroborating the terms of the settlement made. Any antecedent documents and maps can be used solely for the purpose of identifying the thing demised. Titul dhari Singh v Kesho Prasad 41 C L J 386=3 Pat L R 114=6 P L T 349=27 Bom L R 819=89 Ind C1s 103=26 P L R 257=48 M L J 611 (P C). There is a distinction between evidentiary admissions and admissions by the pleadings. Section 58 of the Evidence Act, governs admissions by the pleadings. Although a sale deed is inadmissible in evidence as being unregistered an admission by the (vendor) defendant in his preliminary examination of an agreement alleged in the plaint to the effect that he would make good any loss the (plaintiff) purchaser might incur in respect of the property oil is not excluded by section 91 of the Evidence Act and renders proof of the agreement unnecessary. Sadhu v Nga Si U B R 1907 Evidence 1. When men agree to preserve by writing the remembrance of past events of which they wish to create a memorial either with a view to lay down a rule for their own guidance, or in order to have in the instrument a lasting proof of the truth of what is written the truth of the written act must be established by the acts themselves that is by the inspection of the originals. Upendra v Umesh Chandra 12 C L J 25=6 Ind Cas 316. The consent in writing by the landlord to the division of a tenure has the effect of substituting a new contract for the old. It should therefore be complete in itself and embody distinctly the terms of the new contract. Should it fail to do so the principle laid down in section 91 of the Evidence Act would apply and extraneous evidence to prove the terms of the contract would be inadmissible. Jnanendra v Gopal Das 31 C 1026=8 C W N 923. Where a boy was taken in adoption by a Hindu widow some 34 years ago in virtue of an anumati patta from her husband, and all parties by their acts and conduct recognized the validity of the adoption and it was the case of no one that the power to adopt was not strictly pursued

Held, that it was not necessary to prove the anumati patra, in order to prove the adoption and that to facts like these, section 91 of the Evidence Act had no application. Ganoda v Girish, 4 Ind Cas 400. As required by ss 250 and 251 of the Code of the Civil Procedure, the warrant must have been in writing and therefore, under s 91 of the Evidence Act, the fact, that the warrant gave authority to the process server for making the arrest, could not be proved except by the production of the warrant or by secondary evidence of its contents and no circumstances appeared on the record which could render secondary evidence admissible. Shew Ko v King Emperor, 3 L B R 128. Previous conviction should, regard being had to the provisions of this section and section 511 Cr Pro Code be proved by copies of judgment or extracts from judgments or by any other documentary evidence of the fact of such previous conviction and the examination of the accused in respect of those convictions is having regard to s 312 Cr Pro Code without legal warrant or justification. Yasin v King Emperor, 28 C 689=5 C W N 670. When a dying declaration is recorded by a Magistrate the writing itself is not evidence but the precise statement made by the deceased must be proved by the Magistrate who recorded the statement or some one who heard it. This section does not apply to such a document. Gauridas v Emperor, 36 C 659=13 C W N 680=10 Cr L J 186=2 Ind Cas 841. Section 91 of the Evidence Act has no application to matters embodied in the special diary under s 172 of the Criminal Pro Code. Noor Mahomed v Emperor, 18 Cr L J 1022=42 Ind Cas 766. An agreement not to execute is part of the adjustment of the suit within the meaning of section 375. Where such an agreement was not part of the record of Court it is reduced to the form of a document namely a record of Court, as required by s 375 Civil Procedure Code (1882) no extrinsic evidence or oral or documentary, regarding the terms of the compromise is under this section, admissible in that suit and its execution proceedings. Hukam Chand v Radha Kisan 11 N L R 110=29 Ind Cas 839. Where a Muhammadan executes a deed of gift which is found to be inadmissible in evidence, oral evidence is admissible to prove that the gift has been validly made in accordance with Muhammadan law. Ali Baksh v Ghuras, 28 Ind Cas 180=18 O C 122. Where the terms of a compromise are found to be set out in a petition the petitioner is to prove the terms of the compromise and oral evidence would not be admissible to vary or alter its terms. Bharora v Sidhar, 12 A L J 998. There is no rule of law that the only evidence of an agent's authority admissible in evidence is a written power of attorney. The fact can be proved by evidence, alunde, and so far as third parties are concerned, none the less so because the agent was appointed under a written document executed by the principal. There is nothing in section 91 or section 92 of the Evidence Act to preclude such third party from proving the existence of a particular relationship between the persons who respectively executed and accepted the power of attorney, though the terms which govern such relationship appear to be in writing. Lala Nand Chand v Muhammad Ali, 279 P W R 1912. The object of s 10 A of the Dekkan Agriculturists Relief Act, namely, the decision as to the real nature of the transaction by admission of the oral evidence which otherwise would be excluded by the ordinary law whether section 92 or the like of the Evidence Act is to override not merely Evidence Act s 92 but also where necessary s 91. Davappa v Tayanra A I R 1930 Bom 79. The provisions of this section are not applicable to permission granted by municipalities under s 114 for connecting the private drain with the municipal drain. Madalla v Ambadas, A I R 1930 Nag 180.

When the terms of a contract, or of a grant, or of any other disposition of property have been reduced to the form of a writing. Where a transaction in the shape of a contract, grant or other disposition of property has been reduced into writing by oral agreement of the parties the writing becomes general the exclusive memorial thereof and no evidence may be given to prove the transaction except the document itself or secondary evidence of its contents where such evidence is admissible. Phup Fr Ill Ed p 522. Where negotiate at a distance by letters and telegrams—first no offer then and then a revision of the offer then a halt upon an important term after

S 91 offer of its concession in return for the concession of some prior term now to be changed, and finally an acceptance of this concession, and thus the end of the negotiations,—where are the terms of this contract to be found? Obviously, in this congeries of letters and telegrams as mutually modifying and completing each other. The whole of the contract is not in one document. Nor, on the other hand, does the whole of any one document, (probably) represent a part of the contract, because some of its terms have been impaired and replaced by other documents in the series. On the other hand, if instead of leaving the net effect of the negotiations to be showed from the mass of writings, a single document is finally drawn up to replace them and to embody their net effect, and is signed or otherwise effected by the parties, this document will now alone represent the terms of the act. The process of embodying the terms of a jural act in a single memorial may be termed the integration of the act, i.e., its formation from scattered parts into an integral documentary unity. The practical consequence of this is that its scattered parts, in their former and incoherent shape, have no longer any jural effect, they are replaced by a single embodiment of the act. In other words, when jural act is embodied in a single memorial all other utterances of the parties on that topic are legally immaterial for the purpose of determining what are the terms of their act. Wignore § 2125. It is for this reason that whenever the parties to any contract or grant or other disposition of property have set out its terms and conditions in a writing, which they presumably intend to be a record of the transaction, the law forbids any attempt to establish any other terms by means of oral evidence. Powell Et p 181. The moment an oral contract is reduced to writing it is not open to any of the parties thereafter to seek to prove the terms of the contract referring to the original oral agreement and this section applies not only to cases where the contract is brought about or concluded by the writing, but also where the contract having been originally made by parol is subsequently reduced to writing. Where the parties reduce the terms of a contract into writing it clearly indicates the contemplation of the parties that the terms would be reduced to a form where there could be no question at all as to what the terms were and the undoubted policy of the law is that whichever parties have taken such precaution it is the document itself that must be produced and proved as evidence of the contract subject of course to any rules as to secondary evidence. Kuppu Suami v. China Suami 28 L. W. 234=111 Ind. Cas. 671=A I R 1928 Mad 546. Having regard to the terms of this section what the Court has got to do is to find out the real contract between the parties. Veeral Shusundaram v. Chenchu 109 Ind. Cas. 18=A I R 1928 Mad 459. The fact of partition may be proved by oral evidence although the deed embodying the terms of partition cannot be proved because of the inadmissibility of the document. Maung Tun v. Ho Fu 111 Ind. Cas. 172=A I R 1928 Rang 196. But where an award in writing which effected a partition of joint family properties, plainly and unambiguously effected an out and out partition among all the members of the joint family, held that extrinsic evidence was admissible to explain or control its terms to show for instance, that there was no separation between two of the members inter se. Babu v. Gotuldass, A I R. 1928 Mad 1064=55 M. L. J. 132=112 Ind. Cas. 184. The agreement to refer to arbitration is not a contract, grant or other disposition of property and so this section does not apply to it. Babu Ram v. Lala Ram 116 Ind. Cas. 803=A I R 1929 All 115. Although a nalf may be created by word of mouth, once the terms of the dedications have been put in writing the document itself or secondary evidence of the same should be tendered. Mahomed v. Bibi Marian, 8 Pat. 484=117 Ind. Cas. 638=A I R 1929 Pat. 410. When a plaintiff alleges that possession of immovable property has been given to the defendant as security for a loan of hundred rupees or upwards but without the execution of a registered instrument oral evidence is not admissible to prove the transaction. Maung Sa v. Maung Lo A I R 1925 Rang 291. Where a loan has been granted on the security of a negotiable instrument, there is no cause of action independent of the negotiable instrument itself and when the negotiable instrument is inadmissible in evidence the suit must fail. Rampi Das v. Shuja Uddin, 95 Ind. Cas. 701. In a suit on promissory note if the plaintiff cannot live recourse to the promissory note as a piece of evidence, this section does not prevent the plaintiff from proving his case from other evidence Ranchhod v Karjibhai, 28 Bom L R 631=95 Ind Cas 847=A I R 1926 Bom 357 Where an amalgama evidencing a settlement of land is inadmissible in evidence for want of registration no evidence is admissible on the question as to the persons for whom the settlement was made or as to the extent of their shares settled Hem Chandra Roy v Sashu Bhushan, 63 Ind Cas 863 This section forbids any evidence to be given of the terms of a contract, or of a grant or of any other disposition of property, when they have been reduced to the form of a document, except the document itself or secondary evidence of its contents in cases in which secondary evidence is admissible Maung Pan v Ma Baun, U B R (1892 1896) Vol II, 347

Terms of a contract The general rule laid down in section 91 of the Act is that when the terms of a contract have been reduced to writing, no evidence shall be given in proof of terms of the contract except the document itself or, in certain cases, secondary evidence of its contents But this rule is subject to the important exceptions contained in ss 95 and 97 Karuppa Gowden v Pona Thambi, 2 M L T 336=30 M 397 An oral agreement whereby the joint and several liability of the executors of the promissory note for the balance due on it is split up with the consent of all parties into a several liability on the part of each executor to the payee of the note is not obnoxious to this section Rangaswami v Somasundaram 27 L W 820=107 Ind Cas 646=A I R 1923 Mad 173=51 M L J 150 From the mere fact that a bill of exchange or hundi has been executed, it does not necessarily follow that the whole of the contract between the parties has been reduced to the form of such a document Kundan Lal v Sahu Bilhari 51 A 530=27 A L J 333=116 Ind Cas 293=A I R 1929 All 254 The language of this section is clear and definite and wherever the terms of the contract are reduced to writing and that writing is for any reason, inadmissible in evidence the promisee must lose his remedy if independently of the document, he has no complete cause of action Ramsaran Das v Tulsi Ram (1922) Lah 417=67 Ind Cas 565 This section excludes the oral evidence of an agreement as well as of what took place when the agreement was made to prove the agreement if the written instrument is not produced Vyan Lalesh v Ganesh, 61 Ind Cas 896 This section is uncompromising and whenever the terms of a contract are reduced to writing, and for any reason inadmissible in evidence the promisee must lose his remedy Gurdas v Ishu Das, 3 Lah L J 157=60 Ind Cas 107, see also Ebrahimboy v Hassan, 23 Bom L R 767=63 Ind Cas 492 This section refers to cases where the contract has by the intention of the parties been reduced to writing, and the document itself constitutes a part of the contract of loan but if the hundies were by way of collateral security and the terms had been agreed upon orally then it is the oral terms of the contract which are to be looked at and may be proved and this section is no bar Lolmal v The Sind Bank, 13 S L R 180=57 Ind Cas 391 If the documents or letters relied on as constituting a contract contemplate the execution of a further contract between the parties it is a question of construction whether the execution of the further contract is a condition or term of bargain or whether it is a mere expression of the desire of the parties as to the manner in which the transaction already agreed to will in fact go through In the former case there is no enforceable contract either because the condition is unfulfilled or because the law does not recognise a contract to enter into a contract In the latter there is a binding contract and the reference to the mere formal document may be ignored 1 Pat L J 789=(1919) Pat 305=53 Ind Cas 833 When it was admitted that the terms of the contract were reduced to writing, and as no oral evidence was admissible to prove the said terms the suit should have been brought within three years of the date of the transaction if it could be maintained on the original consideration Gobinda v Ram Chandra, 29 C L J 503=51 Ind Cas 915 Oral evidence to prove what the defendant meant by the words of a contract was inadmissible under this section Metropolitan Engineering v Heller Fugate 22 C W N 416=45 C 451=45 Ind Cas 305 Where the agreement between the parties has been reduced to the form of a document, the provision of section will bar the admission of evidence other than the document Mung Paul v Ala Hyat L B R (1872-1892) 670 Raj Kumar v Aabi Baksh, 9 O C 296. Construction of a document containing a contract of guarantee is controlled by final expression of obligation written by obligor himself in his own language Mung Lo Thet v Arachellum, U B R (1897-1901) Vol 11 38. Where there is a proposal in writing for a contract to be entered into at a later date it is doubtful if oral evidence of terms, not to be found in the written proposal, is admissible Mung Sheu v Mung Sim Gyar, 9 C W N 147 (P C)=32 C 96=31 I A 158. A question as to who the contracting parties are is not a question as to the terms of the contract, within the meaning of this section Venkata Subbiah v Gobindarajulu 18 M L J 1=3 M L J 29=31 M 15. Where an agreement is inadmissible, oral evidence is barred Bhan Singh v Thalur Das 49 P R 1908=115 P W R 1908, Samsam v Ram Parshad 4 O C 365. Section 37 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not require that the agreement or compromise itself shall be reduced to the form of a document, but only that the terms of it shall be recorded in the suit or in other words that a note of the terms should be made in the proceedings. The agreement or compromise itself that is made out of Court may be in writing or by word of mouth. If the Court did not record the terms of it, this section is no bar to the suit being brought on the terms of the compromise Dya v On Gang 3 L B 243. Ordinarily when the terms of a contract preceded by proposals negotiations conditional acceptances, counter proposals and so on are reduced finally to the form of a document signed by one or both of the parties the strong presumption is not that there are two independent contracts (the first an oral contract the second written contract), but that the written contract is the only final contract between the parties and when a contract is once reduced to writing no other evidence can be given of its terms Kotam Reddi v Vematalant, 20 M L J 41=(1916) 2 M W N 33=31 M L J 210=35 Ind Crs 18. When the terms of contract for payment of interests were reduced to writing and the written instrument was excluded from evidence by reason of the provisions of s 10 B of the Court of Wards Act oral evidence was not admissible under section 91 of the Evidence Act to prove the terms of contract Ram Bahadur v Dussart 17 C L J 399=19 Ind Crs 849. The rule of evidence, which excludes evidence of the terms of a contract which has been reduced to the form of a document has nothing to do with an action for money had and received the basis of which action is not the contract reduced to the form of a document but the doctrine of equity that a person who has received a sum of money from another for a consideration which has wholly failed must return the money to the payer Bay Nath v Salig Ram, 16 Ind Crs 33.

S 91

Terms of a grant. Under this section the only evidence as to grant when it has been reduced to the form of a document is the document itself unless secondary evidence of its contents is admissible. Secondary evidence will be admissible only under the terms of section 65 of the Act and where a document is not proved to have been lost, Cl (C) of s 65 cannot be invoked Mahomed Khan v Sheo Bhanh, A I R 1929 Oudh 447=6 O W N 859. Under section 85, sub section (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act a sub lease by a ruyat purporting to create a permanent tenancy is inadmissible for registration and if notwithstanding it is unregistered, it must be deemed as unregistered under section 49 of the Registration Act, such a document is inadmissible in proof of any transaction affecting such property. Oral evidence of such grant is also excluded by section 91 of the Evidence Act Jarip Khan v Dufu Beua 16 C L J 144=15 Ind Crs 416=17 C W N 59.

Documents inadmissible for want of registration—whether secondary evidence is admissible. Where the document containing the transaction is inadmissible for want of registration, no other evidence of the contents of the contract can be received Nga Sheia v Nga Kaur, L B R (1872-1892), 133.

The combined operation of s 49 of the Registration Act and section 91 of the Evidence Act is to completely shut out all the terms of the transaction of partition. In other words it would prevent the plaintiff from proving that in that partition certain property was allotted to a particular person. But it would not prevent other evidence being adduced to prove that one of the parties to it died separate from the rest of the family and in separate possession of certain property. An unregistered partition deed can be used to prove the intention of the parties. Jyoti Bai v Ratan Singh, 99 Ind Cas 418=A I R 1927 Nag 113. So also the fact whether one of the parties was in possession of the property can be proved by oral evidence and the partition deed can be relied upon to determine the nature of the possession. Hari Ram v Sheo Kanan, 100 Ind Cas 153, see also Thobala Chariar v Thulasiammal, 39 M L T 276=103 Ind Cas 281=A I R 1927 Mad 830, Mg Po v Ma E Mai 74 Ind Cas 47=1923 Rang 57, Nand Lal v Dhamikdhar, 1 Pat L T 657, Narsingdas v Uttamchand A I R 1923 Lah 392. Unregistered sale deed and partition deed can be used as evidence to establish the nature of the possession of the person who claims under the deeds. The fact of possession and partition of property can also be proved by oral evidence. Sheo Kanan v Churan Lal, 98 Ind Cas 910=28 P L R 88. Where an agreement or any other transaction is reduced to writing and under it any right to immovable property is affected, such writing ought to be registered. Sriramsubba v Venkateratnam, 86 Ind Cas 860=A I R 1925 Mad 945=22 L W 109. A partition can be effected orally, but if parties put it into writing but do not register it even though the properties are worth more than Rs 100 it is wholly inoperative. This section precludes oral evidence being given in such a case. It is true that relationship such as partnership, landlord and tenant, etc., may be proved from documents embodying such relationship, but not so the facts and terms of a partition deed. Mg Po Leen v Ma E Mai 1 Bur L J 111. Secondary evidence of a lost unregistered document affecting an interest in an immovable property and therefore required to be registered is not admissible in evidence of any transaction affecting such property. But such evidence is admissible to prove the document so far as it evidences an oral agreement not affecting the land or any interest in land. Mahau v Ma Shue, 44 Ind Cas 91.

An unregistered deed of lease cannot be given in evidence in proof of the terms of the lease and its existence excludes all extrinsic evidence on this point. Oral evidence of the execution of such a document is admissible in proof of the oral agreement to lease made before the execution of the document, in order to support a claim for specific performance of the oral agreement. Chaganlal v Kashiram 71 Ind Cas 33=1923 Nag 76, see also Budhan Tel v Madan Mohan, 1923 P 111. Where a lease deed is inadmissible in evidence being unregistered the tenancy can be proved by other evidence as by the doctrine of part performance. Damodar v Masoodan Singh, 105 Ind Cas 172. Tikaram v Sukka, 111 Ind Cas 358=A I R 1928 Nag 338. Though a lease for agricultural purposes for more than a year can be made orally, still if the lease is in fact reduced to writing, it cannot be received under s 17 of the Registration Act unless registered. The document itself being inadmissible, this section shuts out other evidence of the transaction. Maharam Jani v Bry Bhikhan, 3 Pat 349=79 Ind Cas 26=5 Pat L T 511, Ram Chandra v Tuma, 14 Bom L R 390=36 B 500=15 Ind Cas 830. Jasoda Nandan v Ram Kuar, L R 3A 537, Budhan Tel v Madanmohan, 3 Pat L T 485=68 Ind Cas 653. An unregistered deed of lease is not admissible to prove that the property to which it relates was let for a term of three years nor can oral evidence of the terms of the lease be tendered in such a case. Nadar v Rank, 63 Ind Cas 90. The plaintiffs having agreed to convey a house to T received the purchase money executed a sale deed which was left unregistered, and subsequently brought a suit for possession of the house. On default of the plaintiffs to produce the sale deed secondary evidence was let in to prove the sale, and the suit was dismissed. Held, on second appeal that under section 17 of the Registration Act, the deed was compulsorily registrable and section 49 made it inadmissible to prove the sale. Section 91 of the Evidence Act prohibits the admission of secondary evidence of sale deed. Gangabisan v Tukaram, 5 N L R 70=2 Ind Cas 244. Section 49 of the Registration Act prohibits unregistered lease from being given in evidence whether the suit be for specific performance or for damages, and section 91 of the Evidence Act forbids any other evidence from being given of the agreement. Streeramulu v Ramaswami, 33 M L J 596.

S 91

section will bar the admission of evidence other than the document. Maun Paul v Ma Myat L B R (1872-1892) 670. Bay Kuar v Nobi Jaisih, 90 C 296. Construction of a document containing a contract of guarantee is controlled by final expression of obligation written by obligor himself in his own language. Maung Lo The v Irrachellum, U B R (1897-1901) Vol II 38. Where there is a proposal in writing for a contract to be entered into at a later date, it is doubtful if oral evidence of terms, not to be found in the written proposal is admissible. Manmy Shun v Maung Sun Gyue, 9 C W N 146 (P C) = 32 C 96 = 31 I A 189. A question as to who the contracting parties are is not a question as to the terms of the contract within the meaning of this section. Tentala Subbiah v Gobindarajulu 18 M L J 1 = 3 M L J 29 = 31 M 15. Where an agreement is inadmissible, oral evidence is barred. Bhan Singh v Halim Das 59 P R 1908 = 115 P W R 1908, Samsam v Rim Parshad 1 O C 365. Section 37 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not require that the agreement or compromise itself shall be reduced to the form of a document, but only that the terms of it shall be recorded in the suit or in other words that a note of the terms should be made in the proceedings. The agreement or compromise itself that is made out of Court may be in writing or by word of mouth. If the Court did not record the terms of it, this section is no bar to the suit being brought on the terms of the compromise. Baya v On Gaung 3 L B R 213. Ordinarily when the terms of a contract preceded by proposals, negotiations conditional acceptances, counter proposals and so on are reduced finally to the form of a document signed by one or both of the parties the strong presumption is not that there are two independent contracts (the first an oral contract the second written contract) but that the written contract is the only final contract between the parties and when a contract is once reduced to writing no other evidence can be given of its terms. Kolam Reddi v Tennalasant, 20 M L J 11 = (1916) 2 M W N 33 = 31 M L J 240 = 35 Ind Cas 18. When the terms of contract for payment of interests were reduced to writing and the written instrument was excluded from evidence by reason of the provisions of s 10 B of the Court of Wards Act oral evidence was not admissible under section 91 of the Evidence Act to prove the terms of contract. Ram Bahadur v Dussan, 17 C L J 390 = 19 Ind Cas 948. The rule of evidence which excludes evidence of the terms of a contract which has been reduced to the form of a document has nothing to do with an action for money had and received, the basis of which action is not the contract reduced to the form of a document but the doctrine of equity that a person who has received a sum of money from another for a consideration which has wholly failed must return the money to the payer. Bay Nath v Salig Ram 16 Ind Cas 33.

Terms of a grant. Under this section the only evidence as to grant when it has been reduced to the form of a document is the document itself unless secondary evidence of its contents is admissible. Secondary evidence will be admissible only under the terms of section 65 of the Act and where a document is not proved to have been lost, Cl (C) of s 65 cannot be invoked. Mahomed Khan v Sheo Bhukh, A I R 1929 Oudh 447 = 6 O W N 859. Under section 85, sub section (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act a sub lease by a ruyat purporting to create a permanent tenancy is inadmissible for registration and if, notwithstanding it is unregistered it must be deemed as unregistered under section 49 of the Registration Act, such a document is inadmissible in proof of any transaction affecting such property. Oral evidence of such grant is also excluded by section 91 of the Evidence Act. Jarip Khan v Dufu Bena, 16 C L J 144 = 15 Ind Cas 416 = 17 C W N 59.

Documents inadmissible for want of registration—whether secondary evidence is admissible. Where the document containing the transaction is inadmissible for want of registration, no other evidence of the contents of the contract can be received. Nga Shea v Nga Kaung L B R (1872-1892) 133.

The combined operation of s 49 of the Registration Act and section 91 of the Evidence Act is to completely shut out all the terms of the transaction of partition. In other words it would prevent the plaintiff from proving that in

that partition certain property was allotted to a particular person. But it would not prevent other evidence being adduced to prove that one of the parties to it died separate from the rest of the family and in separate possession of certain property. An unregistered partition deed can be used to prove the intention of the parties. Jyoti Bai v Ratan Singh, 99 Ind Cas 418=A I R 1927 Nag 113. So also the fact whether one of the parties was in possession of the property can be proved by oral evidence and the partition deed can be relied upon to determine the nature of the possession. Hari Ram v Sheo Karan, 100 Ind Cas 153, see also Ahobila Chariar v Thulasiammal, 39 M L T 276=103 Ind Cas 281=A I R 1927 Mad 830, Mg Po v Ma E Mai, 74 Ind Cas 47=1923 Rang 57, Nand Lal v Dhanulal, 4 Pat L T 657, Narsingdas v Uttamchand A I R 1923 Lah 392. Unregistered sale deed and partition deed can be used as evidence to establish the nature of the possession of the person who claims under the deeds. The fact of possession and partition of property can also be proved by oral evidence. Sheo Karan v Churan Lal, 98 Ind Cas 910=28 P L R 88. Where no agreement or any other transaction is reduced to writing and under it any right to immovable property is effected, such writing ought to be registered. Sriramsubba v Venkateratnam, 86 Ind Cas 860=A I R 1925 Mad 945=22 L W 109. A partition can be effected orally, but if parties put it into writing but do not register it even though the properties are worth more than Rs 100 it is wholly inoperative. This section precludes oral evidence being given in such a case. It is true that relationship such as partnership, landlord and tenant, etc., may be proved from documents embodying such relationship, but not so the facts and terms of a partition deed. Mg Po Leen v Ma E Mai 1 Bur L J 111. Secondary evidence of a lost unregistered document affecting an interest in an immovable property and therefore required to be registered is not admissible in evidence of any transaction affecting such property. But such evidence is admissible to prove the document so far as it evidences an oral agreement not affecting the land or any interest in land. Maham v Ma Shue 44 Ind Cas 91.

An unregistered deed of lease cannot be given in evidence in proof of the terms of the lease and its existence excludes all extrinsic evidence on the point. Oral evidence of the execution of such a document is admissible in proof of the oral agreement to lease made before the execution of the document, in order to support a claim for specific performance of the oral agreement. Chaganlal v Kashiram 71 Ind Cas 33=1923 Nag 76, see also Budhan Tel v Madan Mohan 1923 P 111. Where a lease deed is inadmissible in evidence being unregistered the tenancy can be proved by other evidence as by the doctrine of part performance. Damodar v Masoodan Singh, 105 Ind Cas 172. Tikaram v Sukka, 111 Ind Cas 358=A I R 1928 Nag 338. Though a lease for agricultural purposes for more than a year can be made orally, still if the lease is in fact reduced to writing it cannot be received under s 17 of the Registration Act unless registered. The document itself being inadmissible, this section shuts out other evidence of the transaction. Maharam Jani v Bry Bhikhan, 3 Pat 349=79 Ind Cas 26=5 Pat L T 511, Ram Chandra v Tama, 14 Bom L R 390=36 B 500=15 Ind Cas 830. Jasoda Nandan v Ram Kuar, L R 3A 537, Budhan Tel v Madanmohan 3 Pat L T 485=68 Ind Cas 653. An unregistered deed of lease is not admissible to prove that the property to which it relates was let for a term of three years nor can oral evidence of the terms of the lease be tendered in such a case. Nadar v Rank, 63 Ind Cas 90. The plaintiffs having agreed to convey a house to T received the purchase money executed a sale deed, which was left unregistered, and subsequently brought a suit for possession of the house. On default of the plaintiffs to produce the sale deed secondary evidence was let in to prove the sale, and the suit was dismissed. Held, on second appeal, that under section 17 of the Registration Act, the deed was compulsorily registrable and section 49 made it inadmissible to prove the sale. Section 91 of the Evidence Act prohibits the admission of secondary evidence of sale deed. Gangabai v Tukaram, 5 N L R 70=2 Ind Cas 244. Section 49 of the Registration Act prohibits unregistered lease from being given in evidence whether the suit be for specific performance or for damages, and section 91 of the Evidence Act forbids any other evidence from being given of the agreement. Streeramulu v Ramaswami, 33 M L J 596.

S 91

Documents not properly stamped—Admissibility of other evidence.—A pro note pryabla otherwise than on demand, bearing no one anna stamp is an insufficiently stamped document and is, under section 34, Stamp Act, inadmissible in evidence for any purpose even on payment of penalty. In such a case a person is not entitled to fall back upon the original consideration of the contract as no other evidence of the terms of the document which is the best evidence in the case is admissible under this section. O Gorman v Mahtab Singh, 92 P R 1898, Chandan Singh v Amritsar Banking Co, 2 Lah 330=1922 Lah 307=66 Ind Cas 201.

Where a plaintiff is able to prove the loan independently of and without the assistance of a promissory note, which cannot be admitted in evidence for some reason, he can fall back upon a claim for money lent. Ram Sarup v Jasodha, 9 A L J 72=34 A 158=13 Ind Cas 138. So a creditor can fall back on the original transaction and recover his money on its basis when it is found or conceded that the document or instrument which he had obtained from the debtor was ineffective to establish any contractual relation of debtor and creditor between them so as to serve as a basis for a suit in a Court of law. Udaram v Laxman 104 Ind Cas 470=A I R 1927 Nag. 241. Where a person sued to recover money on the basis of a sarlah which was not duly stamped, but the sarlah appeared to be a mere acknowledgment of loan. Held, that if the plaintiff was able to prove alunde by oral evidence that the defendant had the money he was entitled to a decree. Launjan Chande v Parsotam Chande, 25 A L J 567=103 Ind Cas 634=A I R 1927 All 503.

The mere existence of an unstamped receipt which is inadmissible in evidence does not prevent other evidence being given to prove discharge by payment. Ram Prasad v Nathu Ram, A I R 1923 Nag 32.

If a creditor has a cause of action for recovery of money for his debt or has executed a promissory note separate from and independent of the note he can recover upon such cause in case the note for any reason as for want of being properly stamped cannot be put in evidence. Kashi Prasad v Panna Lal 74 Ind Cas 359=L R 4 A 377=1923 A 529. A promissory note which is insufficiently stamped if sued upon may give rise to three kinds of transactions. Either the contract may be considered as contained wholly in the promissory note or bill of exchange as in (b) to s 91 of the Indian Evidence Act, in which case the plaintiff cannot sue on the promissory note—he can not sue at all, or secondly, the promissory note may be regarded as a conditional payment of the amount of the loan in which case, of course if the promissory note is insufficiently stamped, it is only a worthless piece of paper and the plaintiff may sue on the loan, or thirdly, the promissory note may be passed as security for the loan, in which case, there is no necessity for the plaintiff to sue on the promissory note at all and, whether it is properly stamped or not, he can bring a suit on the loan. Jacob & Co v Vimmsey, 29 Bom L R 432=102 Ind Cas 138=A I R 1927 Bom 437. Apart from the promissory note there is always a contract to repay a loan and such a contract can be proved independently of the instrument. It is only the other contract relating to the rate of interest which can only be proved on reference to the instrument itself. Dhaneshwar v Ramrup, 7 Pat 845=111 Ind Cas 482=9 Pat L T 471=A L R, 1928 Pat 426. Chedu Singh v Jagannath, 26 A L J 416=108 Ind Cas 912=A I R 1928 All 297, Nanku Singh v Gurja Bux, 6 O W N 640=119 Ind Cas 865=A I R 1929 Smd 399, Ram Sarup v Jasodha Kumwar, 9 A L J 72=13 Ind Cas 138=34 A 158. But where the money was borrowed simultaneously with the execution of a promissory note by the borrower and it appeared that the note was unstamped. Held that the promissory note could not be sued upon and that it was not a case in which the suit was maintainable on the basis of the original contract either as there was none. Velata v Muniammal, 6 Mys L J 157. If a hundi is an embodiment of the whole of the contract between the parties and is not admissible in evidence and cannot be looked at for the purpose of finding out the terms of the contract, other evidence to prove the terms of such contract can not be allowed. But where the hundi embodies only a part of the contract between the parties, it cannot be said that the whole contract is reduced to the form:

of a hundi and the section 91 does not exclude evidence showing the terms of the whole contract which cannot be determined from the hundi alone Kundan v Sahu, 51 A 530=27 A L J 333=116 Ind Cas 293=A I R 1929 All 254 Debt covered by pro-note cannot be proved by independent prior agreement where pro note is inadmissible for want of stamp P Somnaya v M Venkata subbarayadu 85 Ind Cas 380=A I R 1925 Mad 351 If a contract of loan is complete before the pro-note is passed, the plaintiff may sue on the completed contract without the pro-note but if the pro-note contains the contract the suit must be on the pro-note and if that is insufficiently stamped the suit must be dismissed Lokumal v The Sind Bank 13 S L R 169=57 Ind Cas 386, Maung Kyi v Ma Ma Gol 12 Bur L T 137=54 Ind Cas 34 F B, Nga Wan v Nga Chet, U B R 1907, 3rd Qr Evidence, 5 Where the respondent obtained a decree against the applicant for the recovery of a debt alleged to be due on a promissory note and the note was not proved, but independent evidence of the obligation was admitted, held that the independent evidence of the obligation was admissible Maung Hlaw v Ngassat, U B R. (1897 1901), Vol II 390 Where a plaintiff bases his causes of action on a promissory note, which he alleges had been lost, he cannot prove the contents unless he succeeds in proving the loss of the document apart from the note in which the contract was recorded Siray Husain v Bulaki Ram, 5 A L J 162=A W N 1903, 91 There seems to be a consensus of rulings to the effect that independent evidence may be given of the original consideration, even when a pro-note has been executed and when for any reason the document is excluded The reasonings of the several decisions apply not merely to unstamped documents, but to any case in which reliance cannot be placed on the pro note, and in which the note is merely evidence of, or a collateral security for, an obligation already existing Mrs L Ewing v G White, U B R (1897 1901) Vol II, 391 Where money is lent on conditions contained in a promissory note executed and given at the time of the loan, and such note is inadmissible in evidence, being insufficiently stamped the payee is not entitled to set up a case independent of the note Parsotam v Taley Singh, 26 A 178=A W N 1903, 178 Secondary evidence of a document inadmissible under section 34 of the Stamp Act cannot, according to ss 65, 91 of the Evidence Act, be given Bakshi Ram v Kalla Ram 42 P R 1895 A person who takes a promissory note on account of a pre existing debt may, if the document becomes inadmissible in evidence, sue upon the original consideration, disregarding the instrument, provided he has not endorsed, lost or parted with the same But if the original cause of action is the promissory note itself and does not exist independently of it he cannot succeed without the instrument, according to s 91 of the Evidence Act as the instrument is the only contract between the parties Sheo Das v Kanhaiya Lal 61 P R 1888 Where a promissory note itself is the agreement of loan a plaintiff cannot sue on the original consideration and the promissory note must be proved Ram Singh v Perumal, 9 S L R 150=32 Ind Cas 582, Bally Singh v Bhuguan, 7 Bur L T 95=23 Ind Cas 975=7 L B R 101

When it is proved that certain hundis were renewed from time to time and were handed over to the drawers who held them at the time of the suit but the last hundis were executed on insufficiently stamped paper and could not be admitted in evidence, held that the plaintiffs could fall back upon the hundis that were given prior to the last renewals, and secondary evidence could be admitted to prove them Jagan Prasad v Indra Mal 12 A L J 361=36 A 259=23 Ind Cas 589 Where the contract in case of a loan and a simultaneous promissory note has been reduced to writing in the form of the note which contains the definite terms of the contract, Courts cannot resort to inconsistent or consistent implied contracts in such cases, simply because the contract as entered in the promissory note cannot be admitted in evidence Muthu Sasirajal v Visuanath Panikara, 14 M L T 520=(1914) M W N 58=26 M L J 19

Any matter is required by law to be reduced to the form of a document Oral evidence can not be substituted for any instrument which the law requires to be in writing, such as records public and judicial documents, official information or examinations, deeds of conveyance of lands, Wills, other than nuncupative, promises to pay the debt of another person, etc, Taylor § 399 In all these

S. 91 cases the law having required that the evidence of the transaction should be in writing no other proof can be substituted for that, so long as the writing exists and is in the power of the party Ibid Instances of this class in India are —

(1) Judgments and decrees in civil cases Vide Or XX, and Or XXXI of the Civil Procedure Code

(2) Depositions of witnesses in civil cases, Vide Order XVIII of the Civil Procedure Code

(3) Judgments and orders in criminal cases Vide §§ 367, 421 of the Criminal Procedure Code

(4) Deposition of witnesses in criminal cases Cr Procedure Code, sections 354—362

(5) Examination of an accused person Cr Pro Code s 361

(6) Confessions of an accused person Cr Pro Code s 364

(7) Lease of immovable property from year to year or for any term exceeding one year Vide s 107 of T P Act But this does not include an agreement to lease Nanda v. Sarat, 5 Ind Cas 562

(8) Deed of mortgage when the principal money secured is one hundred rupees or upwards, other than a mortgage by deposit of title-deeds Vide s 59 of the T P Act

(9) Gift of immovable property Vide s 124 of the T P Act

(10) Sale of immovable property of the value of one hundred rupees and upwards Vide s 54 of the T P Act

(11) Exchange of immovable property of the value of one hundred rupees and upwards Vide s 118 of the T P Act

(12) Proof of previous conviction or acquittal in criminal cases Vide s 511 of the Criminal Pro Code

(13) Acknowledgment of debt under s 19 of the Limitation Act

(14) Acknowledgment of debt by part payment of debt under s 20 of the Limitation Act

(15) Assignment of copy right Vide s 5 of the Copy Right Act

(16) Agreement without consideration (Vide s 25 of the Contract Act)

(17) Agreement to refer matters to arbitration (Vide Exception 2 to Section 28 of the Contract Act)

(18) Transfer of actionable claim (Vide s 130 of the T P Act)

(19) Trust of immovable property (Vide s 5 of the Trusts Act)

(20) Hindu Wills and Wills under the Indian Succession Act generally Vide §§ 57, 63 and 66 of the Indian Succession Act (XXXIX of 1925)

The examination of witness by a police officer under section 162 Cr Pro Code does not come within the class of documents referred to in this section and the police officer can speak to it by going into the witness box Pitmal v Emperor, 88 Ind Cas 449—26 Cr L J 1137 The principle underlying s 360

(1) of the Criminal Procedure Code should be made applicable on the grounds of public policy to the substance of the examination of a complaint on oath if the accuracy of the record of such examination is to be vouchsafed, particularly when it is to be utilised as a basis for a possible perjury in future for it would be unsafe to use against a complainant what on face of it purports to be only a substance and not the full version of his examination But under the present state of the law, it cannot be contended that the substance of the oral examination is inadmissible in evidence under s 91 of the Evidence Act in proof of the statement therein contained Bhagwati Bai v Emperor, 89 Ind Cas 713—26 Cr L J 1401 Having regard to the provisions of s 154, Code of Criminal Procedure and s 91, Evidence Act, the only legal proof of the terms of a complaint of a cognizable offence to the police is the written record of the same, excepting where secondary evidence of its contents is admissible It would be most unsafe if in cases under s 211, Penal Code, a policeman's report of what a complainant contained could be accepted as sufficient proof of its contents without insisting on the production of the document itself if it were in any way procurable Queen v Nga L B R (1872—1892) 572

Mortgage When in a suit for redemption of a mortgage the existence of the mortgage was not proved and the plaintiff sought to recover possession on the strength of his title and the defendant resisted the same on the ground of a contract of sale in his favour. Held that the plaintiff could let in evidence to rebut the existence of such a contract. Held also that a pyat paing which reported an actual sale could not be considered as a document recording the terms of a contract for the purpose of section 91 of the Evidence Act. Maung Kin v Maung Sun, 5 Rang 679. Where on the back of a mortgage deed an endorsement of the payment was made and it was also added that the mortgages were extinguished the endorsement requires registration. But oral evidence is admissible to prove the payment of mortgage amount, apart from the endorsement. Labhu Ram v Sarauar, 100 Ind Cas 129=A I R 1927 Lab 237. If there is evidence that a formal deed of mortgage was drawn upon a palm leaf then secondary evidence of its contents will be admissible. If however it should transpire that a formal deed was drawn up and executed by signing then secondary evidence will be inadmissible for lack of stamping. Ma Saw v Maung Ba, 5 Rang 650. Where A executed two mortgages in favour of B, who had arranged to finance him by getting C to honour his drafts on the guarantee of B and subsequently B transferred the mortgages to C with the consent of A. Held on those facts that A could not go behind the recitals in the instrument of transfer and have an account taken as to what was due on the mortgages. William Aratoon v Bank of Bengal 31 C W N 179 (P C)=A I R 1926 (P C) 129=1926 M W N 828. Where a mortgage was alleged to be in writing but the same was proved by circumstantial evidence such as recitals in deeds referring to the mortgage extracts from account books and by a transfer of a share of the mortgage. Held that the written mortgage not having been proved the circumstantial evidence was not rendered inadmissible by s 91 of the Evidence Act or s. 49 of the Registration Act. Narsikalyandas v Parshotam 30 Bom L R 1277=A I R 1928 Bom 434. Where the mortgage deed provided that interest should be paid at one per cent per mensem compoundable yearly and the defendant alleged in a suit on the mortgage that the contract between the parties was that only simple interest should be paid. Held, that the evidence in support of the alleged oral agreement was inadmissible under §§ 91 and 92 of the Evidence Act. Bihari Lal v Abdul Aziz, 27 A L J 866=119 Ind Crs 92. Where the plaintiff alleged a mortgage and the defendant alleged a sale but no registered document was produced. Held that oral evidence was admissible to prove the nature of the transaction. Maung Po v Ma Le 3 Bur L J 238=84 Ind Crs 468=A I R 1923 Rang 102. A mortgage which ought to have been by a registered instrument cannot be so proved by other forms of evidence. Maung Tun v Maung Khan 2 Rang 441=A I R 1925 Rang 61. In the absence of a document accompanying the title deed in the case of mortgage by deposit of title deeds, it would have been open to the plaintiff to prove orally what was the intention with which the document was deposited and whether it was meant to be considered as a security. But as the defendant executed a document in writing the Court must refer to it in order to ascertain what the contract was. Chunilal v Pittal Das 24 Bom L R 502=68 Ind Cas 1005=A I R 1922 Bom 440. According to section 91 of the Evidence Act the terms of a mortgage can only be proved by the production of the mortgage deed or of secondary evidence of its contents in case it is shown to be lost or destroyed or the opposite party who has the document fails to produce it after notice. Mi Le Byn v Mi Shue, Mya, U B R 1907 4th Qr Evidence 13. Fateh Singh v Man Singh, 131 P R 1883. Gyri v Samandar, 276 P L R 1913=20 Ind Cas 280.

Sale Where property is conveyed by an unregistered sale deed though the document cannot be relied upon for the purpose of establishing title it may be referred to for the purpose of understanding the nature of the contract between the parties and to prove delivery of possession. To such a case this section does not apply. Keshwar Mahton v Sheonandan, 10 Pat L T 449=A I R 1929 Pat 620. Section 49 of the Registration Act must be read together with section 17 of that Act and s 91 of the Evidence Act. The section does not preclude an unregistered document, which is required by law to be registered from being given in evidence as to the terms of the contract for sale. Maung Tu Pe v Maung Sen, 7 R 414=A I R 1929 Rang 293. This section only prohibits

S 91. Evidence of the terms of a disposition of a property and the word "terms" is applicable to both classes of documents mentioned in section 91. Consequently where the existence of a sale is in question and not its terms oral evidence is not inadmissible. Amradavalu v Yellamanda, 95 Ind Cas 584 = A I R 1936 Mad 872 = (1926) M W N 381. On behalf of the plaintiff a Lobala purporting to have been executed by the plaintiff's vendor in defendant's favour in respect of the property in suit valued at Rs 99 but which was not completed and registered was also put in evidence. Held that notwithstanding that the value of the property which the document purported to convey was less than Rs 100, a sale of the property if it was made by a document could only be made by a registered instrument under a 51 of the Transfer of Property Act, but having regard to section 91 of the Evidence Act, it might be used as evidence of the nature and terms of the transaction which fell through to corroborate the plaintiff's story that the defendant negotiated for the purchase of the property from the vendor of the plaintiff who had title to the property. Brayaballan v Akhoy, 30 Ind Cas 251. Evidence of prior contract of sale is admissible where the sale has failed to take effect for want of registered conveyance. Ug Nyat v Ma Dun, 3 Bar L J 78 = 81 Ind Cas 857 = A I R 1921 Rang 214. Where unregistered deed of sale is inadmissible in evidence other evidence of the contract of sale is inadmissible. Parmeshri v Autar Singh, 3 Lah L J 173, Baggi v Tara Singh, 5 P L R 1919. The plaintiff can rely upon an oral sale accompanied by delivery of possession in a case where a sale deed was executed in evidence thereof for a consideration of a sum less than Rs 100 but not registered. Sheo Dyal v Raja Muhammad, 20 O C 33 = 38 Ind Cas 671. When the property sold is less than Rs 100 in value and the sale is effected or completed by delivery of possession, there is no reason why the transaction should not be evidenced by a writing in the terms of a conveyance even though the document is not registered. The document does not confer and is merely evidentiary, but having regard to section 91 of this Evidence Act it may be the only evidence of the nature and terms of the transaction, though that section would not exclude proof of the fact of the delivery of possession. Shaikh Juman v Mahommed 21 C W N 1149. An oral evidence to show that the transaction effected by a registered deed, though it purported to be a sale, was really a mortgage is not admissible. Ma Paik v Ma Nuai Paik 34 Ind Cas 153 = 9 Bar L T 174. A vendee of immovable property under a registered deed if required to prove his title must do so by the production of the deed or by the foundation for the admission of secondary evidence with regard to it. No oral evidence of that sale can be adduced under section 91 of the Evidence Act. Safar Ali v Mohesh 23 C L J 122 = 34 Ind Cas 956. After acknowledging the receipt of consideration in the deed of sale, a vendor is not estopped from showing that he had actually received the consideration stated in the deed. Puthi v Nand Kishore, 25 Ind Cas 27.

Deposition. Since the act of deposing is a physical act which can always be proved by any one who has heard the statement being made, the fact of deposing might be proved by any one who has seen and heard the witness. Garapati v Sahharayappa 115 Ind Cas 147 = A I R 1929 Mad 187. But under Order 18, rule 5, C P Code, it is necessary that the deposition of a witness in an appealable case in order to bind him to the statement recorded therein should be read over to him. This provision is mandatory and not directory. The omission to do so renders the deposition inadmissible in evidence against him on his subsequent trial for perjury. Section 91 of the Evidence Act excludes oral evidence of its contents. Emperor v Nabab Ali 51 C 236 = 25 Cr L J 1027 = 81 Ind Cas 803, see also Imam Dan v Niamut Ullah, 1 Lah 361 = 58 Ind Cas 530. Empress v Maya Deb 6 C 763 = 8 C L R 292, Crown v Ali Shue 1 L B R 268, but see Elahi Buksha v Emperor 45 C 825 = 27 C L J 377 = 22 C W N 1646 = 45 Ind Cas 258 = 19 Cr L J 498. In ordinary cases a Magistrate trying a criminal charge must take down the evidence and then the record thus made is the only admissible proof of what was said; but in a summary trial the Magistrate need not generally record the evidence and where no obligation is laid upon the Judge or presiding officer by law to reduce depositions or statements to writing they may be proved by the presiding officer or by persons who heard them, in order to establish the fact that they were made.

Howard v Rustamji, Rat Un Cr C 334 The accused was charged in the alternative with having given false evidence either before the chief constable in a police investigation or before a Magistrate in a criminal trial. Held that the statement made to the chief constable by the accused, and reduced by him to writing, was not admissible in evidence against the accused, the only evidence as to such statement that would be admissible for the purposes of such a case as the present being the oral testimony of the constable, who could however, refresh his memory by referring to the statement reduced by him to writing, and that the oral evidence of the contents of the accused's deposition at the trial before the Magistrate was inadmissible under this section. Queen Empress v Bapu Narain, Rat Un Cr C 401 Under section 91 of the Evidence Act the document embodying the deposition is the only evidence of the statement charged having been made under section 80 of the same Act, it is admissible only when it was taken in accordance with law. Kadir Pakiri v, Emperor, 18 Cr L J 966=42 Ind Cas 326

Confession. The oral confession of his guilt made by an accused before a Magistrate was inadmissible in evidence. Emperor v Maruti, 21 Bom L R 1065 One S stated to a Bench of Magistrates that he was willing to compromise a case pending in their Court if the opposite party paid him Rupees nine seven and which were paid to their Peshkar. The Peshkar was sent for and admitted having received Rupees five from S, but when he was prosecuted he denied the receipt of the money. One of the Magistrates was examined and proved the confession. Held that the statement of S was not a complaint but a confession of guilt punishable under s. 161, Penal Code, and should have been recorded like a confession. Held further that the statement of the Peshkar being recorded when departmental enquiry was going on was not a matter required by law to be in writing, and section 91 of the Evidence Act had no application. The Magistrate therefore was competent to prove the confession. Haidar Raza v King Emperor, 12 A. L. J 306=36 A 222=15 Cr L J 569=25 Ind Cas, 321. Where statements made by an accused person are inadmissible in evidence, secondary evidence of the contents of those statements are inadmissible also under this section. Queen Empress v Viran, 9 M 224=2 Weir 125, Reg v Bu Zulan, 10 B H C 166 The confession of an accused person made to a Magistrate holding an enquiry is a matter required by law to be reduced to the form of a document within the meaning of section 91 of the Evidence Act, and no evidence can be given of the terms of such a confession, except the record, if any made under s. 364, of the Code of Criminal Procedure. King Emperor v Gulabai, 11 A. L. J 286=14 Cr. L J 211=19 Ind Cas 307=35 A. 260

Acknowledgment of debt. Secondary evidence of the contents of an acknowledgment, used to keep alive a cause of action beyond the ordinary period of limitation, can be given where the original is proved to have been lost or destroyed the effect of paragraph 2 of section 19 of the Limitation Act of 1877 not being absolutely and always to exclude secondary evidence in such a case. Para 2 of the above section belongs to that branch of the law of evidence contained in section 91 of the Evidence Act. Shambu Nath v Ram Chandra Saha 12 C 267 Section 19 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) says clearly that oral evidence of the contents of an acknowledgment may not be received nor has the Act made any saving of acknowledgments received or given back before the Act came into operation. Zulhussa v Mohideen, 12 B 268

Search list. A search list is not evidence of the facts stated therein and this section, therefore has no application to it. It is simply a declaration, not on oath or affirmation or subject to cross examination, made by a police officer and the persons present at the search, that certain formalities were observed and certain events took place. Oral evidence may, therefore, be given as to what took place at the time of the search. Public Prosecutor v Sarabu Chennaya, 2 Weir 776 This section, presupposes that, where a certain matter is required by law to be reduced to writing the writing is itself evidence of the matter so reduced and the section does not apply if the writing is not evidence of the matter. A search list is not evidence of the matter stated therein and it does not therefore exclude oral evidence of such matter. Public Prosecutor v Sarabu,

- S. 91. 33 M 413-8 Ind Cas 809-11 Cr L J 716 The search list prepared under s 103, Criminal Pro Code, is proper evidence of the matters which it should contain, viz, the properties found and the place where they were found. In re Mamadi, 2 Weir 17-2 Weir 515 The provisions of this section do not apply to the case of a search list prepared under s 103 of the Criminal Procedure Code. In re Solat Naich, 8 Ind Cas 178-21 M L J 281-11 Cr L J 576

Application of section 91 to an oral statement made by a witness to a Police officer "In discussing the non applicability of section 91 of the Evidence Act to an oral statement made by a witness to a police officer and entered by him in his special diary I shall show that the distinction between the oral statement made by the witness and entry in the diary is a distinction in substance. The argument that the use of an oral statement made by a witness to an investigating police officer when reduced to the form of a document is inadmissible by section 91 of the Evidence Act, is not free from flaws. The argument in the first place cannot establish that section 162 of the present Code of Criminal Procedure prohibits the use of oral statements made by a witness to the investigating officer and that is the point in question. In the second place section 91 of the Indian Evidence Act has no application to an oral statement made to an investigating police officer, for it is not a matter which is required by law to be reduced to the form of document (see Reg v. Uttam Chand, 11 B H C R 120 and Empress v. Aali Churn 8 C 154). In the third place the entry in the diary of the police officer, correctly speaking is not the statement either oral or written by the witness for any legal purpose. It is by habit of thought induced in those who have constantly to deal with the depositions of witnesses that the entry in diary is mistaken for the statement made by a witness by the application of the true 'statement to such entry in ordinary parlance. This call for some elucidation. No one can doubt that speech and writing are two distinct objective entities perceptible by two different senses. Speech is heard by the ear and writing is seen by the eye. A deaf person is not a possible witness to a speech nor a blind person to a writing. Both are means for expressing ideas. A may state orally that a certain event happened or may write that it happened, but in order to constitute the oral or the written statement of A to be his act in the eye of the law it must have been made with a consenting mind as his own juristic act. A making an oral statement within the hearing of B, C and D. The oral statement of it under section 8 illustration (c) of the Evidence Act, is a fact, and by section 60 of that Act it must be proved by direct evidence which is the statement by B, C and D that they heard A say so and so. Now suppose that when A made that oral statement, B took it down in writing. Can B be allowed when called as a witness to prove the oral statement made by A, within his hearing, to produce his own writing and to depose that this is the statement which A made? In my opinion he cannot be allowed to do so to prove the oral statement made to him by A. It can make no difference if B happens to be an investigating police officer. If he is called to prove an oral statement made to him by A, his direct testimony will be the statement that he heard A say so and so, and his entry in the diary will in no way be regarded as the act of A which is sought to be proved. The case of statement made by a witness before a Court is different. His oral statement is required by law to be reduced to the form of a document, and that writing which in fact is the act of presiding officer of the Court is, the consequence of the consent of the witness, deemed to represent his own oral statement and his own juristic act' Per Karamat Husain J in Rustam v. King Emperor, 7 A L J 468 (481)

Exception 1 A presumption of due appointment to office is raised by showing that the person is acting notoriously as such officer. This strictly involves two elements 'first the acting secondly the notoriety or openness of such action, or, as sometimes put, the repute of being such officer. But often the first element alone is mentioned as essential. Greenl Ev § 38(a). This presumption is based on the maxim omnia presumuntur rite esse acta, that is that will be presumed to have been done which ought to have been done. The general rule is that where the contents of a writing are desired to be proved, the writing itself must be produced, or its absence is sufficiently accounted for before other evidence of its contents can be admitted Greenl Ev § 563(a) For similar reason, and from the strong presumption arising, from the undisturbed exercise of a public office, that the appointment to it is valid it is not in general, necessary to prove the written appointments of public officers. All who are proved to have acted as such are presumed to have been duly appointed to the office until the contrary appears, and it is not material how the question arises, whether in a civil or criminal case nor whether the officer is or is not a party to the record R v Gordon, 2 Leach Cr C 581, Berryman v Wise, 4 T R 366, McGabe v Alston 2 M & W 206, 211 Radford v McIntosh 3 F R 632 Cross v Kaye 6 T R 663 James v Bonon 5 B & Ald 243, R v Jones, 2 Campb 131, R v Perels, 3 Campb 432, Greenl Ev § 563(g)

Exception 2 Copy of the Will and the copy of the grant of administration together form the probate Delany v Rahamat Ali 32 C 710 (713)=9 C W N cccxiii section 2(f) of the Indian succession Act XXXIX of 1925 An executor can not assert or rely on his right in any Court without showing that he has previously established it in the Probate Division the usual proof of which is, the production of a copy of the Will by which he is appointed, certified under the seal of the Court This is usually called the probate or letters testamentary In other words nothing but the probate (or letters of administration with the Will annexed, when no executor is therein appointed, or the appointment of executors), or other proof tantamount thereto of the admission of the Will in the Probate Division is legal evidence of the Will in any question respecting personality William on Executor 11th Ed 203 It can only be granted to an executor Behary Lal v Jango Mohah, 4 C 1 Probate of a Will can not be refused on the ground simply that it is what lawyers in ancient time called "inofficious" Rammal v Kakalkoh 22 C W N 315=43 Ind Cas 208 Under this exception the contents of a Will of which a probate has been granted may be proved by the probate Section 227 of the Indian Succession Act (XXXIX of 1925) lays down that probate of a Will when granted, establishes the Will from the death of the testator and renders valid all intermediate acts of the executor as such But this section does not apply to the Wills of Muhammadans as well as to the Wills of the Hindus, Buddhists Sikhs or Jains who do not belong to the Provinces of Bengal, Assam or Bihar and Orissa or who do not live within the local limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the High Courts of India except at Madras and Bombay The property vests in the executor by virtue of the Will not of the probate The Will gives property to the executor, the grant of probate is the method which the law specially provides for establishing the Will So long as the probate exists it is effectual for that purpose Kamal Lochan v Ashutosh 4 C 360 (362) The law on the subject is the same as in England In re Echele Joshua Abraham, 21 B 149 Probate is an evidentiary ceremony Snells v Miller, 1 T R 180 Ganapathi Iyer v Suamali 36 M 375 Mallumadas v Goculdas 10 B 163 Jehangeer v Kulibai, 27 B 281 Bai Huskar v Manuel Lal 12 B 621 The probate is only conclusive as to the appointment of executors and the validity of the contents of the Will Hormusjee v Bai Dhanabai 12 B 161 Wheeler v Hume 7 H L C 121, Braynath v Anandamoyee 3 B L R O C 208 Balgangadhar v Sakurabai, 26 B 762 Chintaman v Ham Chandra 31 B 589 The probate shows that it was duly executed by the executor Bhabangana v Honertra 17 C W N 145=16 Ind Cas 48

Explanation I The learning on this head says Mr Norton 'must be sought for in works on contract etc Suffice it here to say that a contract or grant or disposition may as well as be executed by several as by one document Like the familiar in time of a contract the terms of which are to be gathered from a series of letters passing between the parties Allen v Bennett 1 Taunt 169 Jarlson v Lowe 1 Bin, 9 Phillimore v Barry 1 Camp 713 Harner v Wellington 25 L J Ch 662 Isellaney v Defruham, 15 Ch D 481 It will suffice if the contract can be made out in all its terms from any writings of the party provided such writings contain internal evidence connecting them together Spiridon v Colterill 20 Ch D 90, Taylor § 1026 An envelope of a letter in which the name of one of the parties is written is sufficiently connected with the letter Peace v Garlin, (1897) 1 Q B 638, Taylor § 1026. It is sufficient if the contract can be plainly made out, in all its terms, from any writings of the party, or even from his correspondence. But it shall be collected from the writings, verbal testimony not being admissible to supply any defects or omissions in the written evidence. Boydell v Drummond, 11 East 112, Green Ex § 268 Cox v Middleton 23 L J Ch 618, Ridgway v Horton, 24 L J Ch 46 Caddell v Shamore, 3 Jur N S 1185.

S 91

Telegrams "Telegraphic messages are instruments of evidence for various purposes and are governed by the same general rules which are applied to other writings. If there be any difference it results from the fact that messages are first written by the sender and are again written by the operator at the other end of the line thus causing the inquiry which is the original. The original message, whatever it may be, must be produced it being the best evidence and in case of its loss or of inability to produce it from any other cause the next best evidence the nature of the case will admit of, must be furnished. If there was a copy of the message existing it should be produced, if not then the contents of the message should be shown by parol testimony. Scott and Jarnagin on Telegraphs § 340 341. Many cases are cited in the above work from which it is held that in all controversies between the sender of the message, and the company the original message is the one left at the office by the party sending it but where a man sends a proposition to another man by telegraph and gets a reply accepting the offer the original message so far as binding the acceptor is concerned is the copy delivered to him at the other end. The message as communicated to the acceptor and his reply as delivered to the operator to be returned are what would govern in construing the contract, provided both parties voluntarily and of their own accord sent their messages by the telegraph and thus adopted the company as their agent. So when a contract is made by telegraph which must be in writing by the Statute of Frauds, if the parties authorize their agents either in writing or by parol, to make a proposition on one side and the other party accepts it through the telegraph that constitutes a contract in writing under the Statute of Frauds because each party authorizes his agent, the company or the company's operator to write for him and it makes no difference whether that operator writes the offer or the acceptance in the presence of his principal and by his express direction with a steel pen in ink long attached to an ordinary penholder or whether his pen be a copper wire a thousand miles long. In either case the thought is communicated to the paper by use of the finger resting upon the pen nor does it make any difference that in one case common record ink is used while in the other case a more subtle fluid known as electricity, performs the office. We know that by the admirable system regulating the government of the telegraphic companies, the original despatch is preserved and may be at all times procured for the proper purposes. The paper filed at the office from which the message is sent is of course the original, and that which is received by the person to whom it was sent purports to be a copy. If the despatch is sought to be used in evidence the original must be proved and its execution proved precisely as any other instrument or its authenticity accounted for in the same mode before the copy can be received. Houley v Hippie, 43 N H 488, Burr Jones § 53. By the decided weight of authority the question whether the communication sent in or the one received is to be deemed the original depends upon which party is responsible for its transmission, in other words upon the question for whom the telegraph company is agent. If there is but a single communication the despatch as delivered at the place of destination is the best evidence. In such case the telegraph company is the sender's agent but if the message were sent in response to a request by letter to telegraph a reply it appears to us that the company would be the receiver's agent and the despatch as handed for transmission the original. And generally in controversies arising between sender and the receiver when the company can be considered the agent of the sender of the message the message received at the place of destination is to be deemed the original. Durkee v Leroy C Ry Co 29 Vt 127, Burr Jones § 210. In proving a contract by telegram the best evidence is the telegram containing the offer as received at the point of destination and the despatch containing the acceptance as delivered for transmission Durr Jones § 210 S 91

Broker's books and bought and sold notes A broker when he closes a negotiation, as the common agent of both parties usually enters it in his business books and gives to each party a copy of the entry or note or memorandum of the transaction. The note which he gives to the seller is called the sold note and that which he gives to the buyer is called the bought note. Vide Benjamin on Sales § 276. A broker is often spoken of as a middle man or negotiator between two parties (Story on Agency p 29, Fairlie v Fenton L R 5 Ex p 169). He frequently acts as agent of each. 'The engagement of a broker is like that of a proxy, a factor agent, but with this difference that the broker being employed by persons who have opposite interests to manage, he is as it were agent for both the one and the other to negotiate the commerce or affair in which he concerns himself. Thus his agreement is twofold and consists in being faithful to all the parties in execution of what every one of them entrusts him with' (Domah, Bk I, tit 17, cited in Story on Agency, p 29, in notes). But primarily he is deemed merely the agent of the party by whom he is originally employed. To make the other side liable to pay him brokerage, it must be shown that he has been employed by such party to act for him, or that in the contract such party has agreed to pay the brokerage. The Municipal Corporation of Bombay v Cudjee, 20 B 124 129 130. The bought and sold notes ordinarily does not constitute a contract of sale, but only serve the purpose of recording it. Durga v Bhajan Lal, 31 C 611 (P C) = 8 C W N 489 = 15 M L J 106, Jadu Rai v Bhabatarn, 17 C 173 (177). In Junna Das v Srinath Roy, 17 C 176 (N) Mr Justice Trevelyan said "If the parties have intended to reduce all the terms of the contract into writing, then no parol evidence is admissible but if they intend only to reduce into writing a portion of the terms of the contract, then I think they are entitled to give parol evidence of the terms which they did not intend to reduce into writing. Now when bought and sold notes are exchanged, is it usually intended that these notes should constitute the whole of the contract? I think not. Mr Benjamin in his work on the law of 'sales' lays down as the result of the authorities that the bought and sold notes do not constitute the contract. I think this proposition is clearly borne out by the case of Scutright v Archbold, 20 L J Q B 529 = 17 Q B 115. [See especially the decision of Mr Justice Erle in that case], and also by the case of Porton v Crofts 33 L J C P 189. In both these cases the distinction between making a contract and a memorandum showing that the contract has been made is pointed out. The result of those cases is that broker's notes as a memorandum may satisfy the Statute of Frauds, but not exclude parol evidence. In Clarton v Shau, 9 B L R 252 Su Richard Couch, and Markby treated the bought and sold notes, not as the contract but as information sent by the broker to his principals. Of course bought and sold notes unobjected to may be evidence of contract but they do not necessarily constitute the whole contract. Although they differ, Clarton v Shau supra shows that parol evidence of the contract may be given." In Jadu Rai v Bhubatarn 17 C 173, 195 Pigot J said "It may perhaps be a question looking at the case of Cowie v Ramfrey 3 M I A 448 which governs this Court whether in Calcutta bought and sold notes do not by custom presumably constitute the contract unless this be disproved once the authority of the broker is established." See also Kalli v Coramally 14 B 102. But where there is a variance between the bought and sold notes there is no contract. Greson v Ruck 4 Q B 737 (747). Where bought and sold notes have been falsified the plaintiff is entitled to fall back on his original contract. Durga Prosad v Bhajan Ali 31 C 614 (P C) = 8 C W N 489. For a fuller discussion as regards the evidentiary value of bought and sold notes Vide 8 C W N cccxxx and cccxxviii.

A contract intended to have been entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant, was entered by a mistake on the part of the broker, in the sold notes having been made between a third person and the defendant. In a suit brought by the plaintiff on the contract, oral evidence was given to show that the contract was really made between the plaintiff and the defendant. The Judge of the Small Cause Court found that the mistake did not mislead the defendant, and

S 91. gave judgment in favour of the plaintiff contingent on the opinion of the High Court as to whether the mistake in the sold note was a bar to the plaintiff's suit for damages on the contract. Held that there was a contract between the parties for breach of which the plaintiff could sue for damages. Mahomed Bhooy v Chatterjee 20 C 851. In the Sham v Shole Moolna Chetty 1 C W N 13=27C 493 (P C) a contract was made through a broker for the purchase of a quantity of paddy at a settled price. The bought and sold notes were in English. The sold note was signed by the Respondent and taken with the bought note to the Appellant the Sham Shole who before signing wrote thereon in Chinese 'yellow rice will not be accepted will not accept if wet'. The respondent did not know Chinese and did not notice the addition until after dispute. The paddy supplied contained a considerable quantity of yellow rice. The appellant took delivery of part but refused the rest. The respondent sued for breach of contract and damages. Held that the contract was not concluded until the bought and sold notes had been signed. They were the only evidence of the contract. If the one did not agree with the other a contract would not be proved by them and therefore the suit failed. See also Meghway v Durga 51 C 57.

Explanation II. Where a document is executed in several parts, each part is primary evidence of the document. Where a document is executed in counterpart each counterpart being executed by one or some of the parties only each counterpart is primary evidence as against the parties executing it. Section 62 Expt I. As an instance of this explanation take bills of exchange, of which there are usually executed called the 1st 2nd, and 3rd of exchange and bills of lading which are usually in duplicate, often in triplicate. Rule illustration (c) Art Ex 269.

Explanation III. The facts referred to in this section are the terms (a) of a contract (b) of grant (c) of a disposition of property. If therefore a document relates exclusively to something other than any of these facts as for instance if it be a simple receipt. Illustration (c) or if though it be the written contract etc., (See pultly v Joharam 7 W R C R 331) it relates to some other independent fact as for instance the payment of the consideration money. [Illustration (d)] the fact of payment may be proved orally as well as by writing. A receipt is thus frequently proved, notwithstanding it is also evidenced by writing. Smith v Young & Camp 439 Sayer v Glassop, 2 Ex 409. Evans v Morgan 2 C & J 453. Rambert v Cohen 4 Esp 213. A receipt is not a contract or a grant or disposition of property within the meaning of this section and it does not preclude other evidence of payment. Sardar Singh v Iqbal Narain 80 Ind Cas 57. The mere existence of an unstamped receipt which is inadmissible in evidence does not prevent other evidence being given to prove discharge by payment. Ramprosad v Nathu 68 Ind Cas 494. Where a document relied on as evidencing a prior mortgage by deposit of title deeds is held to constitute a simple mortgage by itself and being unregistered, to be inadmissible in evidence under section 49 of the Registration Act other evidence is admissible to prove the terms of the equitable mortgage and section 91 of the Evidence Act is no bar to the reception of such evidence. Ethunalai v Balakrishna 44 M 965=41 M L J 297. An occupancy tenant relinquished his holding and signed a memorandum of the relinquishment in a book kept by the landholder showing transactions between him and the tenant. The memorandum was not stamped or registered. Held that the relinquishment was not required by this section to be in writing but might be made verbally or in writing, or by action, and so might be proved abundantly even if the memorandum were inadmissible in evidence, as to which the Court expressed no opinion. Ras Singh v Vansittart A W N 1889 3. A receipt for rent is not a contract and the law does not require it to be in writing. Mohi v Madho 1 C P L R 16. The consideration for a contract is not one of its terms within the meaning of this section. Pravat Chandra v Cherao Ali 1 C L J 320=33 C 607=11 C W N 62. Where a receipt for earnest money is not admissible in evidence payment of the amount can be proved abundantly by virtue of section 91 of the Evidence Act. Chhutan v Mst Chand 18 P R 1917=28 P W R 1917, see also Sharaf Ali v Jogandar 98 P R 1916.

Existence is distinguished from terms of contracts, or of a grant or any other disposition of property. Extrinsic evidence is sometimes admissible to prove the existence as distinguished from the terms of a transaction or relationship which has been reduced into writing. Thus the existence of a partnership may be shown without producing the deed (Iderson v Clay, 1 Stork R 405), Phip Et 405. This section provides that when the terms of a contract, grant or disposition of property, have been reduced to the form of a document, no evidence shall be given in proof of the terms of such a contract, grant or disposition of property except the document itself. This however refers only to the method of proof of the terms of contract, grant or disposition of property, it does not exclude other proof of the transaction itself and thus being so, the Courts are entitled to consider the other evidence adduced in proof of the transaction. Mt Mahduman v Sayed Altaf Hussain A I R 1922 P 222. The fact of a partition having taken place may be proved by oral evidence, although the deed embodying the terms of the partition can not be proved for want of registration Bishnu Das v Ram Singh 34 P L R (Lah) 43=61 Ind Cas 399. Where the original deed of relinquishment or surrender where there has been a writing is not produced section 91 of the Evidence Act unless as in the case of documents required to be in writing only bars proof of the terms of the surrender except by secondary evidence within the meaning of section 68 but not proof of the matter itself Touler v Secretary of State 13 L W 230=61 Ind Cas 812. Where an unregistered deed of lease is rejected as being inadmissible in proof of a lease there is nothing to prevent the evidence of witnesses who speak to the existence of the relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties being admitted. A tenancy can be proved without proving the lease if there be any Aago v Tukaram, 49 Ind Cas 843. Where the plaintiff in a suit for rent showed that the suit was not based exclusively on a Kabulyat executed by the defendant, but also on the collection of rent, and the plaintiff did not produce the Kabulyat, but filed collection papers to prove that the defendant was holding at the rate claimed by the plaintiff in the year collection papers were admissible in evidence as they were not put in proof of the terms of the Kabulyat and section 91 of the evidence Act did not apply. A rayat is presumed to hold in any year at the same rent as in the preceding year Gouri Sankar v Munmat Ali, 2 Ind Cas 636. Though an unregistered deed cannot be looked at as to establish the sale of immoveable property it can be looked at as evidence of the payment of money Sambu Himmant v Nama Narnyon, 13 Bom L R 867=35 B 438. Although the terms of the partition deed can not be proved by parol evidence, still it can be proved by oral evidence that the properties claimed by the plaintiff as the joint family property are separate or joint properties Chhota Lal v Mahore 19 Bom L R 322=41 B 466=40 Ind Cas 83. It is doubtful whether the 'terms of a contract' include the date of the contract Ma Hla v Maung Shue 9 Bur L T 250. The mere fact that the parties signed the award would not constitute it a deed or partition. Every case must be decided upon its own facts and the real question is whether a document in question is a true award of arbitrators or merely a deed of partition by the parties themselves disguised in the form of an award in order to escape payment of stamp duty. Under section 91 Evidence Act the only evidence that can be tendered of the terms of a document would be the document itself, but there is nothing in that section to prevent plaintiffs from proving alundi that a partition took place between S and D though of course plaintiffs could not be entitled to give secondary evidence of the details of such partition Sukh Dial v Mani Ram 29 P R 1915=27 Ind Cas 459=20 P L R 1916.

Public documents. Public documents are in general given no exclusive authority by law as instruments of evidence. Thus an entry of marriage (Trans v Morgan 2 C & J 453 R v Wilson 3 F & T 119) or of the nationality of a ship (R v Seferg 1 R 1 C C R 264) in a public register or the certificate of the registration of a company (Agricultural Cattle Co v Fitzgerald 16 Q B 432, R v Langton 2 Q B D 296) Phip Et p 509. The fact of birth, baptism, marriage, death or burial may be proved by parol testimony, "though a narrative or memorandum of the events may have been entered in registers which the law required to be kept." The reason for the above is that

S 92 the existence or contents of these registers form no part of the fact to be proved, and the entry is no more than a collateral or subsequent memorial of the fact, which may furnish a satisfactory and convenient mode of proof, but can not exclude other evidence, though its non production may afford ground for scrutinizing such evidence with more than ordinary care Juandas v Frampt, 7 B H C R 45 p 63 Fvan v Morgan, 2 C & J 453, R v Alison, R & R 190, Lady Lamerick v Lord Lamerick, 32 L J P & M 22, Taylor Vol I 5th Ed 413

92 When the terms of any such contract, grant or other disposition of property, or any matter required by law to be reduced to the form of a document, have been proved according to the last section, no evidence of any oral agreement or statement shall be admitted, as between the parties to any such instrument or their representatives in interest, for the purpose of contradicting, varying adding to, or subtracting from, its terms

Proviso (1)—Any fact may be proved which would invalidate any document, or which would entitle any person to any decree or order relating thereto such as fraud, intimidation, illegality, want of due execution, want of capacity in any contracting party, *[*want of failure] of consideration, or mistake in fact or law

Proviso (2)—The existence of any separate oral agreement as to any matter on which a document is silent, and which is not inconsistent with its terms, may be proved In considering whether or not this proviso applies, the Court shall have regard to the degree of formality of the document

Proviso (3)—The existence of any separate oral agreement, constituting a condition precedent to the attaching of any obligation under any such contract, grant or disposition of property, may be proved

Proviso (4)—The existence of any distinct subsequent oral agreement to rescind or modify any such contract, grant or disposition of property, may be proved, except in cases in which such contract, grant or disposition of property is by law required to be in writing, or has been registered according to the law in force for the time being as to the registration of documents

Proviso (5)—Any usage or custom by which incidents not expressly mentioned in any contract are usually annexed to contracts of that description, may be proved

Provided that the annexing of such incident would not be repugnant to, or inconsistent with, the express terms of the contract

Proviso (6)—Any fact may be proved which shows in what manner the language of a document is related to existing facts

---

The words 'want of failure' were substituted for the words "want of failure" by s. 8 of the Indian Evidence Act Amendment Act, 1872 (18 of 1872)

Illustrations

S 92

(a) A policy of insurance is effected on goods "in ships from Calcutta to London." The goods are shipped in a particular ship which is lost. The fact that that particular ship was orally excepted from the policy cannot be proved.

(b) A agrees absolutely in writing to pay B Rs. 1000 on the first March, 1873. The fact that at the same time an oral agreement was made that the money should not be paid till the thirty first March cannot be proved.

(c) An estate called "the Rampore" estate is sold by a deed which contains a map of the property sold. The fact that land not included in the map had always been regarded as part of the estate and was meant to pass by the deed cannot be proved.

(d) A enters into a written contract with B to work certain mines the property of B upon certain terms. A was induced to do so by a misrepresentation of B as to their value. This fact may be proved.

(e) A institutes a suit against B for the specific performance of a contract, and also prays that the contract may be reformed as to one of its provisions as that provision was inserted in it by mistake. A may prove that such a mistake was made as would by law entitle him to have the contract reformed.

(f) A orders goods of B by a letter in which nothing is said as to the time of payment, and accepts the goods on delivery. B sues A for the price. A may show that the goods were supplied on credit for a term still unexpired.

(g) A sells B a horse and verbally warrants him sound. A gives B a paper in those words "Bought of A a horse for Rs. 500." B may prove the verbal warranty.

(h) A hires lodgings of B, and gives B a card on which is written—"Rooms Rs. 200 a month." A may prove a verbal agreement that these terms were to include partial board.

A hires lodgings of B for a year, and a regularly stamped agreement drawn up by an attorney, is made between them. It is silent on the subject of board. A may not prove that board was included in the term verbally.

(i) A applies to B for a debt due to A by sending a receipt for the money. B keeps the receipt and does not send the money. In a suit for the amount A may prove this.

(j) A and B make a contract in writing to take effect upon the happening of a certain contingency. The writing is left with B, who sues A upon it. A may show the circumstances under which it was delivered.

Principle. The principle underlying this section is the same as that underlying section 91. The process of embodying the terms of a jurat act in a single memorial may be termed the Integration of the act, i. e., its formation from scattered parts into an integral documentary unity. The practical consequence of this is that its scattered parts in their former and incoherent shape, have no longer any jurat effect: they are replaced by a single embodiment of the act. In other words, when a jurat act is embodied in a single memorial all other utterances of the parties on that topic are legally immaterial for the purpose of determining what are the terms of their act. Higmore § 2425. So there is a general rule, sometimes spoken of as the "oral evidence rule", which declares evidence, the effect of which is to vary the terms of a written instrument, or to change, cut down or alter the effect thereof, to be inadmissible. M. Kelvey's Ex § 293. The rule is based upon an assumed intention on the part of the contracting parties, evidenced by the existence of the written contract, to place themselves above the uncertainties of oral testimony, and on a disinclination of the Courts to defeat this object. When persons express their agreements in writing it is for the express purpose of getting rid of any indefiniteness, and to put their ideas in such shape that there can be no misunderstanding, which so often occurs where reliance is placed upon oral statements. Written contracts presume deliberation upon the part of the contracting parties, and it is natural that they should be treated with careful consideration by the Courts, and with a disinclination to disturb the condition of matters as embodied in them by the act of the parties. The general rule, therefore, precludes the introduction of testimony to show that the parties meant other than they have said in the

S 92 writing itself. But it sometimes happens that writings are procured to be executed by fraud, or do not contain all the agreements between the parties, having been used only to cover certain matters, while others are left to oral understanding, or there may be other circumstances which make it unjust to confine the parties strictly to writings made between them. In such cases the Courts have admitted oral testimony, not for the purpose of varying the terms of the written instrument itself but for the purpose of proving facts which affect the standing of the parties with respect to the writings. These cases are usually treated as exceptions to the general rule though not strictly such. See Kebley's Evidence § 291. The rule is ancient. Lord Bacon said "The law will not couple and mingle matters of specialty which is of the higher account, with matter of averment which is of inferior account in law" (Bacon's Maxims, Re. 23). "It would be inconceivable that matters in writing, made by advice and on consideration, and which finally import the certain truth of the agreement of the parties should be controlled by averment of the parties to be proved by the uncertain testimony of slipping memory." Countess of Rutland's Case 5 Coke, 27 b.

Scope of the section. When the terms of a contract grant or other disposition of property have been reduced to writing by the parties, it is to be considered as containing all those terms and therefore there can be between the parties and their representatives, or successors in interests, no evidence of the terms of the contract grant or other disposition of property, other than the contents of the writing. The same rule is applicable where any matter required by law to be reduced to the form of a document has been so reduced. (Iude section 91.) In Pickering v Dowson, 4 Funt 779, 786 Gibbs J. said "I hold that if a man brings me a horse and makes any representation whatever of his quality and soundness and afterwards we agree in writing for the purchase of the horse that it shortens or corrects the representations and whatever terms are not contained in the (written) contract do not bind the seller, and must be struck out of the case." So "where the whole matter passes in parol all that passes may some times be taken together as forming parcel of the contract. But if the contract be in the end reduced into writing nothing which is not found in the writing can be considered as part of the contract. Per Abbott C J. in Kain v Old 2 B. & C 627 634 see also per Parke B. in Knight v Baiber, 16 M. & W 66, section 91 supra. It is a most important rule says Lord Blackburn in Angell v Duke 12 L. J. Rep N S 326 that where there is a contract in writing it should not be added to if the written contract is intended to be the record of all the terms agreed upon between the parties. Where there is a collateral contract the written contract does not contain the whole of the terms. Wigmore § 2425. In this connection it should be observed that it is not a rule of evidence because it has nothing to do with the probative value of one fact as persuading us of the probable existence of another fact. It is a rule of substantive law because it deals with the question where and in what sources and materials are to be found the terms of a juridical act. In the next place this rule has no necessary relation to any rule of law requiring acts to be done with a particular formality such as writing. Wigmore § 2425.

The rule ruled on by the plaintiffs only applies where the parties to an agreement reduce it to writing and agree or intend that that writing shall be their agreement. Per Pollock C B. in Harris v Pickett, 4 H. & N. 1, 7. "The rule is perfectly clear" said Lord Thelwall that where there is a deed in writing, it will admit of no contract that is not part of the deed. Inham v Child 1 Bro. C. C. 92. So "when two parties enter into a contract and put it into single writing, that writing determines the terms of the bargain" Per Martin B. in Langton v Higgins, 4 H. & N. 401 403 see also Eden v Blake 13 M. & W 614 (618), Brown v Byron 3 E. & B 703.

The admissibility of oral evidence to vary the terms of a written document etc. is not governed by the English Law but by this Act and hence, in order that oral evidence may be admissible it must come under one or other of the provisions of this section. Harok Chant v Beshun Chunder 8 C. W. N. 101. The language of this section is says Mr Field "not quite free from ambiguity the words 'No evidence of any oral agreement or statement shall be admitted as between the parties to any such instrument, etc. correspond with and have clear reference to the words 'contract, grant or other disposition of property' in the beginning of the section, but their application to any matter required by law to be reduced to the form of a document is not so evident. If the matter required by law to be reduced to writing, be a deposition, for example, evidence of an oral statement appears to be admissible for the purpose of contradicting the writing in cases other than those included in the provisos that follow' Field L 7th Ed 271. But according to Ab Justice Woodroffe there is no such contradiction. Section 91 deals with three classes of documents namely (1) contract, grant, or any other disposition of property the terms of which have been reduced to the form of a document, (2) contract, grant or any other disposition of property, the terms of which are required by law to be reduced to the form of a document and (3) any other matters such as deposition of witness confessions etc., which are required by law to be reduced to the form of a document. So the reduction of an act to a writing, so as to bring it under section 91 may be made as well for an unilateral act (i.e. an act involving a single party only) as for a bilateral act (i.e. an act involving two or more parties). Section 92 unlike s 91 deals only with those matters which are either contracts, grant or other disposition of properties (i.e. bilateral acts) which have been reduced to the form of a document by the parties as well as those bilateral acts which the law requires to be reduced to the form of a contract. Therefore these acts or matters must be contracts grants or other disposition of property. So this section does not include such matters which the law requires to be reduced to the form of a document which are not contracts grants or other disposition of property. Woodroffe Ev 8th Ed 611. The deposition of a witness does not fall within this section and oral evidence is admissible to contradict the deposition so recorded. The presumption raised by section 80 is only a rebuttable one. Field L 7th Ed 271, Woodroffe Ev p 611. Section 92 is also not applicable to unilateral acts of private persons.

Parol evidence of a verbal transaction is not excluded by the fact that a writing was made concerning or relating to it, unless such writing was in fact the transaction itself, and not merely a note or memorandum of it, or portion of the transaction. Coel Cas Ev 340. In Allen v Pink, 4 M & M 140 Lord Abinger C B said. 'The general principle is quite true that if there has been a parol agreement, which is afterwards reduced by the parties into writing that writing alone must be looked to ascertain the terms of the contract, but the principle does not apply here, there was no evidence of any agreement by the plaintiff that the whole contract should be reduced into writing by the defendant, the contract is first concluded by parol and afterwards the paper is drawn up which appears to have been meant merely as a memorandum of the transaction or an informal receipt for the money, not as containing the terms of the contract itself'. This section does not prevent a party to a contract from showing by oral evidence that the consideration is different from that described in the contract. What is not allowed by the section is to contradict the terms of the document. Abdulla v Maung Ne 119 Ind Cas 739=A I R 1929 Rang 240. While ordinarily oral evidence would be excluded by a written document by virtue of section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act or any law for the time being in force, yet in a case where the Dellan Agriculturists Relief Act applies that bar ceases to operate and the Court can make enquiries, the bar of statutory prohibition no longer existing because of section 10 A of that Act. Dada v Bahnu 29 Bom L R 1419=105 Ind Cas 751=A I R 1937 Bom 637. This section merely prescribes a rule of evidence. It does not fetter the Court's power to arrive at the true meaning and effect of a transaction in the light of all the surrounding circumstances. Munna v Aaram 107 Ind Cas 638 See also Bhynath v Haji Valley, 26 Bom L R 787=45 M L J 339 (P C). In a suit on promissory note, the defendant can prove a separate oral agreement that a condition precedent to the attaching of any obligation to the contract evidenced by the promissory note was that there should not be any obligation attaching under it unless there was a final balance of account on certain transactions against the defendant which he failed to pay. Bhogi v Ashori, 50 A 751=26 A L J 696.

S 92

The terms of a registered instrument cannot be contradicted or varied by any unregistered writing, where the contract regulating the rights of the parties is in a registered document, that registered document must bind and govern those rights until varied by another registered document or by a judicial decision. Shiba Prasad v. Samarendra 11 Ind. Cas. 131. Oral evidence is not admissible to prove an agreement between mortgagor and mortgagee whereby a contract contained in the registered mortgaged bond was split up. Im Baiyan v. Smit Kumar 20 C. L. J. 21-11 C. 162-21 C. W. N. 740. Oral evidence is admissible to show that a mortgagee's possession of a certain plot was terminated by the payment of a certain amount of money. Daul Ram v. Isha Ram 17 A. L. J. 257-9 A. 300. Where a partition deed was silent as to certain paddy belonging to the family which was subsequently sought to be divided. Held that oral evidence was admissible under the provisions of section 92 cl. (2) of the Indian Evidence Act to show that in fact the paddy had not been divided by the partition deed. Dhavasami Reddiar v. Raya Gopala, 1 L. W. 329-34 Ind. Cas. 712. The law in India generally is a codified law, and so far as the adjective law is concerned the courts are executive, not only as to the rules to be followed but also as to the extent of the discretion vested in the Courts. There is little analogy between the status of this codified law and the position occupied by the common law of England, and Courts of India are not justified in relaxing or evading the statute law in the same way as Courts of Equity in England deal with the rules of common law. The effect of section 92 is to exclude evidence of every kind adduced to prove an oral agreement of which proof is forbidden by the section including the circumstantial evidence derived from the acts and conduct of the parties to the instrument in question whereas oral evidence of mortgage is put forward whether it be to wholly supplant or merely to supplement the terms of a written sale, clearly there is contradiction of or an addition to the written evidence of the transaction, and that is sufficient to bring s 92 into operation. The word contradict in this section must be given its ordinary meaning and therefore the distinction drawn by Messrs. Imur Ali and Hoodroffe viz. that we cannot vary add to or subtract from the written evidence of the terms of a transaction but we may wholly contradict it by proof of an entirely different contemporaneous oral agreement is not sound. Gujarmal v. Sitaram 3 N. L. R. 19.

Integration of bilateral documents. The mere circumstance that some writing has been made by parties for the better recollection of the terms of their transaction does not itself make that writing the sole memorial of the transaction even to the extent covered by the writing. There may have been no integration at all in spite of the written notes & no attempt to make the writing embody the transaction or any part of it but merely to furnish an aid to the writer's recollection or a written admission for the other party's satisfaction. The essential idea remains for it that the writing is something distinct from the transaction itself. Hignore § 2429. Dalison v. Styal 4 Esp. 163, Hansbottom v. Timbridge 2 M. & S. 434. Doe v. Cartwright 3 B. & Ald. 526. Allen v. Pinf 4 M. & W. 140, R v. Hangle 2 A. & E. 514. When the parties during their negotiations reach a final agreement but provide therein that the terms shall be reduced to a single memorial, the failure to execute such an agreed memorial does not preclude resort to the prior negotiations to ascertain and enforce their terms for the subsequent reduction to a memorial was a separable condition and leaves the prior agreement valid until supplanted. Hignore § 2429. So a writing which is merely a memorandum referring to an oral agreement between the parties does not preclude the parties from showing the full contract as orally agreed upon. If the document is merely a memorandum and it does not appear that it was intended to contain all the terms of the agreement between the parties, parol evidence as to the agreement is admissible. The fact that a written existence does not shut out oral testimony unless it appears that the writing was intended to embody the terms of the agreement and speak for the parties. McKehey's Est § 297.

Partial integration, General test for applying the Rule, Collateral agreement. The most usual controversy arises in case of partial integration,

i. e., where a certain part of a transaction has been embodied in a single writing but another part has been left in some other form. Here obviously the rule against disputing the terms of the document will be applicable to so much of the transaction as is so embodied but not to the remainder. It is of course incorrect to a time that what was not so embodied was in truth a part of the same transaction; it may have been a totally distinct transaction merely coinciding in time. For example a banker at an interview with a promoter, who comes from a distant city and compresses all their affairs into a short interview may within the same half hour in articles of incorporation authorize an overdraft, sign a mortgage and join in a committee's report to stockholders. Or a purchaser of land negotiating with a broker may at the same sitting accept a deed of grant of one piece of land and appoint the broker his agent to sell another piece. In such instances the transactions are so clearly distinct that each one if integrated will certainly be embodied in writing, wholly distinct from the others and regardless of whether the others are reduced to writing at all, and no controversy can plausibly arise. But in those instances in which a negotiation concerns one general subject—such is the purchase of a single lot of land having buildings on it—and yet several more or less separable features of bargain, the valuation between the writing and the whole bargain is usually difficult to ascertain and forms a perpetually recurring controversy. To say that the question, whether the parties intended to embody 'the whole of the transaction' or only a part is therefore hardly correct because by hypothesis that the writing does represent the whole what is finally done on the subject covered by it and because to assume that the subject not covered was a 'part' of the transaction covered would be inconsistent and would involve holding that the writing, which embodies the transaction does not embody that part of it. More correctly, the enquiry is whether the writing was intended to cover a certain subject of negotiation, for if it was not, then the writing does not embody the transaction on that subject and one of the circumstances of decision will be whether the one subject is so associated with the others that they are in effect 'parts' of the same transaction and therefore if reduced to writing at all they must be governed by the same writing. In searching for a general test for this enquiry three propositions at least are capable of being generally laid down: (1) whether a particular subject of negotiation is embodied by the writing depends wholly upon the intent of the parties thereto. In this respect the contrast is between voluntary integration and integration by law. Here the parties are not obliged to embody their transaction in a single document yet they may if they choose. Hence it becomes merely a question whether they have intended to do so. (2) This intent must be sought where always intent must be sought namely, in the conduct and language of the parties and the surrounding circumstances. The document alone will not suffice. What it was intended to cover cannot be known till we know what there was to cover. The question being whether certain subjects of negotiation were intended to be covered we must compare the writing and the negotiations before we can determine whether they were in fact covered. (3) In deciding upon this intent the chief and most satisfactory index for the Judge is found in the circumstance whether or not the particular element of the alleged extrinsic negotiation is dealt with at all in writing. If it is mentioned covered or dealt with in the writing, then presumably the writing was meant to represent all of the transactions on that element, if it is not then probably the writing was not intended to embody that element of the negotiation. Higmore § 136. In Webb v. Plummer, 2 B. & Ald. 716, 750, Batby J said: "where there is a written agreement between the parties it is naturally to be expected that it will contain all the terms of their bargain. But if it is entirely silent as to the terms of quitting, it may let in the custom of the country as to that particular. If however, it specifies any of those terms, we must then go by the letter alone." Dulson v. Zimna 10 C. B. 602, 610. Where the writing covers only part of the transactions between the parties and there are oral agreements relating to the same subject, such agreements may be shown. If it appears that the parties did not intend the writing to embody all the transactions between them, the rule is that such transactions

S 92

The terms of a registered instrument cannot be contradicted or varied by any unregistered writing when the contract regulating the rights of the parties is in a registered document that registered document must bind and govern those rights until varied by another registered document or by a judicial decision. Shiba Prasad v Samarendra 11 Ind Cas 131. Oral evidence is not admissible to prove an agreement between mortgagor and mortgagee whereby a contract contained in the registered mortgaged bond was split up. Ram Baiyan v Sant Kumar 25 C L J 24 11 C 162=21 C W N 710. Oral evidence is admissible to show that a mortgagee's possession of a certain plot was terminated by the payment of a certain amount of money. Laid Ram v Pita Ram 15 A L J 257-59 A 300. Where a partition deed was silent as to certain paddy belonging to the family which was subsequently sold to be divided. Held that oral evidence was admissible under the provisions of section 92 cl (2) of the Indian Evidence Act to show that in fact the paddy had not been divided by the partition deed. Dhansami Jadhav v Raja Gopala, 4 L W 329-31 Ind Cas 712. The law in India generally is a codified law, and so far as the objective law is concerned the codes are exhaustive, not only as to the rules to be followed but also as to the extent of the direction vested in the Courts. There is little material between the status of this codified law and the position occupied by the common law of England and Courts of India are not justified in relying on or avoiding the statute law in the same way as Courts of Equity in England deal with the rules of common law. The effect of section 92 is to exclude evidence of every kind adduced to prove an oral agreement of which proof is forbidden by the section including the circumstantial evidence derived from the acts and conduct of the parties to the instrument in question whereas oral evidence of mortgage is put forward whether it be to wholly supplant or merely to supplement the terms of a written sale, clearly there is a contradiction of or in addition to the written evidence of the transaction, and that is sufficient to bring s 92 into operation. The word 'contradict' in this section must be given its ordinary meaning and therefore the distinction drawn by Messrs Amir Ali and Woodroffe, et al, that we cannot vary, add to or subtract from the written evidence of the terms of a transaction but we may wholly contradict it by proof of an entirely different contemporaneous oral agreement is not sound. Gujarmal v Sitaram 3 N L R 10.

Integration of bilateral documents. The mere circumstance that some writing has been made by parties for the better recollection of the terms of their transaction does not itself make that writing the sole memorial of the transaction even to the extent covered by the writing. There may have been no integration at all in spite of the written notes i.e. no attempt to make the writing embody the transaction or any part of it but merely to furnish an aid to the writer's recollection or a written admission for the other party's satisfaction. The essential element remains for it that the writing is something distinct from the transaction itself. Hignore § 2429. Dalison v Stool, 1 Esp 163. Lambottom v Timbridge 2 M & S 434, Doe v Cartwright 3 B & Ald 326. Allen v Paul 4 M & W 140. R v Wangle, 2 A & E 514. When the parties during their negotiations reach a final agreement but provide therein that the terms shall be reduced to a single memorial, the failure to execute such a agreed memorial does not preclude resort to the prior negotiations to a certain and enforce their terms for the subsequent reduction to a memorial was a separable condition and leaves the prior agreement valid until supplanted. Hignore § 2429. So a writing which is merely a memorandum referring to an oral agreement between the parties does not preclude the parties from showing the full contract as orally agreed upon. If the document is merely a memorandum and it does not appear that it was intended to contain all the terms of the agreement between the parties, oral evidence as to the agreement is admissible. The fact that a writing exists does not shut out oral testimony unless it appears that the writing was intended to embody the terms of the agreement and speak for the parties. McKelvey v Li § 297.

Partial integration. General test for applying the Rule, Collateral agreement. The most usual controversy arises in cases of partial integration, where a certain part of a transaction has been embodied in a single writing but another part has been left in some other form. Here obviously the rule against disputing the terms of the document will be applicable to so much of the transaction as is so embodied but not to the remainder. It is of course incorrect to assume that what was not so embodied was in truth a part of the same transaction; it may have been a totally distinct transaction, merely coinciding in time. For example, a banker at an interview with a promoter, who comes from a distant city and compresses all their affair into a short interview and within the same half hour signs articles of incorporation, authorize an overdraft, a sign a mortgage and join in a committee's report to stockholders. Or a purchaser of land negotiating with a broker may at the same sitting accept a deed of grant of one piece of land and appoint the broker his agent to sell another piece. In such instances the transactions are so clearly distinct that each one, if integrated will certainly be embodied in writing, wholly distinct from the others and regardless of whether the others are reduced to writing at all, and no controversy can plausibly arise. But in those instances in which a negotiation concerns one general subject—such as the purchase of a single lot of land having buildings on it—and yet several more or less separable features of bargain, the valuation between the writing and the whole bargain is usually difficult to ascertain, and forms a perpetually recurring controversy. To say that the question is whether the parties intended to embody 'the whole of the transaction' or only a part is therefore hardly correct, because by hypothesis that the writing does represent the whole what was finally done on the subject covered by it, and because to assume that the subject not covered was a 'part' of the transaction covered would be inconsistent and would involve holding that the writing, which embodies the transaction does not embody that part of it. More correctly the enquiry is whether the writing was intended to cover a certain subject of negotiation for if it was not, then the writing does not embody the transaction on that subject and one of the circumstances of decision will be whether the one subject is so associated with the others that they are in effect 'parts' of the same transaction and therefore if reduced to writing at all they must be governed by the same writing. In searching for a general test for this enquiry, three propositions at least are capable of being generally laid down: (1) whether a particular subject of negotiation is embodied in the writing depends wholly upon the intent of the parties thereto. In this respect the contrast is between voluntary integration and integration by law. Here the parties are not obliged to embody their transaction in a single document, yet they may if they choose. Hence it becomes merely a question whether they have intended to do so. (2) This intent must be sought where always intent must be sought namely, in the conduct and language of the parties and the surrounding circumstances. The document alone will not suffice. What it was intended to cover cannot be known till we know what there was to cover. The question being whether certain subjects of negotiation were intended to be covered we must compare the writing and the negotiations before we can determine whether they were in fact covered. (3) In deciding upon this intent the chief and most satisfactory index for the Judge is found in the circumstance whether or not the particular element of the alleged extrinsic negotiation is dealt with at all in writing. If it is mentioned covered or dealt with in the writing, then presumably the writing was meant to represent all of the transactions on that element; if it is not then probably the writing was not intended to embody that element of the negotiation. Wigmore § 2130. In Webb v. Plummer, 2 B. & Ald. 716, 750 Balby J. said 'where there is a written agreement between the parties, it is naturally to be expected that it will contain all the terms of their bargain. But if it is entirely silent as to the terms of quitting, it may let in the custom of the country as to that particular.' If however, it specifies any of those terms, we must then go by the letter alone. Dulson v. Linnam 10 C. B. 602, 610. Where the writing covers only part of the transactions between the parties and there are oral agreements relating to the same subject such agreements may be shown. If it appears that the parties did not intend the writing to embody all the transactions between them, the rule is that such transactions are

S. 92

do not purport to be covered by the document but which supplement or complete it may be proved. Here again, there is no varying of the terms of a written instrument. It is only because it has been sought to stretch the rule to cover cases that it never was intended to cover that we have this apparent exception to it. Any oral agreement relating to the document itself and made subsequent to it may be shown. Such an agreement as only modifying or extending or in some way affecting the written agreement is thus admissible. Coe v Hobbs 72 N Y 111 Kennebec v Bonding Co 6 Gray (Mass) 204, Cross v Lord Nugent 5 Burr & Adol 67 Levy v Ashleigh, 73 Law L Ch 122. There are some peculiarities in the application of this principle. They arise out of other rules of law not connected with evidence, which prevent the introduction of that which so far as the rules of evidence go, would be admissible. Thus it is held though the authorities are conflicting that where a contract is such as the statute of frauds requires to be in writing no collateral oral agreement will be allowed to be shown. Hill v Blane 97 N Y 216. It is also held that the collateral oral agreement must have an independent consideration in order to be admissible. Coe v Hobbs 72 N Y 111. As a principle of the law of contracts it would seem that no collateral agreement would be of any effect in modifying the original unless there was a consideration to support it and the old decisions are therefore strictly logical. Mc Kewen's Et § 296.

Parol evidence rule—Nature of. Notwithstanding the phraseology generally employed in the cases relating to what is called the 'Parol Evidence rule' it seems to be true that very few of them illustrate anything in the law of evidence. They are mainly concerned with questions about the legal effect and implications, in point of substantive law of requiring or agreeing upon a writing or with the principles governing the construction of documents or the like, and not with the merely evidential quality or operation of extrinsic facts, or any rule of law relating to these. As when it is said that parol evidence is not admissible to add to a Will a form of saying that you cannot give effect to anything as being part of a Will, which has the required form of a Will. The reason that the evidence is not admissible is that the fact which it tends to prove is of no importance. Whenever the substantive law does give effect to such a fact as in the case of fraud, then of course it may be proved. But the rules of evidence are in no respect different in two cases—the difference is that a ground of action or defence is open in one case which is not open in the other. Thayer Cas Et 2nd Ed 820.

As between the parties to such instruments. The parties to the suit were not the parties to the note and contract. The rule which excludes parol testimony for the purpose of varying or contradicting a written contract, is combined to the parties to the contract, or other privies and does not prevent strangers thereto from introducing such evidence. 1 Grant Ec § 279 Mo Master v Ins Co of North America, 55 N Y 222 Elderly v Emerson 23 N Y 555, Badger v Jones, 12 Pick 371. The plaintiff was not a party to the note and contract between Wilson and the defendant and was therefore not bound by it. If it speaks falsely, or fails to speak the whole truth he is not to blame, and can show the truth even by the testimony of one of the parties who is legally bound by its terms. We think that the evidence was properly admitted. Per Gardner J in Kellogg v Thompson 142 Mass 76. So the rule under consideration is applied only in suits between the parties to instrument as they alone are to blame if the writing contains what was not intended, or omits that which it should have contained. It cannot affect third persons, who if it were otherwise might be prejudiced by things recited in the writings, contrary to the truth through the ignorance carelessness, or fraud of parties and who therefore ought not to be precluded from proving the truth however contradictory to the written statements of others. Grant Ec § 279 Holt v Collyer L R 16 Ch D 718, Chemical E L Co v Howard 150 Mass 496 Taylor § 1149 R v Cheadle 3 B & Ald 833. The exception in favour of strangers is to present a fraudulent operation of the instrument upon their rights. Taylor v Baldwin, 10 Borch 582. There are many cases which hold that in a controversy between a party to an instrument and a stranger to it, either party may show that the instrument does not speak the truth, and that the general rule does not apply as it does in cases where the controversy arises between the parties to an instrument which they have made the written memorial of their agreement. Venable v Thompson, 11 Ala 147, Panell v Young 51 Ala 518. Burr Jones § 149. It is to be observed however that the right of a stranger to vary a written contract by parol is limited to rights which are independent of the instrument. Woodcock v Robinson, 148 Pa 503. Broune Parol Et § 28. Burr Jones § 450. So that where one, although not a party to the instrument, bases his claim upon it and seeks to render it effective in his favour as against the other party to the action by enforcing a right originating in the relation established by it, or which is founded upon it, the parol evidence rule applies. Schultz v Plantation 141 Ill 116. Sayre v Bundick 17 Minn 367. The language of the section in term applies and applies alone as between the parties or their representatives in interest. Accordingly whatever evidence is tendered as to a transaction with a third party, it is not governed by the section or by the rule of evidence which it contains and in such a case accordingly the ordinary rules of equity and good conscience come into play unhampered by the statutory restrictions. Per Lord Shun in Maung Kyin v Ma Shue La 22 C W N 257 (262)=45 C 320, Malayu v Ko Po Nyein 114 Ind Cas 676=A I R 1929 R 86, Annada v Hingobind 27 C W N 496. Ganga v Pandoo 4 N L R 115. See also Jagat Mohun v Ralhal, 2 C L J 338. Bageshri v Panchoo 28 A 473=3 A L J 314. Chhullo v Jugga Singh, 8 Ind Cas 501. This section excludes evidence of any oral agreement for the purpose of contradicting varying adding to or subtracting from the terms of a contract which have been reduced to the form of a document 'as between the parties to any such instrument or their representatives in interest'. In the case of 10 A 421 the words quoted above were construed as meaning 'between the parties to the instrument on both sides and not on one side only as between themselves'. Possibly this was what was intended in enacting section 92, but it may be observed that what the section itself says is not the parties to the instrument which prima facie would seem to include every one concerned. Polai Gungayah v Kmail U B R (1892-1896) Vol II 351. Mut Chaud v Vidho 10 A 421. See also Tara Monee v Shubnath 6 W R 191, Kenmora v Simnasa 11 M 213. This section is applicable to an instrument 'as between the parties to any such instrument or their representatives in interest' but it does not prevent the proof of a fraudulent dealing with a third person's property or proof of notice that the property purporting to be absolutely conveyed in fact belonged to a third person who was not a party to the conveyance. Maung Kyin v Ma Shue La (1911) 2 M W N 30=14 C L J 276 (P C)=13 Bom L R 797=1 A L J 1184.

Section 92 limits its operation to cases where the issue as to the real nature of the written transaction arises between the parties thereto or their privies. It leaves out cases of strangers to the instrument wishing to adduce extrinsic evidence in order to prove that the real transaction was different from what it purports to be. Sabooji v Nankal Singh, 104 Ind Cas 736. Mahomed Sultan Mohideen v Buttil 101 Ind Cas 653=52 M L J 557, Ma Ma v Maung Aung 111 Ind Cas 832=A I R 1928 Rang 214. Mahomed Ishag v Fakhemunnessa, A I R 1928 Oudh 472=5 O W N 925, Maung Thein v Maung Pyn 5 Rang 836=108 Ind Cas 734=A I R 1928 Rang 61. Aurra v Koganti (1925) M W N 244=97 Ind Cas 216=A I R 1925 Mad 775=49 M L J 250. Hnaji v Ishum, 1923 Bom 129. Bhullan v Khushi, 21 A L J 932. Jairam v Jaguaram 20 A L J 777, Sulimraji v Kalipada 45 Ind Cas 13. If a father is one of the joint owners sells, as representing all the other members joint with him, those other members must be treated as parties to the document. The other members of the joint family cannot dispute the transaction effected by the manager of the family on the ground that the transaction was really a different one from what it appears to be on the face of the document. Pamachandri v Kishunath, 27 Bom I R 211=87 Ind Cas 801=A I R 1925 Bom 238. This section applies to all parties to a document whether on the one side or the other. It is not open to parties to a document on the same side to prove as against each other, that a document to which they are parties, though purporting to be a sale is in reality a mortgage.

S. 92. Young Fun v Young Po, 77 Ind Cas 923, see also Mulchand v Malho Ram, 10 A 121 Shamshul v Ahmed Wali 2 A 337, Young Fun v Young Po, 1 Bur L J 160 Kayb v Zungar 51 Ind Cas 902, Bishnu v Datto 21 O C 16 = 17 Ind Cas 191 Dehya v Mahan 13 Ind Cas 667 126 P L R 1912 = 67 P R 1912 Where the transaction is truly bonam fide where the purchaser has been affected in the name of the nominal purchaser, the contract would be between the nominal purchaser and the vendor, and in case of dispute between the nominal and the real purchaser there being no writing between them, no difficulty can arise under this section in proving oral agreement Larmbur Keshar 14 Bom L R 144 = 33 Ind Cas 394, see also Pathammal v Syed Kalam 27 M 329

Where a party to a written contract in title to a criminal proceeding against another party to such contract which involves consideration and determination of what the contract between the parties was no evidence of any oral agreement or statement is admissible in such proceeding for the purpose of contradicting or varying, adding to or subtracting from the terms of the written contract, unless such oral evidence is admissible under one or more of the provisions to section 9 of the Evidence Act. Hutchill J Section 92 of the Evidence Act should not be held to apply to criminal proceedings in that the real prosecutor in all such proceedings is the King Emperor who is the head of the State. To hold otherwise would lead to inequalities and injustice. Trouney J where there is a private prosecutor he also must be regarded as a party for the purpose of the section. Reid v So Hwang 8 Ind Cas 932 = 11 Cr L J 738 = 3 Bur L J 124

Terms of any contract, grant or disposition of property It is settled law that the statement of the consideration for a transfer of property is not one of the terms of the grant within the meaning of section 92 of the Evidence Act when the instrument is executed by the transferor only. Challanatala v Dina bhaitum (1912) 1 M W N 164 This section is not confined to disposition instruments but applies to decrees also and to oral agreements between a decree holder and a judgment debtor. Rajah of Kalahasti v Venu Venkatadri, 50 M 607 = (1927) 1 M W N 640 = 105 Ind Cas 248 = A I R 1927 Mad 911 = 3 M I J 33, Lachin Das v Ramnath 61 Ind Cas 990 44 A 258 = 20 A L J 65 but see Ananda Prinja v Bijoy Krishna, 91 Ind Cas 70 = A I R 1926 Cal 613 Where a party executed an agreement to work land on lease and in subsequent suit for rent pleaded that the agreement had been executed in pursuance of a bonam fide transfer to protect the land for creditors. Held that oral evidence was admissible to show that there was no grant or disposition at all in law. Abdul v Bhanu, 3 Bur L J 2 = 93 Ind Cas 512 = A I R 1926 Rang 94 Oral evidence is not admissible to vary the terms of registered mortgaged deed. Jellmull v Saroon 58 Ind Cas 30 An instrument varying the absolute terms of a sale deed can not be allowed to affect the sale deed unless it is registered and no oral evidence can be allowed to vary the terms of the deed of sale. Pandur v Ganesh Das 1 C P L R 81 Ordinarily a solemn and formal deed can not be set aside by parol evidence directly contradicting its terms except in special cases where fraud mistake suspicion and other grante similar to Courts of Equity are alleged. Hessels Frashme & Co v Ollooy Clunder W R (1804) 5, James Fischer v Robert Fischer, 6 M H C 593 Kailash v Palnappa L B L (1872-1892) 588 Umedmal v Dam 2 B 517 Shaulh Mahomed v Kaku Prosad 21 W R 320 Khyroollah v Mayeed 11 W R 307 Madh v Chandru v Gangadhar 3 B L R A C 83 = 11 W R 450 Cohen v Bail of Bengal 2 A 593 Mussamut Ram v Baboo Bihari, 8 W R 339 Where a reversionary lease was granted on the 14th July 1895 to take effect from a future date viz. 1911 and the lease as well as the counterpart were duly registered and during the negotiation for the lease it was agreed between the lessor and the lessee that in consideration of the lease the latter should pay the former Rs. 500 annually for a period which was to expire before the lease takes effect. Held that the terms of the agreement is in no way inconsistent with the effect of the lease and as such it was not affected by s. 92 of the Indian Evidence Act. Sulramani v Truna Chalan, 25 M 603 (P C) = 29 I A 131 But where an agreement alleged by a party is actually contrary to a deed of gift, it is barred.

under this section Safalur v Albar, 5 Ind Cas 497, see also Kishomal v Vishandas, 9 Ind Cas 299, see also Conay v Banaji, 12 B 335. Oral evidence is not admissible to prove that a document which in terms is in out and out gift was really meant to be donatio mortis causa. Benode Kishore v Ashutosh, 16 C W N 666. No oral agreement is admissible under section 92 of the Evidence Act for the purpose of altering the rent fixed by a registered lease. Bushambar v Lalhatullah, 2 Ind Cas 160.

Any matter required by law to be reduced to the form of a document. Evidence of oral agreement can not be given for the purpose of subtracting from the terms of a contract reduced to the form of a document. Lachman Singh v Mahan Patel, 4 C P L R 151. Under no circumstances is evidence admissible to prove the existence of a distinct subsequent oral agreement to rescind or modify the decree of Civil Court. Section 92 of the Evidence Act forbids the reception of such evidence whether the decree be treated as a document embodying the terms of a disposition of property or not. Karan Singh v Hanthail, 6 N L R 123=8 Ind Cas 279. A registered instrument of mortgage takes effect against any oral agreement relating to the hypothecated property and no oral agreement which purports to modify terms of the contract of mortgage by reducing the amount recoverable thereunder by giving away the right of sale, and by providing for the payment of the reduced debt by a sale of other property, can be proved, in view of the provisions of section 92 of the Act. Maharaj Singh v Hajah Balwant Singh, 3 A I J 271=11 A W N 1906 117=28 A 503. Where a mortgage decree was sold free from incumbrance and a portion of the purchased money was left in deposit with the purchaser the latter giving a receipt embodying the real contract between the parties with regard to the deposit held evidence could not be offered of a separate agreement empowering the purchaser to pay off an attaching creditor of the decree. But evidence might be let in, to prove the object for which the deposit was made to explain the meaning of a sentence in the receipt. Ahelsulas v Shib Narain, 9 C W N 178. Oral evidence is not admissible between the parties to a deed which purports to be a mortgage or their representative in interest to prove that it was intended to be a sale. Zafaruddin v Alamuddin, 11 O C 95. Where parties enter into a sale deed, it is not competent to them to prove a contemporaneous oral agreement to reconvey the property sold on payment of the sum advanced, in the absence of fraud misrepresentation or failure of consideration, etc rendering the sale invalid. Sangra v Ramappa, 11 Bom L R 1130=34 B 59=4 Ind Cas 257. This section applies only to cases where the whole of the terms of the contract have been intended to be reduced into writing. This is shown by the words adding to which appear in that section. If it were not for those words the Court should have been inclined to hold that section 92 only excluded evidence contradicting, varying, adding to or subtracting from such of the terms of a contract as has been reduced into writing. If the parties have intended to reduce all the terms of a contract into writing then no oral evidence is admissible but if they intended only to reduce into writing a portion of the terms of the contract they are entitled to give oral evidence of the terms which they did not intend to reduce into writing. Junna Dass v Srinath Roy, 17 C 173. Note 1 for the purpose of showing that a document does not and was not intended, to contain the whole of the contract between the parties, oral evidence may be given. When evidence so given conclusively establishes that the whole contract is contained in the document or documents no evidence will be admitted to contradict, vary, add to or subtract from its terms. That being so to ascertain the intention of the parties all the Court has to do is to construe the written document or documents. Cohen v Sutherland, 17 C 909, Bharee Lal v Kamree, 14 W R 309. Notwithstanding a paper writing which purports to be a contract may be produced it is still competent to the Court to find upon sufficient evidence that the writing is not really the contract. And the right of groundless defence does not affect the rule itself. Ruthna Mudaliyar v Arumuga, 7 M H C R 189. Broker's notes, as a memorandum may satisfy the Statute of Writings, but not exclude oral evidence. Bought and sold note unobjectioned to may be evidence of the contract but they do not necessarily constitute the whole contract.

S. 92

Jumadar v. Srinath Roy 17 C 173 N, see also Clifton Shaw, 9 D L R 24 = 18 W R 114. The parties in a deed of usufructuary mortgage did not intend that any account should be taken at the time of redemption. They arbitrarily found the income of the property and settled the amount to be paid therefor on account of Government demands and interests on the security. The remainder which was a fixed sum was to be annually paid to the mortgagor as surplus profit. The mortgages collected from the tenants sums which were realisable under a subsequent statute only by the proprietor mortgagor. The mortgages alleged that, by a subsequent agreement between the parties, the mortgagor was placed in possession of a part of the mortgage premises the income whereof was sufficient to wipe out the annual debt. Held that as the arrangement was not in supersession or even variation of the mortgage, oral evidence was admissible to prove the transaction. Jumadar v. Fala Prasad 11 C 1 J 207. The liability undertaken by the drawer and the acceptor of a bill of exchange is in no sense a joint liability, but they contract severally in different ways and are subject to different conditions. Neither the provisions of section 132 of the Contract Act nor those of section 92 of the Evidence Act preclude the acceptor of a bill from proving that he never received any consideration for the bill but that he accepted it only for negotiating the drawer or some other party. Poyore v. The Bank of Bengal 3 C 171.

Extrinsic evidence to control document is inadmissible. Evidence of oral agreement between the parties to a written and registered document distinctly adding to its terms another term which had been antecedently agreed to as one of the substantive parts of the whole contract witnessed by that instrument, is inadmissible under section 92 of the Evidence Act. Shankar v. Dams Begum A W N 1886, 10. The rule is that evidence of contemporaneous oral agreement to vary or to contradict a written instrument cannot be admitted. Lal Bahar v. Amir Khan 14 P R 1889. No evidence of any oral agreement is, under this section, admissible to vary the terms of a Kolali which is on the face of it an unconditional sale. Ramdoolal v. Radha Adu 22 W R 167. When the plaintiffs brought a suit to recover damages for breach of contract, the defendants sought to show that the written contract was varied by adducing parol evidence as to the matter on which the document was silent. Held that such evidence was not admissible under section 92 of the Evidence Act. Jadu Rai v. Bhubotaran 17 C 173. The executants of bond as principals are not competent to adduce oral evidence of their being mere sureties. Agar Saing v. Nga Lu Aung U B R 1906, Evidence 13. When the terms of a bond are clear and unambiguous, parol evidence is not admissible to show that it was an assignment of future rent. Ishidoy v. Ioyam, 4 C L J 102. The oral evidence of intention is not inadmissible for the purpose of construing a deed or a certifying the intention of the parties. Balshen v. Legge 2 Bom I R 523 = 22 A 149 = 4 C W N 153. Oral evidence to show that one of the executants of a bond signed it only as a surety was not admissible. Mamun Ro v. U Keyaw 5 Rang 168 = 103 Ind Cis = A I R 1927 Rang 199. Where a gift of the remainder which was invalid under the Mahomedan Law was sought to be validated by evidence as to the consent of the donee of the life estate to such an arrangement. Held that such oral evidence was clearly inadmissible. Nabooma v. Khedra Hussain, 1 L F 40 M 68 = 103 Ind C 637 = A I R 1928 Mad 613. Contemporaneous oral agreement not to charge compound interest though bond may stipulate therefor and the fact of simple interest only being relied as a fact cannot entitle a party to vary effect of written contract. Abdul Aziz v. Amanmul A I R 192, CIL 276. Evidence of conduct of parties is inadmissible to contradict an unambiguous grant. Gopal v. Ramadhar Singh, A I R 1925 Pat 228 see also Kesho v. Thakur A I R 1925 Lah 180. A relinquishment of leasehold rights conferred on a person under a registered instrument can only be effected by another registered deed and oral evidence of a surrender or agreement to relinquish is barred by this section. Narbadh v. Gopal, 87 Ind C 29 = A I R 192, Nag 459. An oral agreement by which the vendee was to return a portion of the consideration till he got possession of the entire property is inconsistent with the terms of the registered sale deed and consequently under s 92 of the Evidence Act it cannot be proved Mittlesum v Iyer v Dharmaraja, 94 Ind Cis 302=(1926) M W N 209=A I R 1926 Mad 495. An oral agreement to relinquish the interest on the mortgage money is inadmissible in evidence under section 92 of the Evidence Act Jauala Prasad v Mohan Lal, 24 A L J 839=97 Ind Cis 162=A I R 1926 All 693. Where the consideration for a sale is entered in the sale deed at a certain figure, an oral agreement between the parties raising the consideration amount and leaving the sum with the vendee for litigation purposes is inadmissible in evidence under section 92 Kallu Mal v Partab Singh 92 Ind Cis 787=A I R 1926 Oudh 301. In a suit on the basis of a registered mortgage deed it is not open to the executants to set up and prove an agreement that the rate of interest to be charged was lower than that agreed upon Sukh Lal v Muwari, 95 Ind Cis 1019=A I R 1926 Oudh 273. Evidence of subsequent oral agreement not to charge compound interest is inadmissible to vary the original contract which is a registered one Jogendra Nath v Khoda Bux, 1924 CIL 350 Abdul Aziz v Amanmal, 78 Ind Cis 742=1925 Cal 276. An entry in certain account books evidenced a contract to sell goods and they were described as arriving by a certain ship. Held that oral evidence cannot be let in to show that there was an agreement to deliver goods within a fixed time Firm of Jucanjo v Firm of Mathabai, A I R 1924 Sind 127.

In a suit on a joint and several promissory note payable on demand executed by A and B. A can give oral evidence to prove that he joined in the loan only as security for B. But he can not give oral evidence to prove contemporaneous oral agreement with plaintiffs, whereby plaintiffs agreed to recover the amount under the note in the first instance from B. Central Bank of India v Nadi Shah A I R Sind 13. Where a person has executed a bond as the principal debtor he cannot adduce oral evidence to prove that he was merely a guarantor Maung Kya v Pesia Kurpan, 1 Bur, L J 157=70 Ind Cis 872=1923 Rang 15 (2). If a document is formally drawn up, it would not be open to the parties to adduce in proof a contemporaneous oral agreement Moti Biswas v Hari pada Pal, 1923 CIL 402=70 Ind Cis 790 Tukaram v Jogannath 1923 Bom 236. Evidence to show that the price for a sale of property is less than the amount recited in the sale deed is inadmissible Lala Singh v Basdo 71 Ind Cis 768=1923 A 129. Where the plaintiff contended that the two documents which formed the foundation of the suit formed a completed contract, whilst the defendant vendor urged that it was only a provisional arrangement conditional to the preparation by a rival of a formal document evidencing the contract held oral evidence to show what actually took place on the occasion when the parties entered into the agreement relied upon by the plaintiff is irrelevant and inadmissible Hanchand v Gound 41 M L J 603=47 B 335=28 C W N 73=50 I A 25=37 C L J 440=(1923) P C 47. Where the terms of an agreement to sell land are clear and formal and a certain sum of money was to be paid in four months evidence of an oral agreement cannot be let in to prove that a big portion of the money was to be paid on the day subsequent to the arrangement to sell Khemchand v Dharonal, 15 S L R 180=67 Ind Cis 19. Evidence of an oral agreement substituting a new executory contract in lieu of a decree is inadmissible Lachun Das v Babalali, 44 A 238=20 A L J 65=69 Ind Cis 990. It is not permissible to a person who wishes to impeach a written document of sale to assume there must have been an oral agreement to reconvey and to ask the Court to believe that there must have been a representation made by the obligee to the obligor that the document would never be enforced as a sale deed but treated as a mortgage Baudhor v Lalbhai 24 Bom L R 239=66 Ind Cis 865. Where a pronote is sought to be enforced according to its tenor it is not open to the defendants, to let in evidence an alleged agreement that the pro note was executed only as security against an apprehended loss and that the accounts had to be looked into at a later date so as to ascertain the rights of the parties before the pronote could be enforced Sri Ram v Firm of Gobha Ram, 44 A 321=20 A L J 315=L R 3 A 453=67 Ind Cis 513. Oral evidence is not admissible for converting an absolute unconditional promise into a conditional defeasible one Subbaya v Kuppusamy, 41 M L J 541=1921 M W N 636. Where a promissory note is payable on demand an oral agreement

S 92 provides for a different mode of satisfaction is inadmissible in evidence. Thiruv. National Bank v. Mahanadil 63 Ind. Cas. 715. Oral evidence of a surrender of a registered lease is inadmissible under this section. Govind Chandra v. Harendra 63 Ind. Cas. 183. A party to what is on the face of it a sale deed cannot in a suit with a person who is a party to the deed produce evidence to show that the deed was really a sale of gift. Ishtaq Hussain v. Syed Nariq 22 O. C. 222=57 Ind. Cas. 901. An inchoate bond provided that on default in payment of two consecutive instalments the creditor would be entitled to sue for the whole amount in under the bond. Held that a subsequent oral undertaking on the part of the creditor to waive his right to enforce the payment of the whole amount on two successive defaults was a variation of the contract and was therefore inadmissible in evidence under section 92 of the Evidence Act. Harabharan v. I. M. Chandra 47 Ind. Cas. 913. Oral evidence is not admissible to show that a transaction which is ex facie a sale is really a mortgage, except to prove fraud on the part of the party taking benefit under the deed. Venkatachellum v. My. Gov. & Ind. Cas. 560 see also Ganai v. Bhat 12 Bom. 512=46 Ind. Cas. 661. Under this section oral evidence is inadmissible in evidence to prove that the interest mentioned in a promissory note is not payable either by custom or by agreement. M. I. Pillay v. I. I. Mistry 10 Bur. L. J. 212. In a suit on a promissory note the question whether the defendant executant of the note signed it by way of security for others cannot be tried or determined except so far as it affects the question of consideration. Durgacharan v. Lalji Varma, 17 Ind. Cas. 917. In a suit to recover possession of the properties conveyed under a sale deed evidence was adduced to show that the parties to the document intended to give simple mortgage rights to the alleged purchaser for the sums which one had promised to pay to the creditors of the other party. Held that such oral evidence is clearly inadmissible to prove that a different mode of operation was intended from the one which the executants stated and which they intended that the documents should state. Venkata Subba v. Subramanyam, (1917) M. W. N. 671=6 I. W. 703. To introduce condition into a document that is on its face absolute and unconditional is substantially to vary its terms within the meaning of section 92. Evidence Act. Ranga Kodu Kuthari Ammal (1917) M. W. N. 634. Oral evidence is not admissible to modify the significance of clear and positive terms of a Kobliyat. Basiruddin v. Afsanenessa 21 C. W. N. 860=10 Ind. Cas. 833 see also Jagann v. Nathu 18 Bom. L. J. 90=32 Ind. Cas. 938. Extrinsic evidence of intention of the parties is inadmissible to construe a document. Seetharamayya v. Suryadevara 35 Ind. Cas. 121. Under this section no oral evidence is admissible to show that the interest mentioned in a promissory note is not payable nor could any usage or custom repugnant to or inconsistent with the express terms of the promissory note be proved. Nuthu Prithappa v. Sundar, 36 Ind. Cas. 977. Where an endorsement on a promissory note contains no recital of consideration though such endorsement implies a contract between the endorser and the endorsee similar to the contract in the note, it cannot amount to a contract in writing that the promise is to be performed in consideration of the receipt of the full consideration for the note. Therefore oral evidence is admissible to prove what the real consideration for the endorsement was. Aiyathurai v. Siva Rama Iyengar 32 Ind. Cas. 233. Where a promissory note recites that cash was received for the execution of the note and it is sought to prove that the consideration was different from what was recited, held that such evidence is admissible and does not offend this section. Nava Teddian v. Donaswami Reddi, (1916) M. W. N. 174=31 M. I. J. 96=3 I. W. 589=31 Ind. Cas. 301.

Where a mortgage bond provided that each one of the mortgagors was liable for the whole amount of the mortgage, a subsequent verbal agreement providing that each individual mortgagor was to be liable only for his proportionate share of the amount being one materially varying the terms of the bond cannot be proved in evidence. Section 92 of the Evidence Act bars proof of such agreement. Krishna Chaman v. Sanat Kumar, 31 Ind. Cas. 609. Where the mukadilat by the tenant fixes the rent it is not open to him to let in oral evidence to prove that the contract has been raised, and any length of payment of a lesser rent will not help the tenant. Maharaja of Bobbili v. Appala Naidu,

(1916) M W N 139=32 Ind C's 703 Where in a suit by the payee of a Hindi against the drawer and the acceptor, the Hindi is silent as to interest the plaintiff is entitled only to 6 per cent interest under section 80 Negotiable Instruments Act Evidence of a contemporaneous oral agreement to pay interest at 12 per cent is not admissible under section 92 Evidence Act Banu Lal v Jagannath, 1 Pat L J 71=35 Ind C's 431 Where a subsequent arrangement, which is not one for satisfaction of the terms of the deed of mortgage, but is in direct contradiction of the terms of the deed of mortgage, it cannot be proved by oral evidence under this section Muhammad Husain v Muhammad Ashgar 19 O C 328 It is not open to a party to a written contract to prove a contract the terms of which are clearly inconsistent with the terms of the written contract Baranashi v Lulla Mal, 29 Ind C's 950

Where a promissory note executed by defendants 1 and 2 contained an unconditional undertaking by the 2nd defendant to pay evidence is not admissible to prove that the 2nd defendant's liability was in reality to be conditional on the 1st defendant's failure to pay because it is clearly a variation of the contract between the parties and section 92 of the Evidence Act clearly forbids evidence of such a variation being adduced In India no equitable exceptions to the provisions of section 92 of the Evidence Act can be allowed Narasimma v Ramasami 24 M L T, 91=13 M L J 104=(1913) M W N 336=18 Ind C's 696 Where the subject matter of an appeal is compromised by the parties by means of a written agreement, which recited that all matters in dispute was adjusted it is not open to any of the parties to tender oral evidence of a separate agreement not comprised in the written deed of compromise, on the ground that it related to a matter on which the compromise was silent Rajaram Rao v Pulgram Ram 17 Ind C's 43 Where the area of demised land which was described in the lease as lying within certain specified boundaries was stated therein as 400 highas extrinsic evidence was not admissible to show that there was not the stated area within the specified boundaries Extrinsic evidence as to the negotiations which led up to the contract was inadmissible to vary the construction of the lease Raja Durga Prasad v Rajendra Narayan 19 C W N 66=19 C L J 95=11 A L J 1027=16 Bom L R 42 (P C) Where a sale deed recites as consideration net cash price of Rs 35,000 evidence of in oral contract that the amount was really Rs 36,000 cannot be led in The amount of the sale price is a term of the contract within the meaning of section 92 of the Evidence Act Evidence cannot be admitted to vary the provisions of the sale deed as to the amount of consideration fixed for the same Adityam Aiyar v Ramkrishna, 14 M L T 383=(1913) M W N 847=25 M L J 602=21 Ind C's 458 It is not permissible to contradict or vary the express and unambiguous terms of a written instrument by reference to preliminary negotiations or previous conversations Sayid Abdulla v Sayid Bisharat 17 C W N 233=13 M L J 163=(1913) M W N 131=35 A 48=17 C L J 312=21 M L J 91 (P C) Oral evidence is not admissible to prove that a document which in terms is in and out gift was really meant to be donatio mortis causa Benode Kishore v Ashutosh Mahapatraya 16 C W N 666=14 Ind C's 720 Oral evidence to prove that parties to a sale deed which was duly executed and registered, subsequently rescinded it by mutual consent is inadmissible under section 92 of the Evidence Act Byjyalath v Peddula 15 Ind C's 282 Oral evidence to show that one of the executors of a note of hand signed it only as security and that his liability was only to the extent of standing as surety for a month is inadmissible under this section Harel v Bishnu 8 C W N 101 Neither a contemporaneous oral agreement nor the subsequent acts and conduct of the parties can be proved under this section to show that the rent is less than what is stated in the registered labuliyat Railha ramani v Bhawanji 6 C W N 60, Lalhabulla v Bishambhar 12 C I J 646 Where a partition deed, in which special provisions were made for giving means of access to various portions of the partitioned property was silent as to means of access over the share in question, held that an alleged contemporaneous oral agreement to add to the terms of the partition deed was inadmissible in evidence by reason of section 92 of the Act Krishnanajaya v Narayan 28 M 495=15 M L J 255, see also Sadaruddin v Chhaya, 5 A L J 717=31 A 13=

S 92 A W N 1908, 261=1 Ind Cas 558 Where after the execution of a deed of mortgage, it is only agreed between the parties that, for fresh advance, if any to be made by the mortgagee to the mortgagor a first charge would be given for the season's crop such agreement would be in defiance of the mortgage and, as such, would be inadmissible in evidence under section 92 of the Evidence Act Moran v Mittu Bibee, 2 C 58 Under this section no oral evidence is admissible to show that certain deeds of sale are not deeds of sale but deeds of gift Rahman v Elahi Balsh 28 C 70 Where the plaintiff in a suit for specific performance of a contract to sell a certain share of a house, set out a written contract, and alleged that, on its having been subsequently discovered that the share was less than it was originally believed to be, the price was reduced by verbal agreement, held that the written contract must be taken as intact save as to the price, and that no evidence could be given by the defendants in contradiction of the other terms of the document Brown v Cutts 5 C L R 487 Where a written instrument provides for a joint tenancy and joint contract by all the parties executing it to pay the whole rent of a village without any reference to the quantity of land in the holding of each oral evidence is not admissible to show that separate specific contracts have been entered into by each of the parties and it makes no difference that the evidence is put forward as evidence of a custom Mr G Lee v Panchananda 5 M H C R 135 Defendant was lessee under a joint lease by K and P, co owners of the premises Plaintiff having purchased an undivided moiety from P gave defendant notice to quit this moiety from the termination of the lease and sued for permission The defendant set up an oral agreement giving him an option of renewal of the lease but it could not be proved as being inconsistent with the terms of the lease the reception of evidences in respect of it being barred by the provisions of section 92 of the Evidence Act Ebrahim v Ourset J, 11 B 614 Though undoubtedly a document may be explained by oral evidence oral evidence cannot be admitted to vary the terms of a written instrument whose terms are in themselves clear and undoubted Rambuddin v Raneo See Koonari W R 1864 Act X Rul 22 Bought and sold notes together may form the contract in accordance with the custom of merchants in Calcutta So, parol evidence was not admissible to vary or add to the terms of the contract which had been thus reduced to writing Jadu Rai v Bhabotaran 17 C 173 Where a written acknowledgment has its date unauthorisedly altered oral evidence to prove that date is inadmissible under para 2 of section 19 of the Limitation Act 1877 Gulamali v Miyabhai 3 Bom I R 574=26 B 128 An alleged contemporaneous oral agreement to add to the terms of a partition deed which is silent as to the means of access in dispute, is inadmissible by virtue of this section Krishna Marayu v Marayu 28 M 495=15 M L J 255 Oral evidence is not admissible to prove a verbal surrender and abatement of rent of a holding held under a registered lease nor is the conduct of the parties for instance, payment of rent at a reduced rate admissible to prove the same Sarat Chandra v Nrutya Gopal, 8 Ind Cas 47 A Kabuliyat was granted in perpetuity, the rent was made payable partly in kind and partly in cash and the parties expressly provided that, if the rent payable in kind was not duly delivered, the tenant would be liable for a specified fixed sum Held that oral evidence was not admissible to prove that the tenant had agreed to pay the price of the paddy at the current market rate and not at the rate specified in the Kabuliyat, upon failure to deliver it duly Godai v Sarju 12 C L J 649=7 Ind Cas 842

The Writing is really not the contract The law is that notwithstanding a paper in writing which purports to be a contract may be produced it is still competent to find upon sufficient evidence that the writing is not really the contract. Gudlalar v Kunnar 7 M H C R 189 In that case in delivering his judgment Morgan C J said 'I take the law to be that notwithstanding a paper in writing which purports to be a contract may be produced it is still competent to the Court to find upon sufficient evidence that this writing is not really the contract And the rule of groundless defence does not affect the rule itself though it suggests caution in acting on it.' Citing Pym v Campbell 6 F & B 370 [vide notes under proviso (3) infra where the case has been cited in full].

'The Madras case was decided without reference to the Indian Evidence Act and probably before the Evidence Act came into operation. But the principle of that case was affirmed by the Judicial Committee in Baynath v Vally Mahomed Harce, 86 Ind Cas 332=48 M L J 339=27 Bom L R 787=3 Pat L R 227=L R 6 A (P C) 57. So the authorities establish that though evidence to vary the terms of an agreement in writing is not admissible, yet evidence to show that there is not an agreement at all is admissible.' Ramdhani v Keual, 90 Ind Cas. 929, see also Woodroffe's Evidence 8th Ed p 613. But in a recent Allahabad case Ashworth Jaid 'The Appellant's counsel has referred to the following dictum in Woodroffe and Amir Ali's well known commentary, the Indian Evidence Act 'Though evidence to vary the terms of an agreement in writing is not admissible, yet evidence that there is not an agreement at all is admissible. In support of his dictum two English decisions are relied upon namely, Harris v Rickett 28 L J 17=1 H & N 1 and Pym v Campbell, 6 El & Bl 370=25 L J Q B 277 Harris v Rickett, supra, is no authority for the dictum as stated. It is authority for the rule that where the whole of a contract is not contained in a written document, it may be supplemented by parol evidence of a collateral agreement. Collateral means in effect not inconsistent with the terms of the agreement in question. Proviso (1) of section 92 gives effect to this rule or at least to so much of it as the Indian Legislature desired to incorporate in the Evidence Act. Pym v Campbell supra is authority for the rule that parol evidence is admissible to prove any collateral verbal agreement to the effect that a document apparently complete and operative on its face should be conditioned upon, and not operate, until the happening of a certain event which has not occurred. This rule is reproduced in proviso (3) of section 92 of the Evidence Act. They is no authority for holding that evidence in any shape can be admitted for the purpose of showing that there was agreement at all or in other words, that a deed was meant to be inoperative.' Lachmandas v Ramprasad 49 A 680=A I R 1927 All 422 (424)=100 Ind Cas 1029=25 A L J 349, see also Gyar Mal v Sutaram 3 N L R 19.

Cases where the oral evidence is admissible. Where there was a mortgage by which a fixed rate of interest was agreed to be paid, and there was a contemporaneous oral agreement that the mortgagee should go into possession of the property mortgaged in satisfaction of the interest and he was let into possession and remained in possession under the terms of the agreement, held that his was not a case under this section that the real agreement was not one which contradicted varied added to or subtracted from the terms of the written agreement that it was merely a provision as to how the interest should be paid and that therefore the oral agreement was valid. Brindaban v Umrao, A W N 1887 61. In a suit for money due on a promissory note payable on demand the defendant pleaded a contemporaneous agreement in writing allowing the repayment by instalments. Held, that the contract was as contained in the two documents, and the defendant was entitled to prove the contract by showing that there was a duly executed contemporaneous agreement in writing between the parties. D Nagardas v Moses 12 Ind Cas 896. Oral evidence to prove a subsequent adjustment under which part of a decree was paid and the rest agreed not to be executed against the judgment debtors is not inadmissible by reason of this section. Ganga v Ram Oudh 113 Ind Cas 760=A I R 1921 All 79. When property is purchased in the name of several persons jointly, a joint tenancy is created and parol evidence is admissible to prove that the joint tenants have become tenants in common. Tan Chew v Cheel Sire 56 I A 112=116 Ind Cas 385=A I R 1923 P C 72=56 M L J 643 (P C). Oral evidence is admissible to prove that a debtor under a Hundi upon which the suit is based, compounded with his creditors including the payee under the Hundi by agreeing to pay them 12 annas in the rupee in full and final settlement of their claims of which he had to pay 4 annas in the rupee in cash and to execute Hundis of the value of 8 annas in the rupee payable at a future date. Kalumal v Kasumal 23 S L R 294=114 Ind Cas 97. Parol evidence which shows that two documents executed and registered on the same day are part and parcel of one transaction, does not amount to lending evidence so as to vary the terms of the document. Kishen Lal v Ramlal, 25 A L J 723=103

- S 92 Ind Cas 399=A I R 1927 All 696 An oral arrangement providing for repayment of a mortgage debt from the usufruct of the mortgaged property may be proved. Such an arrangement does not amount to a lease nor does it constitute an usufructuary mortgage. It is only a means of discharging the debt by putting the simple mortgagee in possession of the mortgaged property. Nookamma v Dharmayya 53 M L J 863 This section prohibits only the proof of any contemporaneous oral agreement between the parties in variance of the terms of the document. Where the father purchased certain properties and took a sale deed in the joint names of his two minor sons and subsequently the individual share of each of the vendees was sought to be proved by evidence relating to the intention of the father. Held that section 92 of the Evidence Act was not a bar to the admissibility of such evidence as the sale deed was silent regarding the share of two vendees. Mahomed v Amthil 101 Ind Cas 655=52 M L J 557=38 M L T (H C 247) In the case of an outright sale by registered deed an independent contract to re-sell either orally by unregistered deed can be proved but where the contract is not an independent transaction but forms part and parcel of the original transaction and together constitutes a mortgage such contract cannot be proved. If the facts prove that the two transactions are not distinct and independent of each other but constitute a mortgage, the agreement to re-sell cannot be proved for want of registration but if the two transactions are distinct and independent of each other and the transaction evidenced by a registered deed is one of an outright sale then the agreement to re-sell can be proved. Ma Nan v U Yang 6 Bur L J 210=105 Ind Cas 482=A I R 1927 Rang 314 There is nothing to prevent the parties from entering into an oral agreement for the settlement of decrees for money. They have the same freedom to do so as to make a narrative of contract by an oral agreement modifying the previous written contract so long as the contract is not required to be in writing and registered. It cannot be said that the judgment debtor selling upon a verbal agreement by the decree holder to accept some variations is barred from doing so by section 92 of the Evidence Act. Ma Shue v Maung San, A I R 1928 Rang 316=6 B L J 773 Oral evidence to prove that the defendant gave the promise or not to the plaintiff on the understanding that it shall be an effective instrument if and when the liability arise upon his part to restore to the plaintiff his share of the capital is inadmissible. Sheo Prasad v Gohind 49 A 161=100 Ind Cas 332=25 A L J 305=A I R 1927 All 292 This section is no bar to the admission of oral evidence of circumstances to show the relation of the written instrument to existing facts. Consequently where there is a recital in a document that the debt was a cash loan oral evidence is admissible to prove that the debt was really rent partly overdue and partly falling due later. Hayes Lim v Maung Ha 5 B L J 522=109 Ind Cas 189=A I R 1925 Rang 79 It can be proved by oral evidence that although a document is executed in favour of the persons one of them alone is solely entitled to the amount. Munna v Narain, 107 Ind Cas 678 The plaintiffs leased certain properties to the defendant for certain years at a rent of Rs. 600 per annum and also executed a mortgage to him hypothecating certain other properties. The mortgage deed provided that credit entries should be made in respect of payments of amount. Along with the deed of mortgage the defendant executed a Parthamaam to the plaintiffs agreeing to pay Rs. 200 out of the rents for a certain charity to pay all or the last and even the balance of the rents towards the mortgage debt. The plaintiffs alleged that the defendant failed to pay the said sum of Rs. 200 and the last and that the mortgage debt had been discharged. Held that the Parthamaam was admissible and that section 92 of the Evidence Act had no application to the case because it was not oral but written and it was not a variation of the mortgage deed at all. Imanathan v Sethuram 27 L W 17=1 I L J 10 M S=107 Ind Cas 868=A I R 1928 Mad 582 In a bond it was mentioned that the amount of Rs. 500 would be paid with interest at one rupee per month. The question was whether interest should be at one rupee per month or only on rupees for Rs. 500 per month. Held that oral evidence was admissible to prove that the parties intended that interest should be paid at one rupee per month and in support of section 92 of the Evidence Act.

Velataramanappa v Rama Setty 3 Mys L W 116 Oral evidence is admissible to prove a discharge and satisfaction of a mortgage bond. Krishna v Kashinad, 90 Ind Cas 470. A recital on a sale deed that there is no encumbrance or that the vendor has a good title to convey is not one of the terms of contract and evidence to prove that the vendee was aware of such defect cannot be said to vary or contradict the terms of the contract. Rama Subba v Muthiah 87 Ind Cas 199=A I R 192 Mad 968 Two Hindu daughters who had succeeded to the estate of their father made an oral partition of the same and also arranged orally to extinguish their mutual rights of survivorship. It appeared from the evidence that two lists had been drawn up of the properties as divided and mention was made in those of the right of survivorship having been extinguished. The lists were not produced but oral evidence was let in regarding the same. Held section 92 of the Evidence Act did not apply and the oral evidence was admissible. Achalanta v Sundaravva Rou 15 M 933=22 L W 395=(1924) M W N 613=A I R 1925 Mad 1267=19 M L J 266

Even where an agreement is silent as to the consideration under this section oral evidence is admissible to determine what the consideration was. Rameshwaradas v Adu Joora, 91 Ind Cas 371=A I R 1926 Sind 202. This section has no application where evidence of the conduct of the parties and their rights of the various members is let in to prove partition by the defendant in a suit. Ramuchetti v Panchemmal, 92 Ind Cas 1028=A I R 1926 Mad 102. When a promissory note is executed by two persons oral evidence is admissible to prove that one of them executed it only as surety for the other. Moolji v Pinto 92 Ind Cas 667=A I R 1926 Sind 156. This section does not prohibit the adducing of oral evidence to prove the discharge of a debt secured by a document. Ramayan v Jayanti Lal 30 C W N 710=96 Ind 11=A I R 1926 Cal 906. The discharge of a mortgage bond partly by payment and partly by the release to the debt by the mortgagee can be proved by oral evidence. Mahm v Iqum Dayal 12 C L J 532=A I R 1926 Cal 170. In a mortgage suit it is open to the mortgagor to prove that the mortgagee had been satisfied not merely by payment in full of the amount which was due thereon but by part payment and remission of the balance. Shaba Sundar v Ramkamat, 14 C L J 269=A I R 1927 Cal 27. An oral agreement between the lessor and the lessee that the lessor should give credit for certain sums for having cut certain trees is admissible as the transaction is a mode of payment or a discharge or waiver of a portion of the rent due to the lessor. Shabba v Chhajrao 94 Ind Cas 169=14 A L J 548=A I R 1926 All 445. Where a Bill of Lading evidences a contract of shipping no evidence of any oral agreement varying its terms is admissible. Standard Oil v Haridas Felp 79 Ind Cas 45. Where in a suit on a bond the defendant pleads no consideration for the bond and evidence is offered to show that the money due under the bond was meant to be the premium for a lease agreed to be executed by the creditor but which in fact was never executed, held that the evidence was excluded by section 92 of the Evidence Act. Baldeo v Ram Anon, 23 A L J 850=82 Ind Cas 317. Where all the terms of a contract have not been reduced to writing oral evidence is admissible to prove the terms not embodied in the written instrument. Coalfields of Burma v H H Johnson, 2 Rang 575=3 Bur L J 326=1925 Rang 128. Where a date is fixed in the contract for performing the contract, oral evidence to extend the period is not absolutely repugnant to the express terms of the contract so as to make it inadmissible. Gowdhandas v Rouji 76 Ind Cas 62. Where a promissory note is endorsed on the back by a person who is neither the maker nor the holder, oral evidence can be let in to prove a contract of guarantee. Thalerao v Krishendas, 76 Ind Cas 292=1925 Sind 9. Oral evidence is admissible to prove an agreement between the mortgagee and the would be purchaser of the equity of redemption as regards the terms on which the mortgage would release or assign his interest. Sailesh Chander v Jelba 10 C L J 67=1925 Cal 91. Parol evidence is admissible to prove a debt acknowledged in writing by the debtor when such acknowledged writing being untrumped is inadmissible in evidence. Thilhan Ram v Lal, 74 Ind Cas 939=1923 Loh 301. Where by mistake of the parties the duration of a lease was wrongly entered in the written instrument evidence can be let in to prove the real intention of the parties Durga Prasad v Husain Musalman, L R 4 All 302 (Rev.) Where there is an out and out sale under a duly registered document, evidence of a contemporaneous oral agreement to the effect that the parties agreed to treat it as a mortgage is admissible Talak Chand v Almaram 23 Bom L R 818=A I R 1924 Bom 58 Oral evidence is admissible as to negotiations antecedent to execution of the mortgage instrument, showing that what was intended to be offered and accepted as security was a certain ancestral share of the mortgagor in the original estate which at the time of the mortgage was part of the separate account Bepin Krishna v Jogeshwar 26 C W N 36=34 C L J 256 This section does not exclude oral evidence to prove the adjustment of a decree within Order 21, r 2 Civil Procedure Code Jangal v Chinnulal 16 N L R 204=60 Ind Cas 316 A promissory note is generally taken as a security for an advance and does not contain the terms on which the advance was made, and the fact that a payment was secured by a promissory note does not exclude oral evidence of the terms and purpose for which the advance was made Ba Shein v Emperor, 13 Bur L T 239=64 Ind Cas 33 Where an oral agreement is made, which in respect of the manner of payment rescinds or modifies a contract grant or disposition of property required by law to be in writing or actually written and registered, and any payment is made in accordance with the oral agreement, whether in complete or partial satisfaction of the contract, section 92 of the Evidence Act does not exclude evidence of the payment or the oral agreement that explains it. It does however exclude evidence of the agreement in respect of future payments not in accordance with the terms of the instrument Sambho v Tukaram, 59 Ind Cas 840 The appellants had for many years been allowed to over draw their account with the respondent Bank. The Bank in fact charged them compound interest with monthly rests and such charge appeared on the face of their pass books. The appellants annually gave the Bank a letter in a printed form in which they merely agreed to pay interest on the duly balances. Held that section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act, did not prevent the Bank from proving an agreement by the appellants to pay compound interest with monthly rests and that such an agreement could be implied for the appellants' long acquiescence in such a method of calculation Haidas v Mercantile Bank of India 44 B 474=38 M L J 387=18 A L J 359=55 Ind Cas 522=47 I A 17 (P O) Where in an agreement for the sale of land, it was impossible to reconcile the statement in the body of the agreement with the recital in the schedule as to the extent of the land to be conveyed, extrinsic parol evidence is admissible to explain the facts that led to the execution of the agreement in order to reconcile the different statements regarding the property sold Hussanally v Mangaldas (1920) M W N 726 (P C) There is nothing in this section to exclude evidence of an oral agreement which contradicts, varies, adds to, or subtracts from not the terms of the contract but some recitals in the contract itself Mukhi Singh v Ashun, 51 Ind Cas 320 Where there is an oral agreement to grant a lease section 92 of the Evidence Act does not stand in the way of proof that there has been an agreement by implication or inferable from the circumstances as to the time of the commencement of the lease Kailash Chandra v Byoy Kanta, 23 C W N 190=50 Ind Cas 177 Where a Kabuliyat executed and registered by a tenant is proved by the tenant in a suit there is nothing in the Evidence Act to prohibit the landlord from showing that he never assented to or accepted the Kabuliyat Hemanta v Birendra 47 Ind Cas 1003 Oral evidence of a sale by the mortgagor to the mortgagee as discharge of the mortgage-debt is admissible under section 92 of the Evidence Act to prove discharge although the sale itself is invalid and does not affect any legal transfer of the property even though it is accompanied by delivery of possession Tholakura v Pepakayala 31 Ind Cas 678 Where a letter creating an equitable mortgage is not admissible in evidence for want of stamp and registration independent oral evidence is admissible to establish an equitable mortgage Muthiah Chetty v Kothandaramaswami 31 M L J 317=(1916) 2 M W N 221=1 I W 172=35 Ind Cas 861 Collateral agreement can be proved under this section Venkata v Radha Krishna, (1911) M W N 129=30 M L J 302=32 Ind Cas 911 Where after executing a mortgage by conditional sale the mortgagor put the mortgagee in possession of the property mortgaged under an oral agreement authorising the mortgagee to enjoy the profits and devote the annual realized towards satisfaction of the interest, held, that there was nothing illegal in the agreement and evidence to prove it was admissible Agatpal v Hanum Singh, 19 O C 166 = 34 Ind Cas 745. An order of Court adjourning a case and incidentally noting the fact of an agreement made out of Court between the parties as a ground of adjournment does not purport to be and is not a record of the terms of the compromise and additional evidence to add to the terms of the compromise is not inadmissible under section 92 of the Evidence Act Sambanda v Chinnaiah, 29 Ind Cas 860. Where the ostensible consideration shown in a document was the payment of a certain sum of money and to have been made by the defendant oral evidence is admissible to show the real nature of the transaction Varayan v Pithoba 11 N L R 34 = 25 Ind Cas 355. A receipt which says I release you from the liability to pay compound interest as written in the said mortgage bond is admissible in evidence. Registration is not necessary and the receipt operates as a full acquittance for the money already paid Kailash Chandra v Sheikh Chennu, 42 C 346. A executed a usufructuary mortgage in favour of B in respect of one property. Subsequent to this mortgage there was an arrangement between A and B whereby the mortgagee was put into possession of another property, or the understanding that the profits derived from the latter were to be applied to payment of the principal of the mortgage money. Held that oral evidence to prove subsequent arrangement was admissible in evidence Bhauri v Shub Sahai 18 Ind Cas 324. Parol evidence is admissible to prove whether one of the contracting parties was acting for himself or on behalf of a principal for such a question is not one relating to the terms of a contract under section 92 of the Evidence Act South Indian Industrial v Rama Jogi 27 M L J 501.

S 92

In a suit for money due on a promissory note payable on demand, the defendant pleaded a contemporaneous agreement in writing allowing the repayment by instalments. Held that the contract was as contained in the two documents, and the defendant was entitled to prove the contracts by showing that there was duly executed contemporaneous agreement in writing, between the parties Nagorai v Mose, 12 Ind Cas 896. Section 92 of the Evidence Act does not preclude oral evidence of payment in extinguishment of mortgage rights, but not for proving an invalid oral conveyance of the equity of redemption by virtue of such payment Ayyapputhura v Muthulimalai Samy (1912) M W N 854 = 23 M L J 339 = 15 Ind Cas 339 = 12 M L J 425. A letter written contemporaneously with a sale deed can be admitted in evidence to prove that the sale deed was not intended to be given effect to. Neither section 92 of the Evidence Act nor section 49 of the Registration Act would apply so as to prohibit the admissibility of the letter in evidence Mutha Venkata v Pynda, 23 M L J 652 = 12 M L T 579. Where, after the execution of a mortgage bond the mortgagor placed the mortgagee in possession of the mortgaged premises under an agreement by which the mortgagee was to continue in possession for seven years and to receive the profits in full satisfaction of his dues under the mortgage. Held that the effect of the subsequent agreement was not to alter, contradict, add to or subtract from the terms of original agreement but merely to provide means of satisfaction of the bond the agreement could be proved by oral evidence as section 92 of the Evidence Act did not apply Kavala v Bibu Nandan, 2 Ind Cas 13 = 11 C L J 39. Extrinsic evidence as to any oral assurance given by the grantor of the lease, that it was intended to last for ever, is admissible Narsingh Dyal v Ravi Narain 30 C 833. Where a document records the terms agreed to at the time of the execution of another document the parties being the same, there is no objection, under s 92 of the Evidence Act to the admissibility of the former document, notwithstanding that it contradicts, varies, adds to or subtracts from the terms of the latter document Mutha Venkata v Pynda Venkateshapati, 27 M 343. Though this section excludes in particular instances any oral agreement or statement yet evidence of conduct, e.g. return of Kabuliyat, is admissible for proving that such return was due to an intention to make the Kabuliyat inoperative Shyamra Charan v Heras Mollah 26 C 160. It is quite legal to explain a written document by oral testimony Chunder Nath v Gunga Gobind, 1 W R 94, Dhupat v Jouahur Ali, 8 W R 152 In a suit on a bond, evidence is admissible of a contemporaneous oral agreement by which the parties agreed that the debt should be liquidated from the usufruct of certain property which was assigned by the obligor to the plaintiff at the time for that purpose Gownd v Anund, 4 C L R 274 A stipulation in document that no other payment except payment endorsed on the document itself shall be admitted does not exclude proof of payment by other evidence Sasachellum v Gowndappa 5 M H C R 451 Sultan Bibi v Magota, 3 M L J 9 The provisions of this section do not prohibit the disproof of a recital on a contract as to the consideration that has passed by showing that the actual consideration was something different to that alleged Jashudeva v Narasanna, 5 M 6, Doolah v Ramlal, 7 W R 408, Annagurubala v Kristua Sami, 1 M H C L 457 Indrajit v Lalechand, 18 A 168=A W N 1896 16 Hulun v Ilvalal, 3 B 159, Bomaya Nayal v Irayappa, 2 M H C R 174 When the agreement to reduce rent is admitted by the lessor, the lessees can rely on it This section does not affect the case Satjesh Chunder v Dhunpul, 24 C 20 Where the plaintiff executed a mortgage instrument to the defendant and the consideration recited therein was that the defendant was to pay certain debts and the instrument was not signed by the defendant nor was there any promise by the defendant to pay the debts the promise by the defendant to pay debts being outside the instrument does not come within the scope of Section 92, and oral evidence may be tendered which varies, alters, or modifies the promise Tunungada v Rangasami 7 M 19 Oral evidence is inadmissible to prove some items of agreement entered into between the parties when some others have been reduced into writing in letters exchanged between the parties Ambala v Gaultstain 13 C W N 326=6 M L J 368=1 Ind Cis 85 The question whether a transaction, which, in its face, purports to be a gift or a sale is really a benami transaction, is purely one of intention Notwithstanding that a transaction purported to be a sale and a price was mentioned in the conveyance it was held on the evidence to be a gift and not a sale—the question being regarded as purely one of intention Ismael v Hafiz 10 C W N 570 (P C)=3 A L J 33=33 C 773 Section 92 of the Evidence Act, only enacts that oral evidence cannot be given to vary or contradict the express terms of a document and does not prevent a party from giving evidence to prove that certain persons caused the document to be executed in favour of certain others mentioned in the document Shah Muhammad v Ram Dutt 5 P R 1896, see also Ram Mahesha v Secretary of State 67 P R 1874 Liability to pay money under a written contract may be transferred to another person by word of mouth with the consent of the creditor and the person taking upon him all the liability for the original debtor, the old contract being entirely rescinded or put an end to section 92, Evidence Act, has no application to such a case Maharaja of Farallot v Ball Hobson & Co, 69 P L R 1903=40 P R 1903

S 92

Evidence of conduct or intention for varying, contradicting, etc The acts and conduct of the parties can only be proof either (1) of a contemporaneous oral agreement varying the terms of the registered contract or (2) of a subsequent oral agreement having the same effect In the former case the evidence is excluded by s 92 of the Evidence Act and in the latter case by proviso 4 to section 92 Ridha Ramai v Bhabani 12 C L J 439=8 Ind Cis 790 In delivering the judgment Rampuri J said 'The appellant's plea relies on the cases of Satjesh Chunder v Dhunpul Singh 24 C 20 Preonath v Madhu 21 C 103 and Khalid v Ali Hafiz 23 C 256 In the first of these cases the oral agreement modifying the terms of the original registered agreement, and the ratio decidendi was that the plaintiff had admitted this agreement and that, therefore the defendant did not require to prove it and so the provision of section 92 did not bar him The later two cases are cases of ostensible conditional sales which it has always been permitted to be shown to be mortgages As pointed out in Pakman v Jahn Balsh 23 C 70 such cases are admitted as exceptions to the general rule laid down in section 92 of the Evidence Act But there appears to be no ground for making any further exception to the rule embodied in the section or any further inroad upon the law If the plea of the

S 92. not be affected by any prior engagement, and even as between the parties themselves, I think that if in any case there really is any understanding or expectation contrary to the terms of a deed which has been acted on, this can only result from one of two things, e.g., either the object is (as is commonly the case in this country) to deceive others and to retain the means of cheating others or the vendor whatever hope of reconveyance he may retain, deliberately puts himself as it were out of the pale of the law and cuts off from himself all legal right or remedy. That case was decided before the passing of the Indian Evidence Act 1 of 1872. In a subsequent case it has been held that no evidence of any oral agreement is, under this section admissible to vary the terms of a kobala which is on the face of it an unconditional sale. Ram Doolal v Radha Nath 23 W R 167 see also Mulhab Chaudh v Gangadhar, 11 W R 450 = 3 B L R A C 83. In Darmoddee Paul v Kaim Tasadar, 5 C 300 = 4 C L R 419 it was held that this section altered the law as laid down by Peacock C J in Kashi Nath v Chandu Charan 5 W R 68 (1 B), see also Ram Dayal v Heera Lal 3 C L R 386. What is the effect of this section on the Full Bench case was again considered in Heera Chandra v Kish Charan Das 9 C 528. There Garth C J for the Court consisting of Garth C J and Muller J observed 'It has now been argued before us that although the Full Bench case above referred to established the law in the year 1866 section 92 of the Evidence Act, which was passed in 1872, must be considered as having overruled the Full Bench decision and that the cases of Ram Dayal v Heera Lal 3 C L R 386 and Darmoddee Paul v Kaim Tasadar 5 C 300 = 4 C L R 419 have decided that section 92 of the Evidence Act has so altered the law. If I could see any ground for supposing, that the Full Bench case is not law at the present day or that section 92 of the Evidence Act either made or intended to make, any alteration in the rule of evidence which prevailed here before the Act was passed, and which was recognized as law in the Full Bench case I should consider that our proper course was to refer the question to another Full Bench, but when I look to the language used by Sir Barnes Peacock in that case, it seems to me that section 92 of the Evidence Act lays down in term the same rule as Sir Barnes Peacock then stated to be the law. And the principle upon which the judgment in the Full Bench case proceeded is one which in my opinion is perfectly consistent with that rule. It is a principle which has constantly been acted upon by Courts of Equity in England as well as by the Courts of this country and notably by the Bombay High Court in the cases of Hasha Khand v Jeshu Pannaji (unreported) and of Bakshu v Govinda 4 B 594. In the latter case there will be found an excellent judgment of Mr Justice Melville in which he very clearly explains this principle of equity and the mode and the circumstances under which it may be applied. I quite agree with that learned Judge, that the true ground upon which the equitable jurisdiction of the Court proceeds generally in cases of this kind is that of fraud, and this (as Mr Justice Melville observes) is very clearly stated by Turner L J in Lincoln v Wright, 4 Deg & J 16. That was a case in its circumstances very similar to the present. Wright had brought an action of ejectment against Lincoln to recover certain land, which the latter had conveyed to him by a deed which appeared on the face of it to be an absolute conveyance. Lincoln then brought a suit in equity to restrain the ejectment, on the ground that the transaction was in reality a mortgage and he relied in support of that contention, partly upon a prior agreement and partly upon the acts and conduct of parties. Turner L J says 'The principle of the Court is that the Statute of Frauds was not made to cover fraud. If the real agreement in this case was that as between the plaintiff and Wright the transactions should be a mortgage transaction, it is in the eyes of this Court a fraud to insist on the conveyance as being absolute and prior evidence must be admissible to prove the fraud. The same view was also taken by Cunningham and Maclean JJ in Kashi Nath v Hurrehur 9 C 893.

So although prior evidence will not be admitted to prove directly that simultaneously with the execution of a bill of sale there was an oral agreement by way of defeasance yet the Court will look to the subsequent conduct of the parties, and if it clearly appears from such conduct that the apparent vendee treated the transaction as one of mortgage the Court will give effect to it as a mortgage and nothing more. It is a mistake to reject evidence of the conduct of parties to a written contract on the ground that it is only an indication of an unexpressed unwritten contract between them. Conduct is no doubt evidence of the agreement out of which it arose but it may be very much more. In many cases it may amount to an estoppel. In such a case it is clear that evidence of conduct would not be strictly admissible under section 115 of the Evidence Act (1 of 1872). And, even when conduct falls short of a legal estoppel there is nothing in the Evidence Act which prevents it from being proved or when proved, from being taken into consideration. Courts of equity in England will always allow a party (whether plaintiff or defendant) to show that on assignment of a estate, which is on the face of it, an absolute conveyance intended to be nothing more than a security for debt, and they will not only look to the conduct of the parties, but will admit mere parol evidence to show or explain the real intention and purpose of the parties at the time. The exercise of this remedial jurisdiction is justified on two grounds viz., past performance and fraud. The Courts of India are not precluded by the Indian Evidence Act from exercising a similar jurisdiction. The rule of estoppel, as laid down in section 115 covers the whole ground covered by the theory of past performance. This section does not say that in order to constitute an estoppel the acts which a person has been induced to do must have been acts prejudicial to his own interest. Its terms are sufficiently wide to meet the case of a grantor who has simply been allowed to remain in possession on the understanding and belief that the transaction was one of mortgage and thus every instance of what the English Court call 'past performance' would be brought within the Indian rule of estoppel. But the ground upon which this jurisdiction of the Courts in India may most safely be rested is the obligation which lies upon them to prevent fraud. The Courts will not allow a rule or even a statute, which was passed to suppress fraud to be the most effectual encouragement to it, and accordingly in England the Courts, for the purpose of preventing fraud, have in some cases set aside the common law rules of evidence and the Statute of Frauds. The Courts in India have the same justification in dealing similarly with the obstacles interposed by the Indian Evidence Act. In thus modifying the rules laid down by sections 91 and 92 of the Act, the Courts will not be acting in opposition to the intention of the Legislature which by enacting the provisions of section 26, clause (c) of the Specific Relief Act (1 of 1877) has shown an intention to relax the rules of the Indian Evidence Act so as to bring them into conformity with the practice of the English Courts of Chancery. Balshu Lakshman v Gorinda, 4 B 591. So the principle of law laid down in the Full Bench case of Kashinath v Chundry Churn 5 W R 68, was approved or followed in various subsequent cases: Pheloo v Geerish 8 W R 515, Hasha Akhand v Jesha Premji 4 B 409 n. Shedih Parabal v Sheekh Mohammed 1 B L R A C 87, Bhary v Tej naram 10 C 764. Nundo v Prosunno, 19 W R 333, Bholanath v Kalperhad 8 B L R 89. Tenatarathnam v Reddiah, 13 M 491, Rajen v Magappu dayan, 16 M 80, Kader v Nepean 21 I A 96=21 C 883 (P C.) see also balkishen Das v Iegge 19 A 431, Holmes v Mathrus 9 Moo P C 413. Mutty v Annundo 5 M I A 72, Barton v Bank of New South Wales L R 15 App Cas 379. The question was again considered by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Pronath Sha v Madhusudan Bhunya 2 C W N 562=25 C 603 (F B). There Banerjee and Wilkins JJ, in their order of reference reviewed all the previous cases on the subject. Maclean C J in delivering the judgment of the Full Bench observed. In regard to the question of law, which was the main ground for this reference namely whether oral evidence as to acts and conduct of the parties was admissible to prove that the deed in this case was intended to operate as a mortgage and not as an out and out sale, the learned J who appeared for the Appellant stated that having regard to the authorities he could not successfully contend that such evidence was not admissible. We think the authorities establish that in such a case evidence which is directed to the acts and conduct of the parties would be admissible. This Full Bench decision was followed in subsequent cases, Inde Shama Charan v Hivas Molla, 26 C 160, Khankar v Ali Hafez, 28 C 256=

S 92 5 C W N 351, Abdul Ghafur v. Abdul Kadir, 111 P. L. R. 1901=72 P. R. 1901, Mahomed v. Ali 24 C 289=5 C W N 326, Ism. Sarup v. Ali 107 P. L. R. 1901, Abdul Khoda Bafsh, 26 Ind. Cas. 717.

In 1899 the case of Balkishen Das v. Legge 1 C W N 153 (P. C.)=22 A 119 was decided by the Privy Council. In that case the question was whether certain deeds executed by the respondent in favour of the appellants constituted a mortgage transaction or an out and out sale with a contract of repurchase. Lord Darby in holding that oral evidence of intention was not admissible for the purpose of construing the deeds or ascertaining the intention of the parties said: "By section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872) no evidence of any oral agreement or statement can be admitted as between the parties to such instrument or their representatives in interest for the purpose of varying or adding to or subtracting from, its terms, subject to the exceptions contained in several provisions. It was conceded that this case could not be brought within any of them. The cases in the English Court of Chancery which were referred to by the learned Judges in the High Court have not in the opinion of their Lordships any application to the law of India as laid down in the Acts of the Indian Legislature. The cases therefore be divided on a consideration of the contents of the documents themselves with such extrinsic evidence of surrounding circumstances as may be required to show in what manner the language of the document is related to existing facts." The question arose whether previous decisions were not affected by the above Privy Council case. There is a great conflict as regards the effect of Balkishen v. Legge on the rule stated above. In Khonkar Abdur v. Ali Hafez, 28 C 256=5 C W N 351 the Court observed: "Upon the first question this is how the matter stands. The extrinsic evidence that was admitted was evidence of the acts and conduct of the parties; that is evidence of the repayment of the money, the return of the deed and the exercise of the acts of possession by the vendor, and not evidence of any oral agreements or statements by the parties. If that was so the evidence would be admissible, as section 92 of the Evidence Act does not exclude the evidence of acts and conduct of the parties. The view we take is supported by a Full Bench decision of this Court in the case of Pero Noth v. Madhu Sudan 2 C W N 562=25 C 603. It was contended by the learned J. for the appellant that the decision must be taken to have been in effect overruled by the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Balkishen v. Legge 271 A 58=4 C W N 153. We do not consider the argument sound. The evidence that their Lordships considered inadmissible in the case just referred to was certain oral evidence of intention which had been admitted in the Courts below and the ground upon which their decision is based is that such evidence is excluded by section 92 of the Evidence Act. Their Lordships do not lay down any rule of exclusion of evidence over and above that contained in section 92 and section 92 of the Evidence Act as we have already observed whilst it excludes evidence of any oral agreement or statement, does not exclude evidence of the acts and conduct of the parties not being in the nature of an oral agreement or statement. See also Mahomed Ali v. Mir Nawaz Ali 5 C W N 326=23 C 389, Ali Sheikh v. Inam Ali 35 Ind. Cas. 102, Miriam v. Ibrahim 28 C L J 306=48 Ind. Cas. 561, Kamala v. Nandan 11 C L J 39, Ramswar v. Tulsi 16 C W N 137, Sharada v. Jannal, 17 C W N 103. In the last named case B executed in favour of A a deed of out and out sale with a condition of repurchase of a house but no date was fixed for the repurchase. On the same date B executed a tabuhyat in favour of A by which he accepted a lease of the house sold. The Court took into consideration how the language of the document was related to the existing facts such as that the vendor continued in possession and rent at the usual rate of interest etc. and further that the value of the property was much more than the consideration paid. In delivering the judgment Jennins C J said: "The argument before us has been that it was not open to the Appellate Court to regard the transaction as a mortgage. I designedly use the word transaction because that with which we have to deal is not contained in one document but in two and what we have to consider, in the circumstances is whether there is anything in section 92 of the Evidence Act or in Balkishen v. Legge

22 A 119—which is in opposition to that section—that would compel us to hold that the decision of Mr Justice Chatterjee is erroneous. We would certainly not willingly infringe the provisions of section 92 or fail to follow what was laid down by Lord Duff in Bellishen Dass case, and in order to be sure as to this we have listened with all possible attention to the argument that has been addressed to us. A great deal of that argument has been directed to showing that Bellishen Dass case has been differently regarded in different Courts, and while there is a strong tendency in one direction in the Courts of Bombay and Madras, there is a current, perhaps a sluggish one in the other direction in Calcutta. But it appears to me that all these authorities to which allusion has been made are beside the point in this case, for I cannot find that the learned Judge of this Court has relied on any evidence of oral agreement or statement or of intention, with a view to coming to the conclusion at which he arrived. He took the transaction as it is expressed in the documents. He also took into consideration those facts which may legitimately be proved with a view to showing in what manner the language of the documents was related to the existing facts and on a consideration of all those facts he has come to the conclusion as did the two lower Courts, that the transaction really was a mortgage. It has been urged against this that the transaction on the face of it was an out and out sale. This is not so on the face of it, what I would call the principal document is expressed in qualified terms and it is only open to the suggestion that it is an out and out sale, if and so far as it can be said that the express terms of the deed must be disregarded in obedience to the rule against perpetuities. See also Kamala Sahai v. Babu Amlan Mani, 11 C L J 39 (42). But in a later Calcutta case, a Full Bench of the same High Court has held that evidence of conduct subsequent is admissible when the terms of a contract are ambiguous, and it is not admissible where there is no uncertainty or ambiguity. Secretary of State for India v. Kumar Anandha 32 C L J 102, see also Karanvashi v. Ananda 32 C L J 15. Nirod Chandra v. Harihar, 32 C L J 19. Bhupendra v. Harihar 21 C W N 874, Umesh v. Surendra, 29 C L J 6, Dejee v. Daya Moji A I R 1928 Pat 225. Uday v. Jagat A I R 1928 Pat 66=6 Pat 680. Brondel v. Chatter Singh 86 Ind Cas 597=6 P L T 331. Kumar v. Secretary of State, 29 C W N 166. Juggernath v. Ramdayal 26 C 150.

In Narendra Lal v. Bhola Nath 27 C W N, 337=77 Ind Cas 154, the cases of Pronath Shaha v. Madhu Sudan 25 C 603=2 C W N 563, Ahlanur Abidin v. Ali Hafi, 23 C 276 and Mahomed Ali v. Najar 4th 28 C 289=5 C W N 806 were followed, see also Kailash Chandra v. Dabbara, 20 C W N 347. Manindra v. Durga Sundari, 20 C W N 680, Ajwad Ali v. Sherik, 50 Ind Cas 12, Mudhab Chavan v. Rajam Mohan 64 Ind Cas 583, Dipin v. Prayabanta, 26 C W N 36=34 C L J 256. Where a gift has been effected by an instrument, only the conduct of the parties can be considered for the purpose of showing that the transaction is not what it purports to be. Krishna Lal Singh v. Sri Day Kuar 101 Ind Cas 299=1 Luck C 97=A I R 1927 Oudh, 278, Abiam Bibi v. Ibrahim 28 C L J 306=43 Ind Cas 561. The rule that the conduct of the parties in respect to an instrument may be looked to in construing a document is subject to this reservation that it can be admitted only after every other means to construe a deed have been exhausted. Dejee Irinayee v. Dayamoy 108 Ind Cas 418=A I R 1923 Pat 25. Subsequent conduct of the parties can be admitted to show alteration of original tenancy. Lal Ghose v. Nulanta Das A I R 1925 Cal 340. Though evidence to vary the terms of a written agreement is not admissible yet evidence to show that there is not an agreement at all is admissible under this section, and it is open to the Court to examine the surrounding circumstances with a view to enable it to decide if the parties intended to arrive at any agreement. Ramdhani v. Keval Mani, 90 Ind Cas 929. Evidence of the subsequent acts and conduct of the parties to the written contract is admissible in evidence to show that certain terms of the contract were never in the deed to be acted upon from the very beginning. Narendra v. Bhokmath 77 Ind Cas 154=27 C W N 336 see also Ali Sheik h v. Imam Ali 35 Ind Cas 103.

A different view has been taken by the Bombay High Court in Dattoo v. Ramchandru, 30 B 119=7 Bom L R 669, where Jenkins C J said: "The

S 92

plaintiffs sue to recover possession of land alleging that the document passed by his father, though in form an absolute conveyance, was intended to operate as a mortgage. The grounds, on which their contention is based, are that the consideration was a debt and not money paid at the time that the plaintiff's father notwithstanding the execution of the deed remained in possession until his death, and that after his death his widow remained in possession for three years that there was no transfer of the land into the khata of the transferee, and that the consideration was inadequate. We can only understand that as meaning that the document was accompanied by a contemporaneous oral agreement or statement of intention which must be inferred from the several circumstances. But it has been pointed out by the Privy Council in Hallishen Das v W I Legge 22 A 119=2 Bom L R 523 that in questions of this kind the Courts in India must be guided by section 92 of the Evidence Act, and that we cannot have recourse to those equitable principles which enable the Court of Chancery to give relief in the cases of which Hillson v White, 2 D & J 98 or Lincoln v Wright 4 D & J 16 furnishes us with examples. We think that the contention urged by the appellant obviously comes within the ruling of the Privy Council and if we were to give effect to it then we should not observe the limitation which their Lordships declare to be binding on us. So oral evidence to prove variations in the terms of a sale deed is inadmissible, unless such evidence comes within any of the provisos to section 92 of the Evidence Act. Bai Adhar v Lalbhai, 66 Ind Cns 805=21 Bom L R 239. Ordinarily oral evidence is not admissible for the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the parties in interpreting languages used in a written document which is clear and unambiguous. Unless the Court is able to resume some oral agreement it would be impossible to regard the contemporaneous or subsequent conduct of the parties as in itself evidence to establish the intention of the parties at the time of the execution of the document. Such extraneous intrinsic evidence would necessarily be of value only as a ground for inferring an oral agreement where evidence is excluded by section 92 of the Evidence Act. Keshavrao v Raja Pandu 8 Bom L R 287. But where the contention in a case is that there was no agreement enforceable by law to sell the property, but that there was a mortgage agreement it should be specifically determined whether the transaction between the parties as shown by evidence is a mortgage or a sale. Krishnabai v Rama Bala 8 Bom L R 764. The plaintiff sued to redeem his lands alleging that his lands were mortgaged with the defendants under a nominal sale deed. The lower appellate Court treating the contract as embedded in the deed as one of its rejected the suit. Held that the question involved was not whether the document was one of sale or mortgage, but whether the real agreement between the parties was embodied in the document. Ansa v Kemchappa, 8 Bom L R 669. But where parties enter into a sale deed with a contemporaneous oral agreement to treat it as a mortgage, it is not open to either of them to plead the oral agreement in absence of fraud misrepresentation or failure of consideration or the like reason rendering the sale void. Sangraya v Ramappa 34 B 59 see also Dagdu v Nana 35 B 93. Somana v Galigaya 35 B 231=13 Bom L R 113. Ganee v Bhanu 42 B 512=20 Bom L R 644. Baraya v Sindoras 1 B 333. The plaintiff sued to redeem a mortgage dated 1899. The mortgage having been expressed in the form of a sale deed he relied on s 10 A of the Dekkhan Agriculturists Relief Act to show its real nature. The provisions of the Act were extended to the district in 1905. The lower Court held that the section was of no avail to the plaintiff, as he could not be said to have been an agriculturist within the meaning of the Act at the time of the transaction. Held that the plaintiff could only be allowed according to the provisions of s 10 A of the Act to enjoy the special benefit of the favoured class in disregarding the provisions of Section 92 of the Evidence Act if he belonged to the favoured class as defined by the statute at the date of the transaction. Sauantrai v Guriappa 15 Bom L R 778=21 Ind C 4 (F B). The phrase any other law for the time being in force in section 10 A of the Dekkhan Agriculturists Relief Act must be read as ejusdem generis with the preceding words which refer to s 12 of the Evidence Act and does not point to any other Act for instance the Registration Act. Gopal v Morar, 15 Bom L R

555=20 Ind Cas 249, see also Bisappa v Tajana 31 Bom L R 1266, Gopal v Rajaram, 14 Bom L R 14=13 Ind Cas 851. The object of s 10 A of the Dekhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, namely the decision as to the real nature of the transaction by admission of the oral evidence which otherwise would be excluded by the ordinary law, whether s 92 or the like of the Evidence Act is to override not merely Evidence Act, s 92 but also where necessary s 91 Basappa v Tajana, A I R 1930 Bom 79=31 Bom L R 1266

S. 92.

The effect of the Privy Council decision of the case of Ballishen Das v Legge 27 I A 58=22 A 149, came to the consideration of the Madras High Court in Achutaramanay v Subbaray 25 M 7. In that case the Court observed "Before going into the merits of the appeal we required the appellant to show how it was open to him, in the face of section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act to adduce evidence to contradict the terms of the contract of sale, is clearly and unambiguously set forth in exhibit L. We replied principally on the decisions in Khanakar Abdul v Ali Hafiz, 28 C 256 and Mahomed Ali v Azar Ali, 28 C 289, contending that evidence of the conduct of the parties subsequent to the date of the sale was admissible to establish that an absolute conveyance was intended to operate only as a mortgage. With great respect for the learned Judges who took part in those decisions we are unable to concur either with the conclusion arrived at or with the reasoning on which it rests. Evidence of such conduct could be relevant only on the ground that the conduct leads to the inference that there was a contemporaneous oral agreement or statement between the parties that the absolute sale deed was to operate only as a mortgage and not as a sale but section 92 of the Evidence Act enacts that no evidence of any oral agreement or statement shall be admitted as between the parties or their representatives for the purpose of contradicting varying adding to or subtracting from the terms of any contract grant or disposition of property which has been reduced to writing and no exception is made in any of the provisos to section 92, or elsewhere in the Act, in favour of evidence which consists of the acts and conduct of parties from which an inference might be drawn that there was such an oral agreement to vary the terms of the contract or grant. The question before us is really concluded by the recent decision of the Privy Council in Ballishen Das v Legge, 27 I A 58=22 A 149.

In this connection we may also draw attention to the distinction which is drawn by the same tribunal between admissibility of evidence to show that a recital of a fact in a contract or grant is erroneous and evidence to vary the terms of a contract or grant (Sah Lal Chand v Indrajit, 27 I A 93=22 A 370) and also to the decision in the House of Lords in North Eastern Railway v Lord Hastings (1900) A C 260 in which it was held that when the words of a deed were plain and unambiguous, the fact that the parties understood it otherwise and acted on such understanding for a period of more than forty years, could not affect the construction of the instrument, and the effect to be given to it. See also Venkata v Subbamma, (1917) M W N 671, Chall Venkata v Deiraphakuni 1912 M W N 164. Where the contemporaneous agreement though in writing is not registered it is not open to the party to show that what is apparently a sale was really a mortgage. Mecnal sheendaram v Chenchu, 109 Ind Cas 18=A I R 1928 Mad 459. Evidence of subsequent conduct to prove contemporaneous agreement is not admitted. Lutz Holmes v The Bank of Upper India, 77 Ind Cas 323=5 Lah L J 439. In delivering the judgment the Court observed "on the question of whether he can be allowed to produce evidence of a contemporaneous oral agreement varying the terms of the written document, the learned senior Subordinate Judge has summarised the authorities very clearly and we find ourselves in complete agreement with the conclusion to which he comes that this question which was formerly debatable, and one on which the High Courts differed has been finally decided by Maung Kayin v Ma Shue 14 I A 236 (P C)=45 C 320=12 Ind Cas 642=22 C W N 25 (P C). It was contended before the senior Subordinate Judge, that the Privy Council has not definitely set aside Abdul Ghafar v Abdul Kadir 72 P R 1901=111 P L R 1901. As explained by the learned senior Subordinate Judge that ruling followed Preonath Shaha v Madhu Sudan Bhuiya, 25 C 603=2 C W N 562 and Khanakar Abdul v Ali

S 92 Hafiz, 28 C 256=5 C W N 351, and the distinction made by the Calcutta High Court between evidence of previous and contemporaneous conduct as offered to evidence subsequent conduct was drawn in exactly the same way in Abdul Ghafur v Abdul Kadir, supra. See also Fitzhols v The Bank of Upper India Ltd 4 Lah 258=1923 Lah 518, Ghanam v Kanhya Mal, 15 P W R 1915=126 P L R 1915=25 Ind Cas 126, Maung Bin v Ma Haing, 3 L B R 100 (I B), Maung Lai Gyi v Maung Hla Pui, U B R (1902 1903) Vol II, I evidence 1, Apudhya Prasad v Jagadish Singh, 11 O C 321, Ramesh v Nga Sannq, 2 L B R 1 Mi Gyue v Keshan Ram, U B R 1903, 3rd Qr I evidence 15, Dagde v Aama 12 Bom L R 972=8 Ind Cas 614 Sookna v Gundhoo 12 W R 261 Malul Chand v Karlu Chendra B L R Sup Vol 399=5 W R 76, Jugobundhoo v Bulce, W R (1869) 388, Mahomed v Raesooddeen 6 W R 117 Radha v Ram, 9 W R 251, Bulali v Ilad, 27 P R 1911=118 P W R 1911=10 Ind Cas 1001

In Maung Kyin v Ma Shue 15 C W N 958=38 I A 146 P C=91 M L J 1105 the appellants who according to their case were mortgagees of certain properties under a deed which was in form a conveyance purported to execute an absolute conveyance of them in favour of the respondents. The appellants subsequently purported to purchase the equity of redemption from their mortgagor. In this suit the respondents to recover the properties on the basis of the conveyance sought inter alia to give evidence of the acts and conduct of the parties (as distinguished from evidence of oral statements and conversations constituting in themselves an agreement to contradict or vary the written instrument) to prove that the transaction was really intended to operate and was always treated as a transfer of their mortgage, it being further alleged that the respondents had taken the absolute conveyance with notice that the properties in fact belonged to a third person. Lord Robson in delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council said 'This evidence (i.e. evidence of the acts and conduct of the parties) was excluded by the Courts below under section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, and the principal question arising on this appeal is whether or not that evidence was properly rejected. Its object was to show that whatever the terms of the document may have been none of the parties had acted on them as effecting an absolute sale but that through a long course of mutual dealings materially affecting their respective positions they had always treated the business between them as one of loan secured by mortgage. This may give rise to important and difficult questions under section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act. The case has been argued before their Lordships as though the questions in dispute turned entirely on the construction of this section as applied to the deeds of the 4th March, 1903 under which the respondents claim. Their Lordships however are of opinion that the case for the Appellants disclosed a charge of fraud against the respondents in relation to matters antecedent to those deeds on which much of the evidence tendered would certainly be material.' So their Lordships in that case did not express any opinion on the construction or application of section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act in relation to the deeds of the 4th March 1903. That case again went up to the Privy Council (Re Maung Kyin v Ma Shue La, 22 C W N 257 P C). The appeal raised the question of the admissibility of oral evidence under section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act. In delivering the judgment Lord Shaw said 'When the matter in dispute was before this Board upon a former occasion it was decided that evidence upon the topics above mentioned could be received but no final judgment was given as to the effect to be given to such evidence after its reception. The proof having been taken, their Lordships are now in possession of the facts and of concurrent findings upon the most important of them upon the non-admissibility of the evidence reliance is placed by the respondents upon section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act of 1872. Founding upon this section the respondents maintain that the whole of the evidence led must be rejected. On the contrary, the Appellant maintain that, notwithstanding the terms of the section they are entitled to set up and prove the acts and conduct of the parties as inconsistent with the transfer of property and only consistent with the true nature of the transaction having been one of mortgage or transfer of mortgage. They found upon a considerable body of authority to that effect, the cases cited being, Bakshu Lakshman v Gorinda Kanj 4 B 594, Hem Chunder v Kally Charan, 9 C 528, Rallen v Algapudayan 16 M 80, Piconath v Madhusudan 20 C 603=2 C W N 502, Khanakar v Ali Hafe, 28 C 256 and Mahomed Ali v Na ar Ali, 28 C 289=5 C W N 326. The judgment of Mr Justice Mellhuise in the first of these cases is repeatedly founded upon in the course of the series, in which that learned Judge expressly followed the English equity doctrine as expressed in Lincoln v Wright 4 Deg & J 16 by Lord Justice Turner thus: 'The principle of the Court is that the Statute of Frauds was not made to cover fraud. If the real agreement in this case was that as between plaintiff and Wright, the transaction should be a mortgage transaction, it is, in the eye of this Court, fraud to insist on the conveyance as being absolute, and oral evidence must be admissible to prove the fraud.' In the opinion of their Lordships, this series of cases definitely ceased to be of binding authority after the judgment of this Board pronounced by Lord Dary in the case of Balkishen Das v Legge, 27 I A 58=4 C W N 153. It was there held that oral evidence was not admissible for the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the parties to written documents. Lord Dary cites section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act and adds—'The cases in the English Court of Chancery which were referred to by the learned Judges in the High Court have not, in the opinion of their Lordships, any application to the law of India as laid down in the Acts of the Indian Legislature. The case must therefore be decided on a consideration of the contents of the documents themselves with such extrinsic evidence of surrounding circumstances as may be required to show in what manner the language of the document is related to the existing facts.' Notwithstanding the decision of this Board, however, a certain conflict of authority on the subject still remains in India. But the respondents rightly refer to Achuta Ramaraju v Subbaraju 25 M 7, Maung Bin v Ma Hlaung 3 L B R 100 and Dattoo Valod v Ram Chandra 30 B 119 and in particular to the judgment of Jenkins C J in the last case. In these the judgment of the Board, as pronounced by Lord Dary has been rightly followed and applied.' See also Kamala Kant v Annada Chandra, 71 Ind Cis 1038, but see Narendia v Bhola, 27 C W N 346=77 Ind Cis 154. In Narasimhan v Panuganti, 29 C W N 246=47 M 729 (P C) the question was whether documents executed between the parties constituted a mortgage by conditional sale or an absolute sale with an agreement to reconvey. In holding that the transaction though phrased ostensibly as a sale with a right of repurchase in the vendor was in reality a mortgage, Lord Blanesburgh said: 'In accordance with that arrangement the vital questions whether the transaction in question did or did not amount to a mortgage has been fully argued before their Lordships and with that problem alone we now propose to deal. It seems to their Lordships that they can dispose of the present case with no reference to any oral evidence, other than the surrounding circumstances such as in Lord Dary's words in Balkishen Das v Legge 27 I A 58=22 A 149=4 C W N 153, are clearly required to show in what manner the language of the documents was related to the existing facts.'

In Baynath Singh v Hajeer Vally 30 C W N 242=27 Bom L R 787 the suits were instituted by Baynath Singh for the redemption of shares in the Natu Singh Oil Co on the footing that certain transactions entered into between the plaintiff and defendant Hajeer Mahomed Janal were mortgages. The defendant contended that the transactions were as they purported to be absolute sale to the original defendant followed by contracts for the resale of the shares to the plaintiff, that time was of the essence of the contract and that the right to repurchase had been extinguished. In admitting the oral evidence of the circumstances of the transactions Sir Lawrence Jenkins said: 'It is true as was laid down in Balkishen Das v Legge 27 I A 58=22 A 149=4 C W N 153, that under section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act as between the parties to an instrument oral evidence of intention is not admissible for the purpose, either of construing deeds or of proving the intention of the parties. But in the view their Lordships take of the circumstances of this case the section and the ruling have no application to it. The preamble to the Evidence Act recites that it is expedient to consolidate define and amend the law of Evidence, and section 92 merely prescribes a rule of evidence, it does not better the Court's power to arrive at the true meaning and effect of a transaction in the light of all the surrounding circumstances. So extrinsic evidence is not admissible for the purpose of showing that a document which purports to be, and is on the face of it a deed of gift, is in reality a deed of gift. Furzannissa v Humfurnissa, A W N 1905 129 = A L J 360 = 27 A 612

S 92

PROVISO (1)

Scope of the provisos. The admissibility of extrinsic parol testimony to affect written instruments is perhaps the most difficult branch of the law of evidence. Taylor § 807. The general rule can, indeed, be laid down in clear and definite terms—parol evidence is not admissible to add to, vary, or contradict a written transaction—but the application of the rule is beset with difficulties. It is frequently said that there are several exceptions to the rule, but it is submitted that there is no real exception at all, no case in which parol evidence is admissible either to add to, vary, or contradict a written transaction. The cases given below show that parol evidence can be used for the several purposes indicated, but it can scarcely be said that there is in such cases either addition to, or variation or contradiction of a written transaction.

Parol evidence may be given to prove or explain —

(1) The terms of any verbal transaction, although a writing exists concerning it, if such writing be not the transaction itself but a mere note, memorandum, receipt or the like.

(2) Fraud, mistake, illegality, incapacity, failure of consideration, or other matter showing that the writing is not the valid transaction it purports to be.

(3) Any collateral verbal agreement on the same subject matter, consistent with the written transaction.

(4) Any collateral verbal agreement suspending the operation of the written transaction or being a condition precedent thereto so that the writing is not a presently operative transaction.

(5) Any subsequent verbal agreement rescinding or modifying the written transaction so that the writing has ceased to be operative.

(6) Any local or trade custom or usage applicable to such written transaction, and not excluded thereby.

(7) The meaning of words having a special or unusual meaning, or generally, the translation of a written transaction. — Cockle Cas. Ev. pp 337—338. The statement of law in Amir Ali's Evidence that though evidence to vary the terms of an agreement in writing is not admissible yet evidence that there is not an agreement at all is admissible is too wide and must be qualified by the express provisos 1 to 3 to section 92 of the Evidence Act. Lachmi in Das v Ram Prasad, 49 A 680 = 100 Ind Cas 1029 = 25 A L J 319 = A I R 1927 All 422.

Scope of Proviso (1). Parol evidence is admissible to show that a writing is not really the valid transaction which it purports to be. Such evidence may therefore be given to prove fraud, mistake, illegality, incapacity, failure of consideration, or other matter affecting the validity of a writing as a document. Cockle Cas. 341. In Henkle v Royal Ex Ass Co 1 Ves 317, Lord Hardwicke said: 'No doubt, but this Court has jurisdiction to relieve in respect of a plain mistake in contracts in writing as well as against fraud in contracts, so that if reduced into writing contrary to the intent of the parties, on proper proof that would be rectified.' 'When the parties have recorded their contract in writing the rule, that they are not at liberty to alter or vary it, comes into effect. That which they put down is final as to what they mean: it is the binding record of the agreement. But they are always at liberty to show whether it is the binding record of the agreement. Suppose that the signature were made in the course of a dramatic representation, or suppose a printed form of agreement were used and the witness, by mistake, signed his name in the space meant for the principal and vice versa would not the parties be at liberty to show the real state of the case?' Per Baron Bramwell in Hale v Harrop, 7 Jur 719.

Conen v Truefitt (1899) 2 Ch 309, May v Platt, (1900) 1 Ch 616, Dobell v Stephens 3 L J K B 89, Cockle Cas 341. So the first proviso in no way touches on the rule laid down in the section Mari Ev 73. So the rule is not infringed by the admission of parol evidence under the proper pleading showing that the instrument is altogether void or that it never had any legal existence or binding force, either by reason of forgery or fraud, or for the illegality of the subject matter, or for want of due execution and delivery. Collins v Blanton 2 Wells 341, Parson v Popham 9 East 421, 422, Taylor § 1135. The instances mentioned in the proviso are not exhaustive. Benmodhab v Sadasul 32 C 437=9 C W N 305=1 C L J 155 (I B). In delivering his judgment Hoodoffe J said 'The rule of evidence which is embodied in the first paragraph of section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act presupposes the validity of the transactions evidenced by the documents to which that rule has to be applied. If therefore, that validity is impeached it is no defence to point to the apparent rectitude of the document and to claim protection from enquiry under a rule which exists against the contradiction and variance of the terms only of those instruments the validity of which is not in question. In such cases the Court is not bound by what has been described as a mere paper expressions of the parties and is not precluded from enquiring into the real nature of the transaction between them. The first proviso to that section, therefore, declares that any fact may be proved which would invalidate any document. To prove that a contract is void as by showing that it is an agreement by way of wager is to invalidate it. It has been suggested however, that the only cases in which oral evidence may be given to invalidate a document are those specifically mentioned in proviso (1), namely, fraud, intimidation, illegality, want of due execution or capacity, want or failure of consideration or mistake. But, in my opinion, this is not so, as the instance given are not exhaustive but, as appears from the use of the words 'such is' are set out by way of illustration only. Assuming then that as has been argued the present case does not come within the term 'illegality' (which it is necessary to consider) it is still within the words of the proviso. The admissibility, therefore, of such evidence as that which the defendant seeks to give in this case is not only not excluded by the general rule which is embodied in section 92 but is expressly recognized by the first proviso to that section'. Under proviso (1) of section 92 the facts which may be proved must be such as to show either that the legal requisites for a valid agreement did not exist in the case at all, or that one of the parties did not give his free consent to it or that the document does not express what was really intended to be embodied in it. It has no application to a case where the instrument represents what the parties intended to put down in writing though it might not be in accordance with what they intended to do, and with the legal result that they secretly wanted to bring about but which for some reason they did not wish to put in writing. Mottayabhan v Palani (1913) M W N 650=25 M L J 290=20 Ind Cas 924. When several persons have signed a promissory note jointly and severally it is not permissible for one of them to let in evidence that he signed only as a surety but if the possessor himself knew at the time of taking his signature that he signed only as a surety, then proviso 1 would operate to let in the evidence. Maung Sein v Ma Sau 3 Bur L J 112=82 Ind Cas 816. When a document can be shown to come within proviso (1) evidence of contemporaneous and oral agreement contradicting the document is admissible, Mahomed v Abdul, 63 Ind Cas 368. It is open to the defendant in a redemption suit to plead that the mortgage is a fictitious document intended to cover a previously complete transaction of sale between the parties and under the first proviso to section 92 of the Evidence Act to prove any facts which would invalidate the deed. Sahab Baksh v Muhammad, 58 Ind Cas 115. An instrument purporting to be a contract in writing, which is executed on the avowed understanding of both parties that it is not to be treated as the real contract between them is not an agreement enforceable by law and there is not a contract at all and does not acquire greater legal force because it is an instrument in writing. Ma anah v Cassim Ali L B L (1893-1900) 154. Where the plaintiff sold the property in suit to defendant No 2 in the name of his wife, defendant No 1 by a conveyance in consideration of services rendered or to be rendered by defendant No 2 in inducing his master L to sell certain property to the plaintiff. Held that the defendant No 2 was entitled to prove the real transaction by oral evidence. Aali Khan v Mussamat Sena, 9 Ind Cis 161 = 15 C W N 108. Where a party deliberately and with eyes open executes a deed of sale he can not be allowed to set up against it on oral agreement that the sale was a mortgage. He may prove that a mortgage was intended but that by fraud, misfile or otherwise a deed of sale was executed, but he cannot when he intended to execute a sale deed or executed it, be allowed to prove an oral agreement that the sale was to be held to be a mortgage. Lithoba v Hoonum Chand 2 C P L R 125.

S 92

Under this proviso oral evidence will be admissible for the purpose of invalidating a written agreement. Dholan Das v Rajja Singh 85 P R 1898. Under this proviso any fact may be proved which would invalidate any document, such as fraud illegality, etc. Therefore in a suit on a bond, a defendant pleading that it was invalid by reason of its having been given to secure money lent to promote an immoral purpose will be allowed to prove the same. Musamat v Ounlar Iah, 61 P R 1882, Haji v Laxman, 30 B 426. Where at the time of executing a document a representation is made that the document though in form a sale deed will not be enforced as against the executant as a sale deed as where on the faith of that representation the executant executes the document the sale deed cannot be upheld as a sale deed as against him. Narathu v Sribabu 8 Bom L R 761 see also Pertap v Mohendra 17 C 297. Where the words of a conveyance in an apparent sale deed formed only part of the real agreement between the parties, and the oral agreement to re-convey to the vendors which gave them a claim to equitable relief formed another part of the same transaction it is in the eye of law a fraud to in ist on the conveyance as being absolute and parol evidence should therefore be admitted as for proving the fraud. Nor does s 92 of the Evidence Act render evidence of the oral agreement inadmissible for, if the real agreement were proved it would invalidate the document as a deed of absolute sale within the meaning of the first proviso to the section, and constitute a ground for a Court of equity and good conscience giving effect to it only as a mortgage. Rakkhu v Alagappudayam, 16 M 80. This proviso seems to apply to cases where evidence is admitted to show that a contract is void or voidable or subject to reformation upon the ground of fraud duress illegality etc upon its inception and not to cases where the agreement being in itself perfectly valid and free from any taint of that kind, one of the parties attempts to make a fraudulent use of it as against the other. Cutts v Brown, 6 C 328 = 7 C L R 171, see also Naraju v Kazi 20 B 636.

Fraud. This section cannot stand in the way of oral proof of fraud when it is charged. It has been said to be "absurd that a statute made to prevent frauds shall be made a hindrance to support it." Peachey's case Roll E T 1759. Burr Jones § 431. The correct view appears to be that equity will at all times lend its aid to defeat a fraud notwithstanding the Statute of Frauds. Burr Jones § 431. For example parol evidence may be received to prove that a conveyance or other contract has been obtained by fraud. Thompson v Mason, 4 Bibb 195. It may always be shown that the document in question never had any legal existence. On this ground rests the very important exception that duress or fraud in the inception of the contract may be proved, although accompanied by the most solemn formalities. Such proof does not recognize the contract as ever existing as a valid agreement, and is received, from the necessity of the case to show that which appears to be a contract is not and never was a contract. Wadell v Glasel, 18 Alr 561. Gun v Mc Carthey, 13 L R 1r 304. Collins v Blantyre, 3 Wills 341. Laxton v Popham 9 Cr t 421. Taylor § 1135, Mul Et 73. Phip 1, 4th Ed pp 537, 538. If the fraud is clearly proved, one of the essential elements of contract—consent—is wanting. Thus it may be proved by parol evidence that any material part of the contract was fraudulently omitted or inserted by the other party. (Heter v Glasgow, 79 Pn 79) or that it was fraudulently misread to one not able to read and that he was thus induced to give his signature, (Mc Kesson v Sherman, 51 Wis 303) or that a part of the contract was not reduced to writing.

because of the fraud of one of the parties, in which case the whole transaction is open to explanation by parol evidence Phyfe v Wardell 2 Edw Ch (N Y) 47. In brief, if one person fraudulently imposes on another and procures the latter's signature to an instrument he had not agreed to sign, did not know he was signing, and did not intend to execute, this amounts to fraud in the execution of the instrument, which may be proved by parol or if satisfactorily established will justify a finding against the validity of the instrument and would not be obligatory on the person so signing. St Louis & S F R Co v Dearburn, 60 Fed 880, Marnell v Blake, 3 B & B 35=3 Eng Rep 1153. For the purpose of proving the fraud, verbal statements which are material and fraudulent, although made before or at the same time with the written agreement may be proved. In such cases the rule that prior negotiations are merged in the written agreement does not apply. Prentiss v Russ, 16 Me 30 (Am). No rule is better settled up on this—where fraud is alleged a very wide range is given to the testimony. Parol evidence is admissible in such cases to show the circumstances surrounding the transaction and the motives and intentions that prompted the parties to execute the same. Such evidence is permissible to show fraud in a transaction, which, if shown, annuls the contract, and prevents its enforcement. It is not admitted for the purpose of varying the terms of a contract but merely to ascertain whether it is a bonafide transaction or sham. If there is no fraud the contract will stand conversely if there is fraud the purpose of the admission of parol testimony is served. Fairbanks v Simpson 28 S W 128 (Am). In such cases any secret agreement or trust may be shown by them although directly contradicting the face of the conveyances. This consideration may be enquired into (Gray v Hanson, [By (S C) 278]) the purpose and object of mortgages or assignments may be shown (Hunter v Hoyt, 66 Wis 227=57 Am Rep 257), and generally the entire transaction may be investigated. Again in actions upon a written contract brought by one of the contracting parties against the other the rule under discussion is constantly invoked, and parties are allowed to prove fraudulent representations or conduct which formed an inducement to the contract. Abaji v Luxman, 30 B 425=8 Bom L R 553. Navabai v Sruvhai 8 Bom L R 761, Nadia v Brendra, 20 C W N 1067. But in such cases the evidence should be strong and clear, and the written contract should not be impeached or changed, unless it appears that one of the parties was fraudulently misled or deceived. Without enumerating them then the rule applies practically to all classes of private writings. Buri Jones § 435. But where fraud is not alleged by the party in his plea fraud cannot be pleaded in answer. Somana v Gadigeya 35 B 231, see also Dagdu v Luma 35 B 93. Sangra v Ramappa 31 B 59. Balishen v Legge 23 A 149. But mere allegation of the fraud in the pleadings is not of course, sufficient to warrant the introduction of such parol evidence as would vary the writing. The foundation is the evidence of fraud and upon it is built the evidence of the actual agreement (if any) between the parties. There must be evidence of fraud other than that which may be derived from the mere difference in the parol and written terms. It is not enough that there are parol stipulations contradictory to the written agreement. Lansaut v Runyon 19 Ky Law Rep 1931. The rule which prefers written to unwritten evidence does not so apply as to exclude the latter, when its object is to prove that the former had been fraudulently obtained and thereby to avoid the contract evidenced by it or to secure indemnity to the party injured. Buri Jones § 435. A kabulyat for a period of one year provided that on default of payment of rent the arrears would carry interest at 75 per cent per annum. The tenant held over after one year. On a suit for rent on the basis of the kabulyat, the tenant pleaded that, before the kabulyat was executed by him the landlord agreed him that the covenant for payment of interest at 75 per cent would not be enforced. This allegation was found to be true. Held that under the circumstances the kabulyat was not the real agreement between the parties, having been induced by fraudulent misrepresentation and the tenant was not liable to pay interest claimed on the basis of the kabulyat. Nadia v Brendra, 20 C W N 1067.

The fraud which under proviso 1 of section 92 may be proved must be fraud which would invalidate the document and therefore subsequent fraud

S 92. in respect of the document not such as to invalidate it, could not be a ground for admitting extraneous oral evidence under proviso 1 of section 9? Keshavrao v Raya, 8 Bom L R 287. When there is a duly signed receipt for the payment of rent oral evidence could not be admitted in supersession of the recitals in the receipts. But if the case is that false entries were made in the receipts there is a question of fraud and oral evidence is admissible under this proviso. Kumari Behari v Kalla, 1923 Oudh 15.

Where the transaction beginning with a sale deed amounted to a mortgage between the plaintiffs and defendants. Held it s 92 be applied the proviso, to that section would admit the evidence because it would be found to insist upon a claim made by the appellants to property arising out of such transactions, when the appellants must have known that the plaintiffs were the true owner. Mahadeo v Tularam A I R 1922 Bom 256.

Where an assignment is impeached on the ground that it is colourable and has the effect of defeating the rights of third parties, the provisions of section 92 of the Evidence Act are no bar to the production of oral evidence by such third parties. Parimal v Mahomed Ali 6 S L R 107. In a suit to recover rent under a labuliyat held that evidence of an oral agreement set up by the defendant, while admitting execution of the labuliyat was admissible for the purpose of proving the fraudulent character of the transaction between the parties. Kashinath v Dhundabun, 10 C 649. Kasim v Noor Pebee 1 W R 76.

Coercion or intimidation. Coercion is defined by section 15 of the Indian Contract Act. When consent to an agreement is caused by coercion the agreement is a contract voidable at the option of the party whose consent was so caused. (Vide section 19 of the Contract Act). An instrument obtained by illegal duress is an instrument, obtained by intimidation. This may be by threats as well as actual violence, actual imprisonment, privation of food or rest or the like torture. Smith v Montegrath 13 M & W 13. Threats may affect loss of life loss of member corporal imprisonment. But the duress or threat must be sufficient to overcome a firm and constant man and not a meretricious homo 11 M I A 250. Nort Li 274, see also Guthrie v Abdul 14 M I A 53, Tincori v Krishna 20 C 15. Ranganayaka v Alura 13 M 214. On this ground rests the very important exception that duress or fraud in the inception of the contract may be proved, although accompanied by the most solemn formalities. An excellent illustration of duress sufficient to avoid a contract is contained in a recent Maryland case. Moore v Putts 110 Md 190. (Am). A lessee had possession of the fire policies on certain leased property, and a fire having occurred and the lessor being unable to collect the amount covered by the policies without having such policies in his possession the lessee threatened to destroy the policies except the lessor agreed to pay him a certain sum and deliver up a note of the lessee then held by the lessor. The evidence established the facts stated, and the Court said it would be difficult to imagine a clearer case of fraud and duress in exacting such an agreement of the lessor before he could obtain possession of the policies which belonged to him, and that it would be reflection upon the administration of justice to permit a plaintiff to recover on an agreement obtained as above shown. Burr Jones § 435.

Undue influence. Undue influence is defined by s 16 of the Contract Act. "Influence, in order to be undue within the meaning of any rule of law which would make it sufficient to vitiate a Will must be an influence exercised either by coercion or by fraud." Per Cranworth L C in Boys v Rossborough 7 H L C at p 15. Similarly Farle B in Burry v Bullus (1838) 2 Moo P C at p 191 observed. "Undue influence and the importunity which is to defeat a Will must be of the nature of fraud or duress exercised on a mind in a state of debility." "The influence to vitiate an act" said Sir John Nicholl in Hallam v Goulle 1 Hogg at p 761 "must amount to force or coercion defeating free agency—it must not be the influence of affection and attachment—it must not be the mere desire of gratifying the wishes of another." See also Siti Mahomed v Dime Junbu 22 B 17. Hyer v Mullen 15 C W N 481. Siti Mahomed v Kinnay 13 M 516—47 I A 1. Bijoy Singh v Kinnay 23 C W N 10. Mahomed v Sumanj 49 Ind C 761—50 O L J 572.

Illegality The consideration or object of an agreement is lawful unless it is forbidden by law, or is of such a nature that, if permitted, it would defeat the provisions of any law or is fraudulent, or involves or implies injury to the person or property of another or the Court regards it as immoral or opposed to public policy. In each of these cases, the consideration or object of an agreement is said to be unlawful. Every agreement of which the object or consideration is unlawful is void. (Rule 23 of the Contract Act) If the consideration on either side consists of a promise and the thing promised is unlawful, the consideration is unlawful and the agreement is void. The agreement is also void if the object or purpose of the parties (including the manner in which it is intended to be carried into effect) is unlawful. Jaffer Meher v. Budge Budge Mill 33 C 702. Can Contract Act p 102. The legitimacy of a contract has to be determined by the law of the place of performance or if no particular place is designated by the law of the place where the contract is made. But the lex fori determines how far the law of a foreign country is to be recognised. Although therefore an agreement may be lawful according to the law applicable to it, it will not be enforced by the Courts of a state whose laws expressly prohibit such an agreement. Nor will the lex fori suffer the foreign law to be applied if the agreement is contrary to the interests of the state or to common principles of justice and morality. Santos v. Illidge 28 I 1 C P 317. Accordingly the Court will not enforce an agreement obtained by threats of a criminal prosecution although the agreement is valid according to the law of the country where it was made and where the parties to it were domiciled. Kaufman v. Gerson (1904) 1 K B 591. Can Contract Act p 106. Illegality covers instruments or transactions against public policy such as—bond in restraint of trade (Mitchell v. Reynolds, 1 Sm 1 C 346), bond given for an immoral consideration, Utrius causa non est in actio e.g. (1) where the obligee to live with the obligor in a state of fornication. Palmer v. Fether 3 Burr 1568. In Damun Das Banerjee v. Hurro Lal Shaha 10 W P C E 140 a contract to carry on litigation against a third party out of a desire to evade a law is void. Vol II 271. Section 127 of the Indian Succession Act 1925. 'A bequest upon a condition, the fulfilment of which would be contrary to law or to morality is void.

Parol evidence may under the proper pleading, be offered to show that the contract was made for the furtherance of objects forbidden by law or is otherwise illegal by common law. Collins v. Blanton 2 Wills 337 = 1 Sm 1 C 347. Benyon v. Nettlesfold, 3 M & G 94. Biggs v. Lawrence 21 L J 25. Head v. Head 5 T R 600. Doe v. Ford, 3 A & E 150. Smith v. Jones, 1 C & P 582. Norman v. Cole 3 Esp 25. Styde v. Styde 1 Sm 1 C 347. Evidence is always admissible to prove that the consideration or object of an agreement in writing is unlawful and that the contract is void. Ku li Nath v. Brindaban 10 C 619. Anup Chandra v. Anup Chandra 10 C 619. Madhab v. Sadasook 32 C 437. Moreover, where the consideration or object of a contract is thus unlawful it is the right and duty of the Court to take cognizance of the fact although it may not be pleaded. Kamala Nair v. Nair 8 M I A 187, Scott v. Lorne 10 L J 721, Hill v. Chase 27 A 267, Can Contract Act p 106. It is also the duty of the Court to show that an agreement in writing is void if the consideration or object of the agreement made by way of wager on a game of chance is illegal. Dass v. Venkata Subba Pam, 17 M 45.

S. 92. himself written the body of the document or not, if he has signed it. It is even immaterial whether he has signed it, if he has otherwise acknowledged, or adopted it. Hence proof of signature is sufficient to charge him. Wigmore § 2131. When it is required that a transaction, to have jurial effect, must be in writing, the requirement is one of form or solemnity. Stamp, Registration Seal, Attestation, writing—all these are different varieties of formality. These formalities, so far as required, take their place with the rule for writing in some of the Acts as an inherent element of form in the validity of the transaction. Like all other requirements of form, they are arbitrary, in the sense that the act may be sufficient in its terms (for example to constitute a contract or a release) and may be fully proved by evidence, and yet remains legally effective. Nevertheless, they are not arbitrary to the extent that they rest on a conscious policy of avoiding certain general dangers or abuses and that they enforce a rigid rule for the sake of this policy. Wigmore § 2456. The only question was whether the appellant (defendant) was entitled to produce oral evidence to prove that the contract on which the plaintiff sued was void and being illegal. The fact that the contract is not what it purports to be but an agreement for an unlawful object, is a fact which would invalidate the document on which the suit is brought. Evidence to invalidate the document is admissible. Thurugadda v. Mannu Nyo U B R (1897-1901) Vol II 399.

Want of capacity of the contracting parties. Parol evidence may also under the proper pleading, be offered to show that the party was incapable of contracting by reason of some legal impediment such as infancy, coverture, idioey, insanity or intoxication. Barrel v. Burton 2 Ack 167. Besides the two classes of persons non compos mentis viz. idiots and lunatics. Lord Coke mentions two more classes viz. the one who were of good and sound memory but by the visitation of God has lost it and those who have become non compos by their own act, as drunkards. (Will For 25). In the former of these two latter classes must be reckoned those who from sickness, grief, accident or old age have lost their reason, who are not like those classed by Lord Coke as lunatics, sometimes having their understanding and sometimes not, but those under standings are definite, who have survived the period that Providence has assigned to the stability of their minds. Williams on Executors 26 citing Lepante Chamer 12 Ves 452 by Lord Eversham. Sherrinood v. Sanderson 19 Ves 283. Rignay v. Damm 8 Ves 66.

Want or failure of consideration. An agreement made without consideration is void unless it is in writing and registered and is made on account of natural love and affection between parties standing in a near relation to each other or is a promise to compensate for something done, or is a promise to pay a debt barred by limitation law. (vide section 23 of the Contract Act 1872). This proviso of the Evidence Act permits a party to a contract reduced into writing to establish among other matters "want or failure of consideration" where in a suit on a promissory note the defence raised the plea of want of consideration. Held that there was nothing in the law preventing the defendant from establishing the plea. Chaman Lal v. Hiralal, 103 Ind Cas 158 = 26 A L J 183. If one party to a deed alleges and proves that the whole of the consideration, the receipt of which was acknowledged in the deed, did not pass, the case falls within the first proviso of section 92 of the Evidence Act and the other party is at liberty to prove what the real consideration was. Evidence can be given to prove the real nature of the consideration. Channu v. Basanti 36 A 37 = 24 Ind Cas 661 = 12 A L J 969, see also Kailash v. Harish 5 C W N 158. Where it can be shown that the consideration for a promissory note was losses in gaming this is a want or failure of consideration within the meaning of proviso (1) to section 92 of the Evidence Act and oral evidence can be given to prove that the consideration represented gambling losses. Balghobind v. Bhaggy Mal 11 A L J 874 = 35 A 588. Notwithstanding an admission in a sale deed that the consideration had been received it is open to the vendor to prove that no consideration had been actually paid. See Henry v. Flaherty U B R (1897-1901) Vol. II, 400. See also Shadai v. Dulopur A W N 1884 58. Pre-emptor can show that transaction which is a transfer a mortgage is really a sale 117 P W R 1909 Under this proviso a party to a contract may prove a fact such as want or failure of consideration, but then, if a party to a contract under that proviso be allowed to prove want or failure of consideration his opponent would not be bound by the recital in the contract, but would be competent in answer to the case made by the other side, to adduce evidence in order to prove that the consideration was different from that recited in the contract Lala Hummat v Llewellyn, 11 C 486 Notwithstanding an admission in a sale deed that the consideration has been received, it is open to the vendor to prove that no consideration has been actually paid The provisions of the Evidence Act do not render inadmissible evidence that will contradict the statements of fact in a written document When a contract of sale mentions that the amount of consideration specified in it has been received by the vendor it is competent to the vendor, under the provisions of the Evidence Act to prove a collateral agreement that the purchase money should remain in the hands of the vendee for the purposes and subject to the conditions alleged by him Sahpal v Indrajit, 22 A 370 P C = 1 C W N 485 = 27 I A 93 = 2 Bom L R 353 The want or failure of consideration contemplated by this proviso is a complete want or failure of consideration Keshabrao v Laya S Bom L R 287 Where the consideration for an assignment of a mortgage decree is stated in the registered deed of assignment to be Rs. 2,50,000 the amount of price is an essential term of the contract and oral evidence is inadmissible to prove that the price agreed to be paid was in fact something less than the amount recited in the deed Lodd v Muthuli A I R 1925 Mad 669 = 48 M L J 721 When there is a recital in a document of the payment of a certain sum of money as consideration oral evidence is admissible to prove that the recital is incorrect as a matter of fact Such a recital being only an averment of facts S. 92 of the Evidence Act does not bar oral evidence being let in to prove it to be wrong In such a case the other party may also be allowed to let in oral evidence to prove that the recital is not incorrect but was deliberately put in and for the purpose of proving it he must be allowed to prove what the real consideration was Section 92 does not in any way bar such proof for the proof is adduced not for the purpose of varying or altering any term of the written contract but only to show that the recital in the deed is correct Ramaswami v Lodi Govindoss 22 L W 818 = A I R 1926 M 35 = 19 M L J 111 Though want of consideration or failure of consideration or difference in the kind of consideration may be proved evidence to vary the consideration in a registered sale deed is inadmissible Anula v Hargobind, 27 C W N 196 = 37 C L J 502 = 75 Ind C 157 = 1923 Cal 370 In the case of a deed of sale it is open to the vendors to prove that no consideration was actually paid and oral evidence is admissible to prove that fact though contrary to the recitals in the deed Motiram v Ratnabai 55 Ind C 173 see also Singara Charlu v Upendranaga, 10 M L J 69 Fai unnessa v Hanfunnessa, 27 A 612 = A W N 1905 129 = 2 A I J 360

Considerations different from that contained in recital Although this section prevents the admission of oral evidence for the purpose of contradicting or varying the terms of a contract, it does not prevent one of the parties to the contract from showing either that there was no consideration or that the consideration was different from that stated in a conveyance Gopal Singh v Laloo Lal, 10 C L J 27 = 2 Ind Cas 95 Evidence is admissible to show that consideration, mentioned in a deed as having been paid, never passed, and also to show that the consideration specified in the deed was satisfied in a different way from that mentioned in the document itself Muhammad v Muhammad 4 A L J 441 = A W N 1907, 181

Mistake of fact "Here again" says Mr Norton, "the Indian Court sits as a Court of Equity, and will reform a document on the principles which prevail in equity vide illustration (e) In equity, parol evidence is often admitted to vary or even contradict a writing whereby some mistake, surprise or the like, it does not represent the party's true intention, but it requires a very clear case to induce the Court to interfere The mistake must be most satisfactorily made out, and the error be shown to be one which ought to be corrected this be done by the plaintiff, the Court will reform the instrument so as to make it in conformity with the true intent. A defendant against whom specific performance is sought may insist on the mistake in his defence, and establish by parol evidence. Not Et 275. Section 20 of the Contract Act enacts "where both the parties to an agreement are under a mistake as to a matter of fact essential to the agreement, the agreement is void." Section 22 of the same Act lays down "A contract is not voidable merely because it was caused by one of the parties to it being under a mistake as to a matter of fact." This section is not a bar to plead the mistake of a document writer. Bhallappa Sanjua 6 Mys L J 103. Where on a renewal of a mortgage an item of property was misdescribed and there was no property satisfying that description belonging to the mortgagor reference to the earlier deed of mortgage is permissible to establish identity of the disputed item. Abdul v Ram Gopal 41 246-20 A L J 55=L R 5 A 81=64 Ind Cr 961. A mutual mistake may in describing a piece of land in a registered mortgage deed can be proved by oral evidence. Kota Chinn v Kanni Kantua, 31 Ind Cr 671. Where a deed of mortgage under which possession of the mortgaged property was handed over to the mortgagee provided that there was to be no accounting between the parties at the time of redemption and it appeared that a portion of the mortgage consideration was set down in the deed as being due to the mortgagee from the mortgagor merely by way of guess without any accounting having been really taken at the time. Held that the mortgagor should show that there was mistake in the statement of consideration and that the mortgagee was entitled to have an account taken. Patil v Balwant 5 O L J 670=48 Ind Cr 105. Under proviso (1) to this section evidence may be admitted to prove that there was a mutual mistake in the wording in an agreement and to prove what the real intention of the parties was, and such evidence as to the alleged mistake may be given not only in a suit for the rectification of the mistake, brought under section 31 of the Specific Relief Act, but also in a suit based upon the agreement itself. Narayan Suman v James, 3 L B R 227 see also Po Vany Vannu, Br Chit A I R 1929 Rang 262. Oral evidence may be adduced to show that owing to the ignorance of the draftsman a deed of sale did not truly express the real intention of the parties. Shalur Ithun v Vishwanath 13 C P I R 33. It is open to the Court, having regard to the proviso to allow oral evidence of mutual mistake of fact to vary the terms of a deed. Mahendra v Jogendra 2 C W N 260 see also Hunt v Bousmanier 8 Wheat 211 (Am). Price v Lay 32 I T Ch 550. Motmer v Shotall 2 Dru & W 371, Holt v Hatchison 24 I T Ch 28; Wright v Goff 24 I T Ch 803.

S 92

Mistake of law. A contract is not voidable because it was caused by a mistake as to any law in force in British India, but a mistake as to law not in force in British India has the same effect as a mistake of fact. (Rule section 21 of the Indian Contract Act 1872). This accord with the English common law rule that ignorance of law cannot be pleaded. The Courts say (Chancellor Kent) do not undertake to relieve the parties from their acts and deeds fairly done, though under a mistake of law. Every man is to be charged at his peril with a knowledge of the law. There is no other principle which is safe and practicable in the common intercourse of mankind. Cited in Stor Et Jur note to § 126. At the same time Courts of Equity have claimed power to relieve against mistakes in law as well as mistakes in fact in cases where there is some circumstance which makes it inequitable that the party who has received the money of other property should retain it. Cum Fe 99, Partho Chunder v Mohendranath 17 C 692. The maxim q. Ignorantia juris non excusat refers to ignorance of ordinary law of the land and not to mistake regarding conditions of documents. Leachamp v Hinn L R 6 H L 225, Cr 101.

Mistake of fact and section 310 Specific Relief Act. When such a mistake is established the deed is to be construed by the Court as if the mistake had been rectified without the instrument having been actually ordered to be rectified in a suit brought for the purpose under section 31 of the Specific Relief Act.

Act subject to the condition that the rights of third persons acquired in good faith and for value should not be prejudiced thereby. Kota Chuna v Kauri Lantu 31 Ind Cas 671. Oral evidence is admissible to prove a mutual mistake in the description of a piece of land in a registered mortgage deed and when the mistake is so proved the document can be construed by the Courts as if the mistake had been rectified, and a separate suit for rectification of the instrument under section 31 of the Specific Relief Act is not necessary provided that the rights of third persons acquired in good faith and for consideration are not prejudicially affected thereby. Kota Chuna v Cannelanti, 3 L W 551. The combined effect of section 92 of the Evidence Act and section 31 of the Specific Relief Act is to entitle either party to a contract, whether plaintiff or defendant to protect his right by proving a mistake in contract, is a mistake in the description of the property sold by wrong survey number of the same. A prior rectification of the deed is not necessary to the advancement of the plea of mistake. Sarbjay v Kauri Singh, 104 Ind Cas 736. Where a mortgage deed stipulates that the 1 per month shall be paid as interest and the mortgagee contends that the rate of interest agreed upon is Re 1 per cent per month, the words 'per cent' having been omitted from the mortgage deed, through clerical mistake it is a case of mutual mistake of the parties and not one of latent ambiguity is contemplated by s 93. The case is similar to one in which a description of the property intended to be conveyed in a particular deed has been wrongly entered. Therefore the combined effect of section 92(1) of the Evidence Act and section 31 of the Specific Relief Act, is to entitle either party to the contract to protect his rights by proving the mistake in the written contract. Ram Bhariosay v Jani Prasad, A I R 1950 Oudh 95 (see also Kungasani v Souru Iyyan 29 M 792=29 M L J 229=29 Ind Cas 388. Abul Halim v Ramjogal, A I R 1922 All 12=44 A 246, see also Pratap Chandra v Mahomed Ali, 41 C 312=19 C L J 66=20 Ind Cas 413=15 C W N 592).

PROVISO (2)

Scope of Proviso (2) Parol evidence is admissible to prove any collateral verbal agreement as to any matter on which a document is silent, which is separate from it and not inconsistent with its terms and which might naturally be omitted from the writing. Cottle Cas 313. Vide illustration (f). The plaintiff took a lease of land from the defendant reserving to the latter the sporting rights. Evidence was admitted of a collateral verbal agreement by which the defendant promised to destroy the rabbits if the plaintiff would sign the lease although the lease was silent on the point. In admitting the evidence Kelly C B said 'I think the verbal agreement was entirely collateral to the lease and was founded on a good consideration. The plaintiff, unless the promise to destroy the rabbits had been given would not have signed the lease and a Court of Equity would not have compelled him to do so, or only on the terms of the defendant performing his undertaking.' Moisin v Griffith L R 6 Ex 70, Cottle Cas L 313. In the same case Peggot B and The verbal agreement in this case, although it does not affect the mode of enjoyment of land demised is I think purely collateral to the lease. It was on the basis of its being performed that the lease was signed by the plaintiff, and it does not appear to me to contain any terms which conflict with the written document. There is no rule that there shall only be one agreement upon any matter. There may be two (or more) in the above case, if they can consistently stand together and one may be written and the other oral. If proceedings are taken on the written agreement evidence may be given of the oral agreement. This is not falling to the written agreement, although at first sight, it may look like it. Cottle Cas Ex 313. The above case was cited with approval in De Lussac v Gumbford, L R (1901) 2 K B 215=70 L J K B 33 which perhaps may now be taken as the leading case on the matter. There the plaintiff and the defendant entered into a lease of a house by the latter to the former. The terms were arranged but the plaintiff refused to hand over the counter part that he had signed unless he received an assurance that the drains were in order. The defendant verbally represented that they were in good order, and the counterpart was thereupon handed to him. The lease contained no reference to drains. The drains were not in good order and no action was brought to recover damages for breach of warranty. In holding that the representation made by the defendant as to the drains being in good order was a warranty which was collateral to the lease, and for breach of which an action was admissible L. Smith & R. and "Now what constitutes a warranty in law, or a mere representation? To create a warranty no special form of words is necessary. It must be a collateral undertaking forming part of the contract by agreement of the parties express or implied, and must be given during the course of the dealing which leads to the bargain and should then enter into the bargain as part of it. It was laid down by Buller 1 so long ago as 1789 in Pasley v. Freeman, 3 F.R. 51. It was rightly held by Holt C.J. in Crosse v. Gardner Carth. 90 and Medina v. Stoughton 10 L.R. 210 = 1 Ed. Raym. 593, and has been uniformly adopted ever since that an affirmation at the time of sale is a warranty provided it appears on evidence to have been so intended."

S. 92

What is it the defendant asserts? I paraphrase the evidence: you need have no certificate of a sanitary inspector—it is quite unnecessary the drains are in perfect condition. I give you my word on the subject. Will that satisfy you? If so hand me over the counterpart. What more deliberate and emphatic assertion of a fact could well be made during the course of the dealing which led up to the counterpart lease being handed over to the defendant?

The next question is: was the warranty collateral to the lease so that it might be given in evidence and given effect to? It appears to me in this case clear that the lease did not cover the whole ground, and that it did not contain the whole of the contract between the parties. The lease is entirely silent about the drains, though there is a covenant that the lessee during the term should do the inside repairs and the lessor the outside repairs, which would, I suppose, include the drains which happened to be inside or outside the house. There is nothing in the lease as to the then condition of the drains—i.e. at the time of taking of the lease which was the vital point in hand. Then why is not the warranty collateral to anything which is to be found in the lease? The present contract or warranty by the defendant was entirely independent of what was to happen during the tenancy. It was what induced the tenancy and it in no way affected the terms of the tenancy during the three years which was all the lease dealt with. The warranty in no way contradicts the lease and without the warranty the lease never would have been executed. Three cases were cited in which prior collateral agreements outside leases had been allowed in evidence and given effect to by the Court namely Morgan v. Griffiths, L.R. 6 Ex. 70 Eysine v. Ideane L.R. 8 Ch. 756 in this Court, and Ingeil v. Dule, L.R. 10 Q.B. 174. The first two cases relate to prior agreement collateral to leases as to keeping down rabbits, and the last case to a prior collateral agreement to do repairs and to send in additional furniture.

In the rabbit cases the agreements were held collateral to the leases, and did not contradict the terms of the leases. It was argued by the learned counsel for the defendant that the collateral agreements in the rabbit cases were agreements that something should be done after the lease was taken and that in the present case the agreement or warranty is that the drains were in good order. This is true, but if in the rabbit cases the agreements were collateral and outside the leases the leases not containing the whole terms and the collateral agreements not contradicting the leases, I cannot see why the agreement in his case is not collateral also. It will be observed that in both these cases the subject matter of the verbal undertaking was temporary and immediate a matter which did not require to be dealt with amongst those permanent or continuous matters which are the subject of the covenants in the lease. Such covenants generally dealt with matters to be periodically attended to during the tenancy and it would doubtless be far more difficult to induce the Court to admit verbal evidence of agreements concerning such matters as it would be by no means natural to leave them to a collateral verbal arrangement where there is formal written transaction between the parties, on the other hand, it is most natural to omit from a lease an arrangement as to the immediate destruction of rabbits, or the condition of drains at the commencement of the tenancy. Cockle Cas. Et. 344

But in order that parol evidence may be admissible to prove collateral agreement, it must not conflict with, or be inconsistent with, the written document, the evidence must not amount in effect to adding additional terms to the writing. Angell v Duke 32 L T 320=L R 10 Q B 174, Cockle Cas Li 346. In that case the defendant let to the plaintiff, by a written agreement a house and furniture therein. The plaintiff offered evidence of a verbal agreement made at the same time to the effect that the defendant would send in additional furniture. It was held that such evidence was inadmissible, it being inconsistent with the written agreement. In that case Cockburn C J in delivering his judgment said "To allow the plaintiff to recover in this action would be to allow a parol agreement to conflict with a written agreement afterwards entered into. I agree with the cases which have been cited to this extent that there may be instances of collateral parol agreements which would be admissible, but this is not the case here. Something passes between the parties during the course of the negotiations, but afterwards the plaintiff enters into a written agreement to take the house and the furniture in the house, which is specified. Having once executed that, without making the terms of the alleged parol agreement a part of it, he cannot afterwards set up the parol agreement. In the same case Mellor J said 'There is one contract, the house is the same, the rent the same and the general terms the same. During the negotiations it appears to have been suggested that some more furniture should be put in, but afterwards a written contract is made affecting the house, affecting the furniture and affecting the rent and to this agreement the plaintiff is attempting to add an additional term. Blackburn J added "It is a most important rule that where there is a contract in writing it should not be added to if the written contract is intended to be the record of all the terms agreed upon between the parties, where there is a collateral contract the written contract does not contain the whole of terms. Here the case expresses the whole terms, the defendant agrees to let and the plaintiff to take, the house and furniture at a certain rent, there is said to have been an arrangement made beforehand during the negotiation, that the defendant should let the plaintiff have more furniture for the same rent, how is this collateral? I cannot perceive that it is.

But the general rule under discussion is not violated by allowing parol evidence to be given of the contents of a distinct valid contemporaneous agreement between the parties which was not reduced to writing when the same is not in conflict with the written agreement. Barr Jones § 439. Undoubtedly the existence of a separate oral agreement as to any matter on which a written contract is silent, and which is not inconsistent with its terms may be proved by parol if under the circumstances of the particular case it may be properly inferred that the parties did not intend the written paper to be a complete and final statement of the whole of the transaction between them. But such an agreement must not only be collateral, but must relate to a subject distinct from that to which the written contract applies, that is it must not be so closely connected with the principal transactions as to form part and parcel of it. And where the writing itself upon its face is couched in such terms as import a complete legal obligation, without any uncertainty as to the object or extent of the agreement of the parties, and the extent and manner of their undertaking was reduced to writing. Seitz v Breuers etc Ma Chine Co 141 U S 510. But 'where a writing although embodying an agreement is manifestly incomplete and is not intended by the parties to exhibit the whole agreement but only to define some of its terms, the writing is conclusive as far as it goes. But such parts of the actual contract as are not embraced within its scope may be established by parol. Good Etc § 23. According to the better view the only criterion of the completeness of the written contract is a full expression of the agreement of the parties in the writing itself. If it imports on its face to be a complete expression of the whole agreement,—that is, contains such language as imports a complete legal obligation—it is to be presumed that the parties introduced into it every material item and term, and parol evidence cannot be admitted to add another term to the agreement, although the writing contains nothing on the particular one to which the parol evidence is directed. Barr Jones § 440.

S 92

Where a promissory note is silent as to interest this proviso does not preclude a party from setting up and proving a subsequent oral agreement to pay interest. Sundaram v Spalding 12 C L R 163. Where there is a contract with a partnership and a promissory note signed by a partner in his own name and note in the name of the partnership as evidence of such contract all the partners will be liable. The principle that only the maker of the promissory note can be held liable thereunder is not applicable in a case where an independent contract is alleged and therefore the promisee can be allowed to adduce evidence as to the independent contract. Populay v Populay A I L R 190 Md 109.

In considering or not whether this proviso applies etc. The principal rule applies only to formally complete contracts, for in such it is reasonable to suppose that the parties have set down all they intended and omitted nothing. This presumption becomes weaker and weaker as the document is found to be less and less formal. Behave Lal v Kammer 11 W R C R 319. And in the case of memoranda of agreements etc. as we are not bound to presume that every thing has been reduced to writing, parol testimony to prove additional terms etc. is reasonably enough admissible. The rule being confined to formal and complete documents it more receipt in general may be invalidated by parol evidence of fraud or mistake. So of a loan memorandum which does not profess to embody the whole of the parties' intentions. So, where a person who hired a horse gave the owner his card on which he had written in pencil "six weeks at two guineas". If the owner was allowed to prove by parol an additional term namely that all accidents by shying should be at risk of the hirer. Jeffrey v Walton 1 Strange 267. On this ground the section directs the Courts, in considering whether parol testimony is admitted or not to have regard to the formality of the documents. Rule illustrations (g) and (h). Scott 176. Where a suit is based on a negotiable instrument which is a document of a formal character the existence of a separate oral agreement as to any matter on which the instrument is silent cannot be proved under s. 92 of the Evidence Act as proviso 2 to the section would not apply to the case. A Shalyog Hindu is an instrument of a formal character and where it is silent as to interest a separate oral agreement for payment of interest cannot be proved by virtue of proviso 2 to section 92 of the Evidence Act. Kishore Chand v Gindutta 16 P L R 1911. Tadma v Hanumanth, 17 M J J 296. Lachmi v Hemendra 18 C W N 1260. Jado v Beharilal 53 Ind Cas 212 but see Goswami Sir Ghansham Jaji v Ram Narain 11 C W N 1074=29 A 17-17 M L J 35=1 A L J 24=9 Bom L R 1. Defendant mortgaged certain shops and their stock in trade to the plaintiff. The plaintiff alleged in the plaint that it was agreed that the mortgage should include the goods which might be brought into the shop subsequent to the date of the mortgage as well. It was found that the mortgage deed, though registered was drawn up not by a lawyer but by a petition writer. Held that in considering the degree of formality of the document the fact that it was not drawn up by a skilled lawyer was of much more importance than the fact that it was registered, and that evidence of the alleged oral agreement was admissible under section 92, proviso (2) of the Evidence Act. Norlitta v Chohalungun 4 L B R 240=14 B & T 231.

When the informal and incomplete document is silent. Where the plaintiff's evidence proved that the written agreement about supply of consignments by defendant was incomplete and that there was a supplementary oral agreement. Held that it would not be inconsistent with the terms of the document that there should have been an agreement that the consignments should be sent when the plaintiff ordered or requested that they should be sent and that the defendant was not bound to despatch consignments without definite order. Seth Larnu Chand v Sahabuddin, 70 Ind Cas 844=A I R 1923 Nag 46. Where a deed of lease does not mention the places fixed for payment of rent it is open to the plaintiff to show that it was subsequently agreed between the parties that rent was to be paid at a particular place. Onkar Prasad v Bubi Das 8 N L J 81=89 Ind Cas 273=A I R 1925 Nag 281. Under this proviso the existence of any separate oral agreement as to any matter con-which a document is silent and which is not inconsistent with its terms may be proved. This proviso applies where the document is of an informal character. Jodhraj v Bapat, 7 N L J 27=81 Ind Cas 309. Following on a contract for sale of goods, the vendor gave a Parthananan reciting the payment of a sum of money, and the varying terms of the contract, i.e. the quantity of good, its price and the time of performance. It was signed only by one of the parties and did not advert to the obligations of one of the contracting parties. On a question arising whether oral evidence was admissible as to whether there was an agreement that the goods were to be supplied only on receipt of the full purchase money, held it was admissible under the second proviso to this section. Tanai v Kunnappa 86 Ind Cas 426=A I R 1925 Mad 1029. Where a document does not embody all the terms of a contract between the parties but is merely a written admission of a fact there is nothing, in section 92 to exclude evidence of the real meaning of the words used. Summa v Iru, 93 Ind Cas 193=A I R 1926 Nag 401.

S. 92.

Document is silent—and terms not inconsistent with the terms of the contract. In a lease the rent was stated to be a certain sum but a deduction on account of rent in suspense was allowed and a lesser sum was actually payable. The plaintiff sued upon the loan and alleged that the deduction was allowed because a quantity of land was not at that time fit for cultivation but that there was an oral agreement to the effect that the rent in suspense would be received as soon as the quality of the land improved. Held that under proviso 2 section 92 of the Evidence Act the oral agreement could be proved because the lease omitted to specify the reasons for which the rent was kept in suspense and the period during which it was to continue in abeyance and that the plaintiff might establish that the contingency upon which the rent was agreed to be received had happened. Satish Chandra v Kamru Mohan, 7 Ind Cas 721. Where a sale deed was executed for a consideration of Rs 35,000 but in fact settled by oral contract to be Rs 35,000 and the discharge of a mortgage for Rs 1000 held that the oral contract is inadmissible in a suit for cancellation of the mortgage or for damages for breach of the oral contract under proviso 2 or 3 of section 92 of the Evidence Act. Ramalingam v Adityam Iyer 14 M L J 337=(1913) M W N 859=21 Ind Cas 163. A partition suit between two brothers was compromised and decree drawn up accordingly. The property was thereby divided between them in certain proportions. The plaintiff alleged that part of the terms of the compromise was that he should receive a certain sum of money from his brother in order to equalize the lots. The compromise was, however, for certain reasons silent as to this. He sued the defendant for that sum of money. Held that the plaintiff could not give oral evidence of the agreement, as the document providing for the division of the property between the brothers was one of considerable importance and the alleged oral agreement to pay the money was not a separate agreement but part and parcel of the very contract that was reduced to writing and the case did not fall under proviso (2) of section 92 of the Evidence Act. Ibdu v Ibdu 11 A L J 770=21 Ind Cas 305. Where the defendant admitted the execution (jointly with H) of the promissory note sued upon, but averred that it was verbally agreed that his liability on it should cease by a specified date. Held that evidence of such an agreement was admissible under proviso 2 of section 92 of the Act—being a separate agreement on a matter on which the promissory note was silent and not inconsistent with its terms. Motabhai v Mulji 19 C W N 713=25 M L J 589=13 A L J 529=39 B 399. Where an ahkuta on which a suit was brought, was virtually a memorandum of the loan without any mention of the rate of interest section 92 sub section (2) of the Evidence Act did not prevent the parties from letting in evidence showing the rate of interest agreed upon between the parties at the time of the loan. Aabin Chandra v Debenha 36 Ind Cas 612. Evidence relating to an oral agreement entered in a bahu to pay interest is admissible under the 2nd proviso to section 92 of the Evidence Act and the existence of such an agreement is a question of fact which cannot be considered in second appeal. Bhan Singh v Colat 30 Ind Cas 137. A mortgagor's bond contained the following stipulation for interest: 'I have borrowed from you Rs 300 I shall pay for the aforesaid sum every year between two brothers was compromised and decree drawn up accordingly. The property was thereby divided between them in certain proportions. The plaintiff alleged that part of the terms of the compromise was that he should receive a certain sum of money from his brother in order to equalize the lot. The compromise was however for certain reasons silent as to this. He sued the defendant for that sum of money. Held that the plaintiff could not give oral evidence of the agreement as the document providing for the division of the property between the brothers was one of considerable importance and the alleged oral agreement to pay the money was not a separate agreement but part and parcel of the very contract that was reduced to writing, and the case did not fall under proviso (2) to section 92 of the Evidence Act. Abdul Hamid v. Abdul Mujid 11 A L J 770 = 21 Ind Cas 305. Where a bond provided that the executors should do Lama work in lieu of interest and the document was silent as to the payment of wages, held that section 92 of the Evidence Act was no bar to evidence being adduced as to the executors having been paid their wages. Karuppannan v. Pambayan, 101 Ind Cas 39 = 25 I W 601 = A I R 1927 Mad 531.

PROVISO (3)

Scope of the proviso (3) This proviso is based on the English rule which does not exclude evidence of oral agreement which constitutes a condition on which the performance of written agreement is to depend. Laudley v. Lokey 17 Com B N S 557. Taylor v. Li § 1135. The meaning of this proviso is shown by illustration (1). The defendant agreed in writing to buy of the plaintiff a certain invention. Evidence was tendered by the defendants to the effect that they declined to purchase unless one Abernethy, an engineer, approved of the machine and that as Abernethy was absent, and one of the defendants could not conveniently return to sign the document after seeing him, it was expressly agreed verbally that the written document was signed conditionally upon Abernethy's approval being obtained and that Abernethy had disapproved of the machine. It was held that such evidence was admissible to show that the written document was not operative. Pyon v. Campbell, 6 A & E 370. Corkle v. Thayer 318. Thayer v. Pyon 331. In delivering his judgment, Eyre J. said: "The point made is that this is a written agreement, absolute on the face of it, and that evidence was admitted to show it was conditional and if that had been so it would have been wrong. But I am of opinion that the evidence showed that in fact there was never any agreement at all. The production of the paper purporting to be an agreement by a party with his signature attached, affords a strong presumption that it is his written agreement, and if in fact he did sign the paper animo contrahendi the terms contained in it are conclusive, and can not be varied by parol evidence, but in the present case the defence begins one step earlier, the parties met and expressly stated to each other that though for convenience they would then sign the memorandum of the terms, yet they were not to sign it as an agreement until Abernethy was consulted. I grant the risk that such a defence may be set up without ground, and I agree that a jury should therefore always look on such a defence with suspicion, but, if it be proved that in fact the paper was signed with the express intention that it should not be an agreement the other party cannot fix it as an agreement upon those so signing. The distinction in point of law is that evidence to vary the terms of an agreement in writing is not admissible but evidence to show that there is not an agreement at all is admissible. In the same case Crompton J. said: 'I know of no rule of law to estop parties from showing that a paper purporting to be a signed agreement was in fact signed by mistake or that it was signed on the terms that it should not be in agreement till money paid or something else done. They may show that they never came to an agreement at all and that the signed paper was never intended to be the record of the terms of the agreement, for they never had agreeing minds. Evidence to show that it does not vary an agreement and is admissible. Lord Campbell C. J. adds: 'I agree. No addition to or variation from the terms of a written contract can be made by parol but in this case the defence was that there never was any agreement entered into

S 92 Evidence to that effect was admissible, and evidence given in this case was overwhelming. Another useful case is Wallis v Little, 11 C B N S 369 in which evidence was allowed of a verbal arrangement that a written agreement for the sale of a lease should be conditional on the consent of the landlord. The Court said "It is in analogy with the delivery of a deed as an escrow, it never varies nor contradicts the writing but suspends the commencement of the obligation." Thus even a formal deed fully executed may be suspended in its operation by a verbal agreement as an escrow. Cockle Cas. Ex 349, Murray v Lord Stau, 2 B & C 82. In Davis v Jones, 17 C B 625, it was held that parol evidence was admissible to show that a written contract, which was undated, was not intended to operate from its delivery, but from a future uncertain period. In Jaganmunda v Narghan Singh, 6 C 433 435 Garth C J said "That proviso (i.e. proviso 3), as it seems to me, is intended to introduce into the law of evidence the rule which is well established and understood in England and treated of in s 1033 of Mr Taylor's book on Evidence. That rule is, that when at the time of written contract being entered into it is orally agreed between the parties that the written agreement shall not be of any force or validity until some condition precedent has been performed parol evidence of such oral agreement is admissible to show that the condition has not been performed and consequently that the written contract has not become binding. This will be found exemplified and explained in the following cases—Davis v Jones 17 C B 625 Bell v Lord Ingestre 12 Q B 317, Pym v Campbell 6 E & B 370 Immagirobala v Krishnaswami 1 M H C R 457. These cases show that until the condition is performed there is in fact no written agreement at all. But this rule could never apply to a case where the written agreement had not only become binding but had actually been performed as to a large portion of its obligations. To admit parol evidence to show that some particular stipulation could not be enforced would be to introduce the mischief which s 92 was intended to prevent, and it seems clear to me that the true meaning of the words 'a y obligation' in proviso 3 is any obligation whatever under the contract, and not as is contended by the defendants some particular obligation which the contracts may contain. So it may be shown by parol evidence that a document signed is in agreement had not been intended by the parties to operate as a present contract but that it was meant to be conditional on the happening of an event which had never occurred. Pym v Campbell 25 L J Q B 277 Wallis v Little 31 L J C F 100. Wherever therefore, certain conduct or writing is put forward against a party as his purporting act no principle prevents him from showing that there never was a consummation of the act. Wigmore § 2408. The truth is that the rules excluding parol evidence have no place in any inquiry in which the Court has not got before it some ascertained paper binding and of full effect. Per Wilde P J in Guard house v Blackburn L R 1 P & D 109 Wigmore § 2408.

On the one hand says Prof Wigmore "it is well accepted that the handing of the deed to a third person is not necessarily final, the document may still be withdrawn or (less correctly) revoked. On the other hand, the maker retention of the document does not necessarily negative the act's finality, this too may be deemed an untenable law since Mr Justice Blackburn in masterly exposition Doe v Knight 5 B & C 671" Wigmore § 2408. In Jenos v Wickham 2 H I C 296, Blackburn J said "No particular technical form of words or acts is necessary to render an instrument the deed of the party sealing it the mere affixing the seal does not render it ticked but as soon as there are acts or words sufficient to show that it is intended by the party to be executed a his deed presently finding on him it is sufficient." See also Gudgen v Bessel, 6 F B 956. The true construction to be placed on this proviso is that the provisions thereof are inapplicable in a case in which any obligation under the written contract has attached and if the effect of the alleged contemporaneous oral agreement is merely to suspend the performance of the obligations contained in the written contract evidence of such oral agreement cannot be admitted. On the other hand it is permissible to adduce evidence of a contemporaneous oral agreement under which the parties to the written contract agreed that until the happening of a certain event no obligation whatever under the

S. 92 When the execution of a deed is in issue what was said and done at the time and by whom done are the very vital facts. Burr Jones § 171 If a deed has never been delivered or if a party to an instrument obtains possession thereof by fraud or in any improper manner, this of necessity must be shown by parol and such evidence is no contradiction of the writing. The act and fact of delivery is independent of the language of the instrument. Delivery consists of an act of the hand joined with a purpose of the mind. It comes after the scrivener has done his work and after signing of the paper. Whether or not a deed was delivered is an issue frequently made in the Courts, and has been since deeds were written. If parol evidence, to establish or to refute delivery, is incompetent, then the issue of delivery would never arise for delivery rests not in words written but in things done or said. It may be shown that the party obtained possession of it by accident and against the will of the other party or that by mistake of both parties a wrong paper was delivered. Burr Jones § 171 A and B enter into a written agreement for the sale of an interest in a patent and at the same time agree verbally that the agreement shall not come into force unless C approves of it. C does not approve. The party interested may show this. Pym v Campbell 6 El & B 370 A, a farmer agrees in writing to transfer to B, another farmer, a farm which A holds of C. It is verbally agreed that the agreement is to be conditional on C's consent. B sues A for not transferring the farm. A may prove the condition as to C's consent, and the fact that he does not consent. Wallis v Littell, 11 Com B N S 360 = 31 L J C P 100 In a suit on a promissory note the defendant pleaded an oral agreement that plaintiff should discharge a mortgage that was subsisting on the property sold to him by the plaintiff before he could enforce payment of the amount due on the promissory note. Held that the agreement pleaded is not admissible in evidence under s 92 proviso (3). The proviso will apply to the case of a non-attachment of an obligation under the written contract until the event provided for in the oral agreement happens and not to the case of a mere postponement of the performance of the legal obligation until the happening of the event. Muniamma v Surappa 4 Mys L J 74 Where in a suit on a promissory note the defendant pleads an oral agreement at the time to set off moneys due to the executant under some other account the agreement is contrary to the nature of the document and is not admissible in evidence. The case of a condition precedent to the performance of a contract in writing is different and evidence to prove such an oral agreement is admissible. Ram Singh v Ibrahim 78 Ind Cas 418 = 1925 Sind 136 The plaintiff brought a suit on a promissory note executed by P N in respect of which P H stood surety without mentioning the terms of the contract in the plaint. P H contended that he was not a party to the contract and that his liability on the promissory note could only be determined after the settlement of account with the executant which was upheld. Held on appeal (1) that under s 92 (3) of the Evidence Act the oral evidence as to the surety's part in the transaction is admissible to supplement the terms of the contract and that the written and the oral agreements together constituted a condition precedent to the attaching of any liability under the promissory note which was taken as a security and that it is not open to the plaintiff to treat the promissory note as a separate contract and to enforce it without taking the whole contract into account. Mancekjee v Young Po Han 2 Ram 432 = A I R 1925 Rang 83 An attempt to show that the agreement reduced to writing is not what it purported to be but something different is opposed to section 92 (3) of the Evidence Act but oral evidence of an agreement constituting a condition precedent to the attaching of an obligation under the instrument could be proved. Tata v Savana 71 Ind Cas 477 = 6 N L J 21 = 1923 Nag 13. It is open to a person who admits the execution of a promissory note to plead want of consideration therefor. Lallu Lal v Reoti Ram, 45 A 679 = 21 L J 669 = 74 Ind Cas 353 (1) In a suit on a promissory note the defendant was that the promissory note in the suit was given to secure the plaintiff mortgagee against any claim that might be made by them—prior mortgagees who had been paid off and from whom the defendant has not obtained a reconveyance. Held that this alleged agreement amounted to a suspension of the obligation attaching under the note until necessity for enforcing the indemnity arises. It was not an agreement to postpone payment of an existing liability but one by which the note is to have no legal effect until the eventuality to guard against which it was passed, arises. Under the circumstances the alleged agreement may be proved under proviso (3) to section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act. Ahmed v Ubhaya 25 Bom L R 867=1924 Bom 44

Proviso 3 is intended to embody the rule that when at the time of a written contract being entered into it is orally agreed between the parties that the written agreement shall not be of any force or validity until some condition precedent has been performed, parol evidence of such oral agreement is admissible to show that the condition has not been performed and consequently that the written contract has not become binding. Until that condition is performed there is in fact no written agreement at all. Habib Ali v Lala Ram Narayan 9 O L J 273=1 U P L R (O C) 69=68 Ind Cas 520=1922 Oudh 270. The proviso cannot help a defendant who wishes to prove a separate oral agreement, as to the rate of interest between him and the plaintiff when the document provides for interest at a specific rate. Habib Ali v Lala Ram Narayan 9 O L J 273=1 U P L R (O C) 69=68 Ind Cas 520=1922 Oudh 270. A person is not permitted to vary the terms of a written contract by proof of a contemporaneous oral agreement under this proviso a contemporaneous oral agreement to the effect that a written contract was to be of no force at all and that it was to impose no obligation at all until the happening of a certain event may be proved. It may be shown that the instrument was not meant to operate until the happening of a given condition but it cannot be shown by parol evidence that the agreement is to be defeated on the happening of a given event. Ali Jauad v Kulayan 44 A 421=20 A L J 217=66 Ind Cas 131

Under this proviso a party is entitled to prove the existence of a separate oral agreement constituting a condition precedent to the attaching of any obligation under the contract and consequently, to show that the contract is to be considered as binding only when confirmed by the principals themselves. Dhananath v Metharam, 33 C L J 577. In a suit on a promissory note payable on demand it is not open to the defendant to plead by way of defence a contemporaneous oral agreement where the plaintiff has agreed that he will not present the note, although it is payable on demand until he has discharged certain incumbrances on the property he has sold to a stranger. Tishnu v Ganesh, 45 B 1155=23 Bom L R 488=63 Ind Cas 673

It is open to the Court to decide under proviso (3) that the nyaya patta granted by a landlord was intended to be operative only in the event of the lessee being able to obtain possession of the leasehold property and that such possession was a condition precedent to the attaching of any obligation under the lease upon which a suit could be based. Kabuluddin v Sabdar Ali 29 C L J 478=50 Ind Cas 918

In a suit on two promissory notes which contained the words 'I promise to pay you hereafter' the defendant pleaded that there existed a separate oral agreement constituting a condition precedent to the attaching of the obligation and that the word 'hereafter' in the two notes referred to that agreement. Held that the alleged oral agreement was admissible in evidence under proviso 3 of section 92. Ainul v Isa Ram 31 P R 1877. Where the plaintiff purported to sell certain land to the defendants under a deed of sale and there was an arrangement that the deed should take effect only if the defendants succeeded in getting possession of the property in a suit held that oral evidence of the arrangement was admissible in evidence under s 92, proviso 3 Evidence Act. Mahalinga v Hyder 9 M L T 450. It is open to a defendant to sue on a promissory note executed by him as a subscriber to a chit fund to prove that the promissory note was executed and delivered only as security for the payment of future instalments to the chit fund. Panchapala v Appaswami, 107 Ind Cas 510. Where in a suit for recovering of money based on an instrument which recited that the borrower had taken in money and brought it into his own use the defendant tendered evidence to prove that he had executed such instrument upon the understanding that it should not be binding upon him unless a condition precedent was performed by the plaintiff held that the evidence was admissible. Kishen v Chandi, A W N 1882 93

S. 92

PROVISO (1)

Scope of the proviso (4) Parol evidence is admissible to prove any subsequent verbal agreement rescinding or altering the terms of a written document, unless writing is required by law to render the transaction in question enforceable, in which case such evidence cannot be given to alter the terms of such written document. Goss v Lord Nugent, 5 B & Ad 8=21 L J K B 127=Cockle Cas 351=Thayer Cas 1 v 87; Denman C J (in delivering the judgment of the Court which consisted of Taunton Littledale, Parle and Patterson JJ) said "By the general rule of common law, if there be a contract which has been reduced into writing, verbal evidence is not allowed to be given of what passed between the parties either before the written instrument was made or during the time that it was in a state of preparation so as to add to or subtract from, or in any manner to vary or qualify the written contract, but after the agreement has been reduced into writing, it is competent to the parties at any time before breach of it by a new contract not in writing either altogether to waive dissolve or annul the former agreement or in any manner to add to or subtract from, or vary or qualify the terms of it, and thus to make a new contract, which is to be proved, partly by the written agreement and partly by the subsequent verbal terms engrifted upon what will be thus left of the written agreement. And if the present contract was not subject to the control of any Act of Parliament we think that it would have been competent for the parties by word of mouth to dispense with requiring a good title to be made to the lot in question, and that the action might be maintained. But the Statute of Frauds has made certain regulations as to contracts for the sale of lands. (So) we think the object of the Statute of Frauds was to exclude all oral evidence as to contracts of the sale of lands, and that any contract which is sought to be enforced must be proved by the writing only." This proviso deals with two points. In the first place it lays down that if a transaction has been reduced into writing not because the law requires but because the parties find it convenient then since there is nothing in general law, which prevents them from subsequently modifying it or rescinding it altogether by oral agreement, so there is nothing in the rules of evidence, which prevents them from proving the alteration or rescission. But a matter which the law requires to be in writing can no more be altered by a subsequent than by a contemporaneous oral agreement because the rule of law prohibits it. Makby Et 73. It was contended in a case that the word 'or should be interpreted as 'and' and as such oral evidence should be admissible in cases of documents which are not compulsorily registrable but which have been registered. This contention however was negatived. Vocoor v Ashutosh, 9 C W N ccxiv. Under this proviso evidence of a subsequent oral agreement rescinding or modifying a contract, etc in writing is not admissible but the proviso does not exclude a distinct subsequent new oral agreement super-eding the old contract in toto. Lal hon Ram v Amir Khan 14 P R 1889. The exception at the end of proviso 4 to section 92 of the Evidence Act applies to any agreement whether executed or executory. Goseli Subba Rao v Tarigonda Narasimham 27 M 368. The provision of this proviso do not preclude the admissibility of oral evidence to prove the discharge and satisfaction of a mortgage bond. Rundal v Gobinda 4 C W N 301.

Parol proof of subsequent agreement The general rule under discussion however does not prevent the proof of 'the existence of any distinct, subsequent oral agreement to rescind or modify any such contract grant or disposition of property, provided that such agreement is not invalid under the Statute of Frauds or otherwise.' Steph Et Art 90. Goss v Nugent 5 B & Ad 8. The general rule does not purport to exclude negotiations respecting written contracts unless they are prior to or contemporaneous with the making of the written instrument and in a great variety of cases it has been held admissible to prove by parol a subsequent change, modification addition or even discharge. For example it is admissible to show by parol that the written contract has been abandoned except in so far as it has been modified by a new parol agreement.

that the time or place of payment or of performance of the contract has been changed that performance has been prevented or waived by the other party, that the mode of payment for services has been changed or that the contract has been wholly discharged. It is not necessary to the admission of this kind of testimony that any new consideration be proved. 'The same consideration which existed for the old agreement is imported into the new agreement which is substituted for it.' Lord Denman in Stead v. Dauber, 10 Ad. & L. 17. Where it was sought to be proved that the plaintiff had relinquished his right to a portion of the rent renewed under a Kabuliat by means of a new agreement subsequent to the date of the instrument. Held that the acts and conduct of the parties were not admissible in evidence to prove that the terms of the agreement have been varied. Talshim v. Nabathup 116 Ind. Cas. 733 = 56 C. 201 = A. I. R. 1929 Cal. 437. The expression 'oral agreement' as used in this proviso is wide enough to include all written agreements whether they are oral or they are implied from acts and conduct of the parties. Human v. Jadhuka, 10 Pat. L. J. 669 = A. I. R. 1929 Pat. 717, Mayandi v. Oliver, 22 M. 261, Rudra Ramulu v. Lhabani, 12 C. L. J. 439 = 6 C. W. N. 60. Talhatulla v. Bishambhar, 12 C. L. J. 646, see also Morell v. Studd (1913) 2 Ch. 618, Burner v. Moore (1904) 1 Ch. 305 (312), Hughes v. Mello Ry 2 App. Cas. 439, Manmunda v. Durga Sundari, 20 C. W. N. 650 = 32 Ind. Cas. 185. The word 'oral' in this proviso is used in the sense of "not committed to writing," and includes all unwritten agreements whether come to by word of mouth or inferred from the acts and conduct of the parties. Mayandi v. Oliver, 22 M. 261 = 8 M. L. J. 196. As regards the alternative defence set up by the defendant in his case not only claiming the property as a preferable lien but also setting up an oral agreement whereby she alleged she had acquired it by transfer to her of the rights of the plaintiffs under their sale deed. Held that proviso 1 of section 92 of the Evidence Act was no bar to an enquiry into the merits of the latter defence based on the agreement, for the object of the alleged oral agreement was not to rescind the original transaction as affected between the plaintiffs and their vendor, but to transfer any right acquired by the plaintiffs to the defendant. Rahmabai v. Tularam, 11 B. 17.

Parol proof of subsequent agreement, in case where the document has been reduced into writing. The exclusion of evidence by section 92 is itself excluded by proviso 4 and a notification of a written agreement to submit matters in dispute to arbitration can be proved by oral evidence. Pyralal v. Ghanaram, 83 Ind. Cas. 22 = A. I. R. 1925 Nag. 203. In a written lease for a period of 5 years there was a condition that if the lessee desired a renewal he should give a written notice three months before the expiration of the term of the lease. The lessee alleged that one of the lessors had told his wife that there was no need to give a written notice as provided for by the lease and hence no written notice for renewal had been given. Held that the alleged statement of the lessor regarding the written notice for renewal was not admissible in evidence under section 92 proviso 4 of the Evidence Act. Such a statement, on being assented to by the lessee, amounted either to modification or rescission of the contract of lease within s. 92 proviso 4 of the Evidence Act. Mars D'Cruz v. Jitendra Nath, 46 C. 1079 = 30 C. L. J. 94 = 53 Ind. Cas. 684. Under proviso 4 a party is entitled to prove the existence of any distinct subsequent oral agreement which modifies the written contract where the contract is neither required by law to be in writing nor has been registered according to the law in force for the time being as to the registration of documents. Where parties, who have bound themselves by a written agreement depart from what has been so agreed on in writing and adopt some other line of conduct it is incumbent on the party insisting on and endeavouring to enforce a substituted verbal agreement, to show not merely what he understood to be the new terms on which the parties were proceeding but also that the other party had the same understanding that both parties were proceeding on a new agreement the terms of which they both understood. Parl of Dunley v. London Chatham Rail Co 2 H. L. 13 (60). Dina Nath v. Mutha Ram 33 C. L. J. 577. An agreement when confirmed, becomes operative with effect from the date when originally made. Dina Nath v. Mutha Ram, 33 C. L. J. 577. A partnership

S 92 which has been constituted by a registered deed can be dissolved by an oral agreement Abdul Rahaman v Asgar Ali U B R (1902 1903) Vol II Evidence 5 Prior to the due date of a registered hypothecation bond securing Rs 750 with interest, the obligor, the obligee, and a creditor of the latter, made an oral agreement whereby Rs 600 due by the obligee to his creditor was appropriated towards the discharge of the bond debt In a suit by obligor to recover the whole amount secured by the bond by enforcement of lien held that there was nothing in section 92 proviso (4) of the Evidence Act or in any provision of law to debar the obligor from proving by oral testimony that he satisfied and discharged the bond in whole or in part before due date Phakar Rai v Gul ar Ram, A W N 1890, 193 The first defendant (mortgagee) sold the mortgaged property to the second defendant under the power of sale contained in the mortgage deed The plaintiff mortgagor sued for a declaration that the sale was void and for redemption, contending that, on the day before the sale took place, the first defendant orally agreed to give him four days time within which to pay off his mortgage debt and to postpone the sale and that the second defendant had notice of his agreement prior to his purchase Held that oral evidence of this agreement was admissible because it did not fall within proviso 4 of section 92 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872), as being an agreement to modify any of the terms of the mortgage Fimbal v Bhaquan Das, 23 B 348 Oral evidence of an agreement subsequent to the execution of a promissory note payable on demand varying its terms as regards its exigibility on demand is precluded under this section Sheikh Jamu v Mahammad 90 Ind Cas 378

Parol proof of subsequent agreement in cases of transaction which is required by law to be in writing and registered Where the parties enter into a contract, they can substitute another in its place and the substituted contract is the one to be looked to, not the one which was first entered into If the law requires that the substituted contract shall be made only in a certain way and in compliance with certain formalities such as writing and registration then unless it is so made it cannot take effect and the old contract subsists Ukyo v Mg Pan 10, 74 Ind Cas 154=1923 Rang 102 So when an agreement modifying the terms of a prior document requires to be registered, but is not so registered the document is inadmissible in evidence and oral evidence is precluded under section 92 (4) to prove its terms Kastur Chand v Singhai Hatam Chand 93 Ind Cas 95=A I R 1926 Nag 321 But this proviso does not exclude oral evidence of the discharge of the mortgage bond when it is pleaded that it was made partly by payment of money and partly by the release of the debt Moham Chandra v Ramdayal, 30 C W N 371=9 Ind Cas 757=A I R 1926 Cal 170 Where the agreement of lease on which plaintiff's suit is based is in writing and registered it is not open to the defendant to prove by oral evidence that the lease was surrendered under a later oral agreement of the parties Doda v Mutlappa 2 Mys L J 124 An oral agreement to receive lesser amount than was due on a registered mortgage deed in full discharge of it cannot be proved under s 92 (4) of the Evidence Act and section 17 (b) of the Registration Act In such a case the actual discharge cannot also be proved Lugnarayan v Supham 100 Ind Cas 54=52 M L J 224 This proviso excludes oral evidence of an agreement to sell following upon a registered mortgage deed Maung Wint v Maung Lau 3 Rang 243=89 Ind Cas 825=8 A I R 1925 Rang 32 Even though a tenancy has been created by a registered instrument the termination of the tenancy can be proved otherwise than by a registered instrument There is no question of varying or modifying the terms of the lease in such a case Umayy Kumar v Chadulla, 64 Ind Cas 893 Oral evidence regarding the existence of a subsequent oral agreement is excluded not only in cases in which the original contract grant or disposition of property is by law required to be in writing but also in cases where such contract grant or disposition of property has been registered Chandha Das v Albar, 110 Ind Cas 261 But there is nothing to prevent oral evidence being adduced in order to prove satisfaction of a claim Maung La v Maung Po Thant 6 Rang 191=110 Ind Cas 612=A I R 1928 Rang 144 Subsequent oral agreement to take less than what is due under a registered mortgage deed in an agreement modifying the term of a written contract and oral evidence is inadmissible to prove it under s 92 proviso 4, of the Evidence Act Gnanaya v Ratha, 9 Lih 597=110 Ind Cis 421=A I R 1928 Lih 873 Where the subsequent oral agreement relates to the mode of payment of mortgage money, evidence with respect to it is admissible. But if it is not merely an agreement as regards the mode of payment but an alteration of the character of mortgage itself such as changing the original mortgage which was without possession into a usufructuary mortgage it is not admissible Chandra v Ubor 110 Ind Cis 261 One of several mortgagees can enter into an oral agreement with the mortgagee for the redemption of his share only of the mortgage and proof of the oral agreement under which money is paid for redemption is not precluded by section 92, proviso 4 of the Evidence Act. The proof of oral agreement and payment does not amount to a re-cession of the contract of mortgage but only shows that as between the parties the contract is discharged to that extent Kandaswami v Palaniswami, (1928) M W N 537=A I R 1928 Mad 1050 When the plea is to alter the terms of the mortgage oral evidence is inadmissible Sukhlal v Jetha, 30 Bom L R 1455=A I R 1928 Bom 522, Mahomed v Nanhe Mal, 27 A L J 924=119 Ind Cis 107=A I R 1929 A 615 An oral agreement between the mortgagor and the mortgagee whereby the latter agreed to forego interest in consideration of the payment of the principal sum in a lump within a certain date is inadmissible in evidence Naung Shue v The Chetty Firm of 4 M 43 Ind Cas 913 So also a subsequent agreement by the mortgagee to take less than is due under a registered mortgage is an agreement modifying the terms of a written contract and if it has to be proved, oral evidence is inadmissible under proviso (4) to section 92 of the Evidence Act Malappa v Nagachetty, 12 M 11=35 M L J 553=48 Ind Cis 158 In a suit to recover money due on a registered mortgage-deed, defendants led oral evidence to show that the mortgagees were discharged by a payment of a lesser sum. A question having arisen whether the evidence was admissible. Held that the evidence was inadmissible under section 92 proviso 1 of the Evidence Act the defendant's case being that the plaintiff agreed to receive a lesser sum given in full satisfaction to the much greater amount which was due on the mortgage Jagannath v Shankor, 44 B 55=22 Bom L R 39=51 Ind Cis 699 Even where the original lease is a registered one, a raiyat can orally surrender his holding under section 96 of the Bengal Tenancy Act if it was not for a fixed period and its possession is given up Poran Malia v Indra Sen 47 C 129 When an under raiyat interest of the value of less than Rs 100 is created by a registered instrument it will not preclude the admission in evidence of an unregistered instrument to show that the interest has been relinquished. A relinquishment for consideration may be recorded as a conveyance and in the view of a document by which in interest to unmoveable property of the value of less than Rs 100 is relinquished does not require registration Soman v Molla, 57 Ind Cas 949

Under this proviso any variation of rent reserved by a registered lease must be made by a registered instrument, and oral evidence is inadmissible to prove such variation and an agreement is none the less oral because it is inferred from the conduct of the parties Manindra v Durga 20 C W N 680=32 Ind Cis 185 Evidence that since the execution of the Kabuliyat the tenant paid rent at a lower rate than that stated in the Kabuliyat is admissible to show that the intention of the parties was that the Kabuliyat from the first was not intended to be acted upon or that there had been a waiver of the strict terms of the lease Manindra v Durga Sundari, 20 C W N 680=32 Ind Cis 185 This proviso is not applicable to cases of mortgage or sale deeds executed prior to the passing of Act IV of 1882 because at that time there was no law which required a sale-deed of immoveable property to be in writing Jangi Ram v Sheoray Singh, 30 Ind Cas 231 This proviso precludes evidence of an oral agreement to renew a registered contract Namagiri v Srinivasa, 27 Ind Cas 269 Although a mortgage deed has been duly executed and attested and no obligation attaches thereunder till certain conditions have been fulfilled, upon fulfilment of the conditions, the obligation attaches from the date of its execution and not from the date of registration or delivery of the deed Jalunandan v Kalyan Singh, 15 C L J 61=16

S 92 C W N 612=13 Ind C is 631 Section 92 (1) does not exclude evidence of oral agreement substituting a new contract for a previous one in writing and registered. That clause refers only to an oral agreement to rescind or modify such contract. Japal Singh v. Dey Datta Mall, 169 P R 1583. In a suit for redemption of the mortgage, the defendant pleaded a sale of the mortgaged property. Held that section 92 clause (1) does not exclude evidence of sale for the new contract does not rescind or modify the former one which is merely merged in the new one. Bulboul v. Hira, 39 P R 1881. Evidence of conduct of parties oral or documentary, for showing cancellation of a registered mortgage is shut out by s 92 (1) Evidence Act. Srinivas Suman v. Mthram 5 M I T, 1=19 M I J 280=2 Ind C is 612.

A parol agreement between a mortgagee and the assignee of his interest whereby the latter was to pay the consideration for the sale to a third party to the credit of the mortgagee is an attempted rescission of a contract, required by law to be in writing, by a subsequent oral agreement which is forbidden by s 92 (1) of the Evidence Act, and is inadmissible in evidence. Iyataly v. Aalamuli 9 Ind C is 310. See also Kattika v. Kistamma, 17 M L J 30=30 M 231. A subsequent oral agreement by which the plaintiff would get the money for cost and vasalat and would make deduction from the rent corresponding to the amount received, is not admissible in evidence under proviso (4) of section 92 of the Evidence Act to prove modification of terms of a registered Kahuliya Bank v. Bhaty Sanyal v. Shama Charan 12 C L J 442=8 Ind C is 792. In a suit on a registered lease deed for rent due for two years the defendant alleged that as he was not realizing proper income the plaintiff orally agreed to receive rent at a reduced rate. In support of this contention the defendant produced a receipt acknowledging receipt of a less amount in full discharge for one or two years. Held that under proviso 4 to section 92 of the Evidence Act, no evidence of such agreement was admissible and the defendant was not bound to pay at the rate stipulated in the lease. Karampalli v. Theklu, 26 M 195. Where the evidence of the alleged exchange involves rescission or modification of the terms of the registered deed of 1892 it is inadmissible. Bhagwan v. Narain, 129 P W R 1908. Where a subsequent arrangement does not in any way affect the mortgagee or where it does not modify or vary the terms of the mortgage, it is not inadmissible under this proviso. Kedar Singh v. Sumer Singh 10 Ind C is 196. An oral agreement to take less than what is due under a registered mortgage bond would be inadmissible under section 92(4) of the Evidence Act. But a discharge extinguishing a debt though in receipt of a smaller sum than that due is not an agreement substituting different terms for the original terms which will govern the further working out of the obligation but an extinction of the obligation itself, and is consequently not hit by s 92(4). Balasundara v. Rangawathi, 30 L W 293=A I R 1929 Mad 794. It is not open to a party to a registered sale deed to prove an oral agreement by evidence either oral or documentary contemporaneous with the sale deed that in spite of a certain property, belonging to the vendor being entered in the sale deed title to it would not pass to the vendee. Amur Ram v. Ananda Krishna 118 Ind C is 789=A I R 1929 A 578, Umedmal v. Dain, 2 B 517. Duarka v. Bhogaban 7 C L R 577.

PROVISO (5)

Scope of proviso (5) Parol evidence of usage or custom is always admissible where the object is to render intelligible to the Court the meaning in which parties have used language. Vort Pt 277. So parol evidence may be given to prove any local custom of general application, in order that it may be applied to the subject matter and bind the parties to a written transaction, unless it is inconsistent with the writing. Wigglesworth v. Dallison, 1 Sm L C 520=Doug 201=Cockle C is Fv 351. In that case which was a case of an agricultural lease evidence was allowed of a custom whereby, contrary to the general law the tenant on leaving at the end of his term, was allowed to take away his way going crop that is to say all the corn growing upon the land which hath before the expiration of such term been sown by such tenant upon any part of such lands," although the lease was in writing and no mention was therein made of such custom. In delivering the judgment of the Court Lord Mansfield C J said: "The custom is good. The custom does not alter or contradict the agreement in the lease, it only superadds a right which is consequential to the taking, as a heriot may be due by custom, although not mentioned in the grant or lease." Another important case is Dashwood v. Wiggins, (1891) 3 Ch 506 in which evidence of local usage is to waste and cutting of timber was held admissible on the construction of a Will, the testator being taken to have framed his Will with reference to such local usage. Cockle Cas 352. So it is always admissible to "annex incidents" as it is termed o g, to show that things are by usage or custom in particular cases treated as incidental and accessory to the principal thing. Nort Es 277. Thus, it may be shown that days of grace are allowable for payment of a bill or note, that a contract of hiring is terminable by either party on a month's notice that the out-going tenants shall have the emblements. Ibid. So prior evidence is always admissible to prove any trade or mercantile custom or usage, either as to the obligations of the parties in such transactions as that in question or as to the meaning of words or terms used, in order that it may be applied to the subject matter and bind the parties to a written transaction, unless it is inconsistent with the writing. Cooley Cas Fo 352. In Brown v. Byrne, 3 E & B 70, — 23 L J Q B 313 = Cockle Cas Ly 352 = Hayes Cas Ly 911 a bill of lading specified a certain amount as payable for freight. Prior evidence was offered of a custom whereby three months' credit of discount was allowed for freight. The evidence was held admissible. In delivering the judgment of the Court, Coleridge J said: "The principles on which this case is to be decided are perfectly clear, the difficulty lies in the application of them to the facts. Mercantile contracts are very commonly framed in a language peculiar to merchants, the intention of the parties though perfectly well known to themselves would often be defeated if this language were strictly construed according to its ordinary import in the world at large, evidence, therefore, of mercantile custom and usage is admitted in order to expound it and arrive at its true meaning. Again, in all contracts is to the subject matter of which known usages prevail parties are found to proceed with the tacit assumption of these usages they commonly reduce into writing the special particulars of their agreement but omit to specify these known usages which are included however as of course by mutual understanding, evidence therefore of such incidents is receivable. The contract in truth is partly express and in writing, partly implied or understood and unwritten. But in these cases, no restriction is established on the soundest principle that the evidence received must not be of a particular which is repugnant to, or inconsistent with the written contract. Merely that it varies the apparent contract is not enough to exclude the evidence, for it is impossible to add any material incident to the written terms of a contract without altering its effect more or less. Neither, in the construction of a contract among tradesmen, or others will the evidence be excluded because the words are in their ordinary meaning unambiguous, for the principle of admission is, that words perfectly unambiguous in their ordinary meaning are used by the contractors in a different sense from that. What words more plain than a thousand? a 'week' a 'day'? Yet the cases are familiar in which a thousand has been held to mean twelve hundred a 'week' only during the theatrical season 'a day' a working day. In such cases the evidence neither adds to, nor qualifies nor contradicts the written contract, it only ascertains it by expounding the language. Here the contract is, to pay freight on delivery at a certain rate per pound is it inconsistent with this to allege that by the custom the ship owner, on payment is bound to allow three months' discount? We think not. Webb v. Plummer, 2 B & Ald 746 and Hulton v. Warren, 1 M & W 466 are cases which illustrate this principle. In the first of the e, by the custom of the country the outgoing tenant was bound to do certain acts and entitled to receive certain compensation, but the letter which formed the written contract bound him to do the same acts in substance and specially provided for his payment as to some of them, omitting the others and the Court held that the expression as to some excluded the implication as to the remainder, and the language of the lease was equivalent to a stipulation that the lessor should pay for the things mentioned and no more. The custom therefore would have been repugnant to the contract. But in the latter case in which the former was expressly recognized the Court held that a specific provision, as to a matter de hors the contract, left the custom untouched and in full force. This latter case appears to us like the present the contract settles the rate of freight. Whether or not discount is to be allowed on the payment, it leaves open, and to that the custom applies."

S 92

The cases in which the evidence of custom or usage is receivable have been well summarized by an eminent author, thus—(1) To annex incidents to contracts and Wills (2) To explain the meaning of peculiar or technical terms (3) To furnish standard of comparisons on questions of negligence etc (4) To fix a party with knowledge or notice of this subject matter of the usage (5) To rebut a fraudulent intent Cockle Cas 354

To annex incidents to written instruments Extrinsic evidence is admissible to annex incidents to a written instrument where the inclusion of such incidents is consistent with the writing and carries out the intention of the parties. In such cases the notoriety of the usage makes it probable and reasonable that the parties intended it to be a term of their contract. Thus where a written contract contained a stipulation that a party should "lose no time on his own account and do his work well and behave himself in all respects as a good servant," extrinsic evidence was received to show that by the custom of his trade such a party was entitled to certain holidays K v Stole Upon Trent 5 Q. B. 303, Powell Et 190. In Hatton Warren 1 M & W 475 Parke B said "It has long been well settled that in commercial transactions extrinsic evidence of custom or usage is admissible to annex incidents to written contracts in matters with respect to which they are silent. The same rule has also been applied to contracts in other transactions of life in which known usage have been established and prevailed, and this has been done upon the principle of presumption that in such transactions the parties did not mean to express in writing the whole of the contract by which they intended to be bound but to contract with reference to those known usages." So in the case of mercantile contracts the evidence is not confined to the explanation of the written terms. Provided they are not inconsistent with the contract it is allowed to supply terms of known usage in control of the contract, and which is known by the expression of annexing incidents. This is upon the principle that the contract was itself framed with reference to the usage and so as to incorporate the usage in and as part of itself Goodale Et 378. Accordingly where a ship was to depart with convoy but without any definition of the spot at which the convoy was to start evidence was allowed to fix this is from the place of rendezvous Lathulan's Case, 2 Salkeld 443. In Humphrey v Dale W. R. (Eng) 1856—57, p. 467 when there had been a contract for purchase by brokers, not disclosing their principal, and evidence was admitted to show a usage of trade holding the brokers liable Lord Campbell C J thus laid down the rule in extenso "Now, neither collateral evidence, nor the evidence of a usage of trade is receivable to prove anything which contradicts the tenor of a written contract, but subject to this condition both may be received for certain purposes. To use the language of Mr Phillips, (in Vol II, p. 415 10th Ed)—"Evidence of usage has been admitted as to contracts relating to transactions of commerce and trade farming or other business for the purpose of defining what would otherwise be indefinite, or to interpret a peculiar term, or to explain what was obscure or to ascertain what was equivocal, or to annex particular incidents which although not mentioned in the contracts, were connected with them or with relations growing out of them, and the evidence in such cases is admitted with the view of giving effect, as far as can be done to the present intention of the parties. Now here the plaintiff did not seek by the evidence of usage to contradict what the tenor of the note primarily imports namely that this was a contract which the defendants made as brokers. The evidence is based on the usage can have no operation except on the assumption of their having acted as brokers and of there having been a contract made with their principal. But the plaintiff by the evidence seeks to show that according to the usages of the trade and as those concerned in the trade understand the words used they imported something more, namely, that if the buying broker did not disclose the name of his principal, it might become a contract with the broker as principal, if the seller pleased. Whether this evidence be treated as explaining the language used, or adding a tacitly implied incident to the contract beyond those which are expressed is not material. In either point of view it will be admissible unless it labours under the objection of introducing something repugnant to or inconsistent with, the tenor of the written instrument, and, upon consideration of the sense in which that objection must be understood with reference to this question we think it does not. In a certain sense every material incident which is added to a written contract varies it, makes it different from what it appeared to be and so far is inconsistent with it. If by the side of the written contract without, you write the same contract with, the added incident the two would seem to import different obligations, and be different contracts. Take a familiar instance by way of illustration. On the face of a bill of exchange, at three months after date the acceptor will be taken to bind himself to the payment precisely as the end of three months. But by custom he is only bound to do so at the end of the days of grace which vary according to the country in which the same is made payable, from three up to fifteen. The truth is, that the principle on which the evidence is admissible is, that the parties have not set down on paper the whole of their contract in all its terms but those only which were necessary to be determined in the particular case by specific agreement, and which of course might vary infinitely, leaving to implication and tacit understanding all those general and unvarying incidents which an uniform usage would annex and according to which they must in reason be understood to contract, unless they expressly exclude them. To fall within the exception, therefore of repugnancy, the incident must be such as if expressed on the written contract, would make it insensible or inconsistent. Thus to warrant bacon to be prime signed adding 'that is to say slightly tainted, as in Lates v. Pym, 6 Taunt 446, or to insure all the boats of a ship and add 'that is to say, all not along on the quarter, and in Bladell v. The Royal Exchange Assurance Company 2 C. & J. 244 and other cases of the same sort scattered through the books would be instances of contracts in which both the two parts could not have full effect given to them if written down. Therefore when one part only is expressed it would be unreasonable to suppose that the parties intended to exclude the other also. Without repeating ourselves, it will be found that the same reasoning applies where the evidence is used to explain a latent ambiguity of language.

Merchants and traders with a multiplicity of transactions pressing on them and moving in a narrow circle, and meeting each other daily desire to write little and leave unwritten what they take for granted in every contract. In spite of the lamentations of Judges they still continue to do so and, in vast majority of cases of which Courts of law hear nothing they do so without loss or inconvenience, and upon the whole they find this mode of dealing advantageous, even at the risk of occasional litigation. It is the business of Courts reasonably so to shape their rules of evidence, as to make them suitable to the habits of mankind and such as are not likely to exclude the actual facts of the dealings between parties when they are to determine on the controversies which grow out of them. It cannot be doubted, in the present cases that in fact this contract was made with the usage understood to be a term in it, to exclude the usage is to exclude a material term of the contract and must lead to an unjust decision. The case was affirmed on appeal. As has been well observed in reference to these cases of mercantile contracts "The witnesses for this purpose may be considered to be the sworn interpreters of the mercantile language in which the contract is written." Indeed the observation applies to all usage evidence. Goodere v. p 378-381.

So the true and appropriate office of a usage or custom is to interpret the otherwise indeterminate intention of the parties and to ascertain the nature and extent of their contracts, arising not from express stipulations but from mere implications and presumptions and acts of a doubtful or equivocal character. Burr Jones 437. Hence it is that in respect to contracts, parol evidence is often received on the ground that the parties have not stated the contract in all its

S 92. details, but only those which were necessary to be stated by specific agreement, and that there has been left to implication those incidents which a uniform usage would annex and according to which the parties must be understood to contract unless they expressly exclude them. It is on this principle that in a great number and variety of cases in England and in this country parol evidence has been admitted of local or general usages of trade and commerce to ascertain the true meaning of written contracts. Southwell v Loddell 1 C P Div 471, Fleet v Hurton L R 7 Q B 126, Thompson v Dale 7 Ed & B 266, Imperial Bank v London Dock Co 5 Ch D 197, Smith v Wilson 3 B & Ald 724, Thorn v Byrne 311 & B 702, Borch v Depeyster, Starkie 210, Bores v Shand, 2 App Cas 165, Joy Lall v Manmatha, 20 C W N 365, K M P R Firm v Somasundaram, 18 M 27=85 Ind Cas 999, Paul v Robeson 26 L J C P 276, Hutton v Warren 5 L J 15 931, Gibson v Small 1 H L C 396. In a doubtful case creating a tenancy for a term of years there was an express statement that the tenant had no right of sale gift or transfer without the landlord's consent and the only right known was an option in the tenant to take a renewal of the lease within one year after the expiry of the term at the rate of rent prevalent in the neighbourhood, which the tenancy would pass into the landlord's possession. Held that the tenancy created by it was neither heritable nor transferable and that no evidence of custom was admissible on those heads. Mahomed v Prodyot 48 C 359=25 C W N 13=61 Ind Cas 503. Where a hundi is silent as to the payment of interest, but in accordance with prevailing custom interest is payable if the hundi is not sent within a certain time the drawer of the hundi is liable for the payment of interest. Maug Po v Vellayappa 62 Ind C 315. Hundis upon which a suit was brought were silent as to interest. But it was proved that in accordance with the custom of the district the parties had entered into a collateral agreement, embodied in written documents that the hundis should bear interest at 30 per cent per annum. Held that section 80 of the Negotiable Instruments Act being an enabling section was no bar to the recovery of interest at the above rate. Goswami v Ram Narain 11 C W N 105 (P C)=29 A 33=17 M L J 35=4 A L J 29=9 Bom L R 1.

To explain the meaning of Peculiar or technical terms Peculiar expressions or terms are to be given the meaning which they have acquired in such business by common usage, unless by the express terms of contract, such usage is excluded or is inconsistent with the contract. Burr Jones § 457. Proof of usage, say Dr Greenleaf is admitted either to interpret the meaning of the language of the contracts or to ascertain the nature and extent of the contract in the absence of express stipulations and where the meaning is equivocal or obscure. Greent Ld § 292. Evidence has been held admissible to show that by the usage in the trade the phrase "crop of flax" included the amount of the current year's production which the party had on hand whether purchased or produced by him. Goodrich v Stevens, 5 Lums (N Y). Evidence is admissible to show that the term sau did not signify the Bengali year but a different period specially applicable to jalkari tenancies. Jote Kunia v Jadunath 26 C W N 1023. See also Giant v Aladior, 15 M & W 737, Re Inou, 3 Dyer 345(a), R v Newstead Barr 669, R v Sayer 10 B & C 186, Myer v Sarl, 3 E & E 406. Where in a mortgage deed it was stipulated that the mortgage should not be redeemed from 1297 to 1298 Iash, for 19 years alluded to was not the Fashi year as commonly understood but agricultural year. Sheeboran v Bisheshai, A W N 1892, 236. The question whether a specification of a prior invention describes the invention claimed by the subsequent inventor is a question of construction and parol evidence is only admissible for the purpose of explaining words or symbols of art and other such like technical matters and of informing the Court of relevant surrounding circumstances. Canadian General Electric Co v Pada Radio, A I R 1930 P C 1.

The usage must be known. Closely allied to the requisite of long establishment of a usage that of its being known is of equal and far reaching importance. Judicial notice is taken of the general custom of the country, and there are certain commercial customs and usages of which every person in the community is deemed to be cognizant such for example, as those belonging to the law merchant. But the usages of special trades and those local usages which may be limited to certain communities cannot, of course, be presumed to be known to all. Sleight v Haythorn, 2 Johns (N Y) 531. These have been called usages as contradistinguished from the generally recognized customs of business. Clair v Baker, 52 Mass 186. In respect to these usages there should be either proof of actual knowledge on the part of the person to be affected or proof of circumstances from which such knowledge may be fairly implied. Burd v Brall 150 Ala 122 124. If usage is special and confined to a particular business or his reference to a particular place only, there is no such presumption, and it is manifest that it would be unjust to admit it in order to restrict the natural meaning of a written contract except upon proof that both parties were aware of the particular usage and intended to be governed by it. Even if, as respects a special custom in a particular trade or between particular places there is a presumption that parties who are engaged in that trade contract in reference to the particular custom this presumption is at best but a prima facie one liable to be rebutted by proof that it was unknown to the party against whom it is set up, and on that being proved no weight ought to be given to it. Isaksson v Williams 26 Fed 642. The customs of an individual in his private business are not binding upon others, unless known. Burr Jones 8 164 see also Muna Nilaram v Pattar, 2 M 275. The evidence of usages of trade applicable to the contract which the parties making it knew, or may be reasonably presumed to have known is admissible for the purpose of importing terms into the contract respecting which the instrument itself is silent. In the matter of Jay Lall & Co 20 C W N 305=35 Ind Cas 9.

Custom or usages must be consistent with the contract. Since evidence of usage is received for the very purpose of ascertaining the true meaning of the contract on the theory that the parties entered into their contract with reference to such usage it is clear that proof of the usage should not be received if it contradicts expressly or by implication the language of the contract. As was said by Lord Lyndhurst 'Usage may be admissible to explain what is doubtful it is never admissible to contradict what is plain'. Blackett v Royal Fish 1850 Co 2 (Crump & J 219=2 Tyr 266 see also Indas Chandan v Lakshmi Bahu 7 B L R 682=15 W R 501 Andalut v Gumpada 51 C 588 Goreilhan v Roup 76 Ind Cas 62 Bones v Shand 16 L J Q B 561 Haji Mohamed v Spinner 21 B 519, Jago Mahon v Karsri 9 M I A 260 Holmes v Butalishna 54 C 549=104 Ind Cas 268 Macfarlane v Carr, 9 B L R 459, Hari Mohan v Krishna 9 B L R App 1, Morris v Pamhanandu 5 M H C R 135. Where a delivery order is expressed to be subject to conditions no evidence can be given of any usage or custom which is repugnant or inconsistent with the express conditions of the documents. Ahoo v Nanigram 10 Bnr L 1 92.

Proof of custom or usage. Lord Holt Chief Justice said 'The way and manner of trading is to be taken notice of'. Ford v Hopkins 1 Salk 283. In another English Case the Judge took notice of the law of the road to turn to the near hand and that it applied to riding as well as to driving. Turley v Thomas 8 Cu & P 103. The law merchant forms a branch of the law in England and those customs which have been universally and notoriously prevalent amongst merchants and have been found by experience to be of public use have been adopted as a part of it upon a principle of convenience and for the benefit of trade and commerce and when so adopted it is unnecessary to plead or prove them. Burnett v Brantno 6 M & F 630. But the usages of special trades and those local usages which may be limited to certain communities cannot of course be presumed to be known to all. Such customs or usages must be proved either (a) by direct evidence of witness (which must be positive and not amount to mere opinion) (b) by a series of particular instances in which it has been acted upon (c) by proof of similar customs in the same or analogous trades in other localities. Cordle Cas 14 351.

PROVISO (6)

Scope of proviso (6) Upto a certain point and apart from any question of ambiguity extrinsic evidence would be necessary to point the operation of the simple instrument. Thus were it the case of a deed conveying all the land at A in the grantor's occupation, until it was defined by proof what lands were in his occupation the operation of the deed could not be known. So were it a case of a Will made in a bequest to the children, of a party or even to the testator's own children to give effect to the bequest it would be necessary to define who the children were (Goodell v. p. 195). Same evidence says J C Hood in the matter of Tatham 1 Kay & John 528 'is necessary in any case of a Will that is to say evidence to show the subject and objects of the gift'. Ibid at section 7 of the Indian Succession Act (XXXIX of 1925) 'The law says J C Hood has become so settled by numerous decisions, as to how far extrinsic evidence is admissible, and what that species of evidence must be that I need only sum up what appears to be the result of the authorities. Of course in interpreting any instrument which purports to deal with property some extrinsic information is necessary in order to make the words which are but signs fit the external things to which those signs are appropriate. In reality external information is requisite in construing every instrument but when any subject is thus discovered which not only is within the words of the instrument according to their natural construction but exhausts the whole of those words then the investigation must stop, you are bound to take the interpretation which entirely exhausts the whole of the series of expressions used by the testator and are not permitted to go any further. To that extent the Court is always at liberty to go in interpreting a Will in other words I am to place myself in the position of the testator with the knowledge of all the facts with which he was acquainted, but I am not in the course of interpretation to introduce any evidence whatever of what were the intentions of the testator, as contrasted with, or extending or contracting the language which he has used. Hebb v. Byng (1854) 1 K & J 80 (185). So in construing a written statement the situation of the parties must be looked at and the deed must be construed with reference to the situation of the parties and then rights at the time the deeds were executed. Rabuttu Dass v. Shubchunder Mehtal 6 M I A 117. The above observations are only cited as illustrative of the principle. Practically it is upon some imperfection of the instrument as applied to the facts that the difficulty as to determining its meaning usually arises and nothing is more settled than that evidence is receivable of all the circumstances surrounding the instrument for the purpose of throwing their light on its interpretation. It is indeed by these as by a lamp that the Court read the document. Goodell v. p. 386. This proviso applies whether a writing is required by law or not. It proceeds upon a principle which has been stated thus—that a person who has to interpret a document, ought to be put into the same position as the person whose language is being interpreted. Marby v. p. 74. 'It manifestly relates to the admissibility of evidence necessary to make the words which are used fit the external things to which the words are appropriate. For example if lands at a certain place in the grantor's occupation are conveyed by a document extrinsic evidence is admissible to show what lands were in his occupation. So also if a gift be made to a man's children extrinsic evidence would be admissible to define who the children were. Other instances might be multiplied. Lawrence v. Hanfmann 27 A 612 (617)=2 A L J 360 (36)=A W N (1905) 129 see also Haji Mahomed v. Spinner 24 B 510 515 525. 'As it is a leading rule says Dr Greenleaf in regard to written instruments, that they are to be interpreted according to their subject, it is obvious that parol or verbal testimony must be resorted to in order to ascertain the nature and qualities of the subject to which the instrument refers. Evidence which is calculated to explain the subject of an instrument is essentially different in its character from evidence on verbal communications respecting it. Whatever therefore indicates the nature of the subject is a just medium of interpretation of the language and meaning of the parties in relation to it, and is also a just foundation for giving the instrument an interpretation, when considered.

S. 92.

relatively different from that which it would receive if considered in the abstract. Thus, where certain premises were leased, including a yard, described by metes and bounds, and the question was, whether a cellar under the yard was or was not included in the lease, verbal evidence was held admissible to show that, at the time of the lease, the cellar was in the occupancy of another tenant, and, therefore, that it could not have been intended by the parties that it should pass by the lease (Doe d. Ireland v. Burt, 11 R 701). So where a house or mill, or a factory is conveyed, eo nomine, and the question is as to what was part and parcel thereof and so passed by the deed, parol evidence to this point is admitted' Greenl. Et § 286.

So it is clear that extrinsic evidence of every material fact which will enable the Court to ascertain the nature and qualities of the subject matter of the instrument, or in other words to identify the persons and things to which the instrument refers must of necessity be received, Doe v. Hiscocks 5 M & W 367, 368 Shore v. Wilson 9 Cl & F 556 Doe v. Martin 4 B & Ad 771, R v. Wooddale 6 Q B 549 565 Macdonald v. Longbottom, 1 E & L 977, Mumford v. Gelling 29 L J C P 105 Chambers v. Kelly 1 R 7 C L 231, M. Collin v. Gupin L R 6 Q B D 516 Bank of New Zealand v. Simpson, (1900) A C 182. Whatever be the nature of the document under review, the object is to discover the intention of the writers as evidenced by the words he has used, and in order to do this the Judge must put himself in the writer's place, and then see how the terms of the instrument affect the property or subject matter Shore v. Wilson, 9 Cl & Fin 553 Doe v. Martin 1 N & M 524, Grey v. Sharpe 1 Myl & K 602. With this view extrinsic evidence must be admissible of all the circumstances surrounding the author of the instrument Sacket v. Lee, 3 M & Gr 466, per Faulstich J. Ill. Gen. v. Drummond 1 Dru & War 567, Drummond v. Ill. Gen. 2 H of L Cts 562. In the simplest case that can be put namely that of an instrument appearing on its face to be perfectly intelligible, inquiry must be made for a subject matter to satisfy the description. If an estate be conveyed by the designation of Black Acre parol evidence must be admitted to show what property is known by that name (Ricketts v. Furquard, 1 H L Cts 472). Faylor § 1191. "But it is well settled that the terms of an unambiguous document cannot be controlled by the conduct of the parties. As Lord Halsbury said in North Eastern Railway v. Hestings (1900) A C 290 no amount of acting by the parties can alter or qualify words which are plain and unambiguous, that it is otherwise when we have to determine the true construction of an obscurely framed document Herbert v. Pughes L R 5 P C 305. Per Woodes J. in Ananashi v. Inawda, 32 C L J (18) Wool Chantha v. Hwarhar, 32 C L J 19 (F B) - 24 C W N 874-58 Ind Cts 867, Secretary of State v. Narendia, 32 C L J 402 (F B). Hement v. Madnapur Zamindary Co., 35 C L J 493 Ibnash v. Myad 36 C L J 176 Madnapore Zamindary v. Jogendra 62 Ind Cts 491 Bluepindia v. Madnapore Zamindary Co. 65 Ind Cts 937 Primaltha v. Dinamoni, 34 C L J 129 Idams v. Gray, 90 Ind Cts 5-48 M L J 707, Mankani v. Venkatera 99 Ind Cts 705-1927 M L J 191, Must Jio v. Mt. Hinduam 8 Loh 219-100 Ind Cts 51. The language of the proviso is rather vague. It is true that evidence of the circumstances, surrounding a document is admissible but it is admissible only for the purpose of throwing light on its meaning. It would not be permissible to consider the surrounding circumstances with a view to holding that a document which on the face of it is a sale deed was intended to operate as a mortgage. There must be some limit to the suggestion that surrounding circumstances can always be scrutinized so as to enable the Court to alter or change the nature of the document to something different from what it appears to be. Otherwise there could be no certainty as to the proper construction to be placed on a document which to all appearance is unambiguous. Montland v. Inuit Rio 49 B 662-27 Bom L R 951=A I R 1925 Bom 501 Udalo v. Maung Shuc v. Maung Tam 6 Bar L J 195-105 Ind Cts 297-5 Rang 644 Kalunam v. Gayassa, 107 Ind Cts 201=A I R 1928 Nag 182. Contra, Bentham v. Dett, 117 Ind Cts 907 (2)=A I R 1929 Loh 875 (2). Where the terms are unambiguous and clear, there can be no question that the evidence to prove that the terms of the contract were used in

S. 92 a different sense must be excluded under section 92 nor is the Court in such case entitled to speculate as to the meaning of words in the contract. But where the wording of the contract is capable of different interpretations the Court is justified to put a proper construction upon the terms of the contract and is justified in dealing with what intention a particular expression was used as a matter of pure construction. Juran v Ram Mandal 55 C 808 = A 11 1928 Cal 157

Application of the rule in Will cases The question has more often arisen upon Will than upon other documents and it is from cases on these, accordingly, that the law has mainly to be taken. The law on the subjects as regards Wills contained in section 75 of the Indian Succession Act (XXIX of 1925) That section is based upon the first paragraph of Justice Wigram's proposition V which is as follows: For the purpose of determining the objects of testator's bounty or subject of disposition, or the quantity of interest intended to be given by the Will, a Court may enquire into every material fact relating to the person who claims to be interested under the Will, and the property which is claimed as the subject of disposition and to the circumstances of the testator and of his family and affairs for the purpose of enabling the Court to identify the person or the thing intended by the testator, or to determine the quantity of interest he has given by his Will. See also Gien v Shah 1 Mvl & K 60. Wigram § 76. Dhanapala v Ananta 24 M L J 418. Sher Bahadur v Gangai 36 A 101. Kulasam v Khenbar 13 L W 657 (P C). Bhagobutty v Gooroo 25 C 112. Indubala v Manmatha 41 C L J 258. In considering questions of this nature it must always be remembered that the words of a testator like those of every other person truly refer to the circumstances by which at the time of expressing himself, he is surrounded. If therefore when the circumstances under which the testator made his Will are known the words of the Will do sufficiently express the intention ascribed to him the strict limit of exposition cannot be transgressed because the Court in aid of the construction of the Will refers to those extrinsic collateral circumstances to which it is certain that the language of Will refers. It may be true that without such evidence the precise meaning of the words could not be determined but it is still the Will which expresses and ascertains the intention ascribed to the testator. A page of history (to use a familiar illustration) may not be intelligible till some collateral extrinsic circumstances are known to the reader. No one however would imagine that he was acquiring a knowledge of the writer's meaning from any other source than the page he was reading because in order to make that page intelligible he required to be informed to what country the writer belonged or to be furnished with a map of the country about which he is reading. Wigram P. § 76. But there is a clear distinction between the application of evidence to explain the testator's words as embodied in his Will and the introduction of extrinsic evidence to prove the intention of the testator is independent fact. The former kind of evidence is auxiliary only to a right understanding of the words used by the testator in his Will and as such it is explanatory only of the words themselves. But the evidence which is introduced to prove the intention of the testator is quite a different sort of evidence. In this section we are concerned with the former kind of evidence. It does not per se approach the question of intention. It is wholly collateral to it. It explains the words only by removing the cause of apparent ambiguity whether in truth there is no real ambiguity. It places the Court which expands the Will in the situation of the testator who made it and the words of the Will are then left to their natural operation. The propriety and indeed the necessity of their referring to extrinsic circumstances is strongly enforced by the consideration that the same words properly interpreted mean different things under different circumstances. Wigram pp 70-71. See also Died Isaac's v Isaac's 5 M & W 363. Sharp v Maddison (1909) 2 Ch 190. Charington v Wooder (1911) A C 71-72. King v Winn (1909) 2 Ch 111. Tanell v Wall 101 L T 85. Great Eastern Ry Co v Bristol Corporation 87 L T (Ch) 117-121. Samuel v Opner, (1909) 1 Ch 61. Shorne v Mubaz 3 V 206. The general rule is that in construing a Will the Court is entitled to put himself in the position of the testator and to consider all material facts and circumstances known to the testator with reference to which he is to be taken to have used now in the Will and then to declare what is the intention evidenced by the words used with reference to those facts and circumstances which were (or ought to have been) in the mind of the testator when he used those words' Per Blackburn J in Allgood v Blake, L R 8 Ex 160 Re Stullen, (1916) 1 Ch 518, Ruer Wear Commissioners v Adamson, 47 L J Q B 193, Harrison v Higson (1894) 1 Ch 561. In Boyes v Cool 14 Ch D 53 (56), James L J used the following expression "You may place yourself, so to speak, in his (testator's) arm chair Charles v Charles L R 7 H L 361 (377) 'The object in all cases is to discover the intention of the testator. The first and most obvious mode of doing this is to read his Will as he has written it and collect his intention from his words. But as the words refer to facts and circumstances respecting his property and his family and others whom he names or describes in his Will it is evident that the meaning and application of his words cannot be ascertained without all those facts and circumstances' Per Lord Alinger in Doe d Hiscot's v Hiscot's 5 M & W 363 (367) see also Benasconi v Wilson (1873) 10 Hare 345, Bhuggabuttly v Gooroo, 25 C 112 (124) Paton v Omerod 66 I R R 351 In re Glasington, (1902) 2 Ch 314 Bhagabuttly v Bhulanath 2 I A 256=1 C 104 Mahomed v Sheralam 11 B L R 226=2 I A 7, Ruthi Prasad v Rimmam 35 C 896 (P C) Sher Bahadur v Gangai Bhusli 18 C W N 401=36 A 101 P C, Phanndia v Hemangum 36 C 1 Mithura v Lilhan 19 A 19 Beti v Collector of Elua 7 A 198 Sularam v Kalidus 18 B 631 Dhruvabala v Inantha, 18 Ind Cas 978=21 M L J 418 Mela v Sri Raja, 17 C W N 121, P C. The state of a testator's knowledge or acquaintance is also important. In the words of Lord Cairns L C in Craze v Prington, 3 L L 338 (339) "In construing the Will of the testator we should put ourselves as far as we can in the position of the testator and interpret his expressions as to persons and things with reference to that degree of knowledge of the persons and things which so far as we can discover, the testator possessed". See also In re Vaughan (1901) 17 I L R 278 Marten v Harding, (1907) 1 Ch 465. But this proposition must be accepted with several reservations. What has to be done is first to construe the Will. The meaning placed upon the language used as the result of this process cannot be altered by reference to the surrounding circumstances when the Will was executed. The procedure is not, first ascertain the surrounding circumstances and with that knowledge approach the construction of the Will but first construe the Will if the meaning is clear, surrounding circumstances cannot be looked at to throw a doubt upon the meaning, or to give the Will a different meaning. Higgins v Dawson (1902) A C 1 cited in Theobald 7th Ed 12. In All Gen v Drummond 1 D & W R 567 Syden C observed "When the Court has possession of all the facts, which it is entitled to know they will only enable the Court to put a construction on his instrument consistent with the words, and the Judge is not at liberty, because he has acquired a knowledge of those facts, to put a construction on the words which they do not properly bear". Such evidence is admissible only to explain what is ambiguous and not to contradict what is clear. The general principle is that if the words of the Will are definite and free from doubts parol evidence is not admissible to show that they meant something different, (Farman Vol 1 p 506) see also Hensman v Tyeer, L R 3 Ch 120, Lage v Leaping Hill, 18 Ves 166. This section empowers Courts to avail themselves of extrinsic evidence for the purpose of determining questions as to what persons or what property are denoted by my words used in a Will, etc. but where a testator has left no uncertainty as to the person to be benefited or the property by which the benefit is to be conferred then the Courts are precluded from going outside the actual words used by the testator. Judges should not, where the language of a Will presents no ambiguity, imagine ambiguity in its application to different sets of extrinsic facts and so initiate an enquiry into those facts. Pestom, v Frampt 12 Bom L R 505=8 Ind Cas 150. Lakshmbai v Gupat 4 B H C R 150. Gangabai v Tharar 1 B H C R 71. Kulsambai v Khensambai 13 I W 657 (P C) but see Phanristo v Bamaunari 12 M J A 41, Shamsul v

- S 92. Scholarum 2 I A 7, Sulochana v Jagatram, 30 C L J 51. In construing a Hindu's Will the ordinary notions and wishes of Hindus can be taken into consideration in giving effect to testator's intention. Mahomed v Shewakram 14 B L R 26, Rudra v Rani, 35 C 896, Chunilal v Bar Samrath 19 C L J 563 (P C)

Application of the rule in cases of other documents. Courts in the construction of contracts look to the language employed, the subject matter and the surrounding circumstances. They are never shut out from the same light which the parties enjoyed when the contract was executed and in that view, they are entitled to place themselves in the same situation as the parties who made the contract so as to view the circumstances as they viewed them, and so to judge the meaning of the words and of the correct application of the language to the thing described. Addison Contract 816 Merriman v United States, 107 U S 437 (Am), Burr Jones § 453. The rule is thus laid down by Lindal, C J in Att Gen v Shore 11 Sim 592 615, "The general rule I take it to be, is that where word of any written instrument are free from ambiguity in themselves, and where external circumstances do not create any doubt or difficulty as to the proper application of those words to claimants under the instrument or the subject matter to which the instrument relates such instrument is always to be construed according to the strict plain common meaning of the words themselves and that in such case evidence  dehors  the instrument for the purpose of explaining it according to the surmised or alleged intention of the parties to the instrument is utterly inadmissible. If it were otherwise no lawyer would be safe in advising upon the construction of a written instrument nor any party in taking under it for the ablest advice might be controlled and the clear title undermined if at some future period proof evidence of the particular meaning which the party affixed to his words, or of his secret intention in making the instrument or of the objects he meant to take benefit under it might be set up to contradict or vary the plain language of the instrument itself. The true interpretation however of every instrument being manifestly that which will make the instrument speak the intention of the party at the time it was made it has always been considered as an exception, or perhaps to speak more precisely, not so much as exception from, as a corollary to the general rule above stated that where any doubt arises upon the true sense and meaning of the words themselves or any difficulty as to their application under the surrounding circumstances the sense and meaning of the language may be investigated and ascertained by evidence  dehors  the instrument itself for both legal and common sense agree that by no other means can the language of the instrument be made to speak the real mind of the party. Such investigation does, of necessity take place in the interpretation of instruments written in foreign language, in the case of ancient instruments where by the lapse of time and change of manners the words have acquired in the present age a different meaning from that which they bore when originally employed, in cases where terms of art or science occur, in mercantile contracts which, in many instances use a peculiar language employed by the only who are conversant in trade and commerce and in other instances in which the words besides their general common meaning, have acquired by custom or otherwise, a well known, peculiar idiomatic meaning in the particular country in which the party using them was dwelling, or in the particular society of which he formed a member, and in which he passed his life. But I conceive the exception to be strictly limited to cases of the description above given and to evidence of the nature above detailed. Higmore § 2161. So in order to construe a term in a written instrument where it is used in a sense differing from its ordinary meaning, evidence is admissible to prove the peculiar sense in which the parties understood the word but it is not admissible to contradict or vary what is plain. Per Lord Chelmsford, in Ex parte L C L 156 Co 1 Moore P C 73 98.

It is frequently necessary in order to construe written instrument to refer to evidence of other accompanying facts than those which serve to apply the instrument to the subject matter or the person intended. Under some circumstances not only the situation and relation of the parties but their negotiations and statements may be proved as part of the surrounding facts.

which throw light on the transaction. It would be impossible to prescribe by general rule the precise limits within which under the ever varying facts such testimony may be admitted. The circumstances under which such testimony is admissible will be best understood from instances of adjudicated cases. Thus in construing a memorandum of sale the Massachusetts Court held that, although parol evidence is not admissible to prove that other terms than those are to be inferred from it, yet that it is competent to prove not only the relations of the parties and the nature and conditions of the property but also the acts of the parties at and subsequent to the date of the contract as a means of showing their own understanding of its terms. Knight v New England Hoisted Co 2 Cnsh (Mass) 271 Burr Jones § 153. Where a question arose under a lease as to whether a building erected thereon belonged to the lessor or lessee parol evidence of the subsequent dealings of the parties was competent. The purpose for which such evidence is received must always be borne in mind—to elucidate the meaning of the words used and not to import into the writing an unexpressed intention, and in its admission, the line which separates evidence which aids the interpretation of what is in the instrument from direct evidence of intention independent of the instrument, must be kept steadily in view,—the duty of the Court being to declare the meaning of what is written in the instrument, not of what was intended to be written. Burr Jones § 433, 2 Phill Fr 277 Greul Fr § 277. So oral evidence of intention is not admissible for the purpose of construing the deeds or ascertaining the intention of the parties. Balkishen Das v H F Teague 22 A 149 (158). But it does not follow from this section that subsequent conduct and surrounding circumstances may not be given in evidence, for the purpose of showing that an apparent conveyance is still a mortgage. Kashi Nath v Haridhar 9 C 898 = 13 C L R 1. Though this section excludes in particular instances any oral agreement or statement yet evidence of conduct e.g., return of a labuhyat is admissible for proving that such return was due to an intention to make the labuhyat inoperative. Shayama Charan v Huas Vohlah, 26 C 160. But the parties to a written contract are precluded by s 92 of the Evidence Act (with which the provisions of the Registration Act might be considered) from relying upon the evidence furnished by their conduct which would be only of an oral contemporaneous agreement for the purpose of varying adding to or subtracting from its terms e.g., to show that an out and out sale was in reality intended to be only a mortgage. Diamoddie v Kaur Pasidai 5 C 300 = 4 C L R 413. Abdul v Abdul 72 P R 1901. Parol evidence is admissible to explain a deed. Babu Dhanpat v Sheel Louchar 8 W R 152. It is a note of hand promissory payment with interest at a given rate, without stating either per mensem or per annum it must be construed with reference to previous transactions between the parties. Mahomed Sumsoodeen v Moonshee Abdool W R 1864 379. It is competent to a party to show that a bond executed in favour of A was really in favour of B and that A was a party to it merely in the capacity of gomastah of B. Subrotha v Ram Rattan Mush 3 = 1 H W 24. see also Tenlata Sabu v Gobinda 31 M 4, = 18 M L J 1. Parol evidence is admissible to prove circumstances connected with a transaction between the parties to a written contract. Pheloo v Greesh, 8 W R 51. An obscure pottah can be elucidated by oral testimony. Mohamud v Uinoopoorna 9 W R 166. But this proviso cannot be used for the purpose of importing into a letter an acknowledgment of a personal liability for a debt which is not contained in it even by implication. Simla Banl v Ball 2 P R 1884.

A suit was instituted on a mortgage bond executed by the 1st defendant in favour of the plaintiff. The loan has been secured by the mortgage of a taluk belonging to the 1st defendant. Subsequent to the plaintiff's mortgage, the Sarbarakar rights of the 1st defendant in two garhs of the taluk were mortgaged to defendants Nos 2 & 3. The question for decision was whether Sarbarakar rights of defendant No 1 in the two garhs were also mortgaged to the plaintiffs. Held that evidence was admissible under section 92(b) and section 93 of the Evidence Act, because it showed how the plaintiff document was related to existing facts and because the nature of the land tenures was a special matter which could not be tried off hand.

S. 92 required to be elucidated by a reference to the particular facts Raja Gaur Chandra v. Rajah Mulunda Deb 9 C W N 710 Where a mortgage-bond does not indicate by name the property mortgaged, evidence may be adduced to prove what property was mortgaged Ramlal v. Harrison, 2 A 837 Where there is an acknowledgment in writing of a debt due, parol evidence is admissible in order to show to what debt the acknowledgment related Uma Chandra v. Sigeman, 5 B L R 633 Note=12 W R O C 2, see also Adamudu Cherri v. Chaularen 5 M H C R 320 In cases where the question is whether a lease to a person named in it perpetual or not, whether it is to him and his heirs evidence as to the surrounding circumstances is admissible because it explains—what standing alone is capable of explanation—whether a grant to a person is a grant to him alone or to him and his heirs Sambhal v. Sitaram 3 Bom L R 768

The short exposition of the whole matter is, that the knowledge of the external circumstances of which their proof puts the Courts in possession places the Judge in the position of the donor, settlor, or other party to the instrument and it is upon the survey which that position affords him, that he exercises the office of an Expositor Goodere L 389 But contemporaneous exposition is a guide to the interpretation of documents is often accompanied with danger and great care must be taken in its application Raghunath v. Lal Shivanrao, 16 C W N 1058 (P C)=23 M L J 383=12 M L F 172=17 C I J 17=36 B 639 (P C) In Macdonald v. Longbottom 7 W R 44 (Eng) the question arose on a contract for purchase of wool and the quantity the subject of purchase was not otherwise defined than by the expression 'Your wool' The contract was on the one hand, a letter containing an offer to purchase—Your wool 16 per stone and on the other in acceptance by another letter of the offer and evidence was received to fix the quantity the subject of the bargain I am quite clear said Lord Campbell C J from the letters which were put in at the trial that there was a contract between the parties An offer was made, and was accepted and the only question as to the subject matter of the contract I am clearly of opinion that when a specific thing is the subject of a contract and it is doubtful upon the contract what the specific thing is, that any fact may be given in evidence, in order to identify it which is within the knowledge of both parties—meaning by that expression the knowledge upon the strength of which both parties dealt In the same case Earle J said The defendant says 'I will buy your wool' Now it is the universal practice to admit parol evidence to identify the subject matter of a contract as no Judge can have judicial knowledge of it It is not contended that this contract is on the face of it void for uncertainty parol evidence must therefore be admissible to explain to what it refers In Mumford v. Geething, 9 W R 187 (Eng) the defendant had been employed by the plaintiffs who were tradesmen, as a traveller to solicit custom for them over certain districts in which their commercial connection lay and he having afterwards left their service and travelled for other parties contrary to his agreement with them they sued him on his agreement which was in writing to recover damages The agreement, however was imperfect on its face, and it becoming necessary to explain the meaning of its expressions 'your employ' and the ground that defendant was to travel parol evidence in explanation though objected to was admitted Earle C J said I am of opinion that the parol evidence is admissible in order to apply the contract to the matter in question It is not to alter or vary it The parol evidence is admissible to show the circumstances under which the words were used In the same case Byles J said 'It does not appear from the face of the document what the employment was It does not appear what the ground was The subject therefore requires to be identified The contract is to be applied to some object matter and that is just the case where parol evidence is admissible It is the case of every day occurrence in the construction of Will

Where there were conflicting statements of the parties as to the circumstances leading up to the execution of an agreement for sale and it was difficult to reconcile them Hell that the Court was justified in admitting extrinsic evidence to explain the facts Hussain v. Ibbubam, 25 C W N 35 (P C)

61 Ind Cas 385 But under this section, evidence of surrounding circumstances is not admissible for the purpose of contradicting the terms of a document, but they may be referred to only for the purpose of ascertaining and giving effect to the full intention of the parties as expressed in the document itself Varasingeji v Panaganti, (1921) M W N 519 see also Sidhan Rai v Chakour Singh, 66 Ind Cas 752 Where a document is a perfectly plain straightforward document no extrinsic evidence is required to show in what manner the language of the document related to existing facts There may be cases where such extrinsic evidence is required and it will therefore be admitted But it can only be in such cases where the terms of the documents themselves require explanation and then evidence can be led within the restrictions laid down by proviso 6 to section 92 of the Evidence Act Where a document has stood more than fifty years it is extremely undesirable to allow evidence to be led to show that the document is not what it appears to be on the face of it Ganpatrao v Tularam, 44 B 710=23 Bom L R 831=18 Ind Cas 176 Where a vendor agrees to sell land to several named persons and in drawing up the agreement of sale the name of one person is mentioned and without naming the rest the word "others" is used there is nothing in the Evidence Act to prevent the evidence from being led in as to the persons in whose favour the conveyance is to be executed Pedi Marthi v Jutapuram 47 M L J 177=(1922) M W N 185=(1922) Mad 100 Where there is a dispute as regards the identity and extent of the land leased the Court cannot look at the correspondence that preceded the lease Sital Prasad v Badi Prasad, 20 A L J 907=L R 3 A 623 Where a promissory note recited that interest at the rate of 1½ p c m is payable but it was not mentioned therein as to whether the rate of interest aforesaid will be per mensem or per annum Held the document was therefore ambiguous and under this proviso no evidence could be given to clear up that ambiguity Sayju v Sukhu, 1 Pat L J 577 In an action for a declaration that certain alluvial accretions formed part of settled land antecedent documents are admissible under this proviso for the purpose of identifying the property demised but not for contradicting the terms of the settlement Tilakdhari v Kesho 83 Ind Cas 103=27 Bom L R 919=48 M L J 61 (P C)=41 C L J 386 (P C) If in a deed of mortgage the boundaries of the land mortgaged are described and such boundaries can also be identified they should generally be accepted as defining the area of the land affected by the deed Nya Cho v Jhi So U B R (1916) 2nd Qr 110=36 Ind Cas 7 A contract reduced to writing must be construed on a consideration of the document itself with only such extrinsic evidence of the circumstances as may be required to show the relation of the written language to existing facts Phaham Goolam v A M Chetty 26 Ind Cas 531 Where the question is whether certain properties are indeed in the trust deed, the conduct of the parties can be looked into in construing the meanings of the expressions used therein Subramania v Rajeswar 40 M 1016=38 Ind Cas 627 Where a deed of transfer raises an ambiguity as to the nature of interest in the property it purports to convey, extrinsic evidence (including evidence as to the course of dealing with the property) may be taken in construing the deed Dinabhandu v Mammulal 52 Ind Cas 443 Mauung Saung v Maung So Hla, U B R (1892 1896) Vol II 359 Oral evidence of intention of parties is inadmissible But evidence under this proviso regarding the attendant circumstances is admissible Venkata v Venkata A I R 1929 Mad 807 A I R 1921 P C 226 and A I R 1925 P C 75 followed Extrinsic oral evidence of surrounding circumstances which will show in what manner the language of the document is related to existing facts is inadmissible in evidence Sabaji v Naul Singh 101 Ind Cas 736 In the case of a registered mortgage deed oral evidence cannot be led in that the property really meant as security is other than what appears in the deed Muskarum v Haji Mutasaddi, 90 Ind Cas 811 Where at the time of the sale by the Government of a certain estate some portions of it were submerged under water and where in the sale notification the area of the estate was specified as certain number of bighas Held that the latter fact did not preclude the purchaser or his successor in interest from claiming any accretion

S 93 to the estate Sauter Ray v Secretary of State 29 C W N 166=81 Ind Ca 178=40 C L I 322 Extrinsic evidence is admissible to identify the thing referred to in a written agreement, as for instance, in a contract to deliver a quantity of gram (galla) at a particular time parol evidence is admissible under certain restrictions to show what kind of gram the contracting parties had in their view at the time the contract was made. Talla v Sidoji 5 B H A C 87 Where a mortgage deed does not indicate by name the property mortgaged evidence may be adduced to prove what property was mortgaged. Rauhal v Harrison 2 A 832

Illustrations Illustration (a)—This illustration is based on Heston v Fries 1 Taunt 115

Illustration (b)—This illustration relates to proviso (3), vide also Ramplan v Oghlan Nath, 2 C W N 188

Illustration (c)—‘So where a deed conveyed the messuage and land called Gotton farm consisting of particulars specified in a schedule, and delineated in a map drawn thereon evidence that a close not included in the map and schedule had always been occupied and treated as part of Gotton farm was rejected

Taylor § 1152 citing Burton v Davies 10 Com B 261 Llewellyn v Ld Jersey 11 M & W 183

Illustration (d)—Vide proviso (1)

Illustration (e)—Vide proviso (1)

Illustration (f)—Vide proviso (2)

Illustration (g)—Vide proviso (2)

Illustration (h)—Vide proviso (2)

Illustration (i)—Vide proviso (3)

Illustration (j)—Vide proviso (3)

93 When the language used in a document is on its face, ambiguous or defective, evidence may not be given of facts which would show its meaning or supply its defects.

Exclusion of evidence to explain or amend ambiguous document

Illustrations

(a) A agrees, in writing, to sell a horse to B for Rs. 1 000 or Rs. 1 500

Evidence cannot be given to show which price was to be given

(b) A deed contains blanks Evidence cannot be given of facts which would show how they were meant to be filled

Two sorts of ambiguities according to Lord Bacon There be two sorts of ambiguities of words the one is ambiguitas patens and the other is ambiguitas latens, patens is that which appears to be ambiguous upon the deed or instrument latens is that which seemeth certain and without ambiguity for any thing that appeareth upon the deed or instrument but there is some collateral matter out of the deed that breedeth the ambiguity Ambiguitas patens is never holpen by averment and the reason is because the law will not couple and mingle matter of specialty which is of the higher account with matter of averment which is of inferior account in law, for that were to make all deeds hollow and subject to averment and so, in effect that to pass without deed which the law appointeth shall not pass but by deed Therefore if a man give land to I D et I S heredibus and do not limit to whether of their heirs it shall not be supplied by averment to whether of them the intention was the inheritance should be limited But if it be ambiguitas latens then otherwise it is As I grant my manor of S to I F and his heirs here appeareth no ambiguity at all upon the deed but if the truth be that I have the manors both of South S and North S this ambiguity is mitter in fact and therefore it shall be holpen by averment whether of them it was that the parties intended should pass Another sort of ambiguitas latens is corrective into this for the ambiguity spoken of before is, when one name and appellation doth denominated diverse things and the second is, when the same thing is called by diverse name. As, if I give lands to Christ Church in Oxford, and the name of the corporation is Ecclesia Christi in Universitate Oxford this shall be holden by averment, because there appears no ambiguity in the words for the variance is matter in fact. But the averment shall not be of the intention, because it does not stand with the words. For in the case of equivocation the general intent includes both the special and therefore stands with the words but so it is not in variance and therefore the averment must be a matter that doth induce a certainty and not of intention, as to say that the precinct of Oxford and of the University of Oxford is one and the same, and not to say that the intention of the parties was that the grant should be to Christ Church in the University of Oxford. Sir Francis Bacon's Maxim rule XXV (Works Spedding's edition, 1861 Vol XIV p 273) 'Much has been said says Dr Schouler 'of latent and patent ambiguities in this connection, an expression borrowed from Lord Bacon whose oft quoted canon, though Wigram and Jarman has disputed it (Wigram Wills p 196 1 Jar Wills 429, 430) the Courts do not seem quite ready to discard. This canon regards ambiguities of words as of two sorts—patent and latent, the one where the instrument appears ambiguous, the other where collateral matter out of the instruments breed the ambiguity, since the instrument on its face appears certain enough. In a patent ambiguity the written instrument or higher proof, cannot be mingled in proof with the lower or oral and must be construed by its own terms but a latent ambiguity (which in truth grows out of the application of the language of facts and circumstances) is ruled by matters parol, and hence may be fully removed by the same means. But, by applying this rule to a Will, we shall presently find that writings of that character which would be ambiguous (or rather uncertain) on their face without oral explanation admit often of such explanatory proof to make their meaning obvious while on the other hand as we have just seen, the latent ambiguity may indeed be ruled but whether alike by merely explanatory proof, or by direct proof of intention is another matter. And, again, by ambiguity the idea is conveyed that words are capable of more senses than one but the use of extrinsic evidence must be taken in a broader sense and applied where the instrument points out no certain intention at all where it is incoherent so to speak, unless this borrowed light is thrown upon it. The argument, moreover derived from mingling proof of the higher and lower or equal quality is rather fanciful and misleading for employment in our age antedating as it does, the legislation of the last two centuries which inspires our modern policy of written, signed and attested Wills. Lord Bacon's illustrations were good, but practice carried the force of his rule beyond his own examples, and his distinction of patent and latent though convenient in some respects can hardly serve as a criterion. For in every case, as Mr Jarman has truly observed, the Judge by whom a Will is to be expounded is entitled to be placed, by his knowledge of all the material facts of the case, in nearly as possible in the situation of the testator when he wrote it (1 Jarm Wills 430). Our Courts to day are still using this language and it is said that ambiguities are patent where the uncertainty arises upon the words of the Will before any attempt is made to apply them to the object which they describe and parol evidence is not admissible to explain such ambiguities but is admissible in case of a latent ambiguity whereon supplying the Will to the subject matter it is uncertain what is its meaning. So extrinsic evidence may be admissible to determine the existence of latent ambiguities in the Will. Schouler's Law of Wills § 925

Difference between patent and latent ambiguities. A good test of the difference is to put the instrument in the hands of an ordinary intelligent educated person. If on perusal he sees no ambiguity, but there is nevertheless an uncertainty as to its application, the ambiguity is latent, but if he detects the ambiguity from merely reading the instrument it is patent. Thus in illustration (b) the blanks would be patent ambiguities, and they could not be filled by parol testimony as to the intention of the parties, etc. In the illustration to section 95 no one could detect any ambiguity from merely reading the instrument. The ambiguity does not consist in the language, but is introduced by extrinsic evidence. North Et 279

S 93.

Similar law Vide s 81 of the Indian Succession Act, (XXXIX of 1879)

Principle The province of the Court is to interpret—not to make It is to construe the expression the parties have themselves furnished, not to supply others For cases as these, extrinsic evidence of mere surrounding facts would from the nature of things afford no remedy Where the Court, by the process of construction, to insert in the blank the property or thing omitted, which of the sons was meant by the gift to one, or who was the Lady—this would be to supply, not to interpret and though the law admits evidence to explain it excludes that which would only be to add to Hence it is laid down that in case of patent ambiguity, parol evidence is inadmissible Goodere &c 397

Scope of the section When the express words are employed, they must be in themselves definitely intelligible, so that the act may be capable of enforcement The general rule is that the act must be definite as to its terms This excludes all acts whose terms are so uncertain or unintelligible that they are incapable of enforcement It is common learning, that a deed or a Will is often held void for uncertainty Lord Baron, giving his classical instance of a grant to 'J D et J S et heredibus' calls this patent ambiguity by matter within the deed, such as shall make the deed for uncertainty So, too M Elphinstone's example I gave my dog Ringer to my nephew John or Thomas, (Judicial See Papers III 266) illustrate the same kind of uncertainty A blank an illegible word, an unknown language—these various instances show how an act which is impossible to comprehend and therefore to enforce cannot be deemed a legal act Wigmore § 2407 But even the above proposition sometimes too broadly advanced must be understood with a certain qualification So far as extrinsic evidence may be required to affix a meaning to expressions or to bring out the contemporaneous circumstances under which the document was framed, there is no doubt that this evidence would be receivable whether the ambiguity is called patent or latent for according to the authority of Lord Abinger, in Doed His coal's v Hiscocks 5 M & W 363 'to understand the meaning of any writer we must first be apprised of the persons and circumstances which are subject of his allusions, and what would apply to persons would apply to things To understand therefore the real meaning of the rule of exclusion as applied to patent ambiguity and thus advanced, one must bear in mind its two classifications—that in which the ambiguity is the result of intrinsic composition, and that in which it is one of omission of subject matter In the former case the language may be not only intrinsic composition and that in which it is one of omission of subject matter In the former case the language may be not only intrinsic, but confused, contradictory and generally incomprehensible or it may exhibit a capacity of double meaning, with no adequate solution as to which meaning was intended or it may use terms of art, or terms otherwise not intelligible without explanation If with the aid of such extrinsic evidence as may be necessary to clear up unintelligible or equivocal expressions, the Court cannot struggle through the maze the instrument itself must fail for want of adequate expression and in attempting to solve the meaning, the Court is not at liberty to indulge in mere conjectural surmise it must be governed by the ordinary rules of legal construction In a medium of total darkness the eye could not exercise its powers of vision and the mind would not be allowed to speculate on what it could not see In the latter case the instrument may omit the very essence of its intended operation Thus a blank may have been left for the subject or person to be dealt with or to take say—in a deed the property intended to be passed—in a Will the legatee—in a contract the thing bought or if not a total blank, what is tantamount to it is in a devise to one of the sons of J S without specifying which or a gift to a Lady—without saying what Lady Here the blank cannot be supplied So parol evidence is inadmissible in case of patent ambiguity to one or other of these two classifications indeed as regards the former to something beyond that of individual expressions admitting interpretation On the first beyond as signifying a meaning to discussion extrinsic evidence could have no bearing and it is unnecessary to discuss its admissibility From the second it would be excluded Goodere &c 391—392 This section can apply where a writing is required by law If no writing is required by law and if the writing is so incomplete that its meaning cannot be ascertained—which is probably the case contemplated—it may be disregarded or used as an admission, and oral evidence given Manby v. Leach 105 A. 747. A mortgage document was very artistically drawn up. It was ungrammatical and could not be read literally so as to give any clear meaning. In order to give the construction contended for by one party or the other some words had either to be supplied or removed. Held that there was patent ambiguity in the document and no evidence could be given to supply the defect. Ram Ganesch v. Rup Narain, 59 Ind. Cas. 944 = L. R. 5 A. 542. S 93

Rule as laid down in *Colpoys v. Colpoys In Colpoys v. Colpoys Jacob 165 Sir William Grant says: In the case of a patent ambiguity, that is one appearing on the face of the instrument as a general rule a reference to matters dehors the instrument is forbidden. It must, if possible, be removed by construction and not by averment. But in many cases this is impracticable, where the terms used are wholly indefinite and equivocal, and carry on the face of them no certain or explicit meaning, and the instrument furnishes no materials by which the ambiguity thus arising can be removed. If in such cases the Court were to reject the only mode by which the meaning could be ascertained, viz., the resort to extrinsic circumstances, the instrument must become inoperative and void. As a minor evil therefore, common sense and the law of England (which are seldom at variance) warrant the departure from the general rule and call in the light of extrinsic evidence. The books are full of instances sanctioned by the highest authorities, both in Law and Equity. Where the person and the thing are designated, on the face of the instrument, by terms imperfect and equivocal admitting either of no meaning at all by themselves, or of a variety of different meanings referring tacitly or expressly for the ascertainment and completion of the meanings, to extrinsic circumstances it has never been considered an objection to the reception of the evidence of those circumstances that the ambiguity was patent, manifested on the face of the instrument. When a legacy is given to a man by his surname and the Christian name is not mentioned, is not that a patent ambiguity? Yet it is decided that evidence is admissible. So where there is a gift of the testator's stock that is ambiguous: it has different meanings when used by a farmer and a merchant. So, with a bequest of jewels, if by a nobleman it would pass all but it by a jeweller, it would not pass those that he had in his shop. Thus the same expressions may vary in meaning according to the circumstances of the testator.

Mr Starkie's classification of patent ambiguities 'By patent ambiguity must be understood an ambiguity inherent in the words and incapable of being dispelled, either by any legal rules of construction applied to the instrument itself, or by evidence showing that terms in themselves unmeaning or unintelligible, are capable of receiving a known conventional meaning. The great principle on which the rule is founded is that the intention of the parties should be construed not by vague evidence of their intentions independently of the expressions which they have thought fit to use but by the expressions themselves. Now those expressions which are incapable of any legal construction and interpretation by the rules of art are either so because they are in themselves unintelligible or because being unintelligible, they exhibit a plain and obvious uncertainty. In the first instance the case admits of two varieties, the terms though at first sight unintelligible, may yet be capable of having a meaning annexed to them by extrinsic evidence, just as if they were written in a foreign language, as when mercantile terms are used which amongst mercantile men bear a distinct and definite meaning although others do not comprehend them: the term used may on the other hand be capable of no distinct and definite interpretation. Now it is evident that to give effect to an instrument the terms of which, though apparently ambiguous are capable of having a distinct and definite meaning annexed to them, is no violation of the general principle: for in such a case effect is given, not to any loose conjectures as to the intent and meaning of the party, but to the expressed meaning, and that on the other hand, where either the terms used are incapable of any certain and definite meaning, or being in

- S 93. themselves intelligible, exhibit a plain and obvious uncertainty and are equally capable of different applications, to give no effect to them by extrinsic evidence as to the intention of the party would be to make the supposed intention operate independently of any definite expression or such intention. By patent ambiguity therefore must be understood an inherent ambiguity, which cannot be removed either by the ordinary rules of legal construction, or by the application of extrinsic and explanatory evidence, showing that expressions prima facie unintelligible, are yet capable of conveying a certain and definite meaning. Stair on Evidence p. 653

Blanks and ambiguities. A document may be void for intrinsic indefiniteness of terms, or it may be, though definite, unposible to enforce extrinsically, because there are no objects existing upon which its terms can operate. These are simple principles well established in their sphere, but in concrete application both of them require discrimination from the foregoing principle concerning equivocations. Is a blank space an equivocation? It certainly hits two or more objects equally, and where it represents merely an insufficient term in an attempted description it may be treated as an equivocation, because the writer has fixed upon an object but his words do not carry the description far enough. On the other hand where a blank space represents a failure to make a final expression of will, the act is incomplete to supply declaration of intention would be to set up a rival Will, there can be no interpretation, for there is nothing to interpret. It therefore depends on the particular document whether a blank space is an equivocation, Higmore § 2473. In Buys v. Ill Gen 2 Atk 239, a bequest was made in the following terms 'to the ward of Broad Street according to Mr. — his will. In that case parol evidence of the intention of the testator where there was a blank was excluded. See also Re Medley (1895) 2 Ch 451. Similarly in Hunt v. Hunt 3 Prec ch 511 where the bequest was to the effect 'my other pictures to become the property of Lady —', Lord Sherlow L.C. declined to supply the blank by parol evidence. See also illustration (b). In the above cases the blank cannot be supplied. So also where a bill of sale to secure £70 and interest at 1s in the pound per month agreed to repay principal and interest, by monthly instalments of sum — extrinsic evidence to fill up the blank was held to be inadmissible (but 'pound' was supplied by construction) Mourmand v. Le Clair 88 L 1 735, Phip Ex 4th Ed p 580. But where a bequest was to 'Price the son of — Price' declarations of intent to give to a particular Price admitted this is only that the testator did not know the Christian name. Price v. Page 4 Ves Jr 679, see also per Sir J. Hannen in In the goods of De Rosa, L R 2 P D 68 (69) where an executor named is 'Percival of Brighton Esq' the father, applied to William Percival Boxall who answered the description. Higmore § 2473. Therefore where blank is left in the Will for the name of a legatee or devisee no parol evidence however strong is competent to fill it up, and the principle appears to be the same where the blank relates to the subject or thing bequeathed or devised. To give to — £1,000 leaves therefore, no one who can claim the legacy and to give 'to A. B. —' leaves nothing to be claimed as a legacy, and in either case the testator likely enough had never resolved upon a gift definitely, though turning it over in his mind, as to the subject or object. Miller v. Frazer 2 Atk 239. Taylor v. Richardson 2 Drew 16. Jarm Wills 441. But partial blanks may in a suitable case be supplied in construction not perhaps by direct parol evidence of what the testator intended, but in all events, where the context with or without the aid of extrinsic circumstances supplies a definite thing or person, and render the Will sensible. Thus, a legacy to 'Mr B., or to John or to 'Brown might be identified, and so too where one legacy of £ 500 was given to A and other £ 700 to B a third legacy of £ 600 to C might well be supposed to mean six hundred pounds. Upon partial blanks, on the other hand which leave the sense defective no valid gift can be based. Mason v. Bateson 26 Beav 101. And if besides a blank, there is an uncertain description, the Will becomes doubly inoperative. Gill v. Gill (1909) P 157. Hubbuck's Estate (1905) P 129. Moreover a devise or bequest, wholly omitted by mistake, not to be inserted in a Will (Newboogh's case, 5 Madd 364), yet some partial

S 94 parties Mr Justice Moolerjee said "In view of the provisions of sections 92 and 93 of the Indian Evidence Act, it is plain that oral evidence was not admissible to show what was intended by the parties, the intention must be gathered from the language used by them in the instrument. The case of Manmatha Nath v Nabin Chandra, (supra) is really of no assistance. The learned Judges who decided the case did not specify the evidence which could be admissible to interpret the instrument, they relied merely upon the decision in Muhammed Samsooddeen v Moonshee Abdool (1861) W R Gap No 379, which was decided before the Indian Evidence Act was placed in the Statute book. It may be pointed out, however, that evidence of previous transactions between the parties or of the custom of the country may be admissible for a limited purpose. Thus to take one illustration—it has been held that evidence may be allowed to be given in anticipation of some obvious defence for instance evidence of prior transactions between the parties, to construe a term in a contract in rebuttal of a possible customary meaning Richard v Samuel, 11 Cl & Fin 45. In the case before us no such consideration arises, because the only evidence upon which the plaintiff relies is direct oral evidence to the effect that at the time the parties entered into this contract of warranty they agreed that the interest would be payable at the rate of 1 anna per rupee per month. In our opinion evidence of this description is clearly not admissible under the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act. This view is fortified by illustration (b) to section 93 of the Indian Evidence Act which is to the following effect—A deed contains blanks. Evidence cannot be given of facts which would show how they were meant to be filled. See also Ram Ganesh v Kup Narain A I R 1925 All 34=80 Ind Cas 941, Sorju v Sully, 4 P L T 577.

Where a lease is ambiguous evidence of user under it may be given in order to show the sense in which the parties used the language and their intention in executing the instrument whether the ambiguity is latent or patent Guru Prasanna v Madhusudan, 26 C W N 901=35 C L J 87=64 Ind Cas 924, Watham v Att Gen (1919) A C 533.

Extrinsic Evidence when not admissible. A district Judge held that a contract compensation for breach of which was sued for, was ambiguous on the face of it. But he held that evidence was admissible to show the intention of the parties and he acted upon such evidence. Held this was in contravention of section 93 of the Evidence Act and illegal within the meaning of s 622 of the Civil Procedure Code. Joman v Ah Yu 14 Bur L R 65. Under section 29 of the Contract Act an agreement is void if its meaning is not certain or capable of being made certain, and under section 93 of the Evidence Act where the language of a deed is on its face, ambiguous or defective no evidence can be given to make it certain. Deogil v Pitamber 1 A 275. Where the terms of a document are ambiguous on the face of it oral evidence is inadmissible to prove the intention of the executant. A Court cannot under take to supply defects or ambiguities according to its own notions of what is reasonable for this would be not to enforce a contract made by the parties but to make a new contract for them. Berket Ram v Ananta Ram 31 Ind Cas 632. See also Maharashtra v Bygulal 71 Ind Cas 436. Collector of Puar v Beti Maharani 14 A 162. Narsinghji v Penanganti (1921) M N W 819.

Exclusion of evidence against application of document to existing facts to apply to such facts

94 When language used in a document is plain in itself, and when it applies accurately to existing facts, evidence may not be given to show that it was not meant

Illustration

A sells to B by deed "my estate at Rampur containing 100 bighas." A has another estate at Rampur containing 100 bighas. Evidence may not be given of the fact that the estate meant to be sold was one situated at a different place and of a different size.

Scope of the section "The words of a written instrument must be construed according to their natural meaning and it appears to me that no amount of acting by the parties can alter or qualify words which are plain and unambiguous. So far as I am aware no principle has ever been more universally or rigorously insisted upon than that written instruments if they are plain and unambiguous must be construed according to the plain and unambiguous language of the instrument itself. Per Earl Halsbury L C in North Western Railway v Hastings, (1900) A C 260 (263). So where there is no ambiguity of any sort in an instrument the instrument must have effect according to the plain meaning of the language the parties have deliberately chosen to employ. Per Lord Macnaghten in ibid. So it is a rule of law that extrinsic evidence is not admissible to alter a written contract, or to show that its meaning is different from what it imports. Ram Lochun v Unno Poorna 7 W R 144. This section embodies the rule of law laid down by Tudal C J in Shore v Wilson 9 Cl & F 355, where he said "The general rule I take it to be, is that where the words of any instrument are free from ambiguity in themselves and where external circumstances do not create any doubt or difficulty as to proper application of these words to claimants under the instrument or as to the subject matter to which the instrument relates such instrument is always to be construed according to the strict plain, common meaning, of the words themselves and that in such case evidence dehors the instrument for the purpose of explaining it according to the surmised or alleged intention of the parties to the instrument is utterly inadmissible. If it were otherwise no lawyer would be safe in advising upon the construction of a written instrument nor any party taking under it for the ablest advice might be controlled and the clearest title undermined, if at some future period, parol evidence of the particular meaning which the party affixed to his words, or of his secret intention in making the instrument or of the objects he meant to take benefit under it might be set up to contradict or vary the plain language of the instrument itself. See also Cum Fr 281.

In Webb v Byng 1 Kay & John 580 Jice Chancellor Hood said "The law, has become so settled by numerous decisions, as to how far external evidence is admissible and what that species of evidence must be, that I need only sum up what appears to be the result of the authorities. Of course in interpreting any instrument which purports to deal with property some extrinsic information is necessary, in order to make the words which are but signs fit the external things to which those signs are appropriate. In reality external information is requisite in construing every instrument but when any subject is thus discovered which not only is within the words of the instrument according to their natural construction but exhausts the whole of those words then the investigation must stop you are bound to take the interpretation which entirely exhausts the whole of the series of expressions used by the testator, and are not permitted to go any further. So where the language of a document is clear and applies without difficulty to the existing fact extrinsic evidence is not to be admitted to affect its interpretation. Higgins v Dawson, (1902) A C 1, Clyde Navigation v Laird, 8 App Cas 678. In the above case Earl of Halsbury L C said, "Those are the words which your Lordships have to construe, and I confess that it is to my mind absolutely amazing that any one can entertain the smallest doubt as to what those words mean. I have read the words by themselves because in my view of the meaning of this instrument they are to be read by themselves. One does not doubt that where you are construing either a Will or any other instrument it is perfectly legitimate to look at the whole instrument,—and indeed, you must look at the whole instrument—to see the meaning of the whole instrument, and you cannot rely upon one particular passage in it to the exclusion of what is relevant to the explanation of the particular clause that you are expounding. The true construction of the agreement depends upon the ordinary meaning of the words used and if those words are plain and unambiguous, it is quite clear that they must not be explained away by extrinsic evidence and still less by mere reasoning for probabilities. Alagappa v Alagappa 1 M H C R 264, Daboo Rambhaddun v Daboo Koonwar W R 144. Act X Rul 22(24). In North Western Railway v Hastings (Lord)

S. 94. at p 270, Lord Bampton said, 'The whole question turns upon the construction of that short clause contained in the agreement of May 18 1854, which I need only refer to. As it stands it seems to me to be clear and free from ambiguity and incapable of any other construction than that assigned to it by the respondent. Certainly there is nothing to be found in the rest of the agreement to suggest any other interpretation. But it is said that it must have been differently understood by the parties themselves, and that the omission by the plaintiff and his predecessors or for upwards of forty years to claim the rents now sought to be recovered is cogent evidence that such was the case. I grant that if the clause were capable of this construction one of which supports and the other of which would defeat the claim, the omission would afford irresistible proof that the latter was the interpretation intended by the parties. No such ambiguity however exists and it seems therefore to me that in the absence of any proof to the contrary it must be assumed that the parties knew and understood the language they were using, and that in executing the agreement containing that clause they were truly expressing their intentions, and are bound by the writing they have signed. Why the agreement was so framed—that were the considerations which induced it—and why the claim was so long allowed to sleep are mere matters of speculation. But one has no right to act upon speculation to set aside a deed or agreement which is on the face of it clear and definite. So a Court must construe a deed according to the plain ordinary meaning of its terms and must not import words into it from any conjectural view of its intention which would have the effect of materially changing the nature of the estate then by created. Mussamat Bhagubhull v Choudhury Bhoi Nath 21 A 26—1 C 101 Millard v Bailey 1 Eq 378 Gibson v Umet 1 H Bl 61. In cases contemplated by this section there is evidently no patent ambiguity for by the terms of the section the document is 'plain in itself' and there is evidently no latent ambiguity for it 'applies accurately to existing facts.' It follows therefore, that there is no room for parol evidence. Scott 12 281. So when the language used in a document is plain and applies accurately to existing facts evidence is not admissible for the purpose of showing that it was not meant to apply to those facts. Telapha v Pulani 29 Ind Cts 201—1915 M W N 325. In the same case Coutts Trotter J said though the object of the Court must always ultimately be to ascertain the intention of the makers of instrument which must be gathered from the words they have used where those words are definite and unambiguous and the Court must not travel outside the words used to found or confirm speculations as to their having in fact intended something other than what they have said. See also Sambhuset v Sidaram 3 Bom L R 768 Rahim Bakh v Shayad 19 C W N 1311, Madnapore Zamindary v Jogendra 33 C L J 186. Evidence of the conduct of parties to a document subsequent to its execution is not admissible for the purpose of explaining its meaning. Chandra v Senadath, A W N 1882, 54.

In cases of misdescription oral evidence is admissible. Mahabu v Muhom mad 38 A 103—14 A L J 15—32 Ind Cts 174, see also Sabji v Nauab 104 Ind Cts 756. Evidence to prove plaintiff's adoption by the deceased is not in admissible in evidence under this section on the ground that the language of a document on which the plaintiff has partly relied but to which he is no party is plain and unambiguous and does not make mention of the fact of such adoption. Gopi Kishen v Gopi Kishen 27 P W R 1915—57 P L R 1915—1 Ind Cts 701. When a Court is executing an award it is only in cases where the words are unambiguous or capable of more than one interpretation that oral evidence can be given as to their meaning. Kesho Ram v Thakur Das 78 Ind Cts 90. Explanatory evidence may be given under s 92 proviso (6) where the language is not plain in itself, nor applies accurately to existing facts. Ghallabhai v Nandubhai, 21 B 335 see also Mahabu v Marwatulla, 33 A 103.

Document is plain in itself. A written instrument is not ambiguous because an ignorant and uninformed person is unable to interpret it. It is ambiguous only if found to be of uncertain meaning when persons of competent skill and information are unable to do so. Higgin v Fr 12 p 189. It must be borne in mind said Rugby L J in Re Grainger, (1900) 2 Ch 764 'that a Will is not ambiguous by reason only that it is difficult of construction. If it is finally held to be a particular construction, that must be given its legal meaning, notwithstanding any difficulty that the Courts may have felt in arriving judicially at the construction. It is only ambiguous when, after full consideration, it is determined judicially that no interpretation can be given to it. This dictum was quoted with approval by Lord Dary in Higgins v Dawson, (1902) A C 1 at p 10.

Intention "It is not the duty of a Court of Justice to search for the testator's meaning, otherwise than by fairly interpreting the words he has used." Per Lord Cranworth in Abbot v Middleton 7 H L C 64. In Doe d Brodbeck v Thomson, 12 Moo P C 116 Turner L J observed "It is upon intention either expressly declared or collected by just reasoning, upon the terms of the instrument or evidenced by surrounding circumstances where surrounding circumstances can be called in aid and not upon conjecture merely that their Lordships feel bound to proceed. The object of all expositions of written instruments must be to ascertain the expressed meaning or intention of the writer, the expressed meaning being equivalent to intention." Per Coleridge J in Shore v Wilson, 9 Cl & F 125. "The question in this and other cases of construction of written instruments is not what was the intention of the parties but what is the meaning of the words they have used." Per Lord Denham in Rutman v Cartlairs, 5 B & Ald 663 see also Doe d Templeman v Marten, 4 B & Ald 783 Grant v Grant L R 5 C P 751 Grey v Pearson 6 H L C 106, Smith v Pears, 18 Ch D 31 Ingham v Raynor (1894) 2 Ch 83 Savath v Jograj 8 M I A, 66 Scale v Rautins (1892) A C 312, Srinivash v Venkiah 3 C L J 221 Ighore v Kamru, 11 C L J 461 Mary Wilson v George Pales 31 M 183 Dinbar v Nusservanji 22 C W N 199-49 I A 323-49 C 1905 (P C), Oloymonce v Vilmony, 15 C 282 Idrocate General of Bombay v Hornuaji, 29 B 375, Babu v Sitaram 3 Bom L R 768 President v Chitlakaman (1911) 2 M W N 288, Velappa v Palani (1915) M W N 325-29 Ind Cas 201 Manmatha v Probodh, 37 C L J 62. As regards our duty when Wills come before us for construction it is obvious to say that it is in each case to consider the words of the Will. I say that, for the purpose of calling attention to the agreement that in the absence of any rule laid down or established by cases, we are at liberty to construe Wills as ordinary intelligent persons would do. There is a fallacy in this. We are bound to have regard to any rules of construction which have been established by the Courts and subject to what we are bound to construe the Will as trained legal minds would do. Even very intelligent persons whose minds are not so trained are accustomed to jump at a conclusion as to what a person means by considering what they, under similar circumstances, think they would have done. This is conjecture only, and conjecture on the imperfect knowledge of the circumstances of the case, because the facts known to the testator may not all be before them, and the testator's mind as regards the attention to the point to be claims of different parties dependent upon him, may not have been constituted as their minds are constituted so that it cannot be concluded that he would have acted in the same way as they. We therefore must construe the Will as we should construe any other document subject to this that in Wills, if the intention is shown it is not necessary that the technical words which are necessary in some instruments should be used for the purpose of giving effect to it." Per Cotton L J in Ralph v Carrut 11 C L D 873 (878)=18 L J Ch 801.

Meaning to be ascertained from the whole document In Hoston v Fitzgerald (1815) 15 East 530, Lord Ellenborough said "It is a true rule of construction that the sense and meaning of the parties in any part of an instrument may be collected ex antecedentibus et consequentibus every part of it may be brought into act on in order to collect from the whole an uniform and consistent sense if that may be done." See also Damodar Das v Dayabhai 23 B 833-2, I A 126-2 C W N 117 Gray v Minne thope 3 Ves 107, Re Fern (1901) 2 Ch 52 Kandarpa v Jogendra 12 C L J 391, Shab Lal Juman v Parangini, 8 C L J 20 Tagore v Fagore, 9 B L R 377-18 W R 359 Kabdas v Kanhaya Lal 11 C 121 (129)=11 I A 218 Amuthayyan v Atharamayyan 14 M 67 (69), Shookmany v Monohar, 11 C 681-12 I A 103, Lalit Mohan v Chalkan

S 95

Lal, 24 C 834 = 24 I A 76, Mahomed v. Shetnakram 14 B L R 226, Varry v. George, 31 M 283 Indurivel v. Satchell, (1903) A C 122, O'Brien In re (1906) 1 Ir R 649, Brocklebank v. Johnson, 20 Ben 213, Key v. Key 4 De J M & G 73, Pande v. Sarja 25 C W N 961 (P C), Grey v. Pearson, 6 H L Cas 61

Evidence as to document unmeaning in reference to existing facts

95 When language used in a document is plain in itself, but is unmeaning in reference to existing facts, evidence may be given to show that it was used in a peculiar sense

Illustration

A sells to B by deed 'my house in Calcutta'

A had no house in Calcutta, but it appears that he had a house at Howrah which B had been in possession since the execution of the deed

These facts may be proved to show that the deed related to the house at Howrah

Latent ambiguity Sections 95, 96 and 97 deal with latent ambiguity. These sections correspond to section 80 of the Indian Succession Act (XXXIX of 1925). In interpreting a Will where there is a latent ambiguity the law is thus laid down by Wigram: 'Where object of a testator's bounty, or the subject of his disposition (i.e. the person or thing intended) is described in terms which are applicable indifferently to more than one person or thing, evidence is admissible to prove which of the persons or things so described was intended by the testator'. Latent ambiguity, in the more or literary application of the term, arises from the existence of facts external to the instrument, and the creation by those facts of a question not solved by the document itself. In strictness of definition such cases as those in which peculiar usage may afford a construction to a term different from its natural one would be instances of latent ambiguity, since the double use of the term would leave it open to the doubt in which of its two senses it were to be taken. It is not however to this class of cases we now advert, but to those in which the ambiguity is rather that of description, either equivocal itself from the existence of two subject matters or two persons both falling within its terms or imperfect when brought to bear on any person or thing. Thus a man having two estates called Blackacre may devise generally his estate Blackacre (not saying which) or having two sons John may give to his son John. Here upon the face of the Will all would be apparently plain. It would be external facts alone which create doubt (vide illustrations to sections 95, 96 and 97). Nothing on its face could be more simple or less ambiguous than a gift of 'my estate Blackacre or a gift to my son John'. The embarrassment is raised when it is sought to apply to the gift, and then the discovery is made which did not occur to the testator, namely, that there are two estates Blackacre, or two sons John. In either case accordingly to give effect to the gift, the subject must be ascertained and defined. Again there may be enough description in the instrument to have indicated some specific thing as the object of its operation or some given individual as the object of its provisions, but it might turn out, on seeking to apply the instrument to its supposed subject matter or object, that, from an imperfection of description, there was matter subject or object in exact correspondence with it so that it would be uncertain on what, or in whose favour the instrument was designed to operate. Thus in the case of a devise of Frogues Farm in the occupation of M, the testator had a farm called Frogues, but a portion of it only was in M's occupation (Good title v. Southern 1 M & S 290). In a gift to A and B legitimate children of C D—C D had children A and B but they were illegitimate. Yet the farm was allowed to pass, and the children to take. It was the extrinsic circumstances in both cases which created the uncertainty and the question which extrinsic circumstances created, extrinsic evidence was admitted to clear up. The distinction will be obviously between clearing up an ambiguity and creating a subject Goodere Ev S 95

pp 395 96

Principle The process of interpretation is a part of the procedure of realising a person's act in the external world. It is in a sense the completion of the act, for without it the utterance, whether written or oral must remain a mere word. Deeds, contracts and Wills, if they are not to remain empty manifestations must be enforced. They must be applied to external objects. Somewhere possession must be yielded, or goods delivered, or money transferred, and in order that the law may enforce these changes in external objects the relation between the terms of the jurial act and certain external objects must be determined as an indispensable part of the process. In short, the interpretation of the term of a jurial act is an essential part of the act considered as capable of legal realization and enforcement. The only difference is that the actor alone creates the terms of his act while the interpretation of it, being a part of the enforcement comes into the hands of the law. Wigmore § 2458. Every agreement must receive its construction from its own terms, without the introduction of any evidence dehors the instrument unless there be some latent ambiguity. Per Rowlie J in Cole v Guy 2 B & P 565 569, see also the remarks of Lord Eldon in Smith v Doe 2 B & B 473 (602). But "where the words stand in equilibrio, and are so doubtful that they may be taken one way or the other there it is proper to have evidence read to explain them. Per Lord Couper in Shole v Russell 3 Ch Rep 169, Lord Chesney's Case, 5 Co Rep 68 (a) "If you go to a civil evidence to raise the ambiguity, you can not well insert it to explain such ambiguity." Per Lord Thurlton in Shelburne v Inchausti 1 Bro C C 338 341. This section has its origin in the maxim 'falsa demonstratio non nocet cum de corpore causatur'. The meaning of the maxim is that where description is made up of more than one part and one part is true but the other false then if the part which is true describe the subject with sufficient legal certainty the untrue part will be rejected and will not vitiate the devise. Jarman on Wills 6th Ed pp 1265-66.

Origin of the rule of extrinsic evidence in cases of latent ambiguity The construction of Wills' says Lord Coke ought to be collected from the words of the Will in writing and not by any averment (i.e. circumstances) of evidence out of it. Lord Chesney's Case, 5 Co Rep 68 (a). In Cole v Rantlinsons 1 Salk 234, Lord Holt said "If we once travel into the affairs of the testator, and leave the Will we shall not know the mind of the testator by his words, but by his circumstances, so if you go to a lawyer he shall not know how to expound it. Men's right will be very precarious upon such construction. We must not depart from the Will to find the meaning of it in things out of it. But in Goodings v Goodings 1 Ves Sr 231, Lord Hardwicke, said "That rule is laid down much too large by Holt, for in several cases it is admitted it must be allowed—namely, where the description or thing is uncertain it must be admitted to show the testator knew such a person and used to call her by a nickname. See also Shole v Russell 3 Ch Rep 169. So Lord Couper and Lord Hardwick were breakers of new ground in this respect. Their work was continued by Lord Thurlton whose ruling in Fonneten v Poynt 1 Bro C C 492 was considered a dangerous innovation. As late as the beginning of the 1800's there were Judges who still thought that the only proper exception was an equivocation. In Doe v Chichester 1 Dow 65 93, Gibbs C J said "The Courts of law have been jealous of the admission of extrinsic evidence to explain the intention of a testator, and I know of only one case in which it is permitted that is where an ambiguity is introduced by extrinsic circumstances." Wigmore § 2470.

Application of the section "The admission of extrinsic circumstances," says Plumer v R "to govern the construction of a written statement is in all cases an exception to the general rule of law which exclude everything dehors the instrument. It must be the case of an ambiguity which cannot otherwise be removed and which may by these means be clearly and satisfactorily explained. In the same case Plumer v R also declared that "where there is a latent ambiguity raised by extrinsic circumstance it may be got rid of in the same manner. The general rule laid down in section 91 of the Act is that where the terms of a contract has been reduced to writing, no evidence shall be given in proof of the terms of the contract except the document itself, or, in certain cases, secondary evidence of its contents. But this rule is subject to the important exceptions contained in ss 95 and 97. Koruppa Gounden, v Peria Phambi Gounden, 2 M L J 736=30 M 397. Oral evidence is admissible to show the subject matter to which, or a person to whom, a written instrument applies or refers, and for such purpose to explain the latent ambiguities. Such oral evidence may be of the surrounding circumstances or apparently of statements of intention made by parties to a document. Doe v Needs 6 L J Ex 79=Cockle Cas 355. In Doe v Martin, 4 B & Ad 770 785 Parke J said: "It may be laid down as a general rule that all facts relating to the subject matter and object of the deed are admissible to aid in ascertaining what is meant by the words used in the Will. So the Court is at liberty to enquire into all the surrounding circumstances which have acted upon the mind of the persons by whom the deed or Will (it matters not whether it was one or the other) was executed. The Court therefore has not merely a right, but it is its duty to inquire into the surrounding circumstances before it can approach the construction of the instrument itself." Sugden L C in 4th Gen v Drummond, 1 Dr & W 356. Where a release is silent as to the nature of the claim released, evidence is admissible, under this section, to prove what the claim referred to in the release is valid and operative as a release under section 63 of the Contract Act, even though it is conditional and is not supported by consideration. Alathen v Lodge, (1910) M W N 191=20 M L J 383. A compromise decree provided for interests at 2 per cent and the question arose whether the interest was payable at the rate monthly or annually. Held, that it was open to that Court by virtue of s 95 of the Evidence Act to hear evidence as to the ordinary meaning of such expressions in documents of that nature. Mahmud v Zafur, 62 Ind Cas 702. The content and subject matter of a contract have to be taken into account in determining whether the word "upto" is to be taken as exclusive or inclusive of the day to which it is applied. Metropolitan Engineering v Walter Engine, 22 C W N 46=45 C 481=45 Ind Cas 305. Where the plaintiff sued for a declaration that he was a mortgagee in possession of certain plots and alleged that the numbers entered in the mortgage deed were incorrect, held, that oral evidence was admissible under ss 95 and 96 of the Evidence Act to prove how the description given in the mortgage deed was relevant to the existing facts. Radha Lal v Augue 16 P C 213=21 Ind Cas 429. Where the description of property, old is such that one portion of it applies to the whole of the house but the boundaries given below apply only to a portion of the same and both read together do not apply correctly either to the whole house or to a portion of it a case of latent ambiguity arises. Extrinsic evidence is admissible for the purpose of solving the question whether by the description of the property taken is a whole the intention was to convey the whole house or only a portion of it. Abdul Ghani v Ashiq Hussain (1922) Oudh 162=66 Ind Cas 412. But where a description is partly correct and partly incorrect and the former part is sufficient to identify the subject matter intended while the latter does not apply to any subject the erroneous part will be rejected on the ground that a false description will not hurt when it can exist with the subject itself. Narain Das v Teck Chand 1923 Sind 43. Where a mortgage deed by a mistake described the mortgaged property as being Fauzi No 6607 but it was found that the mortgagor owned Tazui No 9907 held that it was open to the mortgagee to prove by evidence what the property actually mortgaged was and that the mortgagor could not claim any exoneration on the ground of misdescription of the property. Wajidunissa v Talomkiz Sahay 1 Pat L R 80=71 Ind Cas 389. Latent ambiguity is removable by extrinsic evidence. Narain Das v Teckchand 84 Ind Cas 13. Where a mortgagee transferred the mortgaged property and there was no mention in the deed that only the mortgage right was intended to be transferred the mere fact that it is mentioned in the deed that the property stood in the khata of the mortgagor and that there is an indemnity clause cannot justify the contention that only mortgage rights were intended and if the absence of any mention in the deed of absolute ownership on the part of the vendor mortgagor makes it possible to hold that mortgagee's rights were sold, there is a latent ambiguity to remove which evidence can be given. Davlat v. Balram 118 Ind. Cas. 682 = A I R 1929 Nag 267. Suit was brought by plaintiff as Receiver appointed under an order of Court with authority to sue defendant for money due to a third party. The money was due under an agreement dated 26th August but by mistake the order referred to the money as being due under an agreement of the 27th October. Held that the intention of the parties is immaterial in construing the order and section 95 of the Evidence Act does not apply. Binode Behary v. Ray Varan 30 C 699 = 7 C W N 651. Where land with certain boundaries is sold and is wrongly described as containing a certain area the error is regarded as a mere mis-description and does not vitiate the deed. The maxim demonstratio falsa non nocet applies. Where in a sale deed the land sold is sufficiently identified by the descriptions of its extent and assignment and the name of the registered pattadar the addition of a wrong survey number may be disregarded and does not render it useless as a document of title. Karuppa Gounden v. Pina Phambi 2 M L J 336 = 30 M 397.

S 95

General principle and scope of the section. It is not necessary and it is not humanly possible for the symbols of description which we call words to describe in every detail the objects designated by the symbols. The notion that description is a complete enumeration is an instinctive fallacy which must be got rid of before interpretation can be properly attempted. For example a devise of 'the house owned by me at No 19, Theatre Road Calcutta' is obviously a mere shorthand indication of some simple but essential attributes of the house. How many stories, rooms, doors, windows, closets has it? What is the colour of paper on the respective walls, the kind of carpet on the floors, the number of steps on each stair flight, the pattern of the window frames? These and a hundred other details would go to fill out the description. Without them, it is imperfect, in an absolute sense. Yet no one would insist that the devise was void for uncertainty for lack of the addition of these details. Why? Because the few features mentioned do happen to suffice to fulfil the purpose of interpretation namely to enable us to find the object designated, and to select it with fair certainty from others. Certainty in other words, is a relative term. It signifies that the few terms employed are the essential ones for the purpose. Had they not been in themselves sufficient, we might even have looked at extrinsic declarations of intention. Conversely then, an excessive description is not inherently fatal if the essential terms of it can be ascertained. A devise of 'my yellow house at No 19 Park Street, Calcutta' may lead us to a white house at that place, and if we can surely believe under all the circumstances that the street number of the house, not the colour of the paint, is the essential term, we are to apply the devise to that house. Just as we found that the omitted terms were not essential to applying the description so we may find that some of the inserted terms are not essential. We are doing it no violence by ignoring the non-essential terms for neither the omission nor the insertion of non-essential terms alters its essence as a whole. By conceiving clearly the singleness of each description as a symbol of a single object, we appreciate that the imperfections of either omission or insertion do not destroy its character as a single effort at the designation of a single object. And so we come to the maxim 'falsa demonstratio non nocet cum de corpore constat'. The practical problem in a particular case is to ascertain which specific term is the essential one. But the important point of theory is that the application of the description is entirely consistent with the general process of interpretation. If ignorance s 2476. The characteristic of cases within the rule is that the description so far as it is false applies to no subject at all and so far as it is true applies to one only. Per Alderson B in Moriel v. Fisher, 4 Exch 591. West v. Landay, 11 H L C 375. Hebb v. Stanley, 16 C B (N S) p 775. The rule is a rule of good sense. If the language is clear but does not fit because of some of the words which have been inserted there if it is possible to reject the part that makes it inapplicable the Court will do so. Coven v. Trevellick (1899) 2 Ch 309 (312), see also Coven v. Trevellick (1893) 2 Ch 551. Eastwood v. Ashton (1955) A C 900, Hatcham v. All Gen. (1919) A C 533. A description though false in part may with reference to extrinsic circumstances be absolutely certain, or at

S 95. least, sufficiently so to enable a Court to identify the subject intended, & where a false description is superadded to one which by itself would have been correct. Higram 5th Ed p 60, see also Sheehy v Ashmole, 19 W R 276, Tait v Joy, 21 W R 93. In the application of the doctrine of falsa demonstratio non nocet it is immaterial in what part of the description the false demonstration appears. It is not necessary that it should follow the true part, and qualify what has gone before. Couch v Truefill (1899) 2 Ch 309. In that case Lunney M R observed: "I must protest against the way in which the doctrine was stated by the applicant's counsel—that the maxim falsa demonstratio non nocet only applies where there is some correct description at the end of the sentence. That is whittling away the doctrine and making it ridiculous, it is a misapprehension."

Intention. "As soon as there is an adequate and sufficient definition with convenient certainty of what is intended to pass by a deed, any subsequent erroneous addition will not vitiate it. Per Parke B in Llewellyn v Earl of Jersey (1843) 11 M & W 183 at p 189. The intention once found the erroneous description is treated as mere surplusage and is rejected following the maxim utile per inutile non vitiatur (Interpretation of Deeds etc p 119). "Mistakes in the description of legacies like those in the description of the legatees may be rectified by reference to the terms of the gift and evidence of extrinsic circumstances taken together. William's Executor, 11th Ed 954."

Application of the maxim in different classes of cases. According to Mr Theobald the maxim is applicable to these three classes of cases: (a) where an object is sufficiently described additional words which have no application to any thing may be rejected. Blague v Gold, Cor 417 473. Doe v Dunning v Cranston 7 M & W 1. (2) where there is a complete description but the testator goes on to add words for the purpose of identifying or elaborating the previous description these words, if inconsistent with the previous description may be rejected. Armstrong v Buckland, 18 Ben 201. Slugsby v Grainger, 7 H L 273, Travers v Blundell, 6 Ch D 436. (3) where there is no continuous description and there is something answering to part of it, and something answering to other part but two together are inconsistent the question is which are the leading words of description? In the first class of cases under the head there is no repugnancy between the general terms and the particular superadded description, in the second and third class there is a repugnancy between the two parts of a description. Theobald, 7th Ed 140.

Illustrative cases. If a testator devise his black horse, having only a white one (Doe v Geary 1 Ves Sen, 255) or devise his free hold houses, having only leasehold houses (Day v Trig 18 P Wms 286, Doe v Dunning v Cranston, 7 M & W 1) the white horse in the one case and the leasehold houses in the other, would clearly pass. In these cases the substance of the subject intended is certain and if there be but one such substance the superadded description though false introduces no ambiguity and as by the supposition the rejected words are inapplicable to any subject, the Court does not alter, vary, or add to the effect of the Will by rejecting them. To such case the maxim falsa demonstratio non nocet may with propriety be applied. Gimes v Sweet, Amb 1 Fem 293. Parsons v Parsons, 1 Ves Jun 266, Doe v Sweet, Amb 175. Guth v Meynell, 1 Bro C C 30, Stoddale v Bushby 19 Ves 381. Smith v Campbell 19 Ves 103. Welby v Welby, 2 Ves & B 191. Richardson v Watson 1 B & Adol 733, Miller v Travers 8 Bing 241. Doe v Smith v Gallanay 5 B & Adol 43, and this is the proper limit of that maxim. Higram 5th Ed 61.

Extension of the rule. In the application of the principle in question the Courts have not confined themselves to cases which are strictly within its terms. It is often found on a disclosure of the facts of the case that of the particulars of which the description is composed each separately finds some corresponding subject but the one is applicable to a larger portion of the testator's property than the other thereby raising the question whether the more limited limit be restrictive of the other or expressive only of a suggestion or affirmation. It is mere question of construction for it is clear that if the answer be that the more limited term is mere suggestion or affirmation, it will be disregarded in deciding upon the quantity to be considered as covered by the description. Now if the testator describe the subject of the devise as an entire subject, and in terms of sufficient certainty as his "farm called A his 'house' in a particular place or his 'B estate,'" or the like, then although he adds a clause to the effect that the property is in the occupation of a particular tenant, or is situate in a particular country, street or other locality, and it turns out that such clause is true only of a part of the property, the entire subject may well pass, unrestricted by additional clause, if such a construction be in accordance with the general interest of the testator. Jurman 6th Ed 126, citing Roe v Penon 5 East 80 per Lord Ellenborough. In West v Ludway, 11 H L C 384 Lord Westbury explains the maxim falsa demonstratio non nocet, in the following terms "where some subject matter is devised as a whole under a demonstration which is applicable to the entire land and then that description is followed by words which are added on the principle of enumeration but which do not exhaust all the particulars then the entirety, which has been expressly and definitely given shall not be prejudiced by an imperfect and inaccurate enumeration of the particulars. In the case of Travers v Blundell, 6 Ch D 436 the testator was exercising a power given him by his father's Will over an estate called the Riggby Estate which his father had purchased, and Sir G Jessel after saying that the real question in cases of this description was 'which is the leading description, held that the words in the Will that part of Riggby's Estate purchased by my father was the leading description, although the enumeration of the closes of which the Will said the estate consisted, made no mention of the two closes Tibhovanadas v Krishnamaram, 18 B 283 (288),

Inaccurate description. A testator made a bequest of my "portrait of X to the National Gallery and the executors sent it on there being no doubt as to the identity of the thing bequeathed. The trustees of the National Gallery expressed doubts as to whether it was a portrait of X, whereupon the executors claimed it back for the residuary legatee. Held even assuming the description was wrong the gift was valid and the portrait passed to the trustees of the Gallery. In re Minier Gibson Cullum Cust v Attorney General (1924) 1 Ch 456, a testator specifically devised "all my messuage farm lands and hereditaments in Bentley and Bombay in Essex now in occupation of Thomas Gurling purchased by me of Alderman Thrope." It was found that the testator had a farm in Bentley and Bombay called 'Welham's farms' compounded of two small farms purchased by him of Alderman Thrope in 1831 and of another adjoining small farm and a field both purchased by him from Mr Carington. At the date of the Will and death of the testator the whole of the lands so purchased were in the occupation of Thomas Gurling who found them as one holding. Held that the whole of Wilham's farm passed to the specific devise. Norman v Norman (1919) 1 Ch 297.

96 When the facts are such that the language used might

Evidence as to application of language which can apply to one only of several persons have been meant to apply to any one, and could not have been meant to apply to more than one, of several persons or things, evidence may be given of facts which show which of those persons or things it was intended to apply to

Illustrations

(a) A agrees to sell to B for Rs 1,000 'my white horse'. A has two white horses. Evidence may be given of facts which show which of them was meant.

(b) A agrees to accompany B to Haidarabad. Evidence may be given of facts showing whether Haidarabad in the Dekkhan or Haidarabad in Sind was meant.

S 96.

Principle "If you go to parol evidence to raise the ambiguity, you cannot well refuse it, to explain such ambiguity." Per Lord Thurlow in Shellenor v Ingham, 1 Bro C C 338, 341

Similar law Vide s 80 of the Succession Act (XXIX of 1925)

Scope When there are two or more persons or things, and each of them exactly answers to the description in the Will, then all manner of parol evidence is admissible (Charter v Charter L R 7 H L 361) for the language of the Will is complied with whichever person receives the legacy or whichever thing passes under the bequest (Pouell v 56 1). In Miller v Hazers, 8 Bing 944, Lindal (J and The cases to which this construction (Imbriculus Verborum latens reificatione suppletur) applies will be found to range themselves into two separate classes. The first class is where the description of the thing devised, or of the devisee, is clear upon the face of the Will, but upon the death of the testator it is found, that there are more than one estate or subject matter of devise or more than one person whose description follows out and fills the word used in the Will. As where the testator devises his manor Dale, and at his death it is found that he has two manors of that name, South Dale and North Dale or where a man devises to his son John, and he has two sons of that name. In each of these cases respectively parol evidence is admissible to show which manor was intended to pass and which son was intended to take. The other class of cases is that in which the description contained in the Will of the thing intended to be devised, or of the person who is intended to take is true in part but not true in every particular. As where an estate is devised called A and is described as in the occupation of B and it is found that though there is an estate called A, yet the whole is not in B's occupation, or where an estate is devised to a person whose surname or Christian name is mistaken or whose description is imperfect or inaccurate, in which latter class of cases parol evidence is admissible to show what estate was intended to pass, and who was the devisee intended to take, provided there is sufficient indication of intention appearing on the face of the Will to justify the application of the evidence. "Where the object of testator's bounty or the subject of his disposition (i.e. the person or thing intended) is described in terms which are applicable in differently to more than one person or thing evidence is admissible to prove which of the persons or things so described was intended by the testator." Wigram, Proposition III at p 110. See also In re Stephenson (1897) 1 Ch 80, Bernasconi v Atkinson 10 Hare, 348. Doe v Needs, 2 M & W 129, Umesh Chaudia v Sageman 5 B L R 633, 634. So proof may be given of every fact which identifies any person or thing mentioned in a document in which the relation of the words to the facts has to be ascertained. If the language of the document though plain in itself applies equally well to more objects than one evidence may be given, both of the circumstances of the case and of statements made by any parties to the document and as to the intentions in reference to the matter to which the document relates. Steph Dig Ex art 91. This rule is applicable where two persons have got the same name as mentioned in the document, but one of them has got an additional name. Bennet v Marshall 2 K & J 740, Doe v Allen, 12 A & E 451, Fleming v Fleming 31 L J Ex 119, Webber v Corbet, L R 16 Eq 515. In order to ascertain the intention of the parties to any instrument evidence of the conduct of the parties is admissible. Watson v Mohesh 24 W R 176 (177), Chettun v Chutcher 19 W R 432.

When an instrument appears, on the face of it to be free from ambiguity but upon an endeavour being made to apply it to the persons or things indicated it transpires that the words are equally applicable to two or more persons or two or more things there is what is called a latent ambiguity. This class of ambiguity sometimes called an equivocation (Doe v Hiscocks 5 M & W 363 369, Douglas v Yellon, Kay 114 120) is not discovered till the instrument comes to be applied to external circumstances. Chairman Seragum Vinnapally v The Chittagong Co Ltd 36 C L J 242=72 Ind Cas 596. In such a case as Lord Wrenbury puts it, extrinsic evidence has created the ambiguity, and extrinsic evidence is admissible to resolve it—see the decision of the House of Lords in

Great Western Railway and Midland Railway v Bristol Corporation, 87 L J Ch 414 at p 429 and direct evidence of intention may be given for the purpose of ascertaining which of the several persons or things to whom the words are applicable was intended to be denoted. Reference may in this connection be made to the observation of Baron Alderson in Smith v Jeffryes, 15 M & W 561 at p 572, of Mr Justice Erskine, Baron Parke, and Lindal, C J in Shore v Wilson, 9 Cl & F 355, of Lord Wensleydale in Water Par v Fennel, 7 H L C 650 at p 685, of Lord Halsbury in Van Diemen's Land Co v Marine Board of Table Cape, (1906) A C 92, and of Lord Atkinson in Watchan v Attorney General, (1919) A C 533=87 L J P C 150. The decision of the judicial committee in the last mentioned case shows that the principle that when an instrument contains an ambiguity, evidence of user under it may be given in order to show the sense in which the parties used the language employed, applies to a modern as well as to ancient instrument and where the ambiguity is patent as well as where it is latent. Chairman Seraguny Municipality v Chittagong Co Ltd, 36 C L J 242=72 Ind Cas 696. If the language of a document directly describes two sets of circumstances but cannot have been intended to apply to both, evidence may be given to show to which it is intended to apply. Ngacho v Ma Se Vi, 10 Bur L F, 245. Where a usufructuary mortgage deed provides for the payment of revenue by the mortgagee, but fails to indicate whether the parties meant the revenue as assessed at the date of deed or as it might be re-assessed from time to time, evidence may be given under this section to show what was meant. Furzand v Kaur, 22 O C 270=59 Ind Cas 264.

Application of the rule. The general principle is this laid down by Bovill C J in Grant v Grant, L R 5 C P at p, 385. "In each case this kind of parol evidence is not admissible for the purpose of controlling, varying, or altering the Will of the testator, but is admitted simply for purpose of enabling the Court to understand it, and to declare the intention of the testator according to the words in which the intention is expressed. If such evidence establishes that the description in the Will may apply to each of two or more persons, then a latent ambiguity is exposed, and rather than that the devise should fail altogether for uncertainty, the law allows the ambiguity which is exposed by parol evidence to be cleared up by similar evidence, provided such parol evidence is sufficient to enable the Court to ascertain the sense in which the testator employed the particular expression upon which the ambiguity arises. If the parol evidence, after exposing the latent ambiguity, fails to solve it, the Court cannot give effect to that part of the Will." This case was affirmed in L R 5 C P 727. Thus where the devise was 'to George Gord the son of Gord,' and there appeared by extrinsic evidence to be two persons answering such description, evidence was allowed of the circumstances and of the testator's statements of intention to show which of the two persons he meant. Doe v Needs, 6 L J Ex 59=2 M & W 129. Parke B in delivering the judgment of the Court in the above mentioned case observed: "If upon the face of the devise it is uncertain whether a deviser had selected a particular object of his bounty, no evidence would have been admissible to prove that he intended a gift to a certain individual, such would have been a case of ambiguity patens within the meaning of Lord Bacon's rule, which ambiguity could not be helped by averment, for to allow such evidence would be, with respect to that subject, to cause a parol Will to operate as a written one, or adopting the language of Lord Bacon, 'to make that pass without writing which the law appointeth shall not pass but by writing.' But here on the face of the devise no such doubt arises. There is no blank before the name of Gord the father, which might have occasioned a doubt whether the deviser had finally fixed on any certain person in his mind. The deviser has clearly selected a particular individual as the devisee upon the proof of extrinsic facts, which is always allowed in order to enable the Court to place itself in the situation of the deviser, and to construe his Will, it would have appeared that there, were at the date of the Will two persons to each of whom the description would be equally applicable. The evidence of the declarations of the testator has not the effect of varying the instrument in any way whatever, it only enables the Court to reject one of the subjects, or objects, to which the description in the Will applies, and to determine which of the two

S 96. devise is understood to be signified by the description which he used in the Will. It is pointed out in the devise itself by a description which, so far as it goes is perfectly correct." Notwithstanding the rule of law, which makes a Will void for uncertainty, where the words, aided by evidence of the material facts of the case are insufficient to determine the testator's meaning. Courts of law, in certain special cases admit extrinsic evidence of intention to make certain person or thing intended, where the description in the Will is insufficient for the purpose. Wigram 110 "The conclusion, then, which these cases appear to warrant is that the only cases in which evidence to prove intention is admissible, are those in which the description in the Will is unambiguous in its application to each of several objects." Wigram p 183 "But there is another mode of obtaining the intention of the testator and Lord Abinger in Doe v Hiscocks 5 M & W 363 (367) "which is by evidence of his declarations of the instructions given for his Will, and other circumstances of the like nature, which are not adduced for explaining the words or meaning of the Will, but either to supply some deficiency, or remove some obscurity, or to give some effect to expressions that are unmeaning or ambiguous. Now, there is but one case in which it appears to us that this sort of evidence of intention can properly be admitted and that is, where the meaning of the testator's word is neither ambiguous nor obscure, and when the devise is on the face of it, perfect and intelligible but from some of the circumstances admitted in proof no ambiguity arises, as to which of the two or more things, or which of the two or more persons (each answering the words in the Will) the testator intended to express. Thus if a testator devise his manor of S to A B and has two manors of North S and South S it being clear he means to devise one only, whereas both are equally denoted by the words he used in that case there is what Lord Bacon calls an equivocation: the words equally apply to either manor and the evidence of previous intention may be received to solve this latent ambiguity. So "where one person accurately fulfils the description, and no one else does you cannot admit parol evidence to show that such person was not intended. Per Molins V C in Re Wollerton Mortgaged Estates, 7 Ch D 199, Re Raven (1915) 1 Ch 673 see also Doe v Westlake 4 B & Ald 57, Webber v Corbett L R 6 Eq 515, Howood v Griffith 4 D M & G 700. But the rule contained in this section is applicable where the gift is 'to the four children of my cousin E B' and where in fact E B had six children, two by one husband P and four by another husband B. Hampshire v Pierce 2 Weg 216 see also Jones v Neuman 1 W Bl 60 Doe v Allen 12 A & E 451 Grant v Grant L R 5 C P 727 Nassey v Jeffry, (1914) 1 Ch 375 Hunderston v Hunderston (1905) 1 I R 353 Re Balfour Wrightson, (1920) 2 Ch 330. This rule is also applicable to deeds and contract. Higmore § 2472

Ambiguity—Evidence of intention It is commonly said that extrinsic evidence is admissible in cases of latent ambiguities whereas such evidence is inadmissible in cases of patent ambiguities. But upon examination the maxim proves not to be an universal guide for, on the one hand there are many recognised authorities for the admission of parol evidence to explain ambiguities appearing on the face of the Will, while on the other hand, the existence of a latent ambiguity will certainly not, as appears sometimes to have been supposed, warrant the admission in all cases indiscriminately of parol evidence to show what the testator meant to have written as distinguished for what is the meaning of the words he has used. It is to the admissibility of this species of evidence that attention is now to be turned. To say that such evidence is admissible because the ambiguity complained of has been raised by the extrinsic facts is to lose sight of the essential difference between the nature and effect of the evidence which raises the ambiguity and that by which it is to be removed for the former is confined to developments of facts with reference to which the Will was written, and to which the language of the Will expressly or tacitly refers, and therefore, it lies within the strict limits of exposition which it cannot be denied that the latter transgresses. To render the ground tenable, it must be taken to support the proposition only so far as it asserts that, if an ambiguity is introduced into an otherwise unambiguous Will by parol evidence of the state of the testator's family or other circumstances, that ambiguity may be removed by further evidence of the same nature. But in admitting this interpretation of the rule all distinction between patent and latent ambiguities is lost for in every case the Judge by whom a Will is to be expounded is entitled to be placed, by his knowledge of all the material facts of the case, as nearly as possible in the situation of the testator when he wrote it. A patent ambiguity it is true, may not be explained by any other kind of evidence and so far the first branch of the canon is undoubtedly true. But by our hypothesis to this precise extent, and no further is the latter branch true also. We come therefore, to the conclusion either that the distinction taken by the canon between patent and latent ambiguities is an unsubstantial one, or that the proposition does in its second branch, assert the admissibility of evidence to show the testator's intention (as distinguished from the meaning of his written words), and that, consequently, if true, its application must be confined to a special class of cases. It remains for us to see in what cases, if any, such evidence is admissible. Suppose, then that evidence has been given of all the material facts and circumstances of the case, and that these have ultimately raised an ambiguity by disclosing the existence of more than one object or subject to which the words are equally applicable. The uncertainty as to which of these was in the testator's contemplation would if the investigation stopped here necessarily be fatal to the gift. Under these peculiar circumstances however declarations of the testator or other direct evidence of his intention are admissible to clear up the ambiguity pointing out (if they can) the actual subject or object of gift among the several properties or persons answering to the description. Of this nature are the examples given by Lord Byron in illustration of the maxim, 'Ambiguitas verborum latens verificatione suppletur nam quod ex facto oritur ambiguum verificatione facti tollitur', and are styled by him as cases of equivocation." Jarman, 6th Ed 516 518

S. 97.

Evidence as to application of language to one of two sets of facts, to neither of which the whole correctly applies

97 When the language used applies partly to one set of existing facts, and partly to another set of existing facts, but the whole of it does not apply correctly to either, evidence may be given to show to which of the two it was meant to apply

Illustration

A agrees to sell to B "my land at X in the occupation of Y." A has land at X, but not in the occupation of Y, and he has land in the occupation of Y but it is not at X. Evidence may be given of facts showing which he meant to sell

Principle 'The characteristic of all these cases is that the words of the Will do describe the object or subject intended and the evidence of the declarations of the testator has not the effect of varying the instrument in any way whatever, it only enables the Court to reject one of the subjects or objects to which the description in the Will applies and to determine which of the two the testator understood to be signified by the description which he used in the Will' Parke B in Doe v Needs 2 M & W 129

Scope of the section. This section is the converse of the preceding one in that there is language partially applicable to two sets of facts but wholly applicable to neither. In this case, as in the former extrinsic evidence is admissible for discovering the meaning. It is an extension of the rule laid down in section 95. Cun Ft 286. According to English law where the description of the person or thing be partly applicable and partly inapplicable to each of the several subjects though extrinsic evidence of the surrounding circumstances may be received for the purpose of a certaining to which of such subjects the language applies yet the evidence of the author's intention will be inadmissible. Doe v Illicrocks 5 M & W 33 Taylor § 1226. Section 1340 of the California Civil Code says 'When applying a Will, it is found that

S. 97. there is an imperfect description, or that no person or property exactly answers the description mistakes and omissions must be corrected, if the error appears from the context of the Will or from extrinsic evidence, but evidence of the declarations of the testator as to his intention cannot be received." But according to Prof Wigmore there is no danger in receiving declarations of intention, because the precise words of the document cannot be literally applied in any event, and there is thus no competition between the words and the extrinsic utterance, it is simply a question which words shall be ignored as unessential part of the description. Wigmore § 2474. Sir James Fitz James Stephen also said "Conclusive is the authorities upon the subject are it may not, perhaps, be presumptuous to express a doubt whether the conflict between a natural wish to fulfil the intention which the testator would have formed if he had recollected all the circumstances of the case, the wish to avoid the evil of permitting written instruments to be varied by oral evidence, and the wish to give effect to Wills, has not produced in practice an illogical compromise. The strictly logical course, I think, would be either to admit declarations of intention both in cases falling under paragraph 7 (ss 95-97) and in cases falling under paragraph 8 (ss 96) or to exclude such evidence in both classes of cases and to hold void for uncertainty every bequest or devise which was shown to be uncertain in its application to facts." Steph Dig Pt 186. In this Act also no such distinction is made between declarations of intention and other evidence and therefore in all cases where extrinsic evidence is admissible whether under sections 95 and 97 or section 96 declarations of intention will be admissible. Woodroffe Et p 663, Field Et 6th Ed 284. Cum Ex 275-277. The law on the subject is thus laid down by Bace P J in Willard v Danah, 169 Mo 660-68 S W 1023 "The description of the persons is partly correct and partly incorrect, leaving something equivocal. The description does not apply precisely to either of these two sets of brothers, but it is morally or legally certain that it was intended to apply to one or the other, thus bringing the case within the rule established by the second class of cases, in which direct or extrinsic oral evidence including expressions of intention is admissible. Such evidence was therefore admissible in this case in order to solve a latent ambiguity produced by extrinsic evidence in the application of the terms of the Will to the objects of the testator's bounty to prevent the fourth clause of the Will from perishing and obviate a partial intestacy of the testator. Its effect is not to establish an intention different in essence from that expressed in the Will but let in light by which that intention rendered obscure by outside circumstances, may be more clearly discerned, and the Will of the testator in its entire scope effectuated according to his true intention and meaning." Wigmore § 2471. In Ryall v Hanman, 10 Beav 536. A devised property to Ethabell the natural daughter of B B his natural son John, and a legitimate daughter Ethabell. The Court may infer from the circumstances under which the natural child was born and from the testator's relationship to the putative father that he meant to provide for John. Steph Dig Et 102. A leaves a legacy to his niece, Ethabell Stringer. At the date of the Will he had no such niece but he had a great grand niece named Ethabell Jane Stringer. The Court may infer from these circumstances that Ethabell Jane Stringer was intended but they may not refer to instructions given by the testator to his solicitor showing that the legacy was meant for a niece, Ethabell Stringer who had died before the date of the Will and that it was put into the Will by a mistake on the part of the solicitor. Stringer v Gardner, 27 Beav 35-41 D & T 465. Criticism on that decision Sir James Fitz James Stephen said "In a decision as that in Stringer v Gardner the result of which was to give a legacy to a person whom the testator had no wish to benefit, and who was not either named or described in his Will appears to me to be a practical relaxation of the principle or rule on which it is based. Of course every document whatever must to some extent be interpreted by circumstance. However accurate and detailed a description of things and persons may be, oral evidence is always wanted to show that persons and things answering the description exist and therefore in every case whatever every fact must be allowed to prove to which the document does or properly may refer but if more evidence than this is admitted, if the Court may look at circumstances which affect the probability that the testator would form this intention or that why should declaration of intention be excluded? If the question is, 'what did the testator say? Why should the Court look at the circumstances that he lived with Charles, and was on bad terms with William? How can any amount of evidence to show that the testator intended to write "Charles" show that what he did write means "Charles"?' To say that 'Foster means "Charles,"' is like saying that 'two means three.' If the question is 'what did the testator wish?' Why should the Court refuse to look at his declarations of intention? And what third question can be asked? The only one which can be suggested is, 'what would the testator have meant if he had deliberately used unmeaning words?' The only answer to this would be he would have had no meaning, and would have said nothing, and his bequest should be pro tanto void. Steph Dig Fo pp 186 187

Cases The illustration to section 97 allows that if A agrees to sell to B "my land at X in the occupation of Y" and A has land at X but not in the occupation of Y, and his land in the occupation of Y but it is not at X, evidence may be given to show which was intended to be sold. Another common case is where land within certain boundaries is sold and is wrongly described as containing a certain area, the error in area is regarded as a mere misdescription and does not vitiate the deed. The maxim demonstratio falsa non nocet applies. Kanappa v Perathambi Goundan 30 M 397 (399). So where land is described in a document by boundaries and area is wrongly specified the land within the boundaries will pass whether it be less or more than the quantity specified. Bhayaiah v Duarla 15 C P L R 163. In such a case the maxim falsa demonstratio non nocet applies and the land specified within the boundaries passes by the deed irrespective of their extent. Pahalwan Singh v Maharaja Muhessin Balsh Singh 9 B L R P C 150=16 W R 5 P C. Sherif Chunder v Brojanath, 14 W R 301, Vijayandas v Maomed Ali, 5 B 208, Modee Huddin v Sanders 12 W R 439, Palam v Protap, 20 W R 224, Zenut Ali v Ramdoyal 18 W R 25, Karee Abdul v Buroda Kant 17 W R 394. Tribhubhan v Krishnaram, 18 B 283, Subhaya v Muthiah 78 Ind Cas 111=46 M L T 182, Harimohan v Rameswar, 64 Ind Cas 737. Bava Kahim v Rajendra 64 Ind Cas 751, Narain v Jauhari, 50 P L R 1922. Aga Cha v Mi Se Mi, 10 Bur L T 245.

Where the description of property sold is such that one portion of it applies to the whole of the house but the boundaries given below apply only to a portion of the same and both read together do not apply correctly either to the whole house or to a portion of it, a case of latent ambiguity arises. Extrinsic evidence is admissible for the purpose of solving the question whether by the description of the property taken as a whole the intention was to convey the whole house or only a portion of it. Abdul Ghan v Ishiq Hussain 66 Ind Cas 442=(1922) Oull 163. Where in a sale certificate there are two descriptions of the property which cannot be reconciled it is open to the Court to look at the decree and decide which governs the sale. Mulhan Ahmed v Kahu Ahmad 1924 All 856. If the language of a document directly describes two sets of circumstances but cannot have intended to apply to both evidence may be given to show to which it is intended to apply. Aga Cha v Mi Se Mi 10 Bur L T 245. In the case of an ambiguity in the description of land in a mortgage deed it is open to a party to show by other evidence what land was actually covered by the deed. Ramechandra v Irshad Ali, 13 Ind Cas 721.

Whole of it does not apply correctly to either. This section has application when the whole of the language used in a document does not apply correctly to either. Because 'if I have some land wherein all the demonstrations are true and some wherein part of them are true and part false, then shall they be intended words of true limitation to pass only those lands where all those circumstances are true. This rule is based upon the 13th maxim Lord Bacon which is as follows: 'non accipi debent verba in solam limitationem quae comprehendit limitationem veram'. So where a given is devised and there are found two species of property the one to

S 98. and precisely corresponding to the description in the devise and the other not so completely answering thereto, the latter will be excluded, though, had there been no other property on which the devise could have operated, it might have been held to comprise the less appropriate subject', Jarman, 6th Ed 176. A devise of lands described in a particular place and in the occupation of a particular person, will not pass lands not in that place or not in the occupation of that person. Parlin v Parlin 5 Taunt 321, Franc v Angel, 26 B & W 297. See also Julka v Mathurapur 31 A 66-7 A L J 1093-6 Ind Cas 94. 'Where a testator has devised all his lands at any particular place extrinsic evidence is not admissible for the purpose of showing that he intended to give other lands not situated at that particular place, either by reason of such other lands having been enjoyed with the lands at the specified place for a lengthened period of time, or of the testator having dealt with them as one property or of his having been in the habit of referring to them as forming one property under one distinguishing name'. Per Baggally L J in Homer v Homer, 8 Ch 758 at p 771.

98 Evidence may be given to show the meaning of illegible or not commonly intelligible characters of meaning of illegible foreign, obsolete, technical, local and provincial expressions, of abbreviations and of words used in a peculiar sense

Illustration

A, a sculptor, agrees to sell to B, "all my mods." A has both models and modelling tools. Evidence may be given to show which he meant to sell.

Principle "Where any doubt arises upon the true sense and meaning of the words themselves or any difficulty as to their application under the surrounding circumstances the sense and meaning of the language may be investigated and ascertained by evidence dehors the instrument itself for reason and common sense agree, that by no other means can the language of the instrument be made to speak the real mind of the party. Such investigation does of necessity take place in the interpretation of instruments written in foreign language in the case of ancient instruments where by the lapse of time and change of manners the words have acquired in the present age a different meaning from that which they bore when originally employed, in cases where terms of art occur,—in mercantile contracts which, in many instances, use a peculiar language employed by those only who are conversant in trade or commerce,—and in other instances in which the words besides their general common meaning, have acquired by custom or otherwise, a well known peculiar idiomatic meaning in the particular country in which the party using them was dwelling or in the particular society of which he formed a member, and in which he passed his life. In all these cases evidence is admitted to expand the real meaning of the language used in the instrument in order to enable the Court or Judge to construe the instrument." In the same case Lord Wensleydale (then Mt Baron Parke) said "I apprehend that there are two descriptions of evidence (the only two which bear upon the subject of the present enquiry) and which are clearly admissible in every case for the purpose of enabling a Court to construe any written instrument and to apply it practically. In the first place there is no doubt that not only where the language of the instrument is such as the Court does not understand it is competent to receive evidence of the proper meaning of that language as when it is written in a foreign tongue, but it is also competent where technical words or peculiar terms or indeed any expressions are used, which, at the time the instrument was written, have acquired an appropriate meaning either generally or by local usage or amongst particular classes. This description of evidence is admissible in order to enable the Court to understand the meaning of the words contained in the instrument itself by themselves and without reference to extrinsic facts on which the instrument is intended to operate."

Scope of the section In order to interpret or ascertain the meaning of a written document, parol evidence may be given of the meaning or sense in which not only words, but also signs symbols private marks or nicknames, have been used. Such evidence may be given although the words etc., the meaning of which is in question, appear to have been used with a particular meaning only by the person whose document is under construction, and is not so used by any class of persons or in any locality. Kell v Chamee 23 Berr 195 Cockle Cas Et 362. So in order to ascertain the meaning of the signs and words made upon a document, oral evidence may be given of the meaning of illegible or not commonly intelligible characters of foreign obsolete, technical local, and provincial expressions of abbreviations, and of common words which from the context, appear to have been used in a peculiar sense but evidence may not be given to show that common words the meaning of which is plain and which do not appear from the context to have been used in a peculiar sense, were in fact so used. Stephen Dig Et art 92 (2) "If the words themselves are intelligible" said Lord Phulou in Shelburne v Inchaugan 1 Bro P C 338 342 'there is no instance where parol evidence has been admitted to explain them into a more vulgar sense.

If words have in themselves a positive precise sense I have no idea of its being possible to change them. But 'where certain words have obtained a precise technical meaning we ought to give them a different meaning that would as Lord King and other Judges have said be removing land marks. In Beacon L & F Ars Co 1 Moore P C N S 79, 98, Lord Chelmsford said 'In order to construe a term in a written instrument where it is used in a sense differing from its ordinary meaning, evidence is admissible to prove this peculiar sense in which the parties understood the word, but it is not admissible to contradict or vary what is plain. See also Per Mallis V C in Kilmer's Trusts L R 12 Eq 183 186. Prof Wigmore in his Law of Evidence in considering both the theory and policy of the above rules said 'That the theory of it is unsound ought not to be doubted. There can be in the nature of things no absoluteness of standard in interpretation. An advanced communism might conceivably bring men to such a level of intellectual uniformity that their thoughts would be expressed in invariably identical symbols. But till that day comes the varieties of individual expression and sense must be unquenchable. So long as men are allowed to grant and contract freely, and so long as the law undertakes to carry out those acts by enforcement, just so long must the standard of interpretation continue to be mobile, subjective, and individual. The fallacy consists in assuming that there is or can be one real or absolute meaning. As to the argument of policy the case is somewhat different. There is much to be said for the traditional rule,—though not all that is said is sound. The truth is that whatever virtue and strength lies in the argument for the antique rule leads not to a fixed rule of law but only to a general maxim of prudent discretion. In the felicitous illustration of that great Judge, Lord Justice Bowen it is not so much a canon of construction as a counsel of evasion. (Re Jodrell L R 44 Ch D 590). The distinguished Master of the Rolls Sir George Jessel once wittily declared to counsel that 'no body could convince them that black (servedge) was white and yet the Court of Appeals revised his judgment because they were after all convinced of that precise proposition. (Mitchell v Henry 1880 15 Ch D 181). To say that it would be difficult to convince him and upon the evidence to fail to be convinced, would have been a rational attitude. But that is very different from an arbitrary rule declaring "a priori" that the judicial mind is legally not open to conviction. There is then, neither in theory nor in policy any basis for an absolute rule declaring that when a word has a plain meaning i.e. by the popular standard neither the local nor the mutual nor the individual standard can be substituted, such a rule is still maintained by many utterances like those above quoted. But its vogue is disappearing, Wigmore § 2462.

In Brown v Byrne 3 F & B 703 Lord Coleridge J said 'Neither in the construction of a contract among merchants tradesmen or others will the evidence (of a local usage) be excluded because the words are in their ordinary meaning unambiguous, for the principle of admission is that words perfectly unambiguous in their ordinary meaning are used by the contractors in a different sense from that. What words more plain than 'a thousand,' 'a week,' 'a day'? Yet the cases are familiar in which 'a thousand' has been held to mean 'twelve hundred,' 'a week' 'a week only during the theatrical season' 'a day' 'a working day'. Similarly in Algers v Sand, 31 & L 306 Lord Blairburn and 'I do not think that it is necessary, in order to render such evidence admissible, that there should be any ambiguity on the face of the phrase which has to be construed. The consequence is that every individual case must be decided on its own grounds. See also the observations of Lindley L J and Bouen L J in Re Jordell L R 14 Ch D 590 609 614, Wigmore § 2162. In India the literal rule should be applied in construing this section. So various words in written documents which prima facie present no ambiguity may be interpreted by extrinsic evidence of usage, and their peculiar meaning, when found in connection with subject matter of the transaction, has been fixed by parol testimony of the sense in which they were usually received. Jyot Kumar v Jadu Nath 34 C L J 160, see also Gouri Chandra v Raja Mal undu 9 C W N 710.

S 98

Illegible. Where the writing is that in ordinary use but illegible the evidence of experts may be adduced to decipher it. North Fr 284. So it is well settled that one skilled in writings may be called to assist in deciphering a writing illegible or uncertain to the ordinary observation. Masters v Masters, 1 P Wms 125, R v Williams 8 C & P 134. Wigmore § 2025. Ineligibility might arise from the use of cypher or shorthand, or other peculiarity of character as the medium of expression or it might be merely bad writing. Referring to a case of cypher Baron Alderson observed. Words on paper are but the means by which a person expresses his meaning and shorthand is in this respect like long hand, and equally admits interpretation. Clayton v August 14 M & W 206.

Foreign expressions not commonly intelligible. Foreign includes colonial. Hull v Hull, 4 Ch D 97, (Adett v Eile 46 L J Ch 793. No doubt has ever been made that properly skilled testimony may be sought in proving the existence of a foreign rule of law in general (Fide § 45). The question that involves the present principle is. When the text of a foreign statute is before the Court may any aid be received in construing or interpreting it? No one doubts that the aid of a mere translator is proper. But when a translation if necessary has been made is any thing further needed in the way of comment in the text? The answer has always and properly been that such aid may at any time be needed and may always be offered. Surrey Peerage Case 11 Cl & F 115. Guepette v Young 4 De G & S 221 227, Di oia v Phillips 10 H L C 610. Wigmore § 1973. The translation of native documents in the High Courts will afford a familiar illustration on the point of language to that of the Court Goodale Et 376. As regards construing a foreign document Lord Esher M R said. 'Now, this writing was a business document, written in Brazil in the Brazilian law and custom, by a man of business carrying on business in Brazil. An English Court has to construe it and the first thing therefore, that the English Court has to do is to get a translation of the language used in the document. Making a translation is not a mere question of trying to find out in a dictionary the words which are given as the equivalent of the words of the document. A true translation is the putting into English that which is the exact effect of the language used under the circumstances. To get at this in the present case you must get the words in English which in business have the equivalent meaning of the words in Brazilian, as used in Brazil under the circumstances. Therefore you would want a competent translator, competent to translate it in that way and, if the words in Brazil had in business a particular meaning different from this ordinary meaning, you would want an expert to say what is that meaning. Amongst those experts you might want a Brazilian lawyer—and a Brazilian lawyer for that purpose would be an expert. This is the first thing the Court has to do. Then when the Court has got a correct translation into English it has to do what it always has to do in the case of any such document—either a contract or such an authority as this—that is to say it must try to get to the meaning of the party at the time he wrote it and what is to be inferred from the language which he has used.' In the same case Lindley L J said 'The document is in Portuguese. The Court cannot take judicial notice of the Portuguese language, and it must have recourse to the assistance of those who understand it. Recourse must therefore be had to translators, and if there are technical expressions, whether scientific, legal or other, recourse must be had to experts in order to get at the correct translation, and in order to express to an English mind the meaning which is conveyed to a Portuguese mind by the words used.' See also Queen Empress v Bal Gangadhar Tilak, 22 B 112 (143). Where Strachey J said "We must look at the articles not as grammarians or philologists might do but as the ordinary readers of the Kesari would look at them—readers who are impressed not by verbal refinements but by the broad general drift of an article. Two translations have been put before you one of which has been called a free and the other a literal translation. Both are equally official translations. What I advise you is that wherever there is no dispute about the accuracy of the free translation, where its rendering has not been challenged, you should be guided by the free translation. It is altogether a mistake to suppose that because a translation is literal, it is more correct than a translation which is called free." As regards the value of official translation vide Queen Empress v Bal Gangadhar Tilak, 22 B 142, Harris v Brown 28 C 621 Queen Empress v Kali Prasanna, 1 C W N 463 479 Mahotolu v Haleem 10 C L R 293, 300 301.

Obsolete expressions. As regards obsolete expressions, the case of Walker and Shore is itself an example. Here it being necessary in modern times to put a construction upon an ancient charitable foundation and as to who were designed to take under the terms of Godly preachers of Christ's Holy Gospel, evidence was given from history, contemporaneous with the deed, of the existence of a particular sect assuming to themselves that denomination, and of the founder's connection with them. Goodere Lr 376.

Technical expressions. It is obvious that the interpretation of the meaning of the document in respect to ordinary words, being a part of the function of the Court, is not for a witness to speak to. But so far as the words are technical, and the witness speaks to technical usage or meaning there is no prohibition, the Court must determine anew in each instance whether it needs any testimonial aid to interpret the word or phrase in dispute. Higmore § 1955. "Evidence as to mercantile usage may be received, but you cannot ask a witness what is the meaning of a written document." Kirkland v Aisbel, 3 Macq Sc App C 766. In most of the cases in this section the word or words may be either wholly unintelligible, or may have two senses—one popular, the other technical. The evidence ordinarily is that of usage sometimes agricultural, generally mercantile. Parties may reasonably be supposed to have used in their contracts terms in accordance with usage. The maxim is contractus facile insunt quae sunt moris et consuetudinis. Ant Lr 285. "The rule is that technical words shall have their legal effect unless from other words it is very clear that the testator meant otherwise." Per Lord Redesdale in Jesson v Wright 5 M & S 95. With regard to technical terms where a term of art is employed, or a word connected with some department of the natural world which has become technical and popular in its use among scientific men and men of letters a Court, when called upon to give a construction to such words may avail itself of parol testimony to ascertain the technical and popular use of the word. Burr Jones § 455.

In mercantile contracts the question has often arisen on expressions denoting time as for instance "months" whether lunar or calendar (Jolly v Yang, 1 Esp 186), "days" as meaning working days or running ones, freight "in turn to deliver" and so forth. In Garrison v Perrin 2 Com B N S (681) which was a contract for purchase of bales of gambier in passage from Singapore and expected to arrive in London, evidence was received to show that by the custom of the trade a bale of gambier was understood to mean a package of certain description. In that case Corkburn C J said "If the term 'bale' is applied to gambier has acquired in the particular trade a signification differing from its ordinary signification, evidence must be received on the subject, otherwise effect is not given to the contract." So a bale of cotton may mean a

S. 98 being in the Alexandria trade, and a compressed bale in the Levant one according to the usage of either trade (Taylor v Briggs, 2 Car & P 521), and, in contract to pay at so much per ton for goods shipped at Bombay, cotton to be calculated at 50 cubic feet per ton evidence would be receivable of a usage per ton according to the measurement at Bombay (Bottomley v Forbes, 5 Bing 1; Goodeve Et 378). So liberal rule permits resort in any case to usage of a trade or locality, no matter how plain the apparent sense of the word to the ordinary reader. In Smith v Wilson, 3 B & Ad 728 the defendant was allowed to prove that by the customary meaning of the locality, the term 'thousand' as applied to rabbits meant 100 dozen. In Hold v Rayner 1 M & W 31 evidence of a usage was given that where two vessels are named with "and" between them in a contract, the goods may be delivered from either at seller's option. In admitting this evidence, Parke B said "Yes if you read it strictly and, but the evidence was that custom reads it so." Lord Abinger, said "The Court must look at each contract and say whether in its whole spirit and meaning, and did not mean or in the understanding of the parties." "Days" in a bill of lading was held to mean working days (Corliss v Reiter, 3 Esp 121). In Giant v Maddox 15 M & W 737, interpreting the word 'year' evidence was admitted of the professional usage that actors were never paid during the time of vacation. In Myers v Sari, 3 E & E 306, which was a building contract providing for a weekly account of the work done trade usage was admitted to show that weekly account was restricted to a particular part of the work, even though 'the words have a plain general meaning'. In Mitchell v Henry L R 15 Ch D 181, which was a case of infringement, the plaintiff's registered description named a worsted having a white selvage, part of the work being a dark grey or black mohair, the goods had a dark appearance and Jessel MR declaring 'that is a black selvage and not a white selvage' and that 'no evidence would convince them that black was white, declined to give effect to the plaintiff's testimony that the plaintiff's selvage "was what was perfectly well known in the trade as a white selvage", on appeal, this was reversed on the ground that "the question is not whether the selvage is white but whether it is what the trade know as a white selvage." Wigmore § 2463. The term 'ten packets of Kent hops at five pounds,' was interpreted as "ten packets of Kent hops at five pounds per cwt. in accordance with the usage in the hop trade." Spicer v Cooper, 1 Q B 424. Parol evidence was admissible to show that the term 'in the month of October' according to the mercantile usage, means a particular part of that month (Chasand v Angerstein Perke R 45). Unless there is something in the context qualifying it the word 'malik' used in a Will, bears its technical meaning. When a testator bequeathed his property to his issue if he happened to have any, and if he had no issue then to his mother and wife who were to be 'malik and qubiz julad' held that the ladies obtained an absolute estate (Thakur Prosad v Jamna Kuar 6 A L J 420, Chunilal v Bai Mili, 2 Bom L R 46=24 B 420, Swarnam v Rabinath 30 A 84, Kandarpa v Jogendra, 12 C L J 391, Lahmohan v Chakkanal 23 C 804 (P C), Amarendra v Suradhany 14 C W N 458, Baidas v Bangolap 26 C W N 126 (P C), Sastunom v Sibnarain 26 C W N 425 (P C), Sulachana v Jagadhatri 30 C L J 51, Raynarain v Ashutosh, 27 C 41, Sibnarayana v Tarangini S C L J 20).

Local and Provincial expressions. Of local usage a striking illustration is afforded by the case of a lease of a rabbit warren, where the lessee covenanted to leave on the warren at the expiration of the term 10 000 rabbits the lessee or paying for them £ 60 per thousand and evidence was received to show that according to the local usage of that part of the country, 1000 as applied to rabbits, meant 1 200 (Smith v Wilson 3 Barn & Ad 728, Goodeve Et 377). The usage of a trade or locality or sect or dialect being always eligible to supersede the ordinary or popular sense of words it remains merely a question for the particular case whether the parties have in fact spoken according to that standard. Where all the parties are members of the same trade or other circle of persons little difficulty can arise the only requirement is that the special sense alleged should be in fact a usage or settled habit of expression, and not merely the expression of a few persons or of casual occasions (Russian Steam

Nai v Sila, 13 C B N S 610, 617 Where the usage is not that of a trade but of a locality, the form of it may be common reputation or commonly used documents Higmore § 2461 Where in a deed words in use in a particular locality in a peculiar sense are employed oral evidence is admissible under section 94 of the Evidence Act to explain the meaning of the words in question Chuddu v Oren, 63 Ind Cas 138

Abbreviations Where initials or other abbreviation are to be interpreted, the local usage or repute is of course receivable Higmore § 2461 A wager contract to run one greyhound against another, concluded with the initials P P Evidence was received to show that it meant—"Play or Pay,"—that is to say,—win the match, or forfeit the stakes Hiderson B said "standing by themselves" those letters are insensible but the evidence confers a real meaning upon them, by showing what the parties intended by them, and that they were inserted with the view of expressing a given thing" So also Baron Parke said "There can be no doubt the evidence was receivable It is like the case of a word written in a foreign language" The Will of a celebrated sculptor Nolens containing a bequest under the term of his "mod—tools for carving" is a familiar illustration on the part of terms of art The word "mod" was there contended on the one hand to mean modelling tools and on the other models, which latter were of great value, and evidence of sculptors and others was received in interpretation of the word "mod" Goblet v Beechey 3 Sim 21 Goodere Et 377 On this case the illustration is based Put the case of shorthand writers notes which a Court unskilled in the art of stenography must have explained or interpreted, before it can attach any meaning to the arbitrary signs Kell v Churmer, 23 Beav 195

Words used in a peculiar sense There is no reason, in the nature of things why the individual parties to a transaction may not employ words in a particular sense, irrespective of the ordinary or popular sense because what we are seeking, interpretation, is their actual standard, and the popular standard is merely taken provisionally as presumably theirs It can thus be, in theory only a question of fact in each case whether the parties were using a special mutual sense The application of the principle has long been seen in the interpretation of descriptions in deeds because there is there always some concrete and local object fully known to the parties but unknown to the Court, and in every such case it is obvious that the words used must be translated into things and facts the parties to the deed almost always use terms of description which are peculiar to themselves Higmore § 2465 Doe v Burt 1 T R 701 704, Van Diemen's Land Co v Marine Board (1906) App Cas 92 Squire v Campbell, 1 Myl & C 459 The purpose of all such evidence is to ascertain in what sense the parties themselves used the ambiguous terms in the writing which sets forth their contract If the previous negotiations make it manifest in what sense they understood and used those terms, they furnish the best definition to be applied in the interpretation of the contract itself The effect must be limited to definition of the term used, and identification of the subject matter If so limited it makes no difference that the language of the negotiations relates to the future, and consists in positive engagements on the part of the other party to the contract Their effect depends, not upon their promissory obligation, but upon the aid they afford in the interpretation of the contract in suit They are not the less effective for the purpose of explanation and definition because they purport to carry the force of obligation Per Wells J in Stoops v Smith 100 Mass 63 In Doe v Benjamin 9 A & E 644 652, Coleridge J said "The Courts have come to some inconsistent conclusions in cases of this kind, but from the main body of them the principle results that we must look to the intention of the parties, and that by considering the terms of the particular instrument with reference, I agree to the state of facts existing at the time See also Cooke v Booth Cowp 819 Buch v Depryster 1 Stark 210, Smith v Doe, 2 B & B 473 597, Smith v Jeffries 15 M & W 561 Mardanald v Longbottom 28 L J Q B 297 Mumford v Gethung 7 C B N S 305 321 Bank of New Zealand v Simpson, (1900) A C 182, Re Hustabh (1902) 2 Cb 793, Savory v World (1914) 2 Ch

S. 99 566 'The will is' says Blackburn J in Grant v Grant, 5 C P 727, 729 "the language of the testator, soliloquizing, if one may use the phrase, and the Court in construing his language may properly take into account all that he knew at the time in order to see in what sense the words were used" Wignore § 2465, 2467 In Kell v Charner, 23 Beav 195 a beque t was "to my son W the sum of 100 to my son R C the sum of 100, the testator having in the course of his business used certain private marks or symbols to denote prices or sum of money," this usage was resorted to, and showed that the sums of £ 100 and £ 200 were signified In re Osier Samuel v Osier (1909) 2 Ch 60, a beque t was to 'my grand nephew Robert O' There was no 'Robert O' but there was a "Richard O" Evidence of the memorandum of the testator showing that the testator called Richard "Robert" was admitted, see also Erien v Halston (1912) 1 Ch 435 Wignore § 2467 Where a Hindu testator used technical terms of English law in his Will and those terms have no accepted meaning in Hindu law the rule is that effect of the intention of such terms can not be given Jotundramohan v Ganendramohan 9 B L R 377 P C = 1 W R 359, Kristaromoney v Narindra 16 I A 29 = 16 C 383 F O B mean Free Bombay Harbour Hajee Mahomed v Spinner 24 B 510 (519), see also Jadu Rai v Bhabataran 17 C 193, 194, Aga Synd v Hajee Jaferali, 2 Ind Jur 311

Who may give evidence of agreement varying terms of document

99 Persons who are not parties to a document, or their representatives in interest may give evidence of any facts tending to show a contemporaneous agreement varying the terms of the document

Illustration

A and B make a contract in writing that B shall sell A certain cotton to be paid for on delivery At the same time they make an oral agreement that three months credit shall be given to A This could not be shown as between A and B but it might be shown by C if it affected his interests

Principle The rule under consideration is applied only (in suits) between the parties to the instrument, as they alone are to blame if the writing contains what was not intended or omits that which it should have contained It cannot affect third persons, who if it were otherwise might be prejudiced by things recited in the writings contrary to the truth through the ignorance, carelessness, or fraud of the parties and who, therefore ought not to be precluded from proving the truth however contradictory to the written statement of others Grant Et § 279 cited in Taylor § 1149 Holt v Collier L R 16 ch D 718 Strangers have not assented to the contract nor can they be heard in a proceeding to set aside or reform it Hence they are at liberty to show that the written instrument does not disclose the true character of the transaction Burr Jones Et § 449 To hold strangers bound by acts to which they were no parties and which were behind their backs would be a manifest injustice, Cessante ratione cessat lex the rule therefore, does not apply to them Nort Et 286

Scope of the section This section being an enabling provision cannot be held to prohibit the reception of evidence as to a fact in issue or a relevant fact admissible independently thereof Pathammal v Syed Kalam Raut 27 M 329 Krishna Swami v Mangala Thammal 53 Ind Cas 213 It is well settled that the word 'varying' in section 99 covers the same ground as the word 'contradicting' 'varying' adding to or subtracting from in section 92 (Pathammal v Syed Kalam 27 M 329) No construction of section 92 can modify the definite language of this section which provides that persons not parties to the document or their representatives in interest may give evidence to show a contemporaneous agreement Krishna Swami v Mangala Thammal 53 Ind Cas 213 see also Mannu Ayn v Ma Shree, 45 C 320 = 22 C W N 257 F C

S. 100.

So extrinsic evidence is admissible to show the real nature of the transaction both as against and as in favour of persons other than parties to the document evidencing the transaction, irrespective of the form in which the transaction may be clothed. Baldeo v Putlu Lal, 21 Ind Cas 69. The barrier against extrinsic evidence provided by section 92 of the Act is by the express terms of the section itself one to be used only as between the parties to the instrument, or by their representatives in interest. This section expressly gives a free hand to persons who are not in the above category, and by necessary implication when read with section 92, gives similar freedom to the executors of documents against such strangers. Ganpathi v Pawloo, 4 N L R 116. Under sections 92 and 99 of the Evidence Act, evidence could be given by the pre-emptor to show the real nature of the transaction he being no party to the instrument. Chhutho v Jugga, 8 Ind Cas 501. Khoudul v Asan, 127 P L R 1902. Parmanand v Awat, 20 P R 1899. Usman v Md Shafi, 127 Ad 201-98 Ind Cas 989. Where A purported to make a gift of his lands to his daughter B it was open to a creditor of A the husband of B to prove by oral evidence that the transaction was in reality a sale of A and that the property was, consequently, liable to be attached and sold in execution of a decree obtained against him. Jagat Mohini v Balhal Das 2 C L J 333. So where the plaintiff is not a party to the transaction he is entitled to give evidence to show what purported to be a usufructuary mortgage was not in reality such but is in fact a sale. Bageshri Dayal v Pancho, A W N 1906, 89-1 A L J 314-28 A 473, Ashfaq v Syed, 33 Ind Cas 961. The exception in favour of the strangers is to prevent a fraudulent operation of the instrument upon their rights. Therefore creditors of one of the parties may introduce parol evidence for the purpose of showing the fraudulent intent which accompanied and characterized the giving of the instrument. Similarly a person who is suing one of the parties to a sealed instrument upon a cause of action not arising out of the instrument may show that the instrument was in fact a mere device concocted to mislead outsiders dealing with one or the other parties to it and that it did not truly represent the relation between those parties. It is to be observed, however that the right of a stranger to vary a written contract by parol is limited to rights which are independent of the instrument. Brown Parol L § 28. So when one although not a party to the instrument has his claim upon it, and seeks to render it effective in his favour as against the other party to the action by enforcing a right originating in the relation established by it or which is founded upon it, the parol evidence rule applies. Burr Jones Et § 449. A person who does not claim through the settlor is entitled to challenge the validity of a waqf on the ground that it was merely an illusory transaction never intended to be acted upon. Mumtaz Ali v Narendra Kashore, A I R 1928 Cal 253. In a mortgage suit the mortgagors and their representatives will be estopped from disputing that they have not got the interest which was said that they had, but third parties can question the mortgagors title. Rukman v Ankama 23 L W 664-96 Ind Cas 26-(1926) M W N 939-A I R 1926 Mad 744.

100 Nothing in this Chapter contained shall be taken to affect any of the provisions of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865), as to the construction of wills.

Saving of provisions of Indian Succession Act relating to wills

Scope of the section The Indian Succession Act (X of 1865) has been repealed and re-enacted by the Indian Succession Act (XXXIX of 1925). Chapter VI of the latter Act lays down the rules of construction of wills. So this section does not affect those provisions of the Indian Succession Act (XXXIX of 1925). Therefore these sections of the Evidence Act do not alter the rules of the Indian Succession Act (XXXIX of 1925). The Indian Succession Act (XXXIX of 1925) has not been executed by a Hindu, Mahomedan, Buddhist, Sikh or Jain. All Wills and codicils made by any Hindu, Buddhist, Sikh or Jain on or after

S. 100 the 1st day of September, 1870, within the territories which at the said date were subject to the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal or within the local limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the High Courts of Judicature at Madras and Bombay, and to all such Wills and codicils made outside those territories and limits so far as relates to immoveable property situate within those territories or limits (Vide section 57 of the Succession Act XXXIX of 1925). So the rules of construction of document laid down in chapter vi of the Indian Evidence Act are applicable in construction of those Wills which are not governed by the Indian Succession Act (XXXIX of 1925) as well as all other non testamentary documents. Vide Hussonally v Popallal 37 B 211. The word affect means "act injuriously upon". Administrator General v Premlal, 21 C 732 at p 774 reversed in 22 C 788 (P C)

PART III.

PRODUCTION AND EFFECT ON EVIDENCE

CHAPTER VII.

OF THE BURDEN OF PROOF

101 Whoever desires any Court to give judgment as to any legal right or liability dependent on the existence of facts which he asserts must prove

Burden of proof

that those facts exist

When a person is bound to prove the existence of any fact, it is said that the burden of proof lies on that person

Illustrations

(a) A desires a Court to give judgment that B shall be punished for a crime which A says B has committed

A must prove that B has committed the crime

(b) A desires a Court to give judgment that he is entitled to certain land in the possession of B by reason of facts which he asserts, and which B denies to be true

A must prove the existence of those facts

Burden of proof—its origin and place in the law of Evidence 'Who ever enters in a legal controversy needs to know with precision what is in dispute in point of substantive law in point of fact and in point of form All this he must know before he reaches the trial The ascertaining of it belongs properly, to the period when you state your case the period of pleading It matters not what be the purpose of pleading whether as in the Roman system it be 'to give notice to the parties respecting the facts intended to be proved' or is at common law, 'to separate the law from the facts, and to narrow the latter down to a single issue with a view to a trial by a jury' (Longdell, Eq Plead 2nd Ed s 34)—the rules of correct pleading involve the ascertaining of all these preliminaries At any rate they are not to be learned from the law of evidence which has no precepts at all on these subjects That branch of the law is wholly concerned with a later stage of the proceedings, the trial, and with the presentation to the tribunal of evidential matter for enabling it to answer questions which should have been previously ascertained and shaped and are now assumed to be known The term burden of proof designates a topic which in great part belongs to this preliminary stage of the proceedings So far as it imports the duty of ultimately establishing any given proposition the principles which govern it belong wholly to that stage But the phrase is an ambiguous one and its uncertainty runs into and perplexes the subject of evidence so that the student of that subject needs to reflect carefully on these ambiguities to perceive the bearing on them and to have a clear mind about two or three familiar questions relating to the burden of proof, and two or three fallacies about it which are constantly presenting themselves in the proper region of evidence He would do a great service to our law who should thoroughly discriminate, and set forth the whole legal doctrine of the burden of proof The leading maxims about it (often ill understood) have come from the Roman Law During the dark ages and among our Germanic ancestors it had a different and peculiar application It was then the privilege of proof With the use of the jury came a new set of ideas and a new system of pleadings very different from those of Rome and modern continental Europe, and gradually with the slow and strange development of the jury system, and the irregular working of our common-law

S 101. pleading, there has come into prominence a new set of discriminations. Much that in other times and countries was not the subject of judicial discussion and remained hidden among the unrecorded details of forensic usage now, through the working of our double tribunal of Judge and jury, and the constant necessity of marking their respective boundaries and of reviewing in a higher Court not merely the instructions given by the trial-Judge to the jury, but the whole conduct of the trial—comes out into the region of judicial rules and precedent. Thayer Proc. Treat. Fr. 353, 354

Burden of proof—meaning of the term. The expression burden of proof has been used several ways (1) as meaning the duty of the person alleging the case to prove it (2) as meaning the duty of the one party or the other to introduce evidence. (McClure & Fr. § 30) (3) There is an indiscriminate use of the phrase, perhaps more common than either of the two in which it may mean either or both of the others. Thayer Proc. Treat. Fr. 355

Duty of the person alleging the case to prove it. The burden of proof in this sense means 'the burden of establishing a case whether by a preponderance of the evidence or beyond a reasonable doubt' (Best Fr. p. 268) or as Prof. Wigmore terms it 'the risk of non-persuasion of the jury or tribunal' (Wigmore § 248). Whenever A and B are at issue upon any subject of controversy (not necessarily legal) and M is to take action between them and their desire is hence respectively to persuade M as to their contention, it is clear that the situation of the two as regards its advantage and risks will be very different. Suppose that A has property in which he would like to have M invest money and that B is opposed to having M invest money. M will invest in A's property if he can learn that it is a profitable object, and not otherwise. Here it is seen that the advantage is with B and the disadvantage with A for unless A succeeds in persuading M upto the point of action A will fail and B will remain victorious, the burden of proof, or in other words, the risk of non-persuasion is upon A. This does not mean that B is absolutely safe though he does nothing for he cannot tell how much it will require to persuade M, a very little argument from A might suffice, or if M is of a rashly speculative tendency the mere mention of the proposition by A might without more effect M's action so that it may be safer in any case for B to say what he can on his side of the question and thus in fact he as well as A, has more or less risk, in the sense that there are always chances of A's persuading M, no matter how trifling his evidence and argument. But nevertheless the risk is really upon A in the sense that if M after all is said and done remains in doubt and therefore fails to pass to the point of action, it is A that loses and B that succeeds, because it is A who wishes the action taken and needed as a pre-requisite to accomplish the persuasion of M. The risk of non-persuasion therefore, i.e., the risk of M's non-action because of doubt may properly be said to be upon A. This is the situation common to all cases of attempted persuasion whether in the market the home or the forum. (Wigmore § 248). The radical difference in litigation, as distinguished from practical affairs at large is as to the mode of determining the propositions of persuasion which are a pre-requisite to M's action. In affairs at large, these are determined solely by M's motion of the proper grounds for his action—depending thus on the circumstances of the situation as judged by M. In litigation these pre-requisites are determined first and broadly by the substantive law which fixes the groups of data that enter into legal relations and constitute rights and duties and secondly and more in detail by the laws of pleading and procedure which further group and sub-divide these larger groups of data and assign one or another sub-group to this or that party as pre-requisites of the tribunal's action in his favour. The substantive law will narrow the total facts that can in any event be involved and in the second place the law of pleading will further sub-divide and apportion these facts. Ibid. If the pleadings consist of the allegation of certain facts by the plaintiff and their denial by the defendant, the burden of proving the facts be they negative or affirmative is upon the plaintiff. In order to recover he must prove his case. If the plaintiff alleges certain facts and the defendant admits those facts but alleges other facts which he claims to be a defence the burden of proof is on the defendant. It is not upon the plaintiff because it is not necessary for him to prove his case, on account of the admission of all the facts. An admission upon the trial does not affect the burden of proof. To relieve the plaintiff it must be a formal admission in the defendant's pleading of the facts which constitute the plaintiff's case. McKelvey v. Ev § 31. The burden of establishing remains throughout the entire case where the pleadings originally place it. It never shifts. Best v. 268. In Central Bridge v. Butler, 2 Gray 130, it was put thus: 'The burden of proof and weight of evidence are two very different things. The former remains on the party affirming a fact in support of a case and does not change in any aspect of the cause; the latter shifts from side to side in the progress of a trial according to the nature and strength of the proofs offered in support or denial of the main fact to be established.' In Ibath v. V E Ry Co (1833) 11 Q. B. D. 440. Brett v. R said: 'It is contended (I think fallaciously) that if the plaintiff has given prima facie evidence which, unless it be answered, will entitle him to have the question decided in his favour, the burden of proof is shifted on to the defendant as to the decision of the question itself. This contention appears to be the real ground of the decision in the Queen's Bench Division. I cannot assent to it. It seems to me that the proposition ought to be stated thus: the plaintiff may give prima facie evidence which unless it be answered, either by contradictory evidence or by the evidence of additional fact, ought to lead the jury to find the question in his favour; the defendants may give evidence, either by contradicting the plaintiff's evidence, or by proving other facts; the jury have to consider, upon the evidence given upon both sides whether they are satisfied in favour of the plaintiff with respect to the question which he calls upon them to answer. Then comes the difficulty—suppose that the jury, after considering the evidence, are left in real doubt as to which way they are to answer the question put to them on behalf of the plaintiff, in that case also the burden of proof lies upon the plaintiff, and if the defendant has been able, by the additional facts which he has adduced to bring the minds of the whole jury to a real state of doubt, the plaintiff has failed to satisfy the burden of proof which lies upon him.'

Burden of proof, as meaning the duty of the one party or the other to introduce evidence. The party having the risk of non persuasion (under the pleadings or other rules) is naturally the one upon whom first falls this duty of going forward with evidence, since he wishes to have the jury act for him, and since without any legal evidence at all they could properly take no action; there is no need for the opponent to adduce evidence, and this duty thus falls first upon the proponent (a term convenient for designating the party having the risk of non persuasion). This duty, however, though determined in the first instance by the burden of proof in the sense of the risk of non persuasion, is a distinct one: for it is a duty towards the Judge, and the Judge rules against the party if it is not satisfied. Wigmore § 2487. A clear expression of it is found in an opinion of Lord Justice Bowen in Abruth v. N E Ry Co, 32 W. R. 50-53. 'In order to make my opinion clear, I should like to say shortly how I understand the term "burden of proof." In every law suit somebody must go on with it, the plaintiff is the first to begin and if he does nothing, he fails. If he makes out a prima facie case, and nothing is done by the other side to answer it, the defendant fails. The test, therefore, as to burden of proof is simply to consider which party would be successful if no evidence was given, or if no more evidence was given than is given at the first stage of the case, because it is obvious that during the controversy as to the facts there are points at which the onus of proof shifts, and at which the tribunal must say if the case stopped there that it must be decided in a particular way. Such being the test, it is not a burden which rests forever on the person on whom it is first cast, but as soon as he in his turn, finds evidence which, prima facie, rebuts the evidence against which he is so answer, the burden shifts until again there is evidence which rebuts the defendant's. So, if it happens the question as to onus of proof is only a rule which says that the burden rests of going further, if he wishes to do so. In Smith v. Barry (1847) 1 Sim. & St. 153, in the course of argument before the Court in the case of legitimacy, the Judges were asked by the counsel for the plaintiff, "whether

S 101. case where there is prima facie evidence of any right existing in any person the onus probandi be always, or be not always, upon the person or party calling such right in question " They answered, through Mansfield C J "That in every case in which there is a prima facie evidence of any right existing in any person the onus probandi is always upon the person or party calling such right in question " Stephen lays it down that "The burden of proof in any proceeding lies at first on that party against whom the judgment of the Court would be given if no evidence at all were produced on either side, regard being had to any presumption which may appear on the pleadings. As the proceeding goes on, the burden of proof may be shifted from the party on whom it rested at first by proving facts, which raise a presumption in his favour. The burden of proof as to any particular fact lies on that person who wishes the Court to believe in its existence but the burden may in the course of a case be shifted from one side to the other, etc." (Steph Dig Ev arts 95 and 96) But also says "The burden of proof is shifted by those presumptions of law which are rebuttable, by presumptions of fact of the stronger kind and by every species of evidence strong enough to establish a prima facie case against a party" Thayer Pre Treat Ev 353 In Radha Kishen v Jag Sahu, 47 M L J 329-80 Ind Cas 791-26 Bom L R 732-22 A L J 959 P 0 Their Lordships of the Privy Council said "As in all questions of onus, a certain amount of evidence may cause the onus to shift and evidence on the lender's part that the money could not, in the circumstances have been raised at least interest would suffice to shift the onus so that, if the defendant led no evidence to controvert that statement, the lender would prevail" See also Manmohan v Muthana, 7 C 225

Burden of proof whether shifts "After all the evidence is in whether introduced by the plaintiff or by the defendant it must appear that the person who had the burden of proof has a preponderance of the evidence in his favour if he would win the case. The burden of proof fixes upon the party who has the duty of first going forward with the case. If he fails to introduce any evidence at all or if he fails to introduce sufficient evidence to justify a submission of the case to the jury, the case without any evidence being introduced by the other party, must go against him. If he introduces enough evidence to justify a submission of the case to the jury, the case may still be as it were hanging in the balance. The jury may or may not find from the evidence introduced that he has proved his case. If however he has introduced sufficient evidence to make out what is known as a prima facie case then in the absence of evidence to controvert such case the jury would find—for the Judge would so instruct them—in his favour. Right here we run up against that other sort of burden of proof noticed above which is not really burden of proof at all but only the use of that term to express something very different. When the plaintiff has introduced enough evidence to make out a prima facie case, the defendant unless he would see the verdict for the plaintiff, must take up the case and introduce evidence to controvert or weaken the effect of that which the plaintiff has introduced. This is the burden of going forward with the evidence or the 'burden of proceeding' as it may be called to distinguish it from the 'burden of proof'. The defendant may in his turn introduce such evidence as will make it, in the absence of further evidence on the part of the plaintiff, clear that the facts are in his favour. The verdict, if the evidence stopped at this point, would be for him and the burden of proceeding is shifted again to the plaintiff. Thus in the course of a trial upon the various facts, in issue, the burden of proceeding may shift from one party to the other. The burden of proof however remains upon the shoulders of the party who had it at the outset and is unaffected by the evidence as the trial proceeds. McKenney's Ev 71. In applying the rule however a distinction is to be observed between the burden of proof as a matter of substantive law or pleading and the burden of proof as a matter of adducing evidence. The former burden is found at the commencement of the trial by the state of pleadings or their equivalent and is one that never changes under any circumstances whatever and if after all the evidence has been given by both sides the party having this burden on him has failed to discharge it, the case should be decided against him. Hill v

Vol 13 p 133 citing L v Stoddart 25 T L R 612 C C A Pickup v Thames Insurance Co (1875) 3 Q B D 599 600 C A Wakelin v London and South Western Rail Co, (1886) 12 App Cas 41. The burden of proof in the former cases then never changes. It remains to the end of the case with the party who has it at the outset. McIntyre v F § 32. Burden of proof means the burden of establishing a case as well as the duty or necessity of introducing evidence. The burden of establishing remains throughout the entire case exactly where the pleadings originally place it. It never shifts. The burden of proof in the sense of introducing evidence may shift continually as evidence is introduced by one side or the other, as the one scale or the other preponderates. Rhola v Ishaguant 120 13 C P L R 159. Robins v National Trust & Co 101 Ind Ca, 903 = 1927 P C, 515.

Scope of the section. Before the Court can proceed to hear a case it is, obviously, necessary to determine which party shall begin or upon whom the burden of proof of the whole case lies. The general rule is that the party who alleges any matter in issue must prove it. This would be simple enough if there were only one fact in issue but there may be several facts in issue the burden of proof of some one being on one party and of others on the other party. The position is practically this that the burden of proof lies at first on the party against whom judgment would be given if no evidence at all were adduced. Cockle v F 123. This section is based on the general rule that the burden of proof lies on the party who asserts the affirmation of the issue or question in dispute, according to the maxim Fa meum probatio qui dicit non qui negat. (The burden of proof lies upon him who asserts not upon him who denies)—a rule which the common sense of mankind at once asserts and which however occasionally violated in practice, has ever been recognised in jurisprudence. Ibid § 209. So it is often said that the burden is upon the party having informed the affirmation of the allegation. But this is not an invariable but not even always a significant circumstance the burden is often on one who has a negative assertion to prove a common instance is that of a promisee alleging non performance of a contract. It is sometimes said that it is upon the party to whose case the fact is essential. This is correct enough but it merely advances the inquiry one step, we must then ask whether there is any general principle which determines to what party's case a fact is essential. The truth is that there is not and cannot be any one general solvent for all the cases. Wigmore § 2486. In criminal cases there is generally no difficulty, as all the allegations are invariably made by the prosecution, on whom the general burden of proof invariably lies. In a civil case, the pleading must be looked at in order to settle the questions. The plaintiff naturally, in his statement of claim makes the first allegations. If the defendant, in his defence, pleads a traverse or denial of an allegation made by the plaintiff that puts it in issue and leaves the burden of proof upon the plaintiff. If the defendant pleads a confession and avoidance, admitting the plaintiff's allegation, but alleging further facts by way of defence, the matter in issue is not the plaintiff's allegation but that of the defendant if denied by the plaintiff, and the burden of proof is therefore upon the latter. But if there are several allegations and the burden of proof of some is on one party and of others on the other party there is a distribution of issues the general burden of proof is upon the plaintiff. This is so even if all the allegations of fact are admitted by the defendant and the only question in issue is the amount of unliquidated damages. The result is that the general burden of proof is almost invariably upon the plaintiff. Cockle v F p 124. The elementary rule contained in section 101 of the Evidence Act is a rule that is inflexible and must apply to all cases. Basiruddin v Sahibulla 32 C W N 160. So the burden of proof in the sense of adducing evidence, is a burden which may shift continually throughout the trial according to the evidence in one scale or the other preponderates. Abrath v North Eastern Rail Co 11 Q B D 440. Pickup v Thames Insurance Co, 3 Q B D 594 599 600 C A. Wakelin v London and South Western Rail Co 12 App Cas 41, R v Stoddard (1909) 25 T L R C C A. This burden rests upon the party who would fail if no evidence at all or no more evidence, as the case may be, were adduced by either side. In other words, it rests before any evidence whatever is given upon

- S 102. the party who has the burden of proof on the pleading, i.e., who asserts the affirmation of the issue, and it rests, after evidence is gone into, upon the party against whom, at the time the question arises, judgment would be given if no further evidence were adduced by either side. Abirath v North Western Rail Co Supra, Walcott v London and South Western Railway Co (1896) 1 Q B 189 n, 196 n

102 The burden of proof in a suit or proceeding lies on that person on whom burden of proof lies person who would fail if no evidence at all were given on either side

Illustrations

(a) A sues B for land of which B is in possession, which, as A asserts, was left to A by the will of C B's father

If no evidence were given on either side, B would be entitled to retain his possession

Therefore the burden of proof is on A

(b) A sues C for money due on a bond

The execution of the bond is admitted, but B says that it was obtained by fraud which A denies

If no evidence were given on either side A would succeed as the bond is not disputed and the fraud is not proved

Therefore the burden of proof is on B

Scope of the section The general burden of proof is upon the party who would be unsuccessful in the case if no evidence at all were given, and such party has a right to begin. Irwin v Hughes 1 M & Rob 465 In that case Alderson J said, 'questions of this kind were not to be decided by simply ascertaining on which side the affirmative in point of form lay the proper test is which party would be successful if no evidence at all were given?' Now here supposing no evidence to be given on either side, the defendant would be entitled to the verdict for it is not to be assumed that the work was badly executed therefore the onus lies on the plaintiff. 'The test, therefore as to the burden of proof or onus of proof, whichever term is used, is simply this to ask one self which party will be successful if no evidence is given (or if no more evidence is given)' Hoult v J in Abirath v North Eastern Railway Co 11 Q B D 440 remarked "This section makes it clear that the initial onus is on the plaintiff. If he discharges that onus and makes out a case which entitles him to relief the onus shifts on to the defendant to prove those circumstances, if any, which would disentitle the plaintiff to the sum. It may be said that it is not necessary to determine at what particular point it shifts from the plaintiff to the defendant and then again from the defendant to the plaintiff and then once again from the latter to the former and so on the more so in contested proceedings as evidence gradually continues to be adduced but at the conclusion of the trial when the issues come to be judged it has to be seen whether the initial onus which section 101 casts upon the plaintiff has been discharged or not. Basiruddin v Sahebulla Paramank, 42 C W N 160 So it is clear that burden of proof in the sense of the burden of introducing evidence often changes during the trial. Inde Daulata v Ganesh 4 B 295 Shit v Williamson 9 A 395 Ashtaram v Kali Parshed 23 W I 431 Kameshori v Bharat 1 C W N 18 Gowinda v Joshi 7 B 73 Chamehantra v Kali Prasad 80 C 1012 Suleman v Mehadi 2 C W N 186 Where owing to particular circumstances the onus is sometimes on the plaintiff, and very light evidence may suffice to discharge the onus and shift it to the other side. "Slight evidence means evidence which does not go the whole length of proving a particular fact but merely suggests it. Hur Dyal v Jay Kaur 1 W R 107 The burden of proving the nature of the transfer is on the person whose success depends upon the substantiation of the case set up by him. Kishan v Laduram 5 N L R 185

103 The burden of proof as to any particular fact lies on S 103.

Burden of proof as to that person who wishes the Court to believe to particular fact in its existence, unless it is provided by any law that the proof of that fact shall lie on any particular person

Illustration

(a) A prosecutes B for theft and wishes the Court to believe that B admitted the theft to C. A must prove the admission.

B wishes the Court to believe that, at the time in question he was elsewhere. He must prove it.

Scope of the section. The difference between this section and section 101, consists in this. By section 101 the party has to prove the whole of the facts which he alleges to entitle him to judgment when the burden of the proof is on him. The present section provides for the proof of some one particular fact. The illustration sufficiently points to the meaning. The whole of the facts, however numerous and complicated, which go to make up the prisoner's guilt must be proved by the prosecution. If the prisoner wishes to prove a particular fact, his alibi, for instance, he must prove it. If the prosecutor wishes to prove the case, not by independent oral testimony, but by the isolated fact of the prisoner's admission, or if he wishes to throw that in as an additional fact, he must prove it. Not Ex 290. So the burden of proof of any particular fact is upon the party who alleges the affirmative of such fact. It is only necessary to add and to emphasise that the substance and not the mere form of the pleading is to be considered. The position cannot be altered nor can the Court be misled by the ingenious manipulation of language. This rule as to the burden of proof applies generally to negative averments unless by reason of their complexity or difficulty of proof or by virtue of some statutory provision the burden is cast upon the person denying the allegation. Coole Cas Ex 125. In Soudan v Leggat 7 C & P 613 Lord Abinger C B said: 'Looking at these things according to common sense we should consider what is the substantive fact to be made out, and on whom it lies to make it out. It is not so much the form of the issue which ought to be considered, as the substance and effect of it. In many cases, a party, by a little difference in the drawing up of his pleadings might make it either affirmative or negative, as he pleased. The plaintiff here says you did not repair, he might have said 'you let the house become dilapidated. I shall endeavour by my own view to arrive at the substance of the issue, and I think in the present case that the plaintiff's counsel should begin. Where the plaintiffs wish the Court to believe that there was wilful neglect or that by railway servants, it lies on the plaintiffs under s 10, to give proof of the act. B B and C I Railway v Ramlal 43 B 769=21 Bom L R 779=52 Ind Cis 516. The plaintiff who comes into Court alleging that on the happening of certain events in a certain order certain rights to property accrued to him is bound to establish by affirmative and satisfactory evidence the occurrence of such events in such order. Thus a plaintiff alleging that a certain person died before another must prove the fact affirmatively. Rangappa v Rangaswami (1923) M W N 232=88 Ind Cis 249=A I R 193, Ind 1005.

Negative allegations and Burden of proof. It is always possible to make an allegation in a negative form so that the defendant must answer it affirmatively, as where the defendant said 'he had done the work properly' the plaintiff having alleged, apparently, that it was not done properly. The proof can not be shifted by putting an allegation in a negative form. The question, is on the facts who substantively alleges the 'affirmative in substance'? He begins and proves. Coole Cas 120. So the general rule is that the burden of proof is upon the party who alleges the matter in issue, even although his allegation involves a negative. Abrath v North Eastern Ry Co L R 11 Q B D 410. The cases are somewhat confusing' says Mr McLellan upon the subject of negative allegations and the application of the principles of burden of proof thereto. One distinction which is often lost sight of will help to reconcile many seemingly conflicting divisions. There are two sorts of

S 102 the party who has the burden of proof on the pleadings, i.e. who asserts the affirmation of the issue, and it rests, after evidence is gone into, upon the party against whom, at the time the question arises, judgment would be given if no further evidence were adduced by either side. Abrath v North Western Rail Co Supra, Haldin v London and South Western Railway Co (1896) 1 Q B 189 n, 196 n

102 The burden of proof in a suit or proceeding lies on that
On whom burden person who would fail if no evidence at all of proof lies were given on either side

Illustrations

(1) A sues B for land of which B is in possession which, as A asserts, was left to A by the will of C, B's father

If no evidence were given on either side, B would be entitled to retain his possession

Therefore the burden of proof is on A

(2) A sues C for money due on a bond

The execution of the bond is admitted, but B says that it was obtained by fraud which A denies

If no evidence were given on either side A would succeed as the bond is not disputed and the fraud is not proved

Therefore the burden of proof is on B

Scope of the section. The general burden of proof is upon the party who would be unsuccessful in the case if no evidence at all were given and such party has a right to begin. Irwin v Hughes 1 M & Rob 465. In that case Hiderson B said, questions of this kind were not to be decided by simply ascertaining on which side the affirmative in point of form lay; the proper test is, which party would be successful if no evidence at all were given? Now here supposing no evidence to be given on either side, the defendant would be entitled to the verdict for it is not to be assumed that the work was badly executed, therefore the onus lies on the plaintiff. The test, therefore, as to the burden of proof or onus of proof, whichever term is used, is simply this: to ask oneself which party will be successful if no evidence is given (or if no more evidence is given)? Boutin L J in Abrath v North Western Railway Co 11 Q B D 440 remarked "This section makes it clear that the initial onus is on the plaintiff. If he discharges that onus and makes out a case which entitles him to relief the onus shifts on to the defendant to prove the circumstances, if any, which would disentitle the plaintiff to the same. It may be said that it is not always easy to determine at what particular point it shifts from the plaintiff to the defendant and then again from the defendant to the plaintiff and then once again from the latter to the former and so on: the more so in contested proceedings as evidence gradually continues to be adduced; but at the conclusion of the trial when the issues come to be judged it has to be seen whether the initial onus which section 101 casts upon the plaintiff has been discharged or not." Basarablu v Sahrbulla Iaramanik 32 C W N 100. So it is clear that the burden of proof in the sense of the burden of introducing evidence often changes during the trial. Pule Daelata v Ganesh 4 H 29; Shetty v Harkins 9 A 115; Arataram v Kali Parshad 23 W L 431; Janneshor v Pharat 14 W N 18; Ganulay v Jha 7 H 73; Hemchandra v Kali Parshad 10 C 1012; Suleman v Mehadi 2 C W N 186. Where owing to particular circumstances the onus is sometimes on the plaintiff and very slight evidence may suffice to discharge the onus and shift it to the other side— "slight evidence" means evidence which does not go to the whole length of proving a particular fact but merely suggests it. Hir Dyal v Py Kri 14 W L 107. The burden of proving the nature of the transfer is on the person who succeeds in pleading upon the substantiation of the case set up by him. A. K. v. Lalaram 5 N L L 185.

103 The burden of proof as to any particular fact lies on that person who wishes the Court to believe in its existence, unless it is provided by any law that the proof of that fact shall lie on any particular person

Illustration

(a) A prosecutes B for theft, and wishes the Court to believe that B admitted the theft to C. A must prove the admission.

B wishes the Court to believe that at the time in question he was elsewhere. He must prove it.

Scope of the section. The difference between this section and section 101 consists in this. By section 101 the party has to prove the whole of the facts which he alleges, to entitle him to judgment when the burden of the proof is on him. The present section provides for the proof of some one particular fact. The illustration sufficiently points to the meaning. The whole of the facts however numerous and complicated, which go to make up the prisoner's guilt must be proved by the prosecution. If the prisoner wishes to prove a particular fact his alibi, for instance he must prove it. If the prosecutor wishes to prove the case, not by independent oral testimony, but by the isolated fact of the prisoner's admission or if he wishes to throw that in as an additional fact he must prove it. Not Ex 290. So the burden of proof of any particular fact is upon the party who alleges the affirmative of such fact. It is only necessary to add and to emphasise that the substance and not the mere form of the pleading is to be considered. The position cannot be altered, nor can the Court be misled by the ingenious manipulation of language. This rule as to the burden of proof applies generally to negative averments unless by reason of their complexity or difficulty of proof or by virtue of some statutory provision the burden is cast upon the person denying the allegation. Cooley Case Ex 125. In Sonard v Leggitt 7 C & P 613 Lord Abinger C B said 'Looking at these things according to common sense we should consider what is the substantive fact to be made out and on whom it lies to make it out. It is not so much the form of the issue which ought to be considered, as the substance and effect of it. In many cases a party, by a little difference in the drawing up of his pleadings might make it either affirmative or negative as he pleased. The plaintiff here says 'you did not repair' he might have said, 'you let the house become dilapidated' I shall endeavour by my own view to arrive at the substance of the issue and I think in the present case that the plaintiff's counsel should begin. Where the plaintiffs wished the Court to believe that there was wilful neglect or theft by railway servants it lay on the plaintiffs under s 10, to give proof of the act. B B and C v Railway v Rental 43 B 769=21 Bom L R 779=52 Ind C 1516. The plaintiff who comes into Court alleging that on the happening of certain events in a certain order certain rights to property accrued to him is bound to establish by affirmative and satisfactory evidence the occurrence of such events in such order. Thus a plaintiff alleging that a certain person died before another must prove the fact affirmatively. Rangappa v Rangaswami (1927) 51 W N 232=88 Ind C 15249=A I R 1925 Mad 1005.

Negative allegations and Burden of proof. It is always possible to make an allegation in a negative form so that the defendant must answer it affirmatively as where the defendant said 'he had done the work properly,' the plaintiff having alleged apparently that it was not done properly. The proof can not be shifted by putting an allegation in a negative form. The question is on the facts who substantially alleges the affirmative in substance. He begins and proves. Cooley Case 125. So the general rule is that the burden of proof is upon the party who alleges the matter in issue even although his allegation involves a negative. Abrath v North Eastern Ry Co L R 11 Q B D 410. The cases are somewhat confusing says Mr Wheley upon the subject of negative allegations and the application of the principles of burden of proof thereto. One distinction which is often lost sight of will help to reconcile many seemingly conflicting divisions. There are two sorts of the party who has the burden of proof on the pleadings i.e. who asserts the affirmation of the issue, and in fact, after evidence is gone into, upon the party against whom, at the time the question arises, judgment would be given if no further evidence were adduced by either side. Abinath v North Western Ry Co (1896) 1 Q B 189 n. 190 n.

THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT

1030
S 102

102 The burden of proof in a suit or proceeding lies on that person who would fail if no evidence at all on whom burden was given on either side of proof lies

Illustrations

- (a) A sues B for land of which B is in possession, which as A asserts, was left to A by the will of C B's father
- If no evidence were given on either side, B would be entitled to retain his possession
- Therefore the burden of proof is on A
- (b) A sues C for money due on a bond
- The execution of the bond is admitted, but B says that it was obtained by fraud which A denies
- If no evidence were given on either side A would succeed as the bond is not disputed and the fraud is not proved
- Therefore the burden of proof is on B

Scope of the section. The general burden of proof is upon the party who would be unsuccessful in the case if no evidence at all were given and such party has a right to begin. Arnos v Hughes 1 M & Rob 465. In that case Alderson B said, questions of this kind were not to be decided by simply assuming on which side the affirmative, in point of form by the proper test is which party would be successful if no evidence at all were given. Now here, supposing no evidence to be given on either side, the defendant would be entitled to the verdict, for it is not to be assumed that the work was badly executed therefore the onus lies on the plaintiff. The test, therefore, as to the burden of proof or onus of proof, whichever term is used, is simply this to ask one self which party will be successful if no evidence is given (or if no more evidence is given). Bowen L J in Abinath v North Eastern Railway Co 11 Q B D 440 remarked "This section makes it clear that the initial onus is on the plaintiff. If he discharges that onus and makes out a case which entitles him to relief the onus shifts on to the defendant to prove those circumstances, if any, which would disentitle the plaintiff to the same. It may be said that it is not always easy to determine what particular point it shifts from the plaintiff and then once again from the plaintiff to the defendant in contested proceedings as evidence gradually introduces, and so on the more so in the conclusion of the trial when the issues come to be judged and so on the more so in the conclusion of the trial when the issues come to be judged. It has to be seen whether the initial onus which section 101 casts upon the plaintiff it has to be seen whether the initial onus which section 101 casts upon the plaintiff has been discharged or not. Basiruddin v Sahabulla Iramamul 32 C W N, 169 So it is clear that the burden of proof in the sense of the law is not always easy to determine, during the trial. Vide Darlata v Ganesh 4 B 295, Shikhs v Williamson 9 A 335, Astaram v Kali Parshad 23 W R 431, Hameshor v Bharat 4 C W N 18, Gurmita v Joshi 7 B 73, Hemchandra v Kali Prassanna 80 C 1042, Sukanna v Vekadi 2 C W N 186. Where owing to particular circumstances the onus is sometimes on the plaintiff and very slight evidence may suffice to discharge the onus and shift it to the other side—proving a particular fact, but merely suggests it. Hir Dyal v Jay Laro, 24 W R 107. The burden of proof, the nature of the transfer is on the person whose success depends upon the substantiation of the case set up by him. Ka hiba v Laduram, 8 N L R 185.

103 The burden of proof as to any particular fact lies on S 103

Burden of proof as to that person who wishes the Court to believe in its existence, unless it is provided by any law that the proof of that fact shall lie on any particular person

Illustration

(a) A prosecutes B for theft, and wishes the Court to believe that B admitted the theft to C. A must prove the admission.

B wishes the Court to believe that at the time in question he was elsewhere. He must prove it.

Scope of the section. The difference between this section and section 101, consists in this. By section 101 the party has to prove the whole of the facts which he alleges, to entitle him to judgment when the burden of the proof is on him. The present section provides for the proof of some one particular fact. The illustration sufficiently points to the meaning. The whole of the facts, however numerous and complicated which go to make up the prisoner's guilt must be proved by the prosecution. If the prisoner wishes to prove a particular fact his alibi, for instance he must prove it. If the prosecutor wishes to prove the case, not by independent oral testimony, but by the isolated fact of the prisoner's admission, or if he wishes to throw that in as an additional fact, he must prove it. Not L v 290. So the burden of proof of any particular fact is upon the party who alleges the affirmative of such fact. It is only necessary to add and to emphasise that the substance and not the mere form of the pleading is to be considered. The position cannot be altered, nor can the Court be misled by the ingenious manipulation of language. This rule as to the burden of proof applies generally to negative averments unless by reason of their complexity or difficulty of proof or by virtue of some statutory provision the burden is cast upon the person denying the allegation. Coelle Cas Ev 125. In Souard v Leggatt 7 C & P 613, Lord Abinger C B said. Looking at these things according to common sense we should consider what is the substantive fact to be made out and on whom it lies to make it out. It is not so much the form of the issue which ought to be considered, as the substance and effect of it. In many cases, a party, by a little difference in the drawing up of his pleadings, might make it either affirmative or negative as he pleased. The plaintiff here says, 'you did not repair,' he might have said, 'you let the house become dilapidated.' I shall endeavour by my own view to arrive at the substance of the issue, and I think in the present case that the plaintiff's counsel should begin. Where the plaintiffs wished the Court to believe that there was wilful neglect or theft by railway servants it lay on the plaintiffs under s 10, to give proof of the act. B B and C I Railway v Ramlal, 43 B 769=21 Bom L R 779=52 Ind C 1516. The plaintiff who comes into Court alleging that on the happening of certain events in a certain order certain rights to property accrued to him is bound to establish by affirmative and satisfactory evidence the occurrence of such events in such order. Thus a plaintiff alleging that a certain person died before another must prove the fact affirmatively. Rangappa v Mangaswami, (1925) M W N 232=88 Ind C 15249=A I R 1925 Mad 1005.

Negative allegations and Burden of proof. It is always possible to make an allegation in a negative form so that the defendant must answer it affirmatively as where the defendant said he had done the work properly, the plaintiff having alleged, apparently that it was 'not done properly'. The proof can not be shifted by putting an allegation in a negative form. The question, is on the facts who substantially alleges the 'affirmative in substance.' He begins and proves. Coelle Cas 125. So the general rule is that the burden of proof is upon the party who alleges the matter in issue even although his allegation involves a negative. Abrath v North Eastern Ry Co 11 Q B D 410. 'The cases are somewhat confusing' says Mr Mclellan 'upon the subject of negative allegations and the application of the principles of burden of proof thereto. One distinction which is often lost sight of will help to reconcile many seemingly conflicting divisions. There are two sorts of

S 104. negative propositions (1) Those which are a necessary part of the case sought to be established and which must be specially alleged in the pleading, (2) Those which are merely implied from the allegation of affirmative facts, since the existence of such affirmative facts precludes the negation thereof. McKelvey's Pl § 33 In an action for malicious prosecution the plaintiff made two main allegations (1) that the defendant prosecuted him, (2) that he had no reasonable cause for the prosecution the first being affirmative and the second negative. The burden of proof of both of them is on the plaintiff Coyle's Case 71 130. This is an essential element in the plaintiff's case and he must establish this negative fact by a preponderance of evidence in order to recover. As to this fact, therefore, the burden of proof is with the plaintiff at the start and remains with him throughout the trial. But it is a negative fact has no bearing on the case and does not affect the burden of proof. McKelvey's Pl § 34 In Abath v North Eastern Railway Co 11 Q B D 110 157 Bonnel I J said 'Now, in an action for malicious prosecution the plaintiff has the burden throughout of establishing that the circumstances of the prosecution were such that a judge can see no reasonable and probable cause for instituting it. In one sense that is the assertion of a negative and we have been pressed with the proposition that, when a negative is to be made out the onus of proof shifts. That is not so. If the assertion of a negative is an essential part of the plaintiff's case the proof of the assertion still rests upon the plaintiff. The terms negative and affirmative are, after all relative, and not absolute. In dealing with a question of negligence that term may be considered either as negative or affirmative according to the definition adopted in measuring the duty which is neglected. Whenever a person asserts affirmatively as part of his case that a certain state of facts is present or absent or that a particular thing is insufficient for a particular purpose, that is an avowment which he is bound to prove positively. As to the burden of proceeding—i.e. of introducing evidence—that at the start is with the plaintiff. He must make a prima facie case on his negative proposition before the defendant need go forward with any evidence. Of the second class of negative propositions perhaps as good an illustration as any is found in a case where the plaintiff seeks to recover upon an express contract. In his complaint he sets forth the contract and the burden of proof is upon him to establish its existence by a preponderance of evidence. The affirmative allegation of the contract relied upon implies the negative allegation that the contract was not something different from that alleged. If therefore the defendant alleges as a defence that there was a special contract under the terms of which there is no liability while the burden of proceeding—i.e. of introducing evidence—as to such special contract—is upon him the burden of proof still remains with the plaintiff. He must satisfy the jury by a preponderance of evidence that no such special agreement was made. It will be found that most cases which are cited to support the proposition that the burden of proof shifts because of a negative allegation, to the shoulders of the other party who must establish the affirmative are cases where what is really being talked of is burden of proceeding. McKelvey's Pl § 33 The general rule of evidence is that if in order to make out a title, it is necessary to prove a negative the party who avers a title cannot be absolved from proving it. Mosluq Ali v Husumissa 114 Ind Cis 113=A I R 1929 Oudh 204, Pulin Behari v Watson, 9 W R 190=B L R Sup Vol 904 (F B)

Burden of proving fact to be proved to make evidence admissible

104 The burden of proving any fact necessary to be proved in order to enable any person to give evidence of any other fact is on the person who wishes to give such evidence

Illustrations

- (a) A wishes to prove a dying declaration by B. A must prove B's death.
 (b) A wishes to prove, by secondary evidence, the contents of a lost document.
 A must prove that the document has been lost.

Scope of the section The burden of proof in the sense of adducing evidence, applies not only to matters which are the subject of express allegation in the pleadings, but also to those that relate merely to the admissibility of evidence or to the construction of documents. Thus a party desiring to adduce a hearsay statement (R v Thompson [1893] 2 Q B 12) or secondary evidence of lost deed, must first establish the conditions necessary to its reception, and if a document be ambiguous the party tendering it has the burden of showing that his interpretation thereof is correct. Falk v Williams (1900) A C 176, 181 (P C), Halsbury Vol 13, p 435. The illustrations point the section, which is but a rather verbose way of stating, that no person shall be allowed to give evidence before he has shown that he is in a legal position to do so. Not Ev 290.

General principles as regards burden of proof The doctrine of onus probandi only applies to a case when the mind of the Judge is in doubt as to the point on which side the balance should fall in coming to a conclusion. As a case proceeds the onus might shift from time to time. Jellappa v Tippaha 56 I A 13=53 B 213=111 Ind Cas 13=A I R 1929 (P C) 18=33 C W N 238. The question on whom the burden of proof should fall is of very little importance when evidence has been given into by both sides. Sati Prosad v Gobinda Chander 33 C W N 227=A I R 1929 Cal 325. Mesaw v Abdul Bari, 119 Ind Cas 222=A I R 1929 R 183. Gopal Rao v Hiralal, 83 Ind Cas 246=A I R 1925 Nag 225. Minabar v Yadao, 103 Ind Cas 166, Feroze Din v Nauab Khan 9 Lah 224=112 Ind Cas 89=A I R 1923 Lah 432. Sime Darby v Official Assignee, 30 Bom L R 290=107 Ind Cas 233=47 C L J 339=A I R 1928 (P C) 77. Sunder Mull v Satya Kinkari 55 I A 85=47 C L J 403=32 C W N 637=A I R 1928 (P C) 64=54 M L J 427 (P C). Jeevalhan v Mt Goura, 95 Ind Cas 326, Inanendia Nath v Ahluja, 87 Ind Cas 565=A I R 1925 Cal 1269. Gopal Rao v Hiralal 83 Ind Cas 246=A I R 1925 Nag 225. Bahram v Kamalji 78 Ind Cas 330=1924 Nag 363, Saraswati v Yadorao, 78 Ind Cas 887, Sonaji v Dantlal 75 Ind Cas 782. Goverdan Das v Hari Lal 69 Ind Cas 541. Mahomed v Majubhai 27 C W N 328, Nihal Chand v Gurditta 1923 Lah 611. Muhammad v Johanda 90 L I 404=1922 Oudh 774. Sri Chudambara v Veerarama 45 M 556=43 M L J 640, Abinas v Majub 36 C L J 196=(1922) Cal 461, Bumamali v Salu, 1 P I F 102=5 P L J 151=55 Ind Cas 841. Sulan Sao v Kam Mahlon 5 P L J 87=(1920) P 131=P L J 13=54 Ind Cas 652. Jhari Singh v Toltaram 52 Ind Cas 860. Burden of proof depends on circumstances of each case. Duarka Prosad v Nasir Ahmad, A I R 1925 Oudh 16. The placing of burden of proof wrongly is immaterial provided no party is prejudiced. Hem Chandra De v Amjyobala 52 C 121=84 Ind Cas 693=A I R 1925 Cal 61. The question upon which party the onus of proving any particular point lies is undoubtedly a question of law. Mussammal Anwar v Mahomed Fuz, 65 Ind Cas 745. The fact that the onus was wrongly placed is immaterial when it does not affect the decision on the merits. Ahmad Far v Mahommed Ali, 3 Lah L J 445. The term onus probandi in its proper use merely means that if a fact has to be proved the person whose interest it is to prove such fact, should adduce some evidence however slight, upon which a Court could find the fact he desires to have found. It does not mean that he shall call all conceivable or available evidence. It merely means that the evidence he lays before the Court should be sufficient, if uncontradicted, to form the basis of a judgment and decree upon that point in his favour. Udair Nath v Mithu Lal A W N 1899, 107. Misplacement of the burden of proof is only a ground for remanding the case if the circumstances had been such that by placing the burden of proof on the wrong party, somebody has been misled or taken by surprise or had no opportunity of adducing evidence. Huklat v Rimqat 11 C L R 581. Where the onus is upon the defendant to prove a certain fact, but the plaintiff, without waiting for the defendant's evidence, took upon himself to prove it he cannot subsequently say that the defendant did not discharge onus. Sajan Kumar v Joti Prosad 10 Ind Cas 223. The burden of proof must be placed according to the pleadings and any preliminary examination of the parties, and for the final decision of the case, the burden remains

S 104, upon the same party. When the party who has to discharge the burden of proof, has made out a prima facie case, in a certain sense the burden of proof shifts on to the other party, for, in the absence of any rebutting evidence, the point at issue would be decided in favour of the party making out a prima facie case. When however the Judge has heard the whole case, he must weigh the evidence for both parties, placing the burden of proof as it was originally placed. Supposing the party upon whom the burden of proof lies makes out a prima facie case and it is doubtful whether the other party has rebutted this case it necessarily follows that the prima facie case is doubtful, and the party entitled to the benefit of the doubt is the party upon whom there was no burden of proof at the out set. Any other rule would obviously be unjust. The party upon whom the burden of proof lies begins and has the first opportunity of proving a prima facie case. It is evidently unjust that this should finally shift the burden of proof upon the other party. He could thus be at a disadvantage. Junes v Ashgar L B R (1893 1900), 456. Where the defendant, under an impression that the burden of proving a certain fact is in the first instance upon him produces evidence he does not lose his right to insist in the Appellate Court upon the burden of proof being laid upon the right party. Both sides having given evidence and there being no suggestion that any evidence had been excluded, the case may be dealt with as if the burden of proof had been cast upon the right party. Muhammad v Raghunath 8 A L J 736. It is for the person who claims an exclusive privilege under the Inventions Act to prove that the facts exist which entitle him to the privilege claimed. Elgin Mills Co v Muir Mills 17 A 490 = A W N 1895 113. It lies on him who asserts it to prove that the law of the foreign state differs from ours and in the absence of such proof, it must be held that no difference exists except possibly so far as the law here rests on the specific Acts of the legislature. Raghunathji v Varyuandas 8 Bom L R 525 = 30 B 578.

BURDEN OF PROOF—ILLUSTRATIVE CASES

Abadi—stranger in possession. Where a stranger is found to be in possession of houses built on abadi sites the landlord has a right to demand possession from him, unless he proves he has a right which entitles him to resist ejectment. He will have to prove that his transferor had a transferable interest in the abadi sites and not a mere license to occupy or that the terms of the license were such as disentitled the proprietor from re-entry on the site. Bhagwan v Raghubar 86 Ind Cas 763 = A f R 1925 Nag 396.

Accident. In a suit for damages for loss of a son who helped his father and whose death was caused by an explosion in a railway carriage, the onus is upon the plaintiff to prove that the accident was due to a want of reasonable care and diligence on the part of the Railway Company. The East India Railway Company v Khaldas 5 C W N 449 = 28 C 401 P C. Where goods have been committed to a bullee and have either been lost or been returned in a damaged condition and the bullee's liability depends upon his negligence the fact of negligence may be presumed placing on the bullee at least the duty of producing evidence of some other cause of loss or injury. Ulgore § 2508 see also Jennuman v E I R 51 C 861. Where the bullee is a common carrier, acting under the customary exemptions as to his major and the like or under express contractual exemptions, it is generally conceded that the carrier has even the first burden or risk of non-pursuance of establishing the fact constituting the exemption. Ulgore § 2508.

Accounts. When a claim is founded on a distinct statement of account signed by the defendant in which he acknowledges a particular sum to be due to the plaintiff it is for the defendant to produce evidence to rebut the prima facie case made against him. Simen Fhas v Joruan Mull 24 W R 202. Where a suit is for account all the evidence necessary to be adduced in order to entitle the plaintiff to a decree is evidence to show that the defendant is an accounting party. Iam Das v Bhagat Das 1 A L J 347 = A W N (1905) 1, Raghunath v Ganpati 27 A 374. In a suit for account if the plaintiff fails to prove the allegation in the plaint that he had sanctioned an estimate up to a certain sum, which had been exceeded, the suit is not liable to be dismissed unless the defendants show that they were neither servants nor contractors for profit and loss. Thomas Owen v Decruze 7 W R 737 In a suit on accounts as between principal agent the plaintiff must at first allege that the defendant had received the money or any part of them Nalin Kumar v Gadadhar 49 C L J 245=A I R 1929 Cal 418 Where the accounts between the parties were settled and a balance struck, the burden is on the defendant to prove payment of the amount due Indraj Mal v Lye Ram 6 Lah L J 593=86 Ind Cts 383=A I R 1925 Lah 278 Every presumption is made against a person suppressing account books and on proof of a prima facie case the party suppressing has the burden of proving the contrary. Venkataramayya v Pitchamm A I R 1925 Mad 164 Where a plaintiff sues for a specific sum of money due on a balance of account he must start his case and prove the amount due on a balance of account he must start his case and prove the amount due on the account, and till then the defendant need not be required to rebut him. Rulton Bysack v Bocha Bibee 12 W R 529 Where accounts have been taken and settled and a party alleges error in the accounts, the onus of proving it rests on that party. Kakoo v Nutha, 47 P R 1866 The onus is not on the defendant to prove the contrary, but on the plaintiff to prove his allegation that he has in the account, on which he claims arrears of rent from the defendant, credited the defendant with certain collection from the ryots admitted by the plaintiff to have been made by him. Mahomed v Brodie, 1 W R 219 The fact of payments by a banking firm being distinctly put in issue, the mere general statement of the banker to the effect that his books were correctly kept was held not sufficient to discharge the burden of proof that lies upon him the books of the firm being at most corroborative evidence, particularly if he has the means of producing much better evidence. Baboo Gunga v Baboo Indrajit 23 W R 390 P C When accounts have been settled they are prima facie to be taken as a settlement of all valid items of debit and credit existing between the parties at the time of settlement. Bhauani Proshad v Juggenath 13 C W N 309

Acknowledgment Where some property is claimed against the maker of an acknowledgment under section 19 Limitation Act, it is immaterial whether at the moment of his making the acknowledgment the claim could have been enforced against him, as against him the acknowledgment is sufficient. Malladi v Tondepu 80 Ind Cts 941

Acquiescence In case of acquiescence the onus is on the defendants to show (1) that they made a mistake as to their legal rights (2) that they had expended money on the faith of that belief, (3) that the plaintiff knew of the existence of his own right which was inconsistent with the rights claimed by the defendants (4) that the plaintiff knew of the defendant's mistaken belief in his rights and (5) that the plaintiff must have encouraged the defendants in their expenditure of money directly or by abstaining from asserting his legal right. Kazi Husain v Ram Sarup, A I R 1929 All 871

Adverse possession It is for the plaintiff in a suit for ejectment to prove possession prior to the alleged dispossession. Rani Hemanta Kumari v Maharaja Jogadindra Nath 10 C W N 630 (P C) Mohima v Mohesh, 16 I A 23=16 C 473 A co-purchaser holding an item of property left undivided at a family partition is a mere co-owner and to claim adverse possession of such property he must prove that he repudiated the title of others interested in it to their knowledge. Vaniyapuram v Subramania, 114 Ind Cts 337=A I R 1929 Mad 27 The burden of proving title by adverse possession lies upon the person claiming to have acquired title by such possession. Kanhalya Lal v Gurnoor, 27 A L J 1106=119 Ind Cts 6=A I R 1929 A 753 Radha v English 7 C L P 364 P C, Jano v Narsingh Das 117 Ind Cts 803=A I R 1929 Lah 549 Nauab v Gopinath 13 C L J 625, Nayamtulla v Nana 13 B 424 If in a suit by a landlord, the tenant proves continuous possession for more than 12 years the zemindar has to prove which portion of the period did not count for the accrual of rights. Toria v Kuncar, L R 4 A 185 In a suit for possession of lands which have re-formed upon the old site after diluvion, the defendant set up adverse possession for twelve years. Held that

S 104 the burden lay upon the plaintiff of proving that the defendant had not been in possession for the period of twelve years next preceding the commencement of his suit Ranjit Singh v Schoene Kilburn, 4 C L R 390

Agent The burden of proof is on the person dealing with any one as an agent through whom he seeks to charge another as principal. He must show that agency did exist and that the agent had the authority he assumed to exercise or otherwise the principal is estopped from disputing it. Asaram Briduan v Mathna Das U B L (1892—1896) Vol II p 1. In a suit to recover advances alleged to be due from a discharged Gomastha who pleads acquaintance plaintiff is to prove the payment to and receipts from the Gomastha. Robert Watson v Sudhar 10 W R 421. Agents entrusted to collect money on account of an insolvent estate are each of them, bound to prove to the assignee or his representative that the expenditure of the several amounts charged in their accounts has been actually and properly made, and the burden of proof lies on such agents. Ayuf Ali v Patterson 2 N W P 104. In a suit against a principal for the acts of an accredited agent of his the onus lies on the plaintiffs to prove that the alleged agent was the duly accredited agent of the defendant in reference to the transaction the subject of the claim. Hathu Ram v Gobind Ram 3 Agr 131.

Agriculturists Law does not recognize the principle of giving benefit of doubt to a party on whom the burden of proof lies. Burden of proving that a person is of an agriculturist tribe is on him especially when entries in Settlement Record are against him. Phaclar Das v Ghulam Mohammed, 94 Ind Cas 158=A I R 1926 Lah 484.

Alluvion and diluvion Where in a suit by plaintiffs to recover possession of alluvial lands on the allegation of dis-possession the defendants denied the plaintiffs title and possession held that the burden of proof, as to possession and dis-possession within twelve years prior to suit, lay on the plaintiff. James v Dinanath 11 W R 566.

Ante dating The onus of showing that a document duly executed and registered was ante dated lies on the person who alleges it. Krishnamurti v Krishnamurti A I R 1925 Mad 932=49 M L J 252=(1925) M W N 632=85 Ind Cas 882.

Appeal In appeals the burden of showing that the judgment appealed from is wrong lies upon the appellant. Nabai Kishore v Upendra Kishore 26 C W N 322=20 A L J 22=35 C L J 116=42 M L J 23=24 Bom L R 346. Taramani v Gopal Das 65 Ind Cas 182. Fum of Probhu Dial v Dina Nath 65 Ind Cas 464. Mustafa Hussain v Sardul 99 Ind Cas 255=A I R 1927 Oudh 66. Lal Shah v Hualal 106 P R 1917.

Appropriation Payments of rent cannot be credited to arrears of previous year beyond the term of limitation. Payments for rents are presumed to be for current years and surplus payments for past year. Taramonee v Kally Churn W R 1864 Act X Rul 11. Money paid by a tenant as rent without any specification may be credited by the landlord as he thinks fit. Shirno Moyre v Kashed Kant 7 W R 511. Where transactions between two firms of bankers were renewed after an interval without any account of outstanding debts being drawn up and in a suit for the old debts the defendants set up the plea that they were barred by limitation in as much as payments made after the interval were appropriated, by a special agreement, to the discharge of loans advanced thereafter. Held that the onus of proving such special appropriation lies on the defendant. Rutha Krishun v Hirralal, 31 C W N 764=45 C I J 318 (P C).

Arbitration When a Court is affirmed that a suit has been instituted in contravention of an arbitration agreement it has a discretion to stay the suit, but the burden lies on the plaintiff to show that some sufficient reason exists why the matter should not be referred to arbitration and not on the defendant to show that no such reason exists. Tolkart v Fateh 61 Ind Cas 322. Ganesh Das v Durga Dal, 60 Ind Cas 776.

Attachment claim Although where the assignee of a decree wishes to execute it it is incumbent on him to apply under s. 232 Civil Procedure Code 1882 yet, if at the date of the assignment the judgment debtor's property is already under attachment, it is not necessary for the assignee to apply for a fresh attachment Hafiz v. Abdullah 16 A 133=A W N 1894 13

Auction purchaser The right of a purchaser at a revenue sale in getting rid of encumbrances is such that he is in many cases allowed to have the benefit of a certain presumption, and by virtue thereof to throw the burden of proof on his opponent the presumption being founded mainly upon the principle that every bigha of land is bound to pay and contribute to the public revenue unless it can be brought within certain known and specified exceptions Nityanund v. Banshu 3 C W N 341, Forbes v. Meer Mahamed, 20 W R 45

Avoidance of encumbrance A person seeking to obtain the benefit of s. 12 Bengal Act VII of 1869 must give some prima facie evidence to show that the encumbrance which he seeks to avoid is an encumbrance falling within the terms of the section—that is an encumbrance imposed on the tenure by some one who previously held it Koylashashany v. Gocoolmony, 8 C 230 In a suit by the purchaser of an under tenure under ss. 59 and 60 of the Rent Act (Ben. Act VIII of 1909) to obtain possession of lands held by the defendant, on the ground that the holdings are encumbrances which have occurred thereon by an authorized act of the previous holder of the under tenure, it lies upon the plaintiff to show that the defendants' holdings are such encumbrances as the plaintiff is entitled to avoid under section 66 of the Rent Act Govind Nath v. Reilly 13 C 1

Award Any party wishing to set aside an award on the ground that the arbitrators in arriving at an unfair award either refused to hear somebody or heard the matter without giving notice of the hearing undertakes the burden of satisfying the Court that this is what really happened Gobend Sing v. Bhirkunath 82 Ind Cis 16=46 A 686

Bailment In a suit for damages for loss of goods entrusted to a bailee, the burden of proof lies on him to show that such care as a man of ordinary prudence would have exercised was taken by him Maung Po Thak v. Young Tha Byau 74 Ind Cis 18=1923 Rang 74 When loss of goods bailed is established by the plaintiff, it lies on the defendants to show that they took as much care of the goods as a man of ordinary prudence would under similar circumstances have taken of his own goods of a similar kind and that the loss occurred notwithstanding such care Trustees of the Harbour v. Best and Co., 22 M 524 Kashi Kant v. Chundia Kanta, 28 C W N 1041, Munnalal v. E. I. Ry 82 Ind Cis 772 but see Shields v. Wilkinson, 9 A 398=A W N 1887, 44

Benami transaction Where a party alleges that a certain transaction is benami the burden of establishing that the ostensible owner in whose name the transaction stands is the benamdar lies upon a person who makes the allegation Collector of Calcutta v. Hamid Ali 114 Ind Cis 506 Baynath v. Raghu Nath 12 C L R 186 Suleiman v. Mehdi 25 C 473 (P C) Setti Mamk v. Bhoj 25 C W N 409 (P C) Hakim v. Bhavrat 23 C W N 321 (P C), Kansar v. Rattan Chand A I R 1929 Sind 195 Ma Vique v. My Tha 33 C W N 513 (P C) Ryan v. Abani 94 Ind Cis 33=A I R 1926 C 850, Sham Lal v. Rulha 39 C L J 98, Tuka Mah v. Babu Chandra, 1923 Cal 292 Seth Umil Lal v. Rajah Bhoj 25 C W N 409, Mukto v. Anando, 2 C L R 48 Where the defendant pleads benami, the onus is on him to prove that the purchase money was supplied by him Mohammad Yaqub v. Bishen Sarup 11 Lah L J 267 Do Lal v. Bindeshori, A I R 1929 Pat 440=10 Pat L T 469 In all benami transactions the very object of the parties is secrecy but still the person who alleges that property conveyed on another belongs to himself must prove his allegation and prove it beyond reasonable doubt Maung Po v. Maung Po 24 A L J 758=96 Ind Cis 142=A I R 1926 (P C) 77 Primarily the party alleging that a person is benamidar is bound to prove it Tuka Mah v. Babu Chandra 65 Ind Cis 701 In a suit for recovery of possession of land on the ground of purchase, when it has been shown that the alleged vendor is not the true owner the plaintiff can only rely on his claim as purchaser in good faith for value from a person who by the act of the true owners had become the apparent owner of and in such cases the burden lies upon the plaintiff Rutto Singh v Bajrang 13 C L R 280 (P C)

S 104

Bill of lading In a suit for damages on the ground of damage done to goods shipped the bill of lading is prima facie evidence that the description of the goods therein tallies with the actual condition of the goods. If the shippers want to escape liability the onus is on them to show the goods were in a damaged condition when shipped Bilby v Charles 14 Ind Cas 916

Bill of exchange The burden lies heavily on a person suing on the basis of a hundi to prove that the drawer could have suffered any damage owing to non-presentment of the hundi for payment. It will only be held in very exceptional circumstances that the drawer could not have suffered any damage owing to non-presentment Bhukli Mal v Raghubar 88 Ind Cas 915=23 A L J 861

Bond Where the consideration for a bond is disputed the burden of proving repayment is on the person who pleads discharge Mamli v Narbassan 88 Ind Cas 241=A I R 1925 Nag 376. When the bond contains stipulation as to interest onus is on debtor to prove that the stipulation found its way into the bond without his consent Keval Ram v Allah Deay A I R 1925 141 614. Where in unregistered document such as a bond or a receipt or an entry in an account book the execution of which is admitted or proved contains an admission or recital of the payment of consideration the onus lies on the person who executes the document to prove he did not receive the consideration Ram Chand v Chhannu 26 P L R 369=6 Lab 470=88 Ind Cas 301=A I R 1925 141 471 (F B). Where the consideration for a bond is admitted the burden of proving repayments is on the person who pleads discharge Mamli Rao v Narbassan 88 Ind Cas 241=A I R 1925 Nag 376

Boundary disputes The onus lies on the person setting up the plan to show that the land is not capable of identification especially where there is no difficulty in marking off an exact area Juthan v Sulloo L R 3 A 391. On questions of boundary specially where the dividing line in dispute runs through waste lands which have not been the subject of definite possession the rule is as to the burden of proving the affirmative is not applicable Radhia Krishnav Maliyar Rahman 65 Ind C 743. The litigants being in the position of counter-claimants both parties are bound to do what they can to aid the Court in ascertaining the true line Lukhi Naram v Jodu Nath 21 C 504 (P C)=21 I A 39. In that case their Lordships said: "It is of frequent occurrence especially in cases where the disputed line of division runs between waste lands which have not been the subject of definite possession that no satisfactory evidence is obtainable. That circumstance is not relieve the Court of the duty of settling a line upon the evidence which is laid before it. The ordinary rule regarding the onus incumbent on the plaintiff has really no application to cases of that kind. The parties to the suit are in the position of counter-claimants and it is the duty of the defendant as much as of the plaintiff to aid the Court in ascertaining the true boundary. Were any other rule recognised, the result might be that some boundaries would be incapable of judicial settlement." See also Gaydon v Fiqat 9 C L J 415=11 C W N 230. In a dispute regarding direction of a boundary removed by one of the parties to a suit the onus of proof that the general direction proved by the other party has been wrongly stated by the other lies on the party who removes it Judoonath v Kaler Kristo 25 W R 524. Jeelamund v Mohesar Singh 3 W R 19 P C=10 M I A 81. Where a person appeals to the Privy Council from a decision of the High Court fixing the boundary to a certain estate the Privy Council would not interfere with the High Court's decision, if the evidence of his boundary was of the vague and not trustworthy description and in a measure inconsistent with the allegation in the plaint as to the quantity which he originally claimed as his estate. It also lay upon him to show in what particulars and to what extent as regards his estate the thalbust proceedings were wrong Jeelamund Singh v Luchmewar Singh 10 C L R 169 P C. In a suit for confirmation of right and possession in respect of lands alleged to be within plaintiff's permanently settled talook

held that plaintiff should prove that lands are within his talook Ganga Mala v Madhub Chunder, 10 W R 413 In a question of boundary between a lakheraj tenure and a Zemindar's mal land, there would be no presumption either in favour of one or of the other, but manifestly the plaintiff would have to prove his case Beerchunder v Ramgully, 8 W R 209 In a suit to recover two parcels of land alleged to have been comprehended in one plot, where defendant's case is that the parcels were divisible into two distinct plots one held by plaintiff and himself jointly and the other by himself exclusively, the burden of proof was held to lie on the plaintiff to show that the plot in dispute formed part of the land held by him and the defendant jointly Ganga Pershad v Lole Nath 12 W R 79 When a landlord sues his tenants for khas possession alleging that the land in dispute had been encroached upon by the tenant beyond his proper boundaries the burden of proving the encroachment lies on the landlord Rhoday v Nobin 12 C L R 457 Where the plaintiff sued to recover a quantity of land by rectification of certain survey awards which he averred demarcated erroneously the boundary between his zemindary and the zemindaries of the defendants it was held on a consideration of the evidence, that his suit was rightly dismissed because he failed to prove the position or existence of a stream, which he stated was the true boundary between the zemindaries Rajah Leelamund v Rajah Mohendra Narain 13 W R P C 7 In a suit for the possession of land once forming a bed of a nullah, but situated in the plaintiff's settled estate Held that the defendants, who failed to prove that their julkar settlements did not extend beyond haliery rights, were not entitled to recover possession of any land which the drying up of the water way lay bare Monohun Choudhury v Nursingh Choudhury, 11 W R 272

Carrier A common carrier in this country is liable as a carrier, that is, he is responsible for the safety of the goods entrusted to him in all events except when loss or injury arises from the act of God or King's enemies But his liability for loss or injury in respect of the goods carried may be raised by contract The burden of proof of absence of negligence is upon the common carrier, on the theory that the loss or damage to the goods is prima facie proof of negligence Akhil Chandra v Indian General Navigation 21 C L J 565=29 Ind Cas 260, see also 24 C 786=1 C W N 207, 17 M 445, 40 C 716=17 C L J 639

Civil Procedure The burden of proving that a suit is barred under Order 2 rule 2 Civil Procedure Code is upon the defendant Abdul Qadir v Imam din, 102 Ind Cas 31 It is settled law in India that the plaintiff in a suit under Order 21 rule 63 Civil Procedure Code has to establish the right which he claims Mahadeo Misser v Rm Prasad 8 Pat 890=A I R 1929 Pat 579 In a suit instituted under Order 21, rule 63 the onus of establishing that the transaction on which the suit is based was entered in good faith lies on the plaintiff and the cases under Mahomedan Law are no exception to the rule Kulsambi v Bilal Khan 117 Ind Cas 220=A I R 1929 Nag 121 Where plaintiff claimed priority of attachment under s 270 Act VIII of 1879 held that he was not bound to prove that he had obtained a written order under s 233, and that he had published that order in the manner prescribed by s 239 Civil Procedure Code 1879 Kanhya Lal v Dinanath, 17 W R 23 Plaintiff in this case had previously failed in her resistance to the attachment made by defendant of property as that of her judgment debtor The defendant having obtained an order maintaining his attachment, it was incumbent on the plaintiff, who impugned that order by the present suit to prove title under the purchase alleged by her by proving both the payment of the purchase money and her possession since the purchase and the lower Court was therefore held to have been wrong in having thrown the burden of proof in the suit on the defendant Gourm Bharam v Santal 12 B 270 On a claim being denied satisfactory proof is required of its genuineness and the ordinary tests of evidence cannot be dispensed with because the parties have had certain business relations Jamal Mall v Nayya Moodahar U B R (1892-1896) Vol II 230 When a plaintiff seeks by a suit under s 233, Civil Procedure Code to establish his right to property which was attached in execution after having failed in an attempt to procure the removal of the attachment, the burden of proving that he acquired property in good faith and for consideration has on him Vaayan v Bhieraj 2 N J R 87 In a suit to set aside an order dismissing a claim petition the burden will be on the plaintiff to show that he is entitled to the property Vakhatappa v Chinniah 1 L W 362 = 36 Ind Cas 791

THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT

S 104

Collusion Where in execution of a decree the party proceeded against sets up that the decree was obtained collusively the burden of proving collusion rests on him Hirshah Prosad v Mahabub 79 Ind Cas 107 = 11
 O J J 689

Consideration Where it has been admitted or proved that an admission of consideration has been made or executed in a document the onus of proving want of consideration rests on the person asserting that want of consideration Paras Das v Suraj Bhan 101 Ind Cas 173 In case of unregistered documents the execution of which is admitted or proved and which contain an admission of payment of consideration the onus is upon the person executing the document to prove that he did not receive the consideration Jyoti of Gandri Singh v Am Ahmed 96 Ind Cas 820 = A I R 1926 1st 673 see also Ma Tin v Ramaswami Chetty, Bar 1 J 49 = 97 Ind Cas 181, Paimun
Ram v Ghulam 27 P L R 163 = 7 Lah 297 = 96 Ind Cas 630 = A I R 1926 Lah 191 Where a document was concluded in the following terms - The undersigned promised to pay to A the sum of Rs 1000 payable during the period of one year without interest Held that the burden of proof was on the executor to prove consideration where executant admitted only execution while the other members of the family of the executant denied both execution and consideration Raghu Nandan v Buddhu Wal 86 Ind Cas 270 = A I R 1922 Lah 316 An endorsement made in accordance with s 58 (1) of the Registration Act raises the presumption that consideration was paid and the onus is on the person who alleges that it is untrue to prove it Rajal Chandra
v Prosad Chandra 99 Ind Cas 229 Where after the equity of redemption has been sold by the mortgagor the mortgagee sues on his bond he must prove by affirmative evidence the validity of the consideration and also that it had passed from the creditor to the debtor The mere admission of the debtor in the mortgage bond does not shift the onus as it would have been if the suit had been brought against the mortgagor alone Jamun Mohan v Jagabandhu 89 Ind Cas 927 When the execution of a sale deed is admitted it is on the party who pleads that no consideration passed to prove it Rajam v Kym 20
 N L R 154 = 79 Ind Cas 596 = 1924 Nag 173 Mangali v Indha Lal 1923
Lah 401 Yahommad v Ram Lal 5 Lah L J 198 = 71 Ind Cas 783 Mori
Prasad v Hanhar, 70 Ind Cas 801 = 1923 P 20, the passing of consideration for a mortgage deed which is more than thirty years old and which was never questioned till the suit thereon was brought should be taken as proved even if the direct evidence is not as strong as might be naturally expected in recent transactions Jagana v Achanna 42 M L J 339 = 3, L W 289 In a redemption action the burden of proving the mortgage amount is on the plaintiff
My Shul v Ma Nung 1 Bar L J 248 Where in a suit to set aside a registered sale deed on the ground of fraud practised upon the creditors and plaintiff but when this is done the onus is shifted on to the defendants to prove consideration Maung Po v Maung Po 11 L B R 323 = 65 Ind Cas 322
 In a dispute regarding the title of two rival purchasers of the same property when the vendor in the first sale-deed admits receipt of consideration the onus of proof lies in the subsequent purchaser did not get possession for a long time paid The fact that the first purchaser did not get possession for a long time does not prove absence of consideration Ut Kastur Bai v Balakum 68 Ind Cas 732 Where a mortgagor admits before the sub registrar that full consideration had been received the onus of proving that full consideration has not passed is on the person making the admissions Ganga Ram v Rukia 2 Lah 249 = 64 Ind Cas 901 In a suit to enforce a bond the defendant denied execution as well as consideration The Court found that the bond was genuine and from the recitals therein drew an inference that the bond was supported by consideration Held, that there was no error of law committed by the lower

Court Jadu Mondal v Jogendra Nath 68 Ind Cas 303 Where a person executes and delivers a conveyance of his property and also gets it registered and the sale deed contains a recital of receipt of consideration, the burden of proving want of consideration for the sale is on the vendors J H Power v Daw Shue, 1 Bur L J 22 In a case of a formally registered document in which the receipt of consideration has been recited, the onus of proving that consideration did not actually pass is on the party who alleges non payment In the case of an entry in an account book however the onus is on the party alleging payment to prove it Rulla Singh v Juma Mal 60 Ind Cas 730 Either party to a document may show that there was in fact no consideration though consideration was recited therein or that the consideration was in reality different from what was stated in the deed Krishna Kishore De v Navindra Bala, 34 C L J 33 In a suit for redemption brought by the purchasers of the equity of redemption, the sale deed was a registered document and contained an admission of the extentant that full consideration had been paid but the mortgagee contended that the sale was a sham and without consideration Held that the burden was on the extentant of the deed and on people claiming under him to prove that what apparently happened did not happen Fhtushane H v Juma Parsad 18 Ind Cas 265 (P C) = 24 O C 272 It is the established practice of the Courts in India in cases of contract to require proof that consideration has been actually received according to the terms of the contract, and a contract under seal does not of itself, in India import that there was a sufficient consideration for the agreement A plaintiff however suing to set aside a security admittedly executed by him self, must make out a good prima facie case before the defendants can be called on to prove consideration Kali Prasad Fenari v Prasad Sen 2 B L R P C 111 = 12 M I A 282 Where in a suit by the endorsee of a hundi against his immediate endorser, the defendant pleads want of consideration, the onus is on him to prove his plea Gound Ram v Mantora Sahoo 1 C L R 429 In a suit for redemption by the signees of the equity of redemption the onus of proving that the mortgagor did not in fact receive the moneys which he acknowledged by his execution of the mortgaged deed to have received, is prima facie on the plaintiff Muhammad Ahahyar v Muhammad Samuiddin A W N 1887 245

Contract The party who alleged that a contract is conditional on the happening of a certain contingency must prove the existence of such a condition by clear and unequivocal evidence Firm of Ganesh Lal v Firm of Debi 103 Ind Cas 265 = A I R 1927 Lah 131 The ordinary presumption is in favour of the legality of a contract and it is for those who assert that it was not intended to perform the contract in the manner recited therein, to prove their assertion The Firm Kanwar v Firm Ganpat Rai Ram Jwan, 7 Lah 442 = 94 Ind Cas 304 = A I R 1926 Lah 318 The burden of proving that there was an act which rendered a contract impossible of performance lies on the party to the contract who alleges it Husein v Moonooden, 77 P R 1866

Contribution Where on the decree as passed several defendants were made jointly and severally liable in the subsequent suit for contribution by one of them, it was for any defendant, who contended that he was not liable to pay the full share to plead and prove it The mere fact that he was a sleeping partner did not shift the onus from where it primarily lay Mulla Baksh v Karim Balsh, 95 Ind Cas 1007 = A I R 1926 Lah 533 In a suit for contribution for money admittedly paid by plaintiff into the Government Treasury on account of defendant's share of the revenue, where the defendants plead previous payment to the plaintiff the onus of proving such payment lay upon the defendants Mohadeo v Labonee Misser 24 W R 250 Where in a suit between two judgment debtors to recover money alleged to have been paid in satisfaction of decrees obtained against them by J who had been wrongfully kept from enjoying his share of the property B answers that he entered into possession as plaintiff's mortgagee and plaintiff maintains that the right of possession terminated before the origin of J's claim the burden was held to lie on A to prove that it was so determined Afzul Khan v Bahadur Singh 19 W L 156 In a suit for contribution by one co-sharer for recovery of excess payments of Government revenue made on behalf of other co-sharers to save the estate from sale, the onus was held to be on the plaintiff to prove their shares and the amount of revenue payable thereon Aghori Ram v Ramolu Sahu, W R 1864, 309

S 104

Conversion In the case of Hindu convert to Mahomedanism the presumption is that they follow the Mahomedan Law and if it is pleaded that notwithstanding the conversion there has been an election to abide by the old law, the onus is on those setting up the plea to substantiate it by clear and unambiguous evidence Mahomed Ibrahim v Sheikh Ibrahim 45 M 308=26 C W N 793=36 C L J 61 P C

Criminal cases Where the accused give the deceased a beating the previous day and were seen by various persons on the occasion it was highly impossible that they would murder the person next day Sheo Ram v Emperor 1923 Lah 130 It is the first principle of criminal law that where a statute creates a criminal offence the ingredients of that offence must be strictly proved, and that where the doing of an act without authority or without consent is made a criminal offence and the statute does not expressly put upon the accused the proof of such consent or authority it is a necessary part of the case for the prosecution to negative by evidence such consent or authority By Basu v Queen Empress 19 A 74=A W N 1896 178 In a criminal case the burden of proof is on the prosecution under section 101 Evidence Act and a conviction must be based on evidence which excludes the theory of evidence not on circumstances of suspicion or on mere probabilities Queen Empress v Narayan Rat Un Cr C 779=Cr R 43 of 1895 see also Khosed Ka v Empress 8 C L R 542 Ramasami v Jolananda 9 M 387 Queen Empress v Bal Krishna, 17 B 573 Queen Empress v Haradhan 19 C 780, Tanchanon v Emperor 2<sup>o</sup> C W N 693 When a person is accused of an offence the burden of proving the existence of circumstances bringing the case within any of the general exceptions in the Penal Code is upon the accused and it is directed by statute that the Courts should presume the absence of such circumstances Queen Empress v Iraq Dnt 20 A 159=A W N 1898 117 see also Queen Empress v Bai Akhalan Rat Un Cr C 820

Custom Where a person sets up a custom in derogation of a general principle of succession prevailing in a locality he has to prove the same Ghulam Khan v Ghulam Hauler 75 Ind Cas 211 Where in a suit for possession of a site in a village under a sale deed executed by a person who had been in possession of the site for a long time the defendant alleges that according to the custom of the village the vendor had no right to transfer the site the burden of proving the existence of such a custom lies upon the defendant Sahel Rao v Jambhavao 78 Ind Cas 192 A person who relies on an alleged custom has to prove that the custom exists and applies to the circumstances of the case Shah Mahomed v Talal Bhai 2 Ind J J 175=56 Ind Cas 913 A special family custom involving a departure from the ordinary Hindu law should be properly proved by the person setting it up Gururaj Naraya v Saharandhara, C W N 93=27 I A 238=23 A 37 P C A custom opposed to the ordinary Hindu law must be proved by those who assert it Ghulab v Shubhalas, Bom L R 318 Lalla Begam v Nawab Mohamed Almal 11 P R 1874 Mt Inpa v Mokantol 9 C P L R 47

Damages In a suit for damages for malicious prosecution the plaintiff must in the first instance make out a prima facie case that the defendant had no reasonable or probable cause for the prosecution and acted maliciously Firdaus v Ioff I B L (1893-1900) 57 Mohendra v Surbhojaya 11 W L R 531 Hareesh v Anshi Kanto 28 C 591=6 C W N 159 Pestonji v Queen, B 332 (1 C) Mellu v Sahu 27 C 732 Syama Charan v Thatoo 6 C W N 295 Sheekh v Ibrahim 17 C W N 331

Debt and Debtor The burden of proving that a certain payment was made in full satisfaction of a debt is on the person alleging it Karala Kanta v Jodhar Nath 19 C L J 1740 It is elementary law that when a creditor sues the debtor for the payment of a debt and the defence is that the debtor paid the debt to another person it is for the debtor to prove that the other person had or had been held out to the debtor by the creditor as having had the authority of the creditor to receive payment of the debt on behalf of the creditor Muham mad v Les Tanneurs Lyonnaises, 49 M 435=A I R 1926 P C 34=31 C W N 1 When a debtor pleads tender of payment as a ground for not being saddled with interest, it is for him to prove such tender Ranee Shurut Soonduree v Collector of Mymensingh, 5 W R Act X Rule 69 If a debt is proved or admitted, the burden of proving payment lies on the debtor Mobanik v Seva Rama, 35 P R 1807 In a suit by a creditor against the son of a deceased Hindu, it cannot be laid down as a general rule that the burden of proving the nature of the debt lies absolutely either on the creditor or on the son Mamraj v Balaso, 16 P R 1878 Where in a suit on a bond, the defendant pleaded want of consideration held, he was not relieved of the obligation of establishing his case by the fact of an admission of the plaintiff that the actual consideration was different from that described in the bond Lal Singh v Chaitram, 15 C P L R 24 The burden of proof that a creditor by agreeing to an arrangement whereby a firm indebted to him conveyed to two of the partners thereof certain property in trust to pay off his and certain other debts and thereby released the remaining members of the partnership lies upon the parties who were originally liable to such creditor Kalailhan v Madho, 3 N W P 129

Declaratory title In a suit for a declaration of title by plaintiff who had been away from his home for 40 years it is incumbent on the plaintiff to establish his identity and his title by strong and cogent evidence and if he fails to do so the suit is liable to be dismissed The defendant is not under any obligation to let in rebutting evidence if the plaintiff's case is itself unsatisfactory Abdul Sojan v Lakshmi, 50 Ind Cas 870 The plaintiff in a suit for immovable property must rely on the strength of his own title and not take advantage of the weakness of his adversary Futleh Khan v Badan 71 P R 1866, Mega v Sada Ram, 66 P R 1867 Where a plaintiff seeks to be declared the proprietor of land, he must make out that title affirmatively Rassonada v Sitarama 2 M H C 171 A plaintiff must succeed, if at all upon the strength of his own title and not by the infirmity of his opponents Rahimullah Sahib v Mahammed, 8 M H C 63 In a suit for declaration of plaintiff's reversionary title as heir to his uncle's property and for the reversal of a deed of sale from that uncle set up by the defendant the onus was held to be on the defendant Bykunt Nath v Girish Chunder, 15 W R 96 When the plaintiff could not produce the document on which he relies owing to the fact that he was not a party to it and could not from the circumstances of the case, have obtained possession of the document or of a copy of it, while the same circumstances would lead to the inference that the defendants ought to be in possession of it then it would be enough for the plaintiff to make out a prima facie case so as to throw upon the defendants the burden of proving the document by primary evidence or by secondary evidence on properly accounting for its non production Ram v Raghu, 7 A 738

Dedication In a suit for a declaration that a certain property is naqf the onus is on the plaintiff to prove that the property has been dedicated as naqf Rahim v Channan, 55 Ind Cas 210

Deeds In a suit to set aside an order of the Small Cause Court in which that Court had held that a certain Kabala was mala fide, the onus is on the plaintiff that it has been executed bona fide Ihan Chandra v Rikimuddin 2 B L R A C 326 N=10 W R 412 Where it is found on the face of a deed creating a trust that the transaction is bona fide it is for the creditors who impugn the bona fide nature of the trust to prove their plea Kasheshrree v Krishna Kamini, 2 Hay 557 Where certain deeds are duly executed and duly registered the burden of proving that they are not real transaction lies on those who allege the same Sham Chand v Pratap Chandra, 25 C 78 (P C) =21 I A 186=1 C W N 591=7 Sor 217 Mann Singh v Unadut 12 A 523 A benefit being conferred on a person standing in a confidential relation towards another every onus is thrown upon the person filling such a fiduciary character towards another of showing conclusively that he has acted honestly, and bona fide, without influencing the donor, who has acted independently of him Wajid Khan v Enay Ali 18 C 515=18 I A 141 (P C) The genuineness and due execution of a bond does not dispense with the necessity of proof of consideration therefor Baboo Ghansham v Chul once, W I 1861, 197 Where the executant of a mortgage deed denies receipt of consideration in a suit based upon the mortgage, having however, previously admitted receipt therefor, before the Registry Officer, the burden of proving non receipt of consideration would not be shifted on to the plaintiff by the mere circumstances that the plaintiff had not mentioned the bond or the interest accruing thereon in the income tax returns submitted by him Ali Khan v Indor Parshad, 23 C 950 (P C)=23 I A 92 In a suit upon a bond containing an acknowledgment by the executant of the receipt of the whole sum in cash where it is proved that only a part of the sum has been received by the defendant the onus is on the plaintiff to prove in some other way the advance alleged by him Lala Lal Shmi v Sayad 1 C W N 82 (P C)

S 104

Easement Where in a suit for possession, the defendant claims a right of easement the onus is on him to establish it Dum Chand v Nizamuddin, 26 P L R 301 Where in a suit for injunction the defendant sets up that he had acquired a right of easement the onus is on him to prove that he had acquired an easement Bya Ram v Bry Lal, 26 P L R 42=A I R 1927 Lah 297 Where in a suit for possession, the defendant claims a right of easement the onus is on him to establish it, Dum Chand v Nizamuddin 26 P L R 301 Where the right to have a way of water course over certain land is disputed by the owner thereof and in order under s 532 of the Criminal Procedure Code, has been passed by the Magistrate in favour of the person claiming the right, the fact of such an order having been made will not be sufficient to relieve the latter from the onus of proving the claim in a subsequent suit by the owner to establish his right to the exclusive use of the land Obhoy Churn v Lakhay Vonce 2 C L R 555 In an ejectment suit, the defendant in possession though a trespasser is entitled to require the plaintiff to prove that he has a superior title Kalu v Barsu 19 B 803 In a case where an easement is claimed over defendant's water the plaintiff is bound to establish that he acquired it by grant or uses Ughray Singh v Rashidhara Singh 17 W R 281 In a suit to remove certain outlets in one aqueduct, on the allegation that plaintiff is entitled to exclusive user of the water, held that the plaintiff was bound to make good the title alleged Omaet v Aishen 10 W R 83

Ejectment Where the plaintiff pleaded that he was a rayat and sought to eject the defendants who were according to him under rayats Held that the plaintiff had to prove how he was entitled to possession in other words, how the tenancy came to an end The initial onus is on the plaintiff by virtue of ss 101, 102 and 109 of the Evidence Act to prove this and it is only after that is done that the onus is shifted on to the defendants to prove circumstances disentitling the plaintiff to the relief sought Basiruddin v Sahebulla 32 C W N 160=105 Ind Cas 857=A I R 1927 Cal 966 In a suit for ejectment even though the defendant has no title he can still put the plaintiff to the proof of his title and the plaintiff has still to show that the title deed on which he relies as having given him a title superior to that of the defendant is a valid one Teukata Subba Rou v Iigneswaradu 110 Ind Cr 514=(1928) M W N 236=A I R 1928 Mad 840 It is not the law that because the defendant in an ejectment suit is found to be a tenant of some land under the plaintiff, the burden of proof is cast on the plaintiff to establish that the land he seeks to recover is outside the tenure of the defendant Hafat Sherkh v Sachundra Kumar 91 Ind Cas 761=A I R 1926 Cal 759 In a suit by the recorded tenant to eject the sub-tenant where the latter pleads that there was no relationship of land lord and tenant between him and the recorded tenant, the burden is on the defendant to show that he did not hold the land from the plaintiff Isuor Din v Dham L R 5 A 212

The plaintiff an occupancy tenant sued to eject a sub-tenant Held that since the plaintiff was still recorded as occupancy tenant the burden of proof certainly was on the defendant who asserted that his occupancy right had been extinguished Ashiq Ali v Ajodha, L R 5 A 97 (Rev) see also Umad Ali v Sadullah L R 7 A 283 (Rev) Where in a suit by a person as owner of land to eject the defendant the latter sets up the existence of a tenancy entitling him to retain possession, the burden is upon him to prove the nature of his tenancy and his rights to remain in possession Probodh Chandra v Binsaha, 71 Ind Cas 319 Where the recorded tenant of a holding who has been paying rent to the landlord brings suit to eject his sub tenants and the latter set up a claim of occupancy rights, the onus of proving the right is upon them Tulsha v Raghunb L R 3 A 51 (Rev) Where the plaintiff alleges his prior possession and subsequent dispossession by the defendant the burden is primarily upon him to establish that he was in possession within the statutory period Akhedon Lal v Rajendra Narain 29 C L J 279=51 Ind Cas 70 In a suit to eject a tenant where the ownership of the plaintiff is proved and the defendant sets up a right of permanent occupancy the burden of proving such a right is on the defendant Rangasami v Gnana Sambandu, 22 M 261

Enhancement of rent In cases of enhancement of rent, onus lies on the landlord to show that he is entitled to such enhancement Brenda v Ali 39 C L J 605, Hem v Kabi, 26 C 832 Ray Krishna v Kali, 6 B L R App 122 Rama Nath v Jote Kumar 11 C I J 1 Surya v Banerjee, 24 C 251 But when in such a suit the tenant pleads that no enhancement should be granted on the ground that he is a tenant at fixed rate, the onus is on the defendant to prove that he is such a tenant Gudai v Brynandan, 5 C W N 880

Execution Under section 102 of the Evidence Act, when once the execution of a document is proved, if a party alleges circumstances that would nullify the document not binding on him it is for him to prove such circumstances Arishna Kumari v Veeran Kutty 116 Ind Cas 145 Where the execution of a document is admitted the onus is on the executant to prove that he did not understand its terms, even if he is an illiterate person Chandra Lal v Mahmud Hassan, 27 P L R 641=97 Ind Cas 71=A I R 1926 Lah 692 Where in a suit on a mortgage bond alleged to be lost the defendant denies execution, his alternative plea of payment does not amount to an admission of the mortgage sufficient to relieve the plaintiff from proving the loss of the original deed and to entitle him to sue upon a copy of it Yohammad v Zahur 24 A L J 964=97 Ind Cas 82 The onus of proving that a recital in a bond is wrong is on the executant of the bond Sum of Gulab Ram Lehari v Ganga Sarup, 27 P L R 160=93 Ind Cas 509=A I R 1926 Lah 299 An admission by the defendant regarding the putting of a signature or a thumb mark on a document does not amount to an admission of execution so as to shift the burden of proof on the defendant This is specially so where the defendant pleads that when he signed the document it was blank Publiu v Tula Ram, 20 A L J 672=68 Ind Cas 809 A person to whom a decree is transferred must prove his title to execute it if his title be disputed Ganesh v Chundee, 6 W R M 126 Where in execution of a decree a share of an estate is sold and the representatives of the purchaser absorb more land than belonged to that share and bring a suit to declare their rights held that there should have been a clear finding as to what was the extent of the share originally purchased and that, in determining the claim of the representatives to the increase, the burden of a very distinct nature should be laid on them Unopoorina v Ray bullai, W R (1864) 151

Fraud The burden of proving the fraudulent nature of the transaction lies ordinarily on the person who seeks to impeach it Lachmi Narain v Ali Na afur Fatima 94 Ind Cas 927=A I R 1926 Oudh 501 In a suit to set aside an ex parte decree on the ground that summons was not duly served on him, the burden of proof is on the plaintiff Muhammad Din v Berry & Co 89 Ind Cas 736 Where a party attacks the validity of a registered document on the ground that it was not registrable in the place where it was done and proves that there was no such plot as the one in the registration area or that it did not belong to the party, then the onus is on the other party to show there was no fraud on the registration law Mi Surja v Bhai, 26 O C 336=73 Ind Cas 13 The persons who seek the interference of the Court on the ground of fraud should prove

S 104. it Bishen Salu v Inmole Pandey, A W N 1882, 10 In a suit against a purchaser to set aside a sale in execution of a decree on the ground of fraud, the onus lies upon the plaintiff to make out that the sale was fraudulent Ranigata v Imtari, 1 B L R S N 20 Where the defendant alleged that plaintiff's assignment was fraudulent, the onus was on him to prove that the transaction was not bona fide Lalbehari v Sruvath, 3 B L R A C 73 Note Where a decret holder in a suit to establish his claim to certain property as that of his judgment debtor, alleges that the deed of sale conveying to defendant was fraudulently executed held that the decret holder was bound to prove the fraud Lala Rudra Prasad v Binode Ram 3 B L R A C 71 (note) = 10 W R 321 When a man has committed a fraud and has obtained property thereby, it is for him to show that the person injured by his fraud and suing to recover the property has had clear and definite knowledge of those facts which constitute the fraud at a time which is too remote to allow him to bring the suit The mere fact that some hints and clues reached the injured party which perhaps if vigorously and acutely followed up, might have led to complete knowledge of the fraud is not enough to constitute a clear and definite knowledge of it Rakumbhoy v Charles, 17 B 341 P C = 20 A 1

Good Faith. The burden of proving the good faith and fairness of a transaction is on the person who claims benefit thereunder Gunabai v Motulal 59 Ind C 625-A I R 1925 Nag 398

Government revenue. In a suit for contribution for money admittedly paid by the plaintiff into the Government treasury on account of the defendant's share of the revenue, where the defendants plead previous payment to the plaintiff held that the burden of proving such payment was upon the defendants Mahadeo v Lahore, 24 W R 250

Guardian and Ward. Where an alienation by a guardian is questioned by a minor after attaining majority the onus of proving that the transaction was for necessity is not always and necessarily very heavy on the defence and if it is established that the consideration for the alienation impugned went in discharge of previous debts and there is evidence that some of such debts were contracted to give the minor's estate the burden of proof though in the first instance it lay upon the defence, is shifted on to the minor and it is he who must show that the alienation touched by him was not for a purpose binding upon him Krishna Rao v Anjassami Panday 24 Ind C 426, see also Hannuman Pershad Panday's Case 6 M I A 393, Syed Looft Hosseins Case 23 W R 424 Oomed Kar v Hura Lal 6 S D R N W P 611, Sardar Kupal v Brilliant Singh 17 Ind C 666=17 C W N 302 P C

Hindu Law—Adoption. Where the plaintiff wants to have the adoption by the widow set aside as being without authority the onus lies upon him Hindyal v Roy Krishna Bhoomul 24 W R 107 In a suit for possession of land by the plaintiff setting up a title by adoption it lies on the plaintiff to prove the fact of adoption Jana v Mohamda 59 P R 1893

Hindu law—Alienation by Hindu widow. Where the validity of alienation by a Hindu widow is the question for the consideration of the Court the onus of proving the necessity for the alienation rests with the alienor Dhasee Singh v Huroomaree, 1 Ind Jnr O S 99, Nund Coomer v Ganga Puri said 10 W R 91 Himalal v Jadab Chunder, Cor 119 So in cases of alienation by a Hindu widow when the legal necessity therefor is questioned its existence must be shown by the party standing on the conveyance Bissonath v Pall Bahadur 1 W R 217 Lala Brij v Indur 18 C W N 619 (P C)—36 A 187, Nabakishore v Ipenba 26 C W N 322 (P C) Hari v Kasi 19 C W N 170 (P C) Radhakishore v Virtoojay, 7 W R 23, Debi Prosud v Golap Bhaat 10 C 721 (P B)

The onus of proving due execution of a document purporting to have been signed by a Hindu widow lies upon the plaintiff (creditor) who relies upon the signature of the widow as binding the estate which she represented Jeminarun v Vanda 19 C 249 (P C)—19 I A 1 In the case of mortgage by a Hindu widow the onus probandi lies on the mortgagee to prove, first that the charge on the estate was the act of the widow and secondly that the debt so charged was a competent act of the widow Cavalry Veneata v Collector of Musulipatam 10 W R 47 P C = 11 M I A 619 So in a suit by her of a mortgagee against a Hindu proprietor's heirs in possession after the death of his widow to enforce a mortgage by her, the burden of proving the money to have been advanced to the widow for the purpose justified by legal necessity is on the plaintiff Maheshwar Bakshi v Ratan Singh, 23 C 766 P C = 23 I A 57 = 6 M L J 127, Sham Sundar v Achan 21 A 71 (P C) = 2 C W N 729, Kurum v Mahomed, 10 B L R 1 P C, Jagsahu v Radha 5 P L J 287 Where after a widow's death the reversioner sued the donee for the possession of the house the burden is on the donee to prove that the widow had, when she executed the deed of gift such absolute right of ownership as would entitle her to alienate and deal with the property in any manner which would go beyond her life interest Ganpat Rao v Ram Chunder, 11 A 296

Hindu Law—Alienation by manager or guardian Where a person after attaining majority, questions as to the sale of his property by his guardian during his minority the burden of proving the bona fides lies on the person who upholds the purchase Roop Narain v Sugadhar 9 W R 297 The leading case on the subject is that of Hunooman Prosad Panday v Musst Baboo Munna Koonwar 6 M I A 393 = 18 W R 81 There then for ships of the Privy Council laid down the following rules (1) The power of the manager of an infant heir to charge an estate not his own is under the Hindu law a limited and qualified power. It can only be exercised rightly in a case of need or for the benefit of the estate. (2) But where in the particular instance the charge is one that a prudent owner would make in order to benefit the estate the bona fide lender is not affected by the precedent mismanagement of the estate. (3) The actual pressure on the estate, the damage to be asserted, or the benefit to be conferred upon it, in the particular instance is the thing to be regulated. (4) The lender is bound to enquire into the necessities for the loan and satisfy himself as well as he can with reference to the parties with whom he is dealing that the manager is acting, in the particular instance for the benefit of the estate. (5) If he does so enquire and acts honestly the real existence of an alleged sufficient and reasonably credited necessity, is not a condition precedent to the validity of his charge. (6) Under such circumstances he is not bound to see to the application of the money. The same rule is applicable in the case of an alienation by the karta of a joint family property Nauab Nair v Rao Jaghumath, 41 A 571 P C = 23 C W N 700

Hindu Law—Alienation by Shebait "The authority of the shebait of an idol's estate would appear to be analogous to that of the manager or an infant heir Prossanno v Golab 2 I A 145 151 = 14 B L R 450 = 23 W R 253 Abduram v Shama Charan 14 C W N 1 (P C)

Hindu Law—Inheritance Where a man comes forward to claim a property by right of inheritance, in the absence of acquiescence by the defendant, he must establish his descent and legitimacy Chandan v Bhabhuti Singh 30 Ind Cis 220

Hindu Law—Joint Family The question as to the onus clearly depends on the pleadings of the particular case onus is not an invariable obligation resting on a party to a suit fixed and pre-determined by rules of evidence. It not only changes according to the nature of the pleadings but it frequently changes according to the progress of the evidence. It is true that the normal condition of a Hindu family is joint and that in law there is a presumption to that effect, but such a presumption may vanish altogether in certain circumstances, in other circumstances it may become very weak and again it may shift at one stage of the trial from the shoulders of one party and be fixed on the shoulders of another Sa joo Prosad v Deodat Lal, 4 O W N 959 = 105 Ind Cis 410 = A I R 1927 Oudh 199

Hindu Law—Partition Where in a suit for possession on the ground of a prior partition the plaintiff proves severance of interest, it will be on the defendant, who sets up a case of some of the brothers remaining joint to prove that

S 104.

plea Challa Lakshmaika v Bala Ranzappa, 91 Ind Cas 285=A I R 1926 Mad 388 The presumption of Hindu law being that a partition is complete, when a party says some lands were kept joint the burden of proving it lies on him Jagannath v Babu 81 Ind Cas 1039 see also Vaidyanata 32 M 191 Rangan v Sudarapulu 31 M L J 472=35 Ind Cas 52, v Ayazunani Ballurshna v Raja 27 Ind Cas 736=(1915) M W N 17 The normal state of every Hindu family is joint Presumably every such family is joint in food worship and estate In the absence of proof of division such is the legal presumption but the members of the family may sever in all or any of these three things Deonain v Agyan 31 C W N 53, Neelinto v Bur Chandra 13 M L A 533 540=13 W R P C 21, Thiruch v Jodhsteer, 19 W R 178 Gobind v Doorga 22 W R 248 Ganjendai v Saidai, 18 A 176 Katama Nauchan v Raja of Shiva Ganga 9 M I A 539 Barnanum v Choudhury 14 C L J 183=12 Ind Cas 6 Nageshai v Ganesha 42 A 368, 381=47 I A 57=38 M L J 521=22 Bom L R 59

Hindu Law—Self Acquisition When an acquisition has been made with the assistance of a joint family property which yield some income though not substantial the burden of proof is on him who asserts the acquisition to be separate Sulhandan v Brannandin 1923 A 574, Abhaudai v Partap, 3 O W N 40, Hordat v Dhandhi 81 Ind Cas 1011, Harnanayan v Suresh 1925 P 161 Sircar v Hindu Law 312

Hindu Law—Stridhan A Hindu wife seeking to exempt property from responsibility for her husband's debts must clearly prove that she had stridhan and that she purchased the property with her self-acquired funds Bojomohan v Radha Kumaree W R 1864 60

Hundi Where a hundi is not presented for payment and the drawer withdraws the money after many days the burden of proof lies heavily on the payee to prove that the drawer did not suffer any loss and the circumstances will be very exceptional in which he could prove that the drawer could not possibly have suffered any damage and burden is certainly not discharged by the oral admission of the defendant drawer that some time or other subsequently he got back his money Bhul Lal v Raghubir 23 A L J 861=53 Ind Cas 915=A I R 1925 All 811

Income tax When an assessee states that he has no income from a certain source and officers of the Income tax department disbelieved him it is for them to prove that he has such income and not for him to prove the contrary Any assessment based on the inability of the assessee to prove his negative statement and on general assumption only is bad and should be cancelled In re Bishnu Janga Chaudhary 79 Ind Cas 61=50 C 907=A I R 1921 Cal 337

Insolvency In a suit against an insolvent and the Official Assignee for the sale of mortgaged property the onus is on the plaintiff to show that title deeds in his possession after the insolvency were deposited with him as security before liquidation Mell v Melho Dye 23 I A 106 The burden of proof of supporting a purchase from the insolvent of the whole of his assets just prior to the insolvency falls on the person claiming that the purchase was made He 1 F C Schase 22 C W N 315

Insurance A claimant under a life-policy must prove that the age of the insured is correctly given Oriental Government Insurance Co v Narasimha 21 M 201 But no such onus is cast upon the claimant where the age has been proved and admitted by the company in writing Ibid

Inventions It is for the person who claims an exclusive privilege under the Inventions Act to prove that the facts exist which entitle him to the privilege claimed Hyson Mills Co v Muir Mills Company 17 A 490

Jurisdiction It is for the party who seeks to oust the jurisdiction of the ordinary Civil Court to establish right to do so District Board of Bangalore v Anuradha Narasimha 31 Ind Cas 121 The M v Hakim 1925 1 121 (F R) Tracy v Mani 2 L 22=1 Ind Cas 23

Lakhray and rent free land Where the question in a case is whether the land in question is within the geographical limits of the village belonging to the Zemindari of which patni was granted to the patnidars and it is proved that the lands are really within the ambit of the villages and where the defendants claim those lands as Nislar Pnattor, the onus rests on the defendants Abdul Bari v Hishulshesh, 49 C L J 546 = A I R 1929 Cal 459

Land Acquisition Where a public body seeks to acquire under the Land Acquisition Act, any portion of a block which is structurally connected with the main block the onus is on that body to show that the portion is not reasonably required for the full and unimpured use of the house Venkataram nam v Collector of Godavari, 27 M 350

Landlord and tenant In an ejectment suit the land holder came into Court with the allegation that the tenants had cut his tabi crops. The tenants alleged that the crops were theirs. The lower Court placed the burden of proof on the defendant. Held that the first issue should have been whether the tabi crop was shown by the plaintiff and the burden of proof should be thrown on the plaintiff. Held also that if the burden is wrongly thrown in such cases the decision is liable to be set aside Nathu v Gopal 13 R D 862. In the case of a tenant at will burden is on the tenant to prove that tenancy is closed Mahomed v Sadik, A I R 1925 Sind 36. In proceedings for appraisement of crops when the landlord falsifies accounts in order to claim a larger amount for himself the onus is on him to show what the actual yield is Bhameshwar v Sudhoo, 6 Pat L J 419 = 85 Ind Crs 566 = A I R 1925 P 505. When a tenant of lands in India in a suit by his landlord to eject him from them, sets up a defence that he has a right of permanent tenancy in the lands the onus of proving that he has such a right is upon the tenant and proof of long occupation at a fixed rent does not satisfy the onus Nannapillai v Ramanatham 47 M 337 = 51 I A 83 = 46 M L J 546 = 22 A L J 130. Where a tenant sets up adverse possession against his landlord, and the Revenue Records show him to be a tenant, the onus is not discharged by the fact that the rent which he paid did not exceed the amount of revenue and the cesses Ram Das v Chandi, 69 Ind Cas 363 (1).

Legitimacy Where a person claims under section 112 of the Evidence Act, to be the son of a deceased, he must prove that he was born within 280 days after the death of his father, the burden of proving the non access of the deceased and his wife lies upon him who impugns the legitimacy Narendra v Ramgobind, 1 Bom L R 213. Where a person is born 223 days after the death of his father, the burden of proof that he is not the son of his father lies on those who contest his legitimacy Pradol v Inchmra, 5 Bom L R 477. It is upon the person who claims to be the legitimate issue of his parents to bring forward satisfactory evidence in support of their marriage. In such cases no certain inference can be drawn from the evidence as to the conduct of relations and friends Thalim imjal v Nauab Ali 9 Bom L R 264 = 5 C L J 1 = 17 M L J 56.

Limitation The burden of proving that a payment was made which would enlarge the time under the Statute of Limitation is upon the plaintiff who claims the benefit of such payment Birada Kanto Roy v Jatindra Nath 49 C L J 560. In a suit to recover possession of lands as heir, where limitation is pleaded, plaintiff must prove his possession within 12 years prior to suit Bhiloo v Mottu, 9 W R 251, Jagadamba v Ramchandra 6 W R 327. Dunobandhu v James Ferlong, 9 W R 155. Kedarnath v Mohesh 1 W R 67. In all actions for ejectment where the defendants are admittedly in possession, and a fortiori where they had been in possession for a great number of years, and under a claim of title it lies upon the plaintiff to prove his own title Mohama v Mohesh 16 C 573 = 16 I A 23 (P C).

Malicious prosecution In an action for malicious prosecution, it lies upon the plaintiff to make out a prima facie case of malice and want of reasonable and probable cause before the defendant can be called upon to show that he acted bona fide and upon reasonable grounds, believing that the facts within his know-

- S 104. ledge constituted a valid charge Mohunt Gour v Hayaqub Das, 6 B L R 371=14 W R 127, Aghor v Radhika, 11 W R 339, Ganesh v Mungeram, 17 W R P C 283

Marriage It is for the person who says that a marriage took place to bring forward satisfactory evidence in support of the alleged marriage when there is no documentary evidence in support, and no certain inference can be drawn from the evidence as to the conduct of relations and friends, the oral evidence in the case being wholly untrustworthy Arayad v Nabab Ali 5 C L J 1 (P C)

Mercantile Usage Where a contract is alleged to be an "office dhara" and where the office dhara refers to the practice of certain firms as seen in printed forms used by them a plaintiff relying on the term "office dhara" must produce and prove the printed forms above mentioned Dassomal v Ram Chand, 86 Ind Cas 364=A I R 1925 Sind 90

Mesne profits Where mesne profits are claimed by a person out of possession he must in the first instance give some evidence of proving prima facie that the profits were somewhere about the sum he alleges and then the burden of proving that they were less shifts to the other side Jajalsao v Lal Fahe Singh 20 N L R 52=75 Ind Cas 826=1924 Nag 117

Minor Where a deed is executed by a person who alleges himself to be a minor at the time of execution, a heavy burden rests upon him or his representatives when they set up the defence of minority Sadiq Lal v Joykishore 47 C L J 628=32 C W N 874=A I R 1928 (P C) 152 The burden of proving that a particular deed is void on the ground that its executant was a minor at the time of its execution lies on the person who makes the allegation Munna Lal v Kameshori Dulla 114 Ind Cas 801=A I R 1929 Outh 115 The burden of proving that the executant of a document is a minor lies on the person alleging it Surja Prasad v Joti Prasad 87 Ind Cas 445=L R 6 All 233=47 A 493=A I R 1925 All 681 In a suit brought on the basis of a contract, the burden of proof lies on the party who asserts that he was a minor at the time of contract Khanhailal v Debi Prasad, L R 6 All 219=87 Ind Cas 778=A I R 1925 All 399 Swraj v Joti Prasad, L R 6 A 243=87 Ind Cas 441=47 A 493=A I R 1925 All 681 Narain Singh v Chhanyat 22 A L J 461=79 Ind Cas 945 When the validity of a contract is questioned on the ground that the executant is a minor it is for the plaintiff to establish by prima facie evidence that the contract was valid and entered into by a person who was competent to do so Bachcha Lal v Hosan Singh, 66 Ind Cas 814=(1922) All 240 It is on the executant of a deed who pleads that he was a minor on the date of the execution of the deed to prove his plea Kandhai v Mohammad 63 Ind Cas 52, Namutullah v Gajraj, 53 Ind Cas 136=6 O L J 376

Mortgage Where a mortgage deed contains an admission of receipt of consideration before the Sub Registrar the onus is upon the mortgagor to disprove his admission Gorindappa v Soulat, 109 Ind Cas 149 Where land is mortgaged without possession and possession is subsequently given to the mortgagee the burden of proving that the transaction by which possession was given was an outright sale lies in the first instance on the mortgagee Maung Pua v Maung I o Sa 7 Rang 668 Where joint family properties are mortgaged at a high rate of interest the mortgagee must prove that the rate is justified and that there was necessity for the same Aedar Nath v Bhukhan Singh 92 Ind Cas 679 In a suit for redemption the onus is on the plaintiff to prove the mortgage he set up, i.e. that it was still subsisting Bunda v Sunata Prasad 95 Ind Cas 915 Where a mortgagor admits execution of a mortgage-deed it is for him to prove that he has not received the consideration recited in the deed Jua Ram v Bhanda Singh, 92 Ind Cas 46 Where land is mortgaged without possession and subsequently possession passes to the mortgagee the burden of proving that the transfer in which possession was given was an outright sale lies on the person alleging it A F Chetty Firm v Mohamed Kasim 3 Rang 367=99 Ind Cas 1011=A I R 1921 Rang 577 Where the rate of interest is unusually high, the burden lies on the mortgagee to prove that there was necessity to borrow at so high a rate. Sagor Singh v Mithura, 87 Ind C 1035=A I R 1925 Oudh 750 Ordinarily the onus is on the quondam mortgagee to prove the validity of the foreclosure proceedings. It does not cease to be so simply because, there was an entry in the register that mutation had been effected in favour of the mortgagee. Anidu v Suran, 26 P L R 751 Where the execution of the mortgage document is admitted but it is pleaded it was fictitious and merely a sham the onus of proving it lies on the party who sets it up. Chhida v Desraj, 21 A L J 793 In a suit for redemption the burden of proving a mortgage is upon the mortgagor. Rampi v Akheir Jal 71 Ind C 651=1923 All 111

S 104.

Notice Where the defendants led evidence on the issue as to notice they cannot be said to have held back their evidence because of the imposition of the onus on the other side. Ladha Ram v Inda Ram, 1923 Lh 339 The burden of proving a purchase without notice of a prior mortgage or contract is on the subsequent purchaser and the rule is the same for moveable as well as immovable property. Maung v Bansi 75 Ind C 329=2 Bur L J 63=1923 Rang 153 The burden of proof of the giving of notice of the inquiry into the conduct of a person lies on the authority holding such enquiry. Rangaswami v Seshari, 1 L W 611 Where there is an affidavit of the person serving the notice of proper service thereof, the party who impugns the fact ought to prove that there was no service. Krishna v Bhandari A I R 1925 Cal 722

Partition Where in a suit for partition defendants resist by setting up acquiescence in their permanent right of occupancy in a part of the land the burden of proving existence of those rights is on them. Subramanya v Subramanya 56 I A 248=52 M 519=31 Bom I R 830=A I R 1929 (P C) 156 The onus is heavy on the person who desires to show that certain partition lists were not acted upon and the parties continued to be joint in spite of the sale. Venkata Krishnayya v Rangayya, A I R 1928 M 865 In a partition suit among Muhammadans, burden is on plaintiff to show that it was acquired by the help of joint fund. Yusuf Mohamed v Abubucker, A I R 1925 Sind 26

Purdanashin lady Where a person relies on a document purporting to be a gift and is making a claim against a purdanashin woman, based upon a document of this kind, it is incumbent upon him to give satisfactory evidence that the document has been explained and understood by the lady. Aisha Bibi v Mufsin-unissa, 22 A L J 205=L R 5 A 97=78 Ind C 180=16 A 310

Partnership Where the title of a deceased person to certain properties is disputed and it is shown that those properties belonged to the partnership firm the onus lies on persons claiming through the deceased person to prove that those properties belonged to him at the time of his death. Ismail v Taynballi, A I R 1929 Sind 182

Perpetual and permanent settlements If a person sets up his right against the Government a permanent or perpetual settlement it is incumbent on him to make out that case. Prosunno v Secretary of State, 26 C 792=3 C W N 695

Possession In a suit for possession of land the plaintiff lies to prove that the land lay within his holding and not for the defendants to prove that it lay outside. Sati Prasad v Gobinda 56 C 805=33 C W N 227=A I R 1929 Cal 325 The burden of proving a subsisting title to a land lies on the party out of possession and the fact that the party in possession is forced to institute a suit under Order 21, rule 103 C P Code does not shift the burden of proof on to him. Razwan v Faiz Mahomed 82 Ind C 861=A I R 1925 Sind 201 Where in a suit for recovery of possession of land or declaration of title the defendant in possession does not admit the title of the plaintiff, but says that the plaintiff is his benamidar it is for the plaintiff to prove that the defendant is not the owner. Lal Mahmud v Ayejuddi Shakh, 57 Ind Cas 973 Where the plaintiffs who are in possession of a property before the institution of the suit ask for a declaration of their title and confirmation of their possession as against the defendant, who seeks to disturb the possession it is for the defendant to show that he has a better title than the plaintiffs Mahomed Husan Ali v Abdul Hamid, 50 Ind Cas 131

S 104

Posting of letter The presumption is that if a letter properly directed is proved to have been posted, it reached its destination and was received by the person to whom it was addressed Kamkhya v Khalik, 8 Pat L T 633=102 Ind Cas 821=A I R 1927 Pat 305

Pre-emption It is a settled rule of law that a very slight proof will shift the burden to the vendees to prove the actual payment of the price entered in the deed Abid Ali v Har Prosad, 119 Ind Cas 459=A I R 1929 Oudh 486 In a suit for pre-emption, when the plaintiff alleges that the price mentioned in the sale deed is fictitious or inflated the burden of proof is on him to show that the property is sold for a price less than what is stated in the sale deed. Even slight evidence may be sufficient to shift the onus on to the defendant Shuap v Rotuam, 89 Ind Cas 763 In a suit for pre-emption the onus is on the vendee to prove that the consideration stated in the sale deed was really paid and there was an actual payment Ahmadjehkan v Gulmir, 75 Ind Cas 271

Promissory note Where the execution of a promissory note is admitted, the burden of proving absence of consideration is on the party who sets it up Hanshar Prosad v Mahabir 79 Ind Cas 1055 Where receipts for money paid are taken in the shape of promissory notes the burden of proof of payment is on the person setting it up Hoe Moe v J M Sedat 2 Rang 349=1925 Rang 23

Railway Cases Where a Railway Company was sued for compensation for non delivery of goods, held that the Railway must first prove loss of goods and on such proof the onus will shift to the plaintiff to prove wilful neglect on the part of the Railway or its servants etc. according to the terms of risk note E I Hy Co v Pujara Lal, A I R 1928 Lah 774

Recital in a deed or other instrument Where a mortgage document was executed by the father of the defendant and contained a recital that the consideration had been received by the executant, the burden lay upon the executant or his representative to prove that the recital was untrue and to satisfy the Court how he became a party to a document which contained untrue recital of this description Benoybhusan v Dhruendia, 38 C L J 114=74 Ind Cas 178 The onus of proving that a document to which a person has affixed his signature does not contain a correct statement of the facts and of the intention of the parties is on the person who makes the allegation Nandau v Chandrabali 4 Pat L W 237=41 Ind Cas 399 When a party to a contract alleges that it is different from what on the face of it purports to be the burden of proving his case lies on him, since there is a presumption that a transaction is in substance what it is in form Fshoon Doss v Venkata 17 M 190

Record of rights There being a presumption of the correctness of the entries in a record of rights the onus is on the party challenging the same to prove it Parmeswar Singh v Suresha Kuer 88 Ind Cas 495=6 Pat L T 805=A I R 1927 Pat 330 Shoo Pershad v Jhaman Singh 3 Pat L T 87=87 Ind Cas 41=A I R 1925 Pat 498 Where the record of rights contain an entry showing a person as possessing occupancy rights the person who wants to challenge it ought to show it is wrong. The mere fact that he was holding without rent is not sufficient Gannu v Jharia L R 1A 372 The entry in a record of rights of an occupancy right creates a presumption in favour of the tenant which it is for the landlord to rebut Bisesswar v Parbhoo Nath 34 Ind Cas 506.

Release In a suit to set aside a release deed on the ground that it was obtained by misrepresentation and that there was no consent, when the defendant pleads that there was consideration and that the arrangement came to was reasonable, the onus is on him to prove it Hem Singh v Bhagaboto Singh, 80 Ind Cas 67

Rent Where the rent has never been paid the burden of proof that rent was agreed to must surely lie on the person who asserts it and that in this case lies on the defendant in the suit for ejectment Suldeo v Abdul, L R 4 A 229 S. 104

Sale Mere denial by the vendor of the receipt of the consideration is not acknowledged in the recitals of a deed of sale is not in all cases sufficient to cast upon the vendor the burden of proving the payment of consideration Where the plaintiff wished to set aside a contract of sale of which there has been performance and under which the defendant was in possession and enjoyment of the subject matter and in possession of the title deeds he must establish at least a good prima facie title to the relief he seeks Rampal Ram v Subha Singh, 1 Pat L J 17=53 Ind Cas 83

Sale for arrears of revenue In a suit by a ryot against an auction purchaser claiming protection from ejectment under the proviso of section 37 Act XI of 1859, the onus of proving the character of the holding, is on the ryot Domnu v Pudum, W R 1861 Act X 123 Where a taluk is sold at a revenue sale under Act XI of 1859, the burden of proving that under tenures in the taluk fall under any of the exceptions to s 37 of that Act, lies on him who alleges that under tenures to be within those exceptions Rash Behari v Hara Monce 15 C 55 The right of a purchaser of a revenue sale in getting rid of incumbrances is such that he is in every case allowed to have the benefit of throwing the burden of proof on his opponent Nityanand v Banshi, 3 C W N 341

Specific performance In a suit for specific performance of a contract if the plaintiff proves his prior contract the burden of proving a subsequent bonafide transfer for value without notice under section 27(b) of the Specific Relief Act lies on the party alleging it Ramden v Guman, 10 Pat L T 307=119 Ind Cas 70=A I R 1929 Pat 300

Vendor and purchaser Where a person enters into an agreement to sell his property to one person but subsequently sells it to another person, it is for the vendee to prove that he is a transferee in good faith and without notice of the original contract Juan Das v Lorind Chand, 96 Ind Cas 175=A I R 1928 Lih 580 Where after an agreement to sell lands in favour of a person the lands are actually sold to another the burden of proving that the vendee had no notice of the prior agreement to sell is on him and on the person who had an agreement to sell in his favour Inam Din v Muhammad Din, 89 Ind Cas 123 A person who derives his title through a purchase must prove that his vendor had a title in the property sold Gulab Din v Mouji Ram, 88 P L R 1919=51 Ind Cas 575

Wills "In the Court of Probate" says Baron Parke in Baker v Ball, 2 Moo P C 317 nt pp 319, 320 "Where the onus probandi most undoubtedly lies upon the party propounding the Will, if the conscience of the Judge upon a careful and accurate consideration of all in evidence on both sides, is not judicially satisfied that the paper in question does contain the last Will and testament of the deceased, he is bound to pronounce his opinion that the instrument is not entitled to probate For if the party upon whom the burden of proof of any fact lies, either upon his own case, where there is no conflicting testimony, or upon the balance of evidence where there is, fails to satisfy the tribunal of the truth of the proposition which he has to maintain he must fail in his suit" Where it has been proved that a Will has been duly executed by a person of competent understanding and apparently a free agent the burden of proving that it was executed under undue influence is upon the party who alleges it Boys v Rossborough 6 H L C 6 (19) So "the onus probandi lies in every case upon the party propounding the Will, and he must satisfy the conscience of the Court that the instrument so propounded is the last Will of a free and capable testator In all cases the onus is imposed on the party propounding a Will, it is in general discharged by proof of capacity and the fact of execution for which the knowledge of and assent to the contents of the instruments are assumed Barry v Butlin 2 Moo P C 482 (484) Brojewari v Rasik 85 Ind Cas 581, Woomesh v Rashmoun, 21 C 279, Surendia v Ramdas, 47 C 1043=21 C W

- S 105. N 860 Raymudar v Ramrajal 5 Lab 263, Mullahai v Waman, 69 Ind C 572, Lala Singh v Kumar Bhoj Protap, 41 C L J 300, Raj Bachan v Shal 5 O L J 519=47 Ind C 963, Alurad v Khadim 12 Ind C 49=114 P W R 1911, Prasannomoyi v Bailuntha, 25 C W N 779, Rydlari v Krishna, A I R (1926) Pt 269, Bundeswar v Ml Baisakha, 24 C W N 674, Soyojni v Haridas 26 C W N 113, Robins v National Trust Co Ltd 101 Ind C 903 (P C)=A I R 1927 P C 515, Ranganya v Sheshappa, 101 Ind C 416. The onus of proving capacity to execute a Will lies on the person who wants to propound the Will. Uttari v Jamselji 26 Bom L R 579=29 C W N 45=1924 (P C) 28. The burden of proving a Will lies on those by whom it was propounded. Bhagbhari v Khadun 50 Ind C 118. The qualified admission of a party regarding the signature of a testator does not shift the burden of proving the non execution of the Will to him. Kesho v Vithal, 8 N L J 123=89 Ind C 465=A I R 1925 Nag 427.

105 When a person is accused of any offence, the burden of proving the existence of circumstances bringing the case within any of the General Exceptions in the Indian Penal Code, or within any special exception or proviso contained in any other part of the same Code, or in any law defining the offence, is upon him, and the Court shall presume the absence of such circumstances.

Illustrations

(a) A accused of murder, alleges that by reason of unsoundness of mind, he did not know the nature of the act.

The burden of proof is on A.

(b) A accused of murder alleges that by grave and sudden provocation he was deprived of the power of self control.

The burden of proof is on A.

(c) Section 325 of the Indian Penal Code provides that whoever except in the case provided for by section 335 voluntarily causes grievous hurt shall be subject to certain punishments.

A is charged with voluntarily causing grievous hurt under section 325.

The burden of proving the circumstances bringing the case under section 335 lies on A.

Scope of the section. The rule that every one is presumed to be innocent till he is proved to be guilty, in sometimes spoken of as if it was peculiar to the administration of criminal law. In the Indian Evidence Act, s 101, illustration (a) it is given as a particular instance of the general principle equally applicable to a suit for ejectment and to a trial of murder. The rule merely means that a person who is accused of a crime is not bound to make any statement or to offer any explanation of circumstances which throw suspicion upon him. He stands before the Court as an innocent man till he is proved to be guilty. It is the business of the Crown to prove him to be guilty, and he need do nothing, but stand by and see what case has been made out against him. As far as the case of the Crown is concerned he cannot be called upon to take part in the proceeding, except in so far, for his own protection, the Court may question him under s 312 of the Criminal Procedure Code. If there is a piece of evidence against the prisoner which might be cleared up one way or the other by a word from him he is not bound to say that word. He is entitled to rely on the defence that the evidence as it stands is inconclusive and that the Crown is bound to make it conclusive without any help from him. Further in making out their case, the prosecution have to get rid of every presumption against it, and to a certain extent, there is a presumption in favour of innocence. When the case for the Crown has closed it is for the prisoner or his adviser, to consider whether any case which he need answer has been made out against him. This will depend on the nature of the charge. The definition of every offence must be satisfied by proof, and if this proof fails as regards any necessary item the whole fails. As among the minimum of proof to be supplied the Crown has offered evidence which may be sufficient for a conviction. The question is whether it is sufficient. It may be that the evidence is unworthy of belief or that, if believed it is consistent with the innocence of the prisoner in either of which cases he ought to be acquitted. It may be, however, that if it is believed it is sufficient for a conviction and then it will be necessary either to contradict it or to explain it away. When the matters have reached this point it is evident that the presumption of innocence has vanished. There is no presumption in favour of the existence of any particular fact which is necessary to make out innocence. If it is necessary for a man's defence to establish hunc alibi, he must prove it. (Ibid. section 103 illustration (6) supra). If a man does an act which is prima facie criminal but which may be explained away, it is his business to offer the explanation, and to supply the evidence which will prove it. (Ibid. section 106 infra). If he relies on the existence of circumstances bringing his case within any of the general exceptions in the Indian Penal Code or within any special exception or proviso contained in any other part of the same Code or in any law defining the offence, it equally lies upon him to prove that the circumstances exist, and till this proof is offered the Court will assume that they do not exist. Maynes Cr L 15 pp 239 240. So where insanity is alleged on behalf of a prisoner, the burden of proving such a degree of insanity as exempts him from punishment lies on the prisoner. A mere doubt is to his injury is not sufficient. The jury must be satisfied by the prisoner on whom the onus lies, that he was insane. Per Rolfe B in Rog v Stiles 3 C & K 185. So under the provisions of this section an answer setting up the right of private defence must be supported by evidence, giving a full account of the transaction from which the charge against the accused person arises. In re Jameson Sirdar 1 C L R 62. Unless a plea that the acts with which an accused person is charged as constituting an offence crime within one of the exceptions named in the Penal Code is distinctly taken by the accused the Court is not competent to infer from the evidence in the case that any such exception exists in favour of the accused. Queen Empress v Chaulauri A W N 1898, 209, Queen Empress v Sulha A W N 1898 210. So this section is an important qualification of the general rule that in criminal trials the onus of proving everything essential to the establishment of the charge against the accused lies on the prosecution. King Emperor v Aya Chis U B R 1906 Exercise, 7.

This section is at variance with what was formerly the law as regard to those exceptions which are called special. Mait Li 81. General exceptions are those applicable to all crimes and are stated in chapter IV of the Penal Code. Special exceptions are exceptions restricted to a particular crime. Formerly it was the duty of the prosecutor to negative the existence of special exceptions. The duty of proving special exceptions might press hard on the accused, when applied strictly to such an offence as defamation the definition of which is really contained in the exceptions. Ibid. The state of law before the passing of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872) was thus stated by Prinsep J in In the matter of the Petition of Shroo Prosad Panday 4 C 124 (130). "The Penal Code contained a chapter of general exceptions to offences (Chapter IV), and for certain offences special exceptions were provided. The Code of Criminal Procedure made especial provisions for these exceptions and the burden of proof to establish any of them. The effect of ss 235 and 236 was that it was for an accused person to establish the existence of any of the general exceptions while s 237 provided that if the charge denied the existence of any of the especial exceptions to an offence, the absence of circumstances constituting such exception was to be assumed. This was the state of the law without Presidency towns until the Evidence Act I of 1872 and the Code of Criminal Procedure of 1872 were passed, when ss 235 and 237 were repealed with the rest of that Code and in their place s 105 of the Evidence Act was enacted which threw the burden of proof on the accused to prove the existence of any general or special exception." So far, then, as the Special Exceptions are concerned, an important alteration has been made in the law. Field Fr 350. But in Imperor v Haid Hussein 12 A 151 at p 456 the Court observed. The Evidence Act in laying down the principle set forth in section 105 has at times been said to have introduced something new and to have put the law regarding criminal cases upon a different basis than the one upon which it stood before it was enacted. We are unable to take this view. Undoubtedly in criminal trials the onus of proving every particular element, if we may use the term, which goes to the making, of an offence lies upon the prosecution, and if the prosecution do not prove all such elements and room is left for doubt the benefit of that doubt must unquestionably be given to the accused. But there are several cases both in English and in Indian case-law which satisfy us that in enacting section 105 the Legislature laid down no new principle but put in a crisp and rigid form that which was before generally acted upon. King v Turner, 5 M & S 206. Rex v Handson, quoted in Russell on Crimes Vol 3 p 107, Reg v James Johnstone (1902) 1 Q B 540. In the case of most general exceptions the circumstances which bring the case within a general exception are circumstances within the special knowledge of the accused person and lie within the rule that when any fact is especially within the knowledge of any person the burden of proving that fact is upon him. In R v Turner 5 M & S 206 Lord Ellenborough said. The question is upon whom the onus probandi lies whether it lies upon the person who affirms a qualification, to prove the affirmative or upon the informer who denies any qualification, to prove the negative. There are, I think, about ten different heads of qualification enumerated in the statute, to which the proof may be applied and according to the argument of to day every person who lays an information of this sort is bound to give satisfactory evidence before the Magistrate to negative the defendant's qualification upon each of those several heads. The argument really comes to this, that there would be a moral impossibility of ever convicting upon such an information. See also Spiers v Parler, 1 T R 140 and Jelf v Ballford 1 B & P 463, Heath J. In R v Stone, 1 East, 639, the Judges were equally divided on the point. So even in England there has been some doubt whether if a statute creating a crime contains exemptions exceptions or provisos the indictment should negative them or leave the defendant to claim the benefit of them under a plea of not guilty. Russell on Crimes p 1934. In R v James (1902) 1 K B 540 an indictment against a married woman for stealing the moneys and chattels of her husband did not aver that she was the prosecutor's wife not that she had taken them when leaving or deserting, or about to leave or desert the husband. It was contended that in as much as a wife cannot at common law be guilty of stealing from her husband the indictment was bad as not containing the words necessary to bring it within 45 & 46 Vict C 75, c 16. After considering all the prior authorities on this point of pleading it was held that conditions in a statute creating an offence, which are a necessary ingredient in the offence are an essential part of the indictment but that it is not necessary to make any allegation as to provisions in favour of the defence nor to negative exemptions or exceptions where they are matter of defence and not part of the statutory definition of the crime; i.e., where the exception etc. is not so far incorporated directly or by inference with the enacting clause that the enacting clause cannot be read without the qualification introduced by the exception. This rule overrides the rule applied in some old cases that the test was whether the exception was part of the enacting clause or tacked on in a proviso or included in another clause of the statute. Russell on Crimes p 1915. In R v Audley, (1907) 1 K B 383=76 L J K B 270 the rule laid down in R v James supra was applied to an indictment for bigamy by a British subject at Gibraltar, which did not aver the accused to be a British subject nor contain any reference to exemptions contained in 24 & 25 Vict C 100 s 57 nor negative any of them. And it was held that the rule above stated applies equally to negative and positive averments. R v Jameson (1896) 2 Q B 425 431, Russell on Crimes p 1915. When evidence has been given by the defence to support the defence of an exception the burden of proof is discharged if the evidence is believed and the jury have their ordinary duty of deciding a question of fact on the evidence before them. Mahomed v Emperor, 70 C 318=1923 Cal 717.

S 105

General exceptions Under this section the burden of proving the existence of circumstances bringing the case of an accused person within any of the general exceptions in the Penal Code is on the accused, and the Court shall presume the absence of such circumstances. But this does not mean that the accused must lead evidence. If it is apparent from the evidence on the record, whether produced by the prosecution or by defence that a general exception would apply then the presumption is removed and it is open to the Court to consider whether the evidence proves to the satisfaction of the Court that the accused comes within the exception. Anand v Emperor, 71 Ind Cas 689=45 A 329. In a defence of insanity the onus lies on the person alleging it, i.e., the person charged. King Emperor v Sheodin A W N 1901, 132. It is for the party setting up the right of private defence, to prove that he was within the exceptions stated in the Code. Veeranandan v Emperor 1912 M W N 404=11 M L J 251=15 Ind Cas 310, see also Emperor v Gullu A W N 1904, 113=1 Cr L J 427. Although this section places on the accused the burden of proving in a criminal trial, that they have acted within their legal rights in exercise of the right of private defence of property, still this burden can be discharged by the evidence of witnesses for the prosecution as well as for the evidence for the defence, on such plea being set up. In the matter of Kalicharan Mukherjee, 11 C L R 232. Where an accused person has raised pleas inconsistent with the defence which would bring his case within one of the general exceptions in the Indian Penal Code, he cannot in appeal, set up a case, upon the evidence taken at his trial that his case came within such general exceptions, the circumstances which would bring the case of an accused person within any of the general exceptions in the Indian Penal Code can and may be proved from the evidence given for the prosecution or to be found elsewhere in the record. King Emperor v Wajul Hasan 7 A L J 438=32 A 451=11 Cr L J 374=6 Ind Cas 589. So the burden of proving the existence of circumstances bringing the case of the accused within certain exception is thrown upon the accused. Aung Myat v Queen Empress, L B R (1893 1900), 207. see also Emperor v Ali Raza 26 Cr L J 310. When one man takes away the life of another, he should prove circumstances, if any justifying his doing so. If the act is done in exercise of the right of private defence it lies upon him to show that he did not exceed that right. Asiruddin v King Emperor, 8 C W N 714=1 Cr L J 708, Yusuf Hussain v Emperor, 40 A 284=16 A L J 169=44 Ind Cas 675=19 Cr L J 371. This section says nothing about pleas but places the burden of proof in certain circumstances on the accused. But if the prosecution has already performed the task for him by letting in evidence circumstances from which such a plea necessarily follows, it is the duty of the Court to give him the benefit of it. Mangal Ganda v Emperor 254 Cr L J 1077=81 Ind Cas 901=1925 Nag 37.

Special exceptions Under the Criminal Procedure Code, 1861 it was necessary to in charge upon a section of the Penal Code containing special exemptions, to aver the absence of any special exception. Juie Shibo Persad 1 L R 4 Cal 12. This necessity no longer exists in regard to either special or general exceptions. Cun Et 296. So now the burden of proving the existence of circumstances bringing a case within any special exception or proviso contained in any part of Penal Code is upon the person accused and the Court shall presume the absence of such circumstances. Emperor v Chand Singh 8 Ind Cas 259=11 Cr L 612. The onus to show that any offence falls within a general exception of the Gambling Act is upon the accused and it is for him to show, in order to bring the case under s 10 of the Gambling Act that the game played is a game of mere skill. Ram Newaz v Emperor, 15 Cr L J 276=23 Ind Cas 484. The burden of proving the exception of good faith is on the accused. A mistake of law does not make an exception under s 79 of the Indian Penal Code even when due care and attention under s 52 is proved. As a rule, when the act done comes within the words of the Penal Code proof of a general or special exception is required to take it out of the same. Queen Empress v Bai Mahalar Rat Un Cr C 820. The English rule is thus stated by Lord Altherstone in Rex v James (1902) 1 K B 540 (547) "It is not necessary for the prosecution to negative a proviso, even though the proviso be contained in the same

S 106. section of the Act of Parliament creating the offence unless the proviso is in the nature of an exception which is incorporated directly or by reference with the enacting clause so that the enacting clause cannot be read without the qualification introduced in the exception. But this section must be construed without reference to any technical rule of English Law. This section which applies generally to all criminal trials is analogous to the last part of section 11 of Stat 11 & 12 Vict C 41 which applies to summary proceedings before Magistrate and which runs as follows: 'If the information or complaint in any such case shall negative any exception, exception, proviso or condition in the statute on which the same shall be founded it shall not be necessary for the prosecutor or complainant in that behalf to prove such negative but the defendant may prove the affirmative thereof in his defence, if he would have advantage of the same.' Emperor v A J Coole 23 Ind Cns 197=15 Cr L J 213=7 Bur L T 187=7 L B R 319. The words not authorized in section 291 A, Indian Penal Code means no more and no less than 'not authorized or not having been authorized or without authority' and are in the nature of an exception or proviso and under section 105 of the Evidence Act the burden of proof lies on the accused to show that the lottery was authorized by Government. But In prosecutions under the old game laws of England, which made certain nets offences unless the accused had certain qualifications it was not necessary for the prosecution to prove the absence of such qualification. So too, in action for a penalty under 57 Geo III C 191, section 20 for practising as an apothecary without having obtained a certificate of qualification it was held that the onus lay on the defendant to show that he had obtained a certificate and that it was not necessary for the plaintiff to prove the negative. Apothecaries' Company v Harborton 2 B & Ald 40.

Where a person is charged with having in his possession any quantity of fermented liquor larger than that specified in s 3 (1) (n) of the Excise Act and pleads that he purchased it for his private use and not for sale, the burden of proving such special exception lies on him under s 105 or s 106 Evidence Act. King Emperor v Maung Pua 5 L B R 52 (I B)=2 Ind Cns 643. Although the general rule in all the criminal proceedings is that the onus of proving every thing essential to the establishment of a charge against an accused lies on the prosecution, yet this section constitutes a departure from that rule and makes it obligatory upon the Courts to presume the absence of such circumstances as may bring the accused within some general or special legal exemption, unless or until their existence is shown by the accused or is admitted by the prosecution itself. So in a defamation case when once the complainant has proved that the accused has made a prima facie defamatory imputation it rests with the accused to show that he is justified in doing so. Abdur Razal v Gaur Nath 4 P W R 1910 Cr =5 Ind Cns 714=11 Cr L J 205. Gouramma v Veranna, 6 Mys I J 496. Under this section the Court has to regard the absence of grave and sudden provocation as proved until the contrary is proved by the accused on whom the onus lies. Emperor v Upendra 19 C W N 653=21 C L J 377=16 Cr L J 561=30 Ind Cns 113 (F B).

Burden of proving fact especially within knowledge

106 When any fact is especially within the knowledge of any person, the burden of proving that fact is upon him

Illustrations

(a) When a person does an act with some intention other than that which the character and circumstances of the act suggest, the burden of proving that intention is upon him.

(b) A is charged with travelling on a railway without a ticket. The burden of proving that he had a ticket is on him.

Principle. The principle underlying this section is based upon the capacity of parties to give evidence. This section has its origin in the well known maxim Lex neminem cogit ostendere quod in se ipso presumitur. The law will not force a man to show a thing which by intendment of law lies within his knowledge. Plowd 46, Best Et § 274. From the very nature of the question in dispute all or nearly all the evidence that could be adduced respecting it must be in possession of or be easily attainable by, one of the contending parties who accordingly could at once put an end to litigation by producing that evidence while the requiring his adversary to establish his case, because the affirmative lay on him, or because there was a presumption of law against him, would, if not amounting to injustice, at least be production of expense and delay. In order to prevent this, it has been established as a general rule of evidence that the burden of proof lies on the person who wishes to support his case by a particular fact which lies more peculiarly within his own knowledge or of which he is supposed to be cognisant. Ph. & Im. J. 529, R. v. Burdett 1 B. & A. 91. Dutton v. Evans 6 I. R. 57, Calder v. Ruthford, 3 B. & B. 302, Sunderland Marine Insurance Company v. Kearney 16 Q. B. 925, Best E. § 271.

Not a general rule. The characteristic then of the burden of proof (in the sense of a risk of non-persuasion) in legal controversies is that the law divides the process into stages and apportionments definitely to each party the specific facts which will in turn fall to him as the prerequisites of obtaining action in his favour by the tribunal. It is thus apportionment which forms the important element of controversy for legal purposes. Each party wishes to know of what facts he has the risk of non-persuasion? Is there any single principle or rule which will solve all cases and afford a general test for ascertaining the incidence of this risk? By no means. It is often said that the burden is upon the party having the affirmative allegation. But this is not an invariable test, nor even a significant circumstance, the burden is often on one who has a negative assertion to prove a common instance is that of a promise alleging non-performance of a contract. It is sometimes said that it is upon the party to whose case the fact is essential. This is correct enough, but it merely advances the enquiry which determines to what party's case a fact is essential. The truth is that there is not and cannot be any one general solvent for all cases. It is merely a question of policy and fairness based on experience of different situations. The controversy whether a plaintiff in tort should be required to prove his own carelessness or the defendant should be required to prove the plaintiff's carelessness has depended in part on experience as to a plaintiff being commonly careful or careless in part on the fairness of putting the burden on one or the other, and this in part on the consideration which of the parties has the means of proof more available. This last consideration has often been advanced as a special test for solving a limited class of cases, i.e. the burden of proving a fact is said to be put on the one who presumably has peculiar knowledge enabling him to prove its falsity if it is false. But this consideration furnishes no working rule, if it did, then the plaintiff in an action for defamation charging him to be living in adultery should be required to prove that he is lawfully married. This consideration, after all, merely takes its place among other considerations of fairness and experience as one to be kept in mind in apportioning the burden of proof in a specific case. There is then, no one principle, or set of harmonious principles, which afford a sure test for the solution of a given case. The logic of the situation does not demand such a test. It would be useless to attempt to discover or to invent one, and the state of the law does not justify us in saying that it has accepted any. There are merely specific rules for specific cases, resting for its ultimate reasons upon broad and undefined reasons of experience and fairness. Greenl. E. § 11(w).

Scope of the section. This is an exception to the general rule. Where the subject matter of a party's allegation (whether affirmative or negative) is peculiarly within the knowledge of his opponent it lies upon the latter to rebut such allegation. Phup. E. 31. In K. v. Thane 5 M. & S. 206 211, Bayley J. said 'I have always understood it to be a general rule that if a negative averment be made by one party which is peculiarly within the knowledge of the other the party within whose knowledge it lies, and who asserts the affirmative is to prove it, and not he who asserts the negative'. This rule is applicable whether it be affirmative or negative and in civil or criminal cases. Dutton v. Evans, 6 I. R. 60. It is only reasonable that where one party can easily produce what holds him harmless, and the other party have great difficulty in doing so the onus probandi should be thrown upon the former. In illustration (a) it might be impossible for the other side to prove his opponents' intentions. In illustration (b) we see how easily the accused can exonerate himself. Not Ex 291. When a negative is averred in pleading, or a plaintiff's case depends upon the establishment of a negative, and the means of proving the fact are equally within the control of each party, then the burden of proof is upon the party averring the negative, but when the opposite party must, from the nature of the case, himself be in possession of full and plenary proof to disprove the negative averment, and the other party is not in possession of such proof then it is manifestly just and reasonable that the party which is in possession of the proof should be required to adduce it, or upon his failure to do so it must be presumed it does not exist, which of itself establishes a negative. Burr Jones § 181. For instance where a carrier has undertaken to carry goods safely, fire and robbery excepted, or where a horse has been warranted sound except as to a kick on its leg, or in the ordinary case of marine policies of insurance, when the underwriters provide for their own immunity in certain contingencies. It has been said that when the means of proof are peculiarly within the knowledge of the defendant or prisoner, a general sense of convenience shifts the burden of proof, as for instance where a hawk or pedlar stands charged with trading, without a license it is easy for him to produce his license, and so end the discussion, whereas it might throw the most serious impediment in the way of the prosecutor if he were bound to prove that the hawk was not licensed. Not Ex 291. But where the fact lies solely within the knowledge of one party, there is an important consideration in determining the amount of evidence necessary to be produced by the other party. The burden of proof as to any particular fact lies on that person who wishes the Court to believe in its existence unless it is provided by any law that the burden of proving that fact shall lie on any particular person, but the burden may in the course of a case be shifted from one side to the other and in considering the amount of evidence necessary to shift the burden of proof the Court has regard to the opportunities of knowledge with respect to the fact to be proved which may be possessed by the parties respectively. Steph Ex Art 96. This is often illustrated in prosecutions for selling liquor or doing other acts without the license required by law. By a few authorities the rule is prescribed that in such cases the prosecution must offer some slight proof of the fact that no license has been granted for example by producing the book in which the licenses are recorded, and if the book fails to show that a license has been granted the burden is shifted upon the defendant to prove the fact claimed by him, but the greater number of authorities hold that where a license would be a complete defence the burden is upon the defendant to prove the fact so clearly within his own knowledge. Burr Jones § 181. In Commonwealth v. Pheasant 24 Pe 374 (U S) the Chief Justice said. The last exception necessary to be considered is that the Court ruled that the prosecutor need give no evidence in support of the negative averment, that the defendant was not duly licensed thereby throwing on him the burden of proving that he was licensed, if he intends to rely on that fact by way of defence. The Court entertain no doubt, that it is necessary to aver in the indictment, as a substantive part of the charge that the defendant at the time of selling was not duly licensed. How far and whether under various circumstances, it is necessary to prove such negative averment, is a question of great difficulty upon which there are conflicting authorities. Cases may be suggested of great difficulty on either side of the general question. Suppose under the English game laws an unqualified person prosecuted for shooting game without the license of the lord of the manor and after the alleged offence and before the trial the lord dies and no proof of license, which may have been by parcel can be given? Shall he be convicted for want of such affirmative proof, or shall the prosecution fail for want of proof to negative it? Again suppose under the law of this commonwealth it was made penal for any person to sell goods as a hawk or pedlar without a license from the select men of some town in the commonwealth. Suppose one prosecuted for the penalty and the indictment, as here contains the negative averment, that he was not duly licensed. To support this negative averment, the select men of more than three hundred towns must be called. It may be said, that the difficulty of obtaining proof is not to supersede the necessity of it, and enable a party having the burden to succeed without proof. This is true, but when the proceedings are upon statute an extreme difficulty of obtaining proof on one side, amounting nearly to impracticability, and great facility of furnishing it on the other side, if it exists leads to a strong inference, that such course was not intended by the legislature to be required. It would no doubt be competent for the legislature so to frame a statute provision, as to hold a party liable to the penalty who should not produce a license. Besides the common law rules of evidence are founded upon good sense and experience and adapted to practical use, and ought to be applied as to accomplish the purposes for which they were framed. But the Court have not thought it necessary to decide the general question, cases may be effected by special circumstances giving rise to distinctions applicable to them to be considered as they arise. In the present case, the Court are of opinion that the prosecutor was bound to produce prima facie evidence, that the defendant was not licensed, and that no evidence of that averment having been given, the verdict ought to be set aside. The general rule is, that all averments necessary to constitute the substantive offence must be proved. If there is any exception, it is from necessity or that great difficulty, amounting practically to such necessity or, in other words where one party could not show the negative and where the other could with perfect ease show the affirmative. Thus where plaintiff relies on a document on the face of which there is a material or suspicious alteration, it lies on him to explain it as a general rule, though circumstances may arise which will exempt him, or even shift the burthen of proof on to the other side, as for instance if the facts concerning the alterations are more peculiarly within his knowledge. North Et pp 292 293. In Ellin v Janson, Alderson B on the dictum of Bayley J in R v Turner, 5 M & S 206, 211 (supra) being quoted said "I doubt, is a general rule, whether those expressions are not too strong. They are right as to the weight of the evidence, but there should be some evidence to start it in order to cast the onus on the other side." And in R v Burdett 4 B & A 95 140 Holroyd J, states in the most explicit terms that the rule in question "is not allowed to supply the want of necessary proof, whether direct or presumptive against a defendant, of the crime with which he is charged, but when such proof has been given, it is a rule to be applied in considering the weight of the evidence against him whether direct or presumptive when it is unopposed, un rebutted or not weakened, by contrary evidence which it would be in the defendant's power to produce, if the fact directly or presumptively proved were not true." Best Ev § 275.

S 106

In R v Hanson, (Russ on Crimes p 1956) there had been a conviction by two Justices for selling ale without an excise license. The information negatived the defendant's having a license, but there was no evidence to support this negative averment, the only evidence to support the conviction being that the defendant had in fact sold ale. The question was whether the informer was bound to give evidence to negative the existence of a license. In support of the conviction it was contended, that such evidence was unnecessary, and that it lay upon the defendant to prove that he had a license, for it is a rule, both of the civil and the common law, that a man is not bound to prove a negative allegation. R v Turner, supra was cited as an express authority on the point. Abbott C J in delivering the judgment said "I am of opinion that the conviction is right. It seems to me that this case is not distinguishable from R v Turner. It is a general rule that the proof of the affirmative lies upon the party who is to sustain it. The prosecutor in general is not called upon to prove negatively all that is stated in the information as matter of disqualification. In R v Turner all the learned Judges concur in that principle. I concur in all the observations upon which the judgment of the Court in that case was founded and I think every one of them is applicable in principle to this. The general principle and the justice of the case are here against the defendant. It is urged, that if we decide against the defendant we shall open the door to a great deal of inconvenience, that by no means follows, this man might have produced his license without any possible inconvenience, which would at once have relieved him from all liabilities to penalties. Probably the whole enquiry before the Magistrate was as to the fact of selling the ale, and that nothing was said about the license but however I think, by the general rule the informer was not bound to sustain in evidence the negative averment that the defendant had not a license. I do not mean to say that there may not be cases which may be fit to be considered as exceptions to that general rule, there is no general rule to which there may not be exceptions, all I mean to say is, that this is not one of the exceptions. The party thus called upon to answer for an offence against excise laws, sustains not the slightest inconvenience from the general rule, for he can immediately produce his license whereas if the case is taken the other way, the informer is put to considerable inconvenience. Discussions may arise before the Magistrates whether the evidence produced is proper to sustain the negative, whether a book should be produced, or an examined copy, and many other questions of that sort whereas none can arise when the defendant himself produces his license. This the afore, not being one of the excepted cases, but a case falling directly within the general rule I am of opinion that judgment must be given for the crown. Apothecaries Company v Bentley Ry & M 159 = 1 C & P 538 was decided upon the same principle. That was an action for a penalty under the Apothecaries Act, 1815 (55 Geo III C 194) for practising as an apothecary without having obtained the certificate required by the Act. All the counts in the declaration contained the allegation that the defendant did act and practise as an apothecary etc "without having obtained such certificate as by the said act is directed. No evidence was offered by the plaintiffs to shew that the defendant had not obtained his certificate. The plaintiffs having closed their case, counsel for the defendant submitted that there must be a non suit. Abbott C J said I am of opinion that the affirmative must be proved by the defendant. I think that it being a negative the plaintiffs are not bound to prove it but that it rests with the defendant to establish his having a certificate. Of R v Harris 10 Cox 541. This section cannot be utilised to help persons who are representatives of other parties and who step into their shoes. Raghavendra Rao v Venkataswami 1929 M W N 752 = 30 L W 966 = A I R 1930 Mad 251.

S 106

Fact especially within the knowledge of any person. Where a suit was brought by the legal representative of a deceased person who was killed at an accident while travelling in the train of the defendant company the onus of proving that there was no negligence on the part of the Railway Company lies on such company. The Madras Railway Co v Rattal Kalidas 4 M L J 251. Great Western Railway Company of Canada v Laird 1 Moore's Privy Council Cas New Series 101. In a suit against a Zaminder to reverse the sale of a putnee tenure held under Regulation VIII of 1819 on the ground of non-service of notice held that the defendant was bound on the principle laid down in section 106 Evidence Act to prove service. Doorga Churn v Syed Najmooddeen 21 W R 397. In a suit by a Lakherajdar for the possession of land of which he has been dispossessed by the present putneedar and which is in a village whereof the plaintiff had been a former putneedar the onus is on the plaintiff to prove that the land was lakheraj during the period that he held the village in putnee. Anbo Krishna v Promotha 5 W R 118. When a ryot is holding lands of considerable extent under a zamindar it is a matter peculiarly within his own knowledge of what that holding consists and if he alleges that one or two plots occupied by him are held under a different title it is for him to show it. Ram Coomarr Ray v Brijoy Gobind 7 W R 535. In a suit for pre-emption where the pre-emptor claims the property for a price less than that mentioned in the sale deed it prima facie lies upon him to prove that the property was sold for a smaller price. But very slight evidence on his part is sufficient to shift the burden of proof upon the defendant (vendor and vendee) who must know the real facts and who must be in a better position to give evidence relating to actual price. Bhagwan Singh v Mithar Singh 5 A 181. Sanakkul Fair Lochman Fair 6 A 344. Sheoporga v Phomray 9 A 22 = 1 W N 1887, 39. Abdul Hye v Anolal 29 A 618. Yitham v Jahan 16 A I J 531. But the date of the child's birth or death is not a fact peculiarly within the knowledge of its father. It is a fact which is within the knowledge of any person who was present at the birth or death Dolganyan Singh v. Parsiddh Nairam, 11 Ind Crs 202. Where the decree holder of one A mortgaged property standing in the name of A's wife, the onus lies on A's wife that the purchase money was supplied by her. Sanguaraya v. Balambal 17 M L J 339. Where the defendant company intentionally caused or permitted the plaintiff to believe that cash payable in respect of the goods to which the delivery order related had in fact been paid and the plaintiff acted on such belief, held that the defendants cannot be allowed to deny that such cash was paid and that they cannot claim to be entitled to the vendor's lien as against the plaintiffs. Where the defendant company adduced no evidence to prove that the goods to which the delivery order related were not ascertained, held that they ought to have proved the non-ascertainment of goods because it was a fact which was especially within their knowledge. Anglo India Jute Mills v. Omademull 38 C 127. Where a party propounds a document, the presumption upon this section is against him. Fahnam v. Blackwell, 6 S L R 228. In a suit by a purchaser of a tenure or holding at a rent sale to annul an alleged incumbrance, the onus is in the first place on the plaintiff to show that the interest sought to be annulled is an incumbrance, but when once that is established the onus shifts on to the incumbrancer to prove that his incumbrance is saved through being a protected interest. The existence of such a 'protected interest' as a right of occupancy is a matter specially within the knowledge of the person claiming it and the onus under s 106 Evidence Act, is on him. Harimoni v. Moti Sheeth, 16 C W N 779=15 Ind Crs 30, see also Jogesh v. Rohini 21 C L J 65, Somer v. Mahabhorat 16 C W N 777.

Where in a suit brought to question the legality of a tax imposed upon the plaintiff under section 85, the defendant Municipality averred that the tax had been imposed upon the circumstances and property of the plaintiff within the Municipality the burden of proving these facts lies on the defendant Municipality under this section. Debnarian Dutta v. The Chairman of the Baripada Municipality, 17 C W N 1230=20 Ind Cas 264. In order to apply this section the knowledge attributed to a particular person must be in the nature of something peculiar. There is no difference between corporations and individuals so far as the rule of burden of proof goes. Lachminarain v. Chavman Ranchi Municipality 1 Pat L J 168. Where a suit upon a mortgage is contested by a stranger who denies that the bond was executed and also asserted that the mortgage was devoid of consideration, the onus is on the plaintiff to prove his case. Kumorappan v. Narayan 35 Ind Cas 457. In the case of a contract if a plea of infancy is set up, it is for the party who sets it up to prove it. Jodi Bibi v. Fayaz Khan, 26 Ind Crs 407. In a suit against an ordinary bailee the limits of whose responsibility are defined in ss 151 and 152 of the Contract Act for not taking care of the goods and saving them from loss, e.g. loss of fire the bailee should, in accordance with the provisions of section 106 of the Contract Act, call all the material witnesses who were on the spot at the time of the loss but that section of the Evidence Act does not discharge the plaintiff from proving want of due diligence or (expressing it otherwise) negligence on the part of the bailee or his servants. Duarla Nath v. The River Steam Navigation Co Ltd 20 Bom L R 735=27 C L J 615=46 Ind Crs 319 (P C)=1913 M W N 435.

In a case where the question is whether a particular act was or was not within the scope of an agent's employment the burden of proving the limit of the agent's authority is on the principal in as much as the character of the authority is a matter specially within the knowledge of the latter. David W. Bruce v. My Kyaw Yin, 45 Ind Cas 822. see also Sudaman v. Behari, 15 C W N 953, Srinivasa v. Iodhari 45 Ind Crs 291. Motihari Concern Ltd v. Lachmi 35 Ind Crs 81. Madan v. Prayanath 64 Ind Crs 362. Ahoy v. Fradattulla 64 Ind Cas 883. but see Jaul v. Thuker 2 Pat L J 231, Manmatha v. Rajeswar, 55 Cal 355=32 C W N 184, Ishurmal v. Keramatullah 45 Ind Cas 196.

An accused person is always entitled to hold his tongue, but where the only alternative theory to his guilt is a remote possibility which, if correct he is in a position to explain, the absence of any explanation must be considered in determining whether possibility should be disregarded or taken into account. Smith

S 106

v Emperor 13 Ind Cas 605=19 Cr L J 189 The fact that a Muhammadan girl below the age of 15 years has attained puberty is a fact within her special knowledge and the burden of proving that lies on her Helalunnessa v Khondalpur, 13 Ind Cas 91 The onus of proving an offence under s 373 I P Code lies on the prosecution but proof of intention or knowledge such as is mentioned in the section must be almost entirely a matter of inference from circumstances Where all the circumstances go to show that the intention of the accused was to employ a girl as a prostitute as soon as she was physically ready for the purpose the burden of proving that she intended to wait until the age of majority had been reached is on the accused Khebaram v Emperor 35 C L J 451=(1922) C L J 539 Where property is entrusted to a servant and such servant fails to return the property or to account for it or gives an account which is shown to be false and incredible it is ordinarily a reasonable inference that he has criminally misappropriated the property so entrusted to him and dishonestly converted it to his own use In such cases the Courts are entitled to draw hostile inferences and presumptions from the action and statement of the servant The provisions of s 106 114 of the Indian Evidence Act can be relied on in support of the above propositions Sonameah v King Emperor 2 Rang 476=1925 Rang 17 In proceedings for appraisement of crops when the landlord files accounts in order to claim a larger amount for himself the onus is on him to show what the actual yield is If he is not able to show what it is he can get only such amount as is admitted by the tenant But in cases where the landlord has never made an estimate or is prevented by the tenants from doing it they cannot thereby deprive the former of his rights This onus will then lie on the tenants as persons with special means of knowledge Bhupeswari v Subhdeo 85 Ind Cas 566=6 Pat L J 419=A I R 1925 Pat 505 Where a party fails to give the fullest information about the relationship existing between him and another the Court is justified in drawing presumptions under s 106 of the Evidence Act unfavourable to that party Mang Lem v Ma Tha Aung 84 Ind Cas 1009=A I R 1925 Rang 143 Where it is proved that thefts occurred at quite different dates the presumption is that the stolen property passed from the hands of the thief to the receiver at different dates also The burden is then shifted from the Crown to the accused to prove that he received it at one time only in a case where the accused is charged separately of offences of receiving stolen property Ghulam v Emperor 96 Ind Cas 120=27 Cr L J 872 The burden of proving the exact date of a mortgage transaction entered into orally being not peculiarly within his knowledge does not lie on the mortgagee Mila Lal v Sonu Ram 115 Ind Cas 451=A I R 1929 All 209 Where a fire is caused by a spark from an engine belonging to a Railway Co., the Railway Co will be liable in damages if it had failed to take all reasonable precaution to avoid diffusion of such sparks as are likely to destroy the adjoining property The onus is on the Railway Co to prove that the engine is fitted with spark protectors Secretary of State v Davila Pineda 19 A 559=25 A I J 336=100 Ind Cas 640=A I R 1927 All 319

Altered instrument Mr Whitley Stokes in his Anglo Indian Code says 'The Act should have here put down some rule as to the duty of the party offering in evidence an instrument which on its production appears to have been altered' Stokes Anglo Indian Code Vol II p 911 When the instrument, on its production appears to have been altered, it is a general rule that the party offering it in evidence must explain its appearance, if he be called upon to do so by the issue raised (Parry v Nicholson 13 M & W 779 per Parke B) and if the instrument be not admitted by his opponent under notice (Freeman v Stegall, 14 Q B D 202), because, as every alteration on the face of a written instrument renders it suspicious it is only reasonable that the party claiming under it should remove the suspicion Heuman v Dalmon 5 Bing 183 Clifford v Paillet 2 M & G 910 Lord Ialmouth v Roberts 9 M & W 171 Lord & Bright Ry Co v Fairclough 2 M & G 70, Lay § 1519, Pitambar v Motchand 1 M I A 420 (129) Khoob v Woodnarani, 9 M I A 1 Lamaswami v Bharam 3 M H C R 247 Kanhaya v Sitaram 51 Ind Cas 847 This rule is not applicable in cases of documents which are not the foundation of a plaintiff's claim Amaram v Uniedram 25 B 616

107 When the question is whether a man is alive or dead,

Burden of proving death of person known to have been alive within thirty years and it is shown that he was alive within thirty years, the burden of proving that he is dead is on the person who affirms it

Principle Where there is proof of the existence of a state of things and no evidence of its cessation the presumption is that such state of things continues for a reasonable length of time. Hence, if the question is as to the life or death of a person who has been once shown to be living the burden of proving him dead lies at first on the party who asserts the fact. Wilson v Hodges 2 East 312, Kelwick J however denied this in In re Aldersey (1905) 2 Ch 186, Pouell Ev 411

Scope of the section In Wilson v Hodges 2 East 312 Lord Ellenborough C J referred to the case of Thogmonston v Walton 2 Roll Rep 461 where it was decided that where the issue is upon the life or death of a person once shown to be living the proof of the fact lies on the party who asserts the death, for that the presumption is that the party continues alive until the contrary be shown. This presumption of continuance is clearly one of the most practical importance. It is frequently impossible to prove, for instance, the existence of a certain thing in a certain state or condition at the particular moment in question. It is sufficient with the aid of this presumption to prove such existence and state at such an earlier time that according to its nature it may fairly be presumed to have lasted to the moment in question. Cockle Cas Ev 29. A person proved to have been alive at a former time is presumed to be alive during the probable period of life's duration, until his death is proved on a presumption of death arises. Lawson's Presumptive Evidence Rule 39. The Mahomedan law presumed the death of a missing person ninety years after his birth though he had been seen last within 5 years. But the Hindu law presumed the death of a person of whom nothing has been heard for 12 years or at Benares 15 years. Cum Ev 299. The law as it stood before the passing of the Indian Evidence Act is thus summarised by Mr Goodere "Presumptions of this class are referred to as existing in favour of stability or immutability. Upon the principle a person once shown to be alive is in the absence of proof to the contrary, presumed living or at all events for a period corresponding with the duration of human life, or until shown not to have been heard of for seven years, while at the expiration of that period the presumption would be reversed and death would be presumed. What is the period which the law could recognize as that of the duration of life has never been arbitrarily fixed, and the application of the presumption might be affected by the particular circumstances in the individual case such as state of health and so forth. Three score years and ten have certainly been prescribed by high authority, as an average limit of human life. Still even the attainment of a hundred is of occasional and not over rare occurrence while instances have been stated extending life to almost half a century further. All ordinary experience, however certainly pointing to a period so rarely exceeding an age of hundred, it would seem that this might be fairly taken as a basis for what after all would be only a presumption, though it has not been ever so fixed by judicial decision. Indeed the period appears never to have been actually lived at all. A presumption of death at the expiration of a hundred years is recognized however in both the civil and Scotch Law and in a case so long ago is the time of Lord Hale there is a dictum of his, that if seignior be made to the use of one for ninety nine years if he shall so long live and after the death to the use of another this shall not be contingent, for it would be presumed that his life would not exceed ninety nine years. Hall v Lomer, Poll 67." Goodere Ev 628. "The life of a person once shown to exist says Justice Balburn in an American Case "is intended to continue till the contrary is proved or is to be presumed from the nature of the case. The witness if alive is eighty years old, an age that we may admit is an advanced one but is yet one to which life is occasionally—not, infrequently prolonged. The Court cannot therefore presume, as of course that Hall has not reached it Lord Hale has indeed said that it shall be presumed that life will not exceed ninety nine years (Heall v Lomer Poller 55), and it may be inferred that a man, if of any age already, will not live eighty years besides (Napper v Sanders Hutton 118) show me that Hall has been the subject of some quick consuming disease, or of any specific malady at all, and you will change the case'. Here the rule is arbitrarily fixed to thirty years. If a man is shown to have been alive within thirty years the burden of proving him to be dead lies on the person affirming it Cum Est 55. So this section provides in effect, that if it appears that a person, whose present existence is in question was alive within thirty years, and nothing whatever appears to suggest the probability of his being dead, the Court is bound to regard the fact of his being still alive as proved. But as soon as anything appears, which suggests the probability of his being dead the presumption disappears and the question has to be determined on the balance of proof Malik Est p 53. Ss 107 and 108 of the Evidence Act should be read together because the latter is only a proviso of the rule contained in the former, and both constitute one rule when so read together Dhanup v Gobind 3 A 614

S 108

108 *{Provided that when} the question is whether a man

Burden of proving that person is alive who has not been heard of for seven years

is alive or dead, and it is proved that he has not been heard of for seven years by those who would naturally have heard of him if he had been alive, the burden of proving that he is alive is *(shifted to) the person who affirms it

Principle Where certain results would have followed if an act or an event had occurred (or not occurred) the absence of those results is some indication that the act or event has not occurred (or occurred). A common class of evidence of this sort is that of lack of news to show probable death of a person or the probable loss of a ship, for as it is usual for living persons to be heard from directly or indirectly by persons having an interest in knowing and for ships' officers to leave word of their journey at the ports they touch or with the other ships they pass the lack of any such news indicates their non existence Higmore Est § 148. This is a genuine presumption of universal acceptance to aid proof of death. It is generally said to arise from the person's continuous absence from home for seven years unheard of by the persons who would naturally have received news from the absente Higmore Est § 272. In introducing the Bill the Honble Mr Fitz James Stephen said: There are several cases in which Courts would be at a loss to the course which they ought to take under certain circumstances without a distinct rule of guidance. After what length of absence unaccounted for for instance may it be presumed that a man is dead? The rule is that seven years is sufficient for the purpose. Obviously six or eight would be equally well but it is also obvious that to have a distinct rule is a great convenience. Speech of the Honble Mr Fitz James Stephen on the 12th March 1872

Origin and growth of the rule "It is a rule of presumption that in the absence of evidence to the contrary a person shall be taken to be dead when he has been absent seven years and not heard from. That is a modern rule. It is not at all modern to infer death from a long absence: the recent thing is the fixing of this time of seven years, and putting it into a rule. The faint beginning of it as a common law rule of general application in all questions of life and death is found so far as recorded English cases show in Doe d George v Jeffer 6 East 89 in January 1805. Long before this in 1601 the 'Bigamy Act of James I (Stat 1 Jac 1 c 11) had exempted from the scope of its provisions and so from the guilt and punishment of a felon (1) those who had married a second time when the first spouse had been beyond the sea for seven years and (2) those whose spouse had been absent for seven year-, although not beyond the years,—“the one of them not knowing the other to be living within that time” This statute, it may be noticed, did not absolutely treat the absent party as dead, for it did not validate the second marriage in either case. It simply exempted a party from the statutory penalty. Again, in 1667 the statute of 19 Car II, C 6 (for address of inconveniences by want of proof of the decrees of persons beyond the seas or absenting themselves upon whose heirs estates do depend, provided in the case of estates and leases depending upon the life of a person who should go beyond the seas, or otherwise absent him self within the Kingdom for seven years that where the lessor or reversioner should bring an action to recover the estate the person thus absenting him self should be accounted as naturally dead if there should be no sufficient and evident proof of the life and that the Judge should direct the jury to give their verdict as if the person were dead’ But if the absent party should not really have died, provision was made for a subsequent recovery by him. The effect of this statute, then, was to end, in a specific class of cases all enquiry into evidence by a certain assumption, or, as it is otherwise called presumption. The rule fixes, for the purpose of a particular inquiry the effect of specified facts, absence for seven years, unheard of as to be accounted as regards this particular inquiry, the same thing as death, it is its legal equivalent.

* These words in s 108 were substituted for the original words "when and - on - respectively, by the Indian Evidence Act Amendment Act (18 of 1872) s 9

Now, very likely, in practice similar cases may have been brought within ‘the equity’ of the statute as Chief Justice Holt, in 1632 is reported to have ‘held that a remainder man was within the equity of that law but we hear of no suggestion of a general seven year rule such as we have now before 1805. In the case Doe v George v Jesson 6 East, 80, there was a rule for a new trial in an action of ejectment, which turned on the question whether the plaintiff’s lessor had entered within the time allowed by the statute of limitations, which again turned on the time of the death of the lessor’s brother who had gone to sea and had not been heard of for many years. The Court of Kings Bench sustained a ruling that the jury must find the time of death as well as they could—that at any time beyond the first seven years they might fairly presume him dead, but the not hearing of him within that period was hardly sufficient to afford that presumption. Observe the way in which Lord Ellenborough puts the matter. As to the period when the brother might be supposed to have died according to the Statute 19 Car II C 6 with respect to leases dependent upon lives, and also according to the Statute of Bigamy (1 Jac I C 2), the presumption of the duration of life, with respect to persons of whom no account can be given, ends at the expiration of seven years from the time when they were last known to be living. Therefore in the absence of all other evidence to show that he was living at a later period there was fair ground for the jury to presume that he was dead at the end of seven years from the time when he went to sea on his second voyage, which seems to be the last account of him. This was supporting what the jury had done, on the simple ground that the jury was justified, on the analogy of two statutes in finding death by the end of the seven years, and moreover (looking at Mr Justice Keble’s ruling which was not questioned upon this point) that they would not be justified in finding it earlier. It was not laid down that they ought to find death at the end of seven years, or that they must, nor was any rule of presumption put forward nor, as I say, was it on any such point that the ruling below was questioned in the full Bench.

‘In 1809, at Nisi Prius (Hopewell v De Puma, 2 Camp 113) in an action against a woman on a promissory note, she pleaded coverture and proved her marriage, but the husband had gone to Jamaica twelve years ago, and it was a question how to prove that he was now living. The defendant insisted that he must be presumed to be alive but Lord Ellenborough ruled that evidence must be given of his being alive within seven years. This was given, and the defendant had a verdict. In the other case the man was to prove death here life, and here the ruling was that a Court cannot assume life now, when all that it knows is that the party has been absent and unheard from for more than seven years. Upon the basis of these cases, there soon appeared in the text books on evidence, for the first time in 1815, a general proposition that ‘where the issue is upon the life or death where no account can be given of the person, this presumption (namely that a living person 'continues alive until the contrary be proved') ceases at the end of seven years from the time when he was last known to be living—a period which has been fixed from analogy to the Statute of Bigamy and the statute concerning houses determinable upon lives (Phil Et Vol I, 152). In this form the matter was again put by Starkie ten years later in the first edition of his book, and by Greenleaf, and so by Taylor [Starkie Et Vol 1st Id part IV p 18, 1 Gr Et § 11, 1 Tayl Et (9th Id) § 200]. But the Judges as well as text writers got to expressing what had been put as a cessation of a presumption of life in the form of an affirmative presumption of death and this was put as a rule of general application whenever life and death were in question. And so Stephen put it 'A person shown not to have been heard of for seven years by those (if any) who if he had been alive would naturally have heard of him, is presumed to be dead, unless the circumstances of the case are such as to account for his not having heard of without assuming his death'. This rule is set down by Stephen among the few presumptions which he thinks should had a place in the law of evidence. Stephen published his Digest in 1876. Here, then, in seventy years, we find the rule about a seven years absence (1) coming into existence in the form of a judicial declaration about what may or may not fairly be inferred by a jury in the exercise of their logical faculty, the particular period being fixed by reference to two legislative determinations in specific cases of like question (2) passing into the form of an affirmative rule of law requiring that death be assumed under the given circumstances. This is a process of judicial legislation advancing from what is a mere recognition of a legitimate step in legal reasoning to a declaration of the legal effect of certain facts. Thayer The Great Op pp 319-324. But the Indian Evidence Act, which found place in the Statute Book in 1872 went further and by s 107 it allowed presumption to be made of the continuance of life for a period of 30 years from the period when a person is last heard of. But this presumption is not free from criticism.

S 108

Scope of the section. This section provides in effect that if it appears that a person has not been heard of for seven years, by those who would naturally have heard of him if he had been alive and there is nothing to suggest the probability of being alive the presumption disappears and the matter is at large. Mail Et 83. But sections 107 and 108 should be read together because the latter is only a proviso of the rule contained in the former, and both constitute one rule when so read together. Dhanup Nath v Gobind Saran, 8 A 614-6 A W N 239. The two presumptions are conflicting and the circumstances might be such that both presumptions were raised. What is to prevail? It was in order to solve this question that the language of section 108 was changed so as to make it clear that in such a case the presumption of death would prevail. For example if A the plaintiff says that X is alive, and upon this assertion claims the judgment of the Court A must prove the truth of the assertion. In order to do so A gives evidence that X was alive 20 years ago. If the Judge believes this evidence and nothing more appears he will be bound to find that X is alive. But B may give evidence that X has been absent for seven years and so get the benefit of the presumption described in s 108. Of course it would do just as well if B were to prove that X was born one hundred and twenty years ago so that according to the common course of natural events he could not be alive now (vide section 114 infra) or he may prove that two years ago X went to sea in a ship, which has not since been heard of. But, in all this there is no shifting of onus whilst the evidence is being taken. Mail Et p 84. So also this presumption will not arise if the person in question left his home under circumstances which render it improbable that he would communicate with his friends. Poull Ev 412. There is no presumption as well that he died at any particular time. Cooley cas Et 30. In Acapon v Doe, 2 M & W 391 Lord Denman C J said 'We adopt the doctrine of the King's Bench that the presumption of law relates only to the fact of death, and that the time of death whenever it is material must be subject of distinct proof. The principle on which the Court presumes the death of a person of whom no tidings have been received for a long period of time, is this—that, if he were living he umption that she died in 1842. Bowen case it was said that the principle on which a person not heard from for seven years is presumed to have died would probably have communicated. This is a conclusion which Courts are not to draw. It is quite clear therefore that a presumption can not arise. In this case all that had taken place between L and M was that she would have entered into further relations with her religion, and her friends would have reproached her for doing so. The reproaches would have been communications. I think this circumstance is rather eccentric course of life which it is not probable that she could have followed. If I am right in this view it follows that the presumption does not arise from the absence of information. It is natural even if the lady were dead. Mc Elroy Ir Rep 5 Eq 1 it was said that cases are not such as to render it necessary to presume death. Hugh Morgan left Ireland for America in 1839 resided there for some years, with his wife in 1859 for a temporary period in Ireland and after a few months he and son followed him. It is contended, since he has been heard of by his sister, the only person in Ireland I am therefore to presume that he comes into this country and stays for a while who is not an alien, but has his residence here for a little time, and then leaves—no relatives here and is not heard of for a long time, therefore, to be made of his death? 'by to such cases'. A girl of sixteen leaves Ireland in 1814 she is in a seaport town intending to go to America. There is no presumption that she is dead, 14 Sim 28. In that case Shadwell was a girl of sixteen or seventeen years of age who was a person which does not appear to leave her father. But it seems that in August, 1814, she intended to go abroad. There is no presumption that all along she has been concealing her departure from home. The mere fact of her

S. 108 upon him which was likely speedily to terminate in his death? To which Mr Hubbock, in commenting on the subg et, adds,—“And the circumstances of the country whether the party had gone having been visited with a fatal disease, war or other similar calamity, or again, the sudden unexplained cessation of his habitual correspondence with several persons, would materially assist the presumption of his death. On the other hand the cause of the absentee's departure, the terms of intercourse on which he had lived with his relatives or the state of the communication between this and the country where he resided may be such as to make the want of intelligence concerning him easily consistent with the supposition of his continuing existence. Hubbock page 174 Goodier Ev 631 So death may be proved by reputation, by hearsay, or by evidence of facts inconsistent with the theory of the existence of life. The presumption will arise that the death of the absentee has occurred before the expiration of seven years, where any of the following circumstances are shown. Viz—(1) That within that time he was in a desperate state of health. Webster v Birchmore, 13 Ves 362. In the above mentioned case ‘the health was very bad—the chancellor speaks of it as desperate’ (2) That within that time he embarked on a vessel which has not since been heard of and is long overdue, inquiries having been made at her ports of departure and destination. Lauson Presumptive Evidence, rule 50, Merritt v Thompson Hell 530. In the above case the Court observed. The presumption of his death does not rest upon the fact that he has not been heard of for seventeen months, but upon the well-known circumstance that the vessel has not been heard of for seventeen months. In Re Smith, 29 L J (P & M) 1, Sir Creswell Creswell said. I do not find in the affidavit any statement that inquiries have been made at Barcelona or elsewhere about the crew. The affidavits only state that neither the vessel G S nor any of the crew have been heard of. I should undoubtedly presume that the vessel has been lost, but it does not follow that the crew, or some of them may not have been saved. The case had better stand over until you have written to the agent of the ship at Barcelona and ascertained whether any of the crew have survived. Similarly in Re Bishop 1 Sw & Tr 303 the same learned Judge said ‘I think probably the vessel is lost but it does not appear that any inquiries have been made at Demerara as to whether any of the crew have arrived there or have been heard of’ (3) That at sometime within that period he has encountered a ‘specific peril’ which includes not the ordinary dangers of travel or navigation but some unusual or extraordinary danger. Fagle's Case, 3 App Pt 220, Lauson Presumptive Ev rule 51. (4) That his habits, character, domestic relations, necessities or facts or circumstances other than those showing exposure to danger would have made it certain that if alive within that period he would have returned to or communicated with his residence home or domicile or have been heard from. Lauson Presumptive Evidence rule 52. A son after the death of his father, and knowing of a provision for him in his Will to take effect on the death of his mother leaves home. He is not heard of for many years. He will be presumed to be dead. Karslen v Karslen 15 N Y (S) 366. On March 25 1866 S left her home and was never heard of again. She depended on an income payable in quarterly instalments. She did not appear to claim the amount due in June, 1866. In a proceeding in 1875 the presumption is that she was dead after June, 1866. Re Beasley L R 7 Eq 498.

When no presumption arises. But the presumption of death at the expiration of seven years being first heard of does not arise where it is improbable that the absentee even if alive, would or could have been heard of at, or would or could have communicated with his residence home or domicile or where in other judicial proceedings the absentee is recorded as having been alive subsequently to the end of seven years. Lauson Pre Et Rule 53. In 1829 R left her family in England and went to Paris where she took a situation as a governess. She continued to correspond with her relatives. In 1835 she wrote to her sister from Paris, saying that she was about to accept another situation, and stating that she had become a Catholic. On receipt of this letter her sister replied in a letter of remonstrance reproaching her for her abandonment of the Protestant religion. No reply was received to this letter, and she was not subsequently heard of. There is no presumption that she died in 1812. Bouen v Henderson, 2 Sim & G 360. In this case it was said that the principle on which the presumption that an absent person not heard from for seven years is dead is based is that if he were living he would probably have communicated with some of his friends and relatives. This is a conclusion which Courts draw from the probabilities of the case. 'It is quite clear therefore that when no such probability exists the presumption can not arise. In this case all the circumstances tend to show that after what had taken place between L and her friends it was extremely improbable she would have entered into further communication with them. She had abandoned her religion and her friends wrote to her a letter of remonstrance and reproach for doing so. The reproaches were not calculated to encourage further communications. I think this circumstance, taken in connection with the rather eccentric course of life which it appears from her letters she pursued, render it improbable that she could have further communication with her friends. If I am right in this view it follows that the presumption of her death does not arise from the absence of information or of communication when that absence is natural even if the lady were still alive.' Similarly in Mc Mohan v Mc Phoy 11 Rep 5 Eq 1 it was said 'The circumstances of the present cases are not such as to render it safe to make that presumption at present. Hugh Morgan left Ireland for America some time before the year 1839 resided there for some years, married there, came back to Ireland with his wife in 1859 for a temporary purpose only, he sold all his property in Ireland, and after a few months returned to America, whither his wife and son followed him. It is contended however, that because he has not since been heard of by his sister, the only member of his family who remains in Ireland, I am therefore to presume that he is dead. But suppose that an alien comes into this country and stays for a few months, or that a person who is not an alien, but has his residence abroad, comes here and stays for a little time and then leaves having—to put an extreme case—no relatives here, and is not heard of for seven years, is the presumption therefore, to be made of his death? I do not think that the rule would apply to such cases.' A girl of sixteen leaves her father's house later on (August 1, 1814) she is in a seaport town, intending to go abroad. She is not subsequently heard of. There is no presumption that in 1821 she is dead. Hatton v England, 11 Sim 28. In that case Shadwell P C said 'Here a girl of about sixteen or seventeen years of age whose father was a farmer, chose for some reason which does not appear, to leave her father's house and to go no one knew whither. But it seems that in August, 1814 she was at Portsmouth, and that she then intended to go abroad. Therefore it is but reasonable to presume that all along she has been concealing herself, and that she never intended to return home. The mere fact of her not having been heard of since 1814 affords no inference of her death. In the circumstances of the case it is very probable that she would never be heard of again by her relations. How can I presume that she died in 1821 from a fact which is quite consistent with her being alive at that time? She died in August 1878. W, his father, left England for Australia in 1849 from which country he wrote to his wife until 1851 when he ceased to write. In his last letter he said 'I have made up my mind should I reach England in safety not to know, see or have any communication or connection whatever with any one whom I formerly knew. W was never subsequently heard of. There is no presumption that he died before. S R Smith 21 L J (P & M) 182. In that case the Court observed 'The evidence is not sufficient to warrant the presumption that W died before his son. Some expressions used by him in the last letter to his wife would lead to the conclusion that he might have reasons for not again communicating with her. A sailor leaves his ship in a foreign country in 1850, and is not afterwards heard of. It is proved that his intention was to desert. There is no presumption that he died in 1857. Lalun v Lalun, 34 Beav 443. Douley v Winfield, 14 Sim 277. A was transported from England to New South Wales in 1831 for seven years for a crime. He last wrote to his family on board ship in that year. The records showed that he served his sentence. There is no presumption that he was dead in the year

S. 108

upon him which was likely speedily to terminate in his death.' To which W. Hubbock, in commenting on the subject, adds,—“And the circumstances of the country whether the party had gone having been visited with a fatal disease, war or other similar calamity, or again, the sudden unexplained cessation of his habitual correspondence with several persons, would in iterally assist the presumption of his death. On the other hand the cause of the absentee's departure, the terms of intercourse on which he had lived with his relatives or the state of the communication between him and the country where he resided may be such as to make the want of intelligence concerning him easily consistent with the supposition of his continuing existence.” Hubbock page 174, Goodale Ep 631. So death may be proved by reputation, by hearsay, or by evidence of facts inconsistent with the theory of the existence of life. The presumption will arise that the death of the absentee has occurred before the expiration of seven years where any of the following circumstances are shown. Vis—(1) That within that time he was in a desperate state of health Webster v. Buchmore, 13 Ves 362. In the above mentioned case “the health was very bad—the chancellor speaks of it as desperate.” (2) That within that time he embarked on a vessel which has not since been heard of and is long overdue inquiries having been made at her ports of departure and destination Lauson Presumptive Evidence, rule 50, Merritt v. Thompson Holt 550. In the above case the Court observed. The presumption of his death does not rest upon the fact that he has not been heard of for seventeen months but upon the weightier circumstance that the vessel has not been heard of for seventeen months. In Re Smyth 28 L. J. (P & M) 1, Re Creswell Creswell said ‘I do not find in the affidavit any statement that enquiries have been made at Barcelona or elsewhere about the crew. The affidavits only state that neither the vessel G S nor any of the crew have been heard of. I should undoubtedly presume that the vessel has been lost, but it does not follow that the crew, or some of them may not have been saved. The case had better stand over until you have written to the agent of the ship at Barcelona and ascertained whether any of the crew have survived. Similarly in Re Bishop 1 Sw & Tr 303 the same learned Judge said ‘I think probably the vessel is lost but it does not appear that any inquiries have been made at Demerara as to whether any of the crew have arrived there or have been heard of.’ (3) That at sometime within that period he has encountered a specific peril which includes not the ordinary danger of travel or navigation but some unusual or extraordinary danger Fagles Case 3 App P 220 Lauson Presumptive Evidence rule 51. (4) That his habits character, domestic relations, necessities or facts or circumstances other than those showing exposure to danger would have made it certain that if alive within that period he would have returned to or communicated with his residence home or domicile or have been heard from Lauson Presumptive Evidence rule 52. A son after the death of his father and knowing of a provision for him in his Will to take effect on the death of his mother, leaves home. He is not heard of for many years. He will be presumed to be dead Karsten v. Karsten 15 N. Y. (S) 366. On March 25 1866 S left her home and was never heard of again. She depended on an income payable in quarterly instalment. She did not appear to claim the amount due in June, 1866. In a proceeding in 1867 the presumption is that she was dead before June, 1866. Re Leasney L. R. 7 L. J. 198.

When no presumption arises. But the presumption of death at the expiration of seven years being in fact heard of, does not arise where it is improbable that the absentee even if alive, would or could have been heard of at or would or could have communicated with, his residence, home or domicile or where in other judicial proceedings the absentee is recorded as having been alive subsequently to the end of seven years. Lauson Presumptive Evidence rule 53. In 1829 R left her family in England and went to Paris where she took a situation as governess. She continued to correspond with her relatives. In 1835 she wrote to her sister from Paris saying that she was about to accept another situation, and stating that she had become a Catholic. On receipt of this letter her sister replied in a letter of remonstrance reproving her for her abandonment of the Protestant religion. No reply was received to this letter, and she was not

subsequently heard of. There is no presumption that she died in 1842. Bouen v Henderson, 2 Sim & G 360. In this case it was said that the principle on which the presumption that an absent person not heard from for seven years is dead is based is that if he were living he would probably have communicated with some of his friends and relatives. This is a conclusion which Courts draw from the probabilities of the case. "It is quite clear therefore that when no such probability exists the presumption can not arise. In this case all the circumstances tend to show that after what had taken place between L and her friends it was extremely improbable she would have entered into further communication with them. She had abandoned her religion, and her friends wrote to her a letter of remonstrance and reproach for doing so. The reproaches were not calculated to encourage further communications. I think this circumstance taken in connection with the rather eccentric course of life which it appears from her letters she pursued, render it improbable that she could have further communication with her friends. If I am right in this view it follows that the presumption of her death does not arise from the absence of information or of communication when that absence is natural even if the lady were still alive." Similarly in Mc Mohan v Mc Phoy, 11 Rep 5 Eq 1 it was said "The circumstances of the present cases are not such as to render it safe to make that presumption at present. Hugh Morgan left Ireland for America some time before the year 1859, resided there for some years, married there, came back to Ireland with his wife in 1859 for a temporary purpose only, he sold all his property in Ireland, and after a few months returned to America, whether his wife and son followed him. It is contended however that because he has not since been heard of by his sister, the only member of his family who remains in Ireland, I am therefore to presume that he is dead. But suppose that an alien comes into this country and stays for a few months or that a person who is not an alien, but has his residence abroad, comes here and stays for a little time, and then leaves having—to put an extreme case—no relatives here and is not heard of for seven years is the presumption therefore, to be made of his death? I do not think that the rule would apply to such cases. A girl of sixteen leaves her father's house, later on (August 1, 1814) she is in a seaport town, intending to go abroad. She is not subsequently heard of. There is no presumption that in 1821 she is dead. Hatton v England, 14 Sim 29. In that case Shadwell v C said "Here a girl of about sixteen or seventeen years of age, whose father was a farmer, chose, for some reason which does not appear, to leave her father's house and to go no one knew whither. But it seems that in August 1814, she was at Portsmouth, and that she then intended to go abroad. Therefore it is but reasonable to presume that all along she has been concerning herself and that she never intended to return home. The mere fact of her not having been heard of since 1814 affords no inference of her death, for the circumstances of the case make it very probable that she would never be heard of again by her relations. How can I presume that she died in 1821 from a fact which is quite consistent with her being alive at that time?" Died in August, 1859. W's father, left England for Australia in 1849, from which country he wrote to his wife until 1851 when he ceased to write. In his last letter he said "I have made up my mind should I reach England in safety, not to know, see or have any communication or connection whatever with any one whom I formerly knew. W was never subsequently heard of. There is no presumption that he died before S R Smith, 21 L J (P & M) 182. In that case the Court observed "The evidence is not sufficient to warrant the presumption that W died before his son. Some expressions used by him in the last letter to his wife would lead to the conclusion that he might have reasons for not again communicating with her." A sailor leaves his ship in a foreign country in 1850 and is not afterwards heard of. It is proved that his intention was to desert. There is no presumption that he died in 1857. Lal in v Lal in, 34 Beav 143, Douley v Winfield 14 Sim 277. A was transported from England to New South Wales in 1831 for seven years for a crime. He last wrote to his family on board ship in that year. The records showed that he served his sentence. There is no presumption that he was dead in the year

S. 103 1840 Mitcham v. Trust 15 B. & 507, Law on Pres. & R. 73 see also Le
Liddendale 57 Sol. Tol. & Hervey v. Ocean Co., 21 L. J.

Presumption of death according to Hindu and Mahomedan Law. According to Hindu Law the presumption of death arising from absence, would arise in the place of the absence of things for twelve years. Colebrook v.
Dipst Vol. 1 p. 184. Strange v. Hindu Law p. 189. Mandree Koon v. Khoodoo
Lal 2 Hay 623. Kunmayon Ghosh v. Keshab Lal 2 B. L. J. 1. A. C. 121 = 10 W. R.
134, Saidul Ghulam v. Ghulam Khan 2 B. L. J. R. A. C. 137 Note, Balbhaddar
v. Ram Jivan 1 A. & R. 19. Har v. Shanno Munge Dass 9 W. R. 321. Ghase
v. Insoudder 2 A. & R. 226, Kunaypan Chelli v. Ferrel 1 M. H. C. 1. It is only when the devolution or succession to the property of a missing Hindu (or Mahomedan) is in question that the Hindu and Mahomedan Law of presumption as to the death of a missing person may have to be applied with reference to s. 24 of Act VI of 1871. But when a suit is by a person for a declaration or for the avoidance of an alienation of property in the possession of the present heir the provisions of section 103 of Act I of 1872 will apply. Lameshwar Lal v. Loheswar Singh, 1 A. 53 (F. B.). Where a person claims another's property on the allegation that the latter was missing, and has not been heard of for more than seven years the question whether such person is to be presumed to be dead is one of evidence and not a part of the substantive law of inheritance. In such a case the presumption of death would arise under this section. Dhondo Bhilap 11 B. 433 see also Dharup
Nath v. Gopal Saran 4 A. 614 = A. W. N. 1886 239. Balaya v. Kirinappa
11 M. 113. Hari Chulaman v. Movo Lal Shuman, 11 B. 89. Jayant v. Ram
Chandao 18 Bom. I. R. 14 = 40 B. 249 = 33 Ind. Cas. 484. Jodhar v. Jodhar
71 Ind. Cas. 305 = 32 M. L. T. (H. C.) 6 under the Mahomedan Law inheritance to the property or share of a missing person cannot open but must remain in abeyance until ninety years have elapsed since his birth or until his death is proved. Hasan Ali v. Mahabub 2 A. 625. Lal Bahadur v. Bahadur
Bibi, 7 N. W. P. 149. Girdhar v. Lado A. W. N. 1882 107, Doulat v. Akaya
2 Agr. 59. But in a later Full Bench case of the same High Court the cases were overruled. In that case Mahomed J. and The rule of Mahomedan Law that a missing person is to be regarded as alive till the expiry of 90 years from the date of his birth is a rule of evidence and not of succession, inheritance etc., within the meaning of section 24 of the Bengal Civil Court Act. Mahabub Ali v. Budh Singh 7 A. 297 (F. B.) = A. W. N. 1884 313. So the rule contained in section 103 of the Indian Evidence Act applies to the case of a Mahomedan who has been missing for more than seven years. When the question of his death arises in a case to which under the provisions of section 24 of the Bengal Civil Courts Act (VI of 1871) the Mahomedan Law is applicable. And see also Imdad Ali v. Ghulam Khan 42 P. R. 1492. Moocha Cassim
v. Moocha Abdul 2 C. L. J. 236 = 15 M. L. J. 317 = 7 Bom. I. R. 592 = 3 A. L. J.
798 = 10 C. W. N. 43 = 3 C. L. J. 173 = 32 I. A. 177. Yusuf Ali Bey v. Ayub Bey
11 A. L. J. 357 = 18 Ind. C. L. 920. Murray v. Abdul 43 A. 673.

Time of death. Though under s. 107 and 104 of the Indian Evidence Act the death of a person is to be presumed after an interval of seven years, there is no presumption as to the time of his death. Therefore if any one has to establish the exact time during the seven years at which the person died he must do so by evidence and can neither rely on the one hand upon the presumption of death nor on the other upon the presumption of the continuance of life. Rangoo v. Mudiappa 22 B. 236. Whenever the question as to the exact time of death arises in a case to which under the provisions of section 24 of the Bengal Civil Courts Act (VI of 1871) the Mahomedan Law is applicable. And see also Imdad Ali v. Ghulam Khan 42 P. R. 1492. Moocha Cassim
v. Moocha Abdul 2 C. L. J. 236 = 15 M. L. J. 317 = 7 Bom. I. R. 592 = 3 A. L. J.
798 = 10 C. W. N. 43 = 3 C. L. J. 173 = 32 I. A. 177. Yusuf Ali Bey v. Ayub Bey
11 A. L. J. 357 = 18 Ind. C. L. 920. Murray v. Abdul 43 A. 673.

S 108

Nurayan Bhoqueant v Shrimmas Primbai, 8 B 266 and in the case of Fan
Bhushan Bomerjee v Surappa Canto Roy Choudhary, 35 C 25. This last ruling was cited with approval in the case of Simoth Das v Probodh Chander Das, 11 C L J 580. Mooljee I v s at page 185. "The only presumption which is enacted by section 107 of the Evidence Act, is, that the party is dead at the time of the suit but there is no presumption whatever that on the true his death. In my opinion there can be no doubt lay upon the plaintiff's to show construction of section 108 of the Evidence Act. Madad Ali. Having failed to by affirmative evidence that Dildar Ali survived the appeal. But see Alkhan v do so, the suit could not succeed. I would dismiss the appeal. 11 M L J 295, Manishar v
Bashu 8 Ind Cas 55. But Nicken v Ichanda English cases the presumption Sugra, 13 R D 385. But according to the is a period of death, beyond the which is also a legal one fixes no specific time is seven years the party shall be assertion generally that if the expiration of the subject of Doe d Knight v presumed dead. Thus in a governing case on this one abroad had not been heard Nepean 5 B & Ad 86 where a party who had the presumption of death did of for above seven years, it was contended that, as party must be presumed living not arise until the seven years had elapsed the was urged, that he ought to throughout the whole of the period otherwise it en years commenced. But the have been presumed dead from the moment the Chief Justice, in delivering the contention was overruled and Lord Denman Ch of Mathew Knight abroad for judgment of the Court stated thus - The absence from which a jury might seven years without having been heard of is clearly presumed his death. This reasonably presume and in this case have proper presumption in analogy to the period has been adopted as the ground for such pre and 19 C 2 C 6 19 to the Statutes of 1 Jac I C II relating to bigamy and the lessor of the plaintiff continuance of lives on which leases were held in Manishar in the case. But such clearly proved the first of the points necessary to leads the mind to believe absence abroad for seven years though it naturally, evidence to warrant a presump that the party is dead and therefore is sufficient even years clearly raises no tion of fact that the party was dead at the end of seven years, and no case has been inference is to the exact time of the death and period has no tendency to place at the end of seven years. Absence for the e time, and no case has been induce the belief that life has ceased at that precise and down is a rule of law cited, nor do we know of any in which it has been or in which, in point of fact, that such a presumption ought to have been made abroad, and, on the other any such effect has been given to evidence of absence, borough held, that though the hand, one case was referred to in which Lord Ellen resumed after having sailed loss of a vessel in which a person sailed might be having been heard of and so on a foreign voyage for two or three years without and was then dead, the time it might be taken that the person who sailed on board, owing to the special circum of death was to be decided upon by the Jury in the Exchequer Chamber stances. And again in the same case on appeal nothing is heard of a per on (2 M & W 913) the Court said. Now when complete uncertainty at what for seven years it is obviously a matter of coroll the point of time the last point of time in those seven years he died as of the ground of presuming day is not improbable and most inconsistent with, the great lapse of time the fact of death. That presumption arises from is considered extraordinary since the party has been heard of because it other words it is presumed if he is alive that he should not be heard of. In his death, which presumption that has not been heard of has been occasioned by him. If you assume that he was arises from the considerable time that has elapsed then there is nothing extra alive on the last day but one of the seven years last day, and the previous ordinary in his not having been heard of on the as not heard of has become extraordinary lapse of time during which he was was living so lately. The immaterial by reason of the assumption that he was ad to the conclusion that the pre umption of the fact of death seems therefore to expiration of seven years' death took place some considerable time before the procedure to be followed when a sections 107 and 108 both deal with the person is alive or dead. These question is put before a Court as to whether a per how long a man was alive or sections do not lay down any presumption as to h at what time he died Bandi Teranna v Gangula 14 Ind C 43, Poonia

loori v Chelapattar 33 N L J 295= (1917) 31 W N 723=6 L W 633, Murray Fanning v Abdul 19 A L J 713=63 Ind C 286. The earliest date to which the debt can be presumed can only be the date when the suit was filed Jeshwant v Bai Divali, 22 Bom L R 771=57 Ind C 525, see also Bachawat
v Nagesh 38 P R 1918=45 Ind C 70, Kayur v Dan Bahadur, 21 O C 143-46 Ind Cas 808, Monohari Lal v Chum L R 3 A 393, Mulhannad v Abdul, 64 Ind Cas 468, Relhab Das v Ali Sheobai 45 A 166=21 A L J 393=74
 Ind C 656, Gopal Bhuri v Manay, 47 B 451, Rathi Ali v Ahmad Din, 100 Ind C 833, Deenan v Rathi, 1927 N 104=100 Ind Cas 446,
Mahadeo v Narbhai sh, 40 O W N 1077=A I R 1928 Oudh 13, Jaganmuthi
Singh v Hanuman Singh, L R 6 All 227 (Kv), Jagesh v Mahadeo 115 Ind C 626. If a person has not been heard of for seven years that is a presumption of law that he is dead but at what time within that period he died is not a matter of presumption but of evidence and the onus of proving that the death took place at any particular time within the seven years lies upon the person who claims a right to the estate of which that fact is essential. Cal
Chand v Mohan Rampr, 34 A L J 105=43 C L J 419=53 A L J 24-30
 C W N 731=93 Ind C 280=28 Bom L R 855=50 N L J 299 (P C), see also Ganesh Das Aurora, in the goods of 13 C L J 678=97 Ind C 217=

By persons who would naturally have heard of him, 'Persons who would naturally have heard of him' is not confined to a particular class, they may be relations or strangers. Lauzon's Pro Ex Rulo 45 Doe v Dealin, 4 B & Ald 433. A wife, who left her husband and is in keeping of another is not one of the persons who would naturally hear from him if he were alive. Kamtabar v Umabai, 117 Ind Cas 509-A I R 1939 N<sup>o</sup> 137.

Not been heard of. Not been heard of. Means that it none of the persons referred to above have heard anything about him which should or would raise a reasonable doubt in his or her mind that he really was no more. Lawson's Ex Parte 46. The life of N being insured in a Life Insurance Company was brought on the policy in 1874, and the question was whether N was then dead. He had left his home in England for Australia in 1867 and had not been heard of or seen by any one since, except as follows. A niece of his, one Mrs. C, being in Melbourne in January, 1875, saw a man on the street whom she believed to be her uncle N but he was lost in the passing crowd and she was not able to speak to him. She wrote of this to her mother and on returning to England spoke of it to the relatives, but they all thought her mistaken. If the evidence of Mrs. C was believed N had been heard of within the seven years but if it was not believed on reasonable grounds, then N had not been heard of within the rule. Prudential Assurance Co v. Edmunds, 2 App Cas 487. In that case the trial judge after calling the jury that not being heard of meant that no member of the family had heard any thing about him which might raise a reasonable doubt in their minds, whether he was dead, added, "You must say that a man has never been heard of when in the first place one of his nearest relatives comes and says she saw him alive and well within three years, still less can you say that he has never been heard of when it is not said that they heard of the family sales that they heard that which is now said." On appeal this was held to be in error. "The direction," which is now stated, "seems to me to come to this. In the first place if the juryman believed Mrs. C's assertion to be correct, and though she had seen him alive and well of course that ends the case. But then he adds still less can you not say that he has never been heard of when a very member of the family states that they heard that which is now said." Now it is for the jury to decide whether there has been great interference from that language or not. I think that would be the reasonable inference, from that language.

- S 108. but I think it becomes clearer as you go on, that that would be the interpretation that would force itself upon the mind of the jury, because what the learned Lord Chief Baron goes on to say is this you can not have any one called before you that saw him die or saw him buried. You have, therefore, no direct evidence, except the evidence that he was alive two or three years ago. On the other hand you have no evidence whatever upon which you could found the presumption that he is dead,—that is that he has never been heard of by any of his relations for the space of seven years—when you find that every one of the relatives has come forward and every one of the relatives heard that he was alive. Therefore it appears to me that the Lord Chief Baron plainly and distinctly directed the jurymen that they had no evidence before them at all upon which the presumption of law could arise because the presumption of law requires that those relatives should not have heard of him, and you find that all those relatives did hear of him. Of course, in reality that turns upon whether they believe Mrs. C or not, and whether the relatives having heard of him from her they were bound to accept that as knowledge, and so the presumption of death should be disposed of. On the other hand, my lords I apprehend that that is not the law at all. That would not be such a hearing as could lead you to a reasonable ground, for believing that the man was alive within the epoch. I apprehend my lords that the jurymen are not here directed, as it appears to me they ought to have been that the evidence given by the members of the family as to not having heard of him was fit to found the presumption upon if they came to the conclusion that Mrs. C's story was not to be believed. On the contrary it seems to have been laid down in clear and precise terms that if every member of the family has heard of him whether by a credible story or not then there is a probability of his being alive and the presumption of death would not arise. And Lord Blackburn in the same case added. The plaintiff had failed in proving the actual death of Robert Nutt and then he relied upon the rule of law which is generally laid down in something like these terms. If a man has not been heard of for seven years that raises the presumption that he is dead. It is generally so enunciated. I did not say that that is the correct way of enunciating it but I think it may be fairly enough put in those words for this purpose. I think having regard both to the reason of the thing and the decisions we must take not being heard of in a certain sense. There was seldom or never a man who had reached the age of forty with regard to whom it would not be easy to call scores of people to say 'I was at school with him. I knew him perfectly well and I have not heard of him for the last seven years. But that would not be enough to raise a presumption that he was dead because if ever so much alive those people might not have heard of him. My lords it appears from the case of Doe v. Andrew (15 Q. B. 791) that it is nice say in order to raise the presumption that there should have been an inquiry and search made for the man among those who, if he was alive would be likely to hear of him. Perhaps it is not quite an analogy but it is something like the case of a search for documents before you are allowed to give secondary evidence of a document you must search the places where the document would in the natural course of things be, if it were still in existence and having proved that you have done that you may then give your secondary evidence. In like manner in order to raise the presumption that a man is dead from his not having been heard of for seven years you must acquire information at those who if he was alive would be likely to hear of him, and see whether or no there has been such an absence of hearing as would raise the presumption that he was dead. In this case the plaintiff undertook to do that and called first a witness who said so but afterwards said that he had heard a report that a Mrs. C had seen him in Australia but that he did not believe it. I am inclined to think that having heard a report would hardly be such a matter as would prevent the fact of the witness saying he had not heard of him being evidence as far as it went. Supposing the jurymen had found as a fact that they thought she was not taken would or would not the grounds have existed upon which the presumption from a seven years absence would arise that the man had been heard of was dead? I think certainly they

It seems to me that when she said, I have seen the man in the streets

[illegible]

S 108. and consequently in the Roman Law and in several other codes recourse is had to artificial presumptions whenever the particular circumstances connected with the death are wholly unknown. The presumptions, on which the common law however does not attempt to ascertain in the absence of any evidence on which to go the survivor of a common catastrophe. Strictly it may be said that the common law presumes neither that one survived nor that all perished at the same moment. Lanson Pro 14 p 294. But by letting the writer is one unascertainable the practical consequence, as has been said, is nearly the same as if the law presumed all to have perished together at the same moment. It is, in fact, exactly the same where two persons (whether of the same or different ages, sexes or physical conditions) perish in an accident, ship wreck or battle and there is no evidence to show which one of the several survived; the law will not raise any presumption from the fact that one was younger or stronger or of the more hardy sex that he survived an older or a weaker or a less hardy victim. The party alleging that one survived the other must prove it: the onus is on him who claims a right or title upon the theory of the survivorship of one to prove that fact affirmatively. Mason v Mason 1 Mer 307, Wollaston v Berkeley, 2 Ch D 213. Re Heuss, 2 Salk 531. Re Wheeler 37 L J (P & M) 10. Robinson v Salter 2 Wood's C C 147, Wing v Agrate, 5 H L C 183. In re Benyon (1901) P 111. In re Fisher (1915) 1 Ch 302. In re Roby (1913) P 6. contra Calum v Procurator General 1 Hagg. Ecc 92. In Wright v Netherwood 2 Salk 592. Sir William Wynne said. With respect to the priority, it has always appeared to be more fair and reasonable in those unhappy cases to consider all the parties as dying at the same instant of time than to resort to any fanciful supposition of survivorship on account of the degree of robustness. In Re Scheyn 5 Hagg Ecc 748, the Court said. Instances have occurred where under similar circumstances the question has been which of the two survived? But in the absence of clear evidence it has generally been taken that both died at the same moment. Re Murray 1 Curt 596. In Taylor v Deplock 1 Phill 261. Sir John Nicholl said. There is no evidence direct as to this point some inferences have been deduced. It is stated that the two bodies were found together. This tends to show that they were in the same situation at the time of death. Upon the whole, I am not satisfied that the proof is adduced that the wife survived. I assume both perished at the same moment. See also Sutherland v Powell 1 Curt 704. Underwood v Wing 4 Deg M & G 657. Re Wainwright 1 Sw & Tr 257. Re Ewart, 1 Sw & Tr 257, Durrant v Friend 5 De G & Sm 345, Scutcheon v Fatullo L R 19 Eq 375. R v Hay, 1 W Black 646. contra Selhel v Booth 1 Y & C C C 117. Where two persons said Lord Chelmsford in Wing v Agrate 6 H L Cas 183 'are at one and the same instant washed into the sea and disappear together, and are never seen any more it is not possible for any tribunal called upon judicially to determine the question of survivorship to form any judgment upon the subject which can be founded upon anything but mere conjecture derived from age sex constitution or strength of body or mind of each individual and as our law has not established any rules of presumption for these rare and extraordinary occasions the uncertainty in which they are involved leaves no greater weight on one side or the other to induce the balance of evidence either way. If therefore it is necessary for W W to establish his claim under the Will of Mrs U that he should prove that she survived her husband he must altogether fail. There is no presumption of law arising from age or sex as to survivorship among persons whose death is occasioned by the one and the same cause nor is there any presumption of law that all of them died at the same time. But the question is one of fact depending wholly on evidence and if the evidence does not establish the survivorship of any one the law will treat it as matter incapable of being determined. The onus probandi is on the person asserting the affirmative. Will Exor p 939, Kambhuran v Surjankanta 11 C W N 883=35 C 25. Works v Phatra, 14 C W N 341=37 C 103=11 C L J 138, Re Alderson (1905) 2 Ch 181. Re Benjamen (1903) 1 Ch 723. Re Rhodes, 36 Ch D 586. Re Leus Frusts 6 Ch 356. Re Walter L R 7 Ch 120. In the goods of Spilling, Den & Sw 183. Ommamy v Stilwell, 23 Beav 328.

601 S

But in America two exceptions to the recognized rule are admitted, namely: (1) where the captivity, though in common to all, consists of a series of successive events, separated from each other in point of time and character, and each likely to produce death upon the several victims, according to the degree of exposure to it, the difference in age, sex or health may raise an inference of survivorship (2) And the one of several in a common danger which proved fatal to all, who was last seen or heard alive within the operation of the cause of death is presumed to have survived the others. Lawson's Presumptive Evidence, Rules, 56

601

109 When the question is whether persons are partners, landlord and tenant, or principal and agent, and it has been shown that they have been acting as such, the burden of proving that they do not so stand or have ceased to stand, rests on each other in those relationships respectively, is on the person who affirms it

Principle Here the presumption arises from the probability of the continuance of things once known to exist. Price v Price, 16 Al & W 232, 401 F. 295 This presumption of continuance is clearly one of the most practical importance. It is frequently quite impossible to prove for instance the existence of a certain thing in a certain state or condition at the particular moment in question. It is sufficient, with the aid of this presumption, to prove such existence and state it such an earlier time, that according to its nature it may fairly be presumed to have lasted to the moment in question. Cole v Cas 26. This is a principle upon which the Courts and the Legislature have generally thought it right to act, as in cases of presumption and in presuming that a warranty or a partnership or other state of things continues until the contrary is proved. Per Garth C J in Obboy Chan v Han Y Nialh, 8 C 72 (79) country is proved.

[illegible]

Partners. This section declares that partnership once shown to exist, the plaintiff brings an action on a note it is conceded that the plaintiff is not partner. It is proved that three years previously they were partners. The presumption is that they continue to be. Alexander v City of Clark 103, Cooper v Dutcher, 22 Barb 316. Chase v Alexander 8 Scott v R. 161. Clarke v Price 33 L. J. Ch. 290. The presumption and legislative sanction in section 26 of the Contract Act. As regards the section Community and the section 109 of the Evidence Act, the burden of proving that persons who are shown to have been acting as partners is waived to stand in that relation to each other is thrown on the person who affirms it, and by this section the further presumption is created, that the relations of such persons continue to be governed by the terms of the original contract which has expired, so far as they may be applicable to a partnership determinable at will. The same rule within the same limitation obtains in the case of a tenancy which is contained after the expiration of the term limited by the lease' Cun Contract Act Notes under s 256. 'The evidence of a joint interest in the plaintiffs was sufficient prima facie. It was shown that they were partners in business two or three years previous. The witness stated that he had frequently done business with them as partners, and had settled with them as such some two or three years since. There was no evidence of any change or dissolution of partnership and the presumption was that they were still partners. Cooper v Dedrick 22 Barb, 516 (A m). In Persons v Haywood, 31 L J Ch 670 the members of a firm continued the business after the period limited by the partnership deed, and it was held that the partnership could be dissolved only by a special notice, and that no notice having been given it still existed on the original terms and the decree was made for its dissolution on the footing of those terms. Cun Contract Act p 522. Where a partnership was admitted to have been in existence in 1816 it was in the absence of all evidence to the contrary presumed to be still continuing in 1838. Clair v Alexander 8 Scott N R 161, Alderson v Clay 1 Stark 405, Blandy v De Burgh 6 Com B 623 (630), Tay § 196. Under this section a partnership once existed will be presumed to have continued till its dissolution is affirmatively proved. But the following facts may lead to the inference that it has terminated by some cause or other viz (1) the books and accounts continuing up to a certain date only (2) the business being carried on by one of the partners only (3) the plaintiff not taking any part in the business and (4) indents on the firm being made in the name of one only. Baksh Nahi v Alla Baksh, 11 P R 1897.

S 103

Principal and Agent. An authority to do an act once shown to exist is presumed to continue until the contrary is proved. Prather v Palmer, 4 Ark 456. Lawsou Pre Et rule 30. This principle is well established in the case of principal and agent. Rayan v Lamb 12 Q B D 460. Where the agency is terminated in any of the ways indicated in section 201 of the Contract Act the agent or the third person concerned is affected by the termination only from the date when it becomes known to him. The same rule applies where it is by notice, by death or by insanity that agency is terminated. Cun Lv p 446. See also Contract Act ss 182-238. If a man were on several occasions to authorize his mistress to order goods from a tradesman on his credit the jury would be amply justified in finding him liable for articles supplied after the termination of the connection in the absence of any proof that the tradesman had received notice of such termination. Rayan v Lamb 12 Q B 460.

Landlords and tenants. When once the relation of landlord and tenant is admitted or proved to exist it will be presumed to continue until it is shown by affirmative proof that it has ceased to exist. Mohun Mahto v Mir Shemsool 21 W R 5. Munng Sim v Munng Tarn 11 B R (1897-1901) vol II 114, Tiru v Sanjuben 3 M 118. Rameshar v Dalpin 7 C L J 202. Dattatraya v Sindhar 17 B 756. Mere non payment of rent though for many years, would not affect the landlord's right to rent where the relationship of landlord and tenant once existed. Baum Chavan v Administrator General 6 C I J 72. Lungo Lal v Abdul 1 C 314. Raj Kumar v Ahmaddi 17 C W N 627. Premnukh v Bhupia 22 A 517 (1 B). Rameshwar v Gobordhan 7 C L J 202. Dalaya v Krishnu 7 B 34. Failure of payment of rent by the tenant to the landlord does not alone operate to create in favour of a tenant a title by adverse possession. Isagaddi v Chand 21 C L J 153. Munng Sim v Munng Shur 11 B R (1892-96) vol II 363. Troglakho v Mohma 7 C L R 490, Fau Charna v Sanjuben 3 M 118. Milan v Kumar 7 C L J 615. So where a tenant holds over after the expiration of the term he impliedly holds subject to all the covenants in the lease which are applicable to his new situation. Tonmano v Young 2 Camp 30. Thomas v Parker, 1 H & N 669. Fay § 197. Chatur v Mukund 7 Cal 710. Bay Nath v Paqhu Nath, 16 C W N 460. Kishori Lal v Administrator General 2 C W N 293. Jammal th v Citterikari, 16 W R 185. Lani v Raj Kumar, 6 C W N 559. See also section 116 of the Transfer of Property Act and section 51 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The relation of landlord and tenant continues until it is proved to have ceased. Detayyag v. Mahammad Jaffer Sahab, 36 V 53=19 Ind Cr 556. Where it is proved that the person in possession before the defendant was a tenant of the plaintiff at one time it is for the defendant under s 109. Evidence Act to show when the relationship of landlord and tenant ceased and possession became adverse. Chand v. Pathan 23 M L J 361=27 Ind Cr 504.

110 When the question is whether any person is owner or possessor, the burden of proving that he is not the owner is on the person who affirms that he is not the owner to ownership. Burden of proof as of anything of which he is shown to be in possession, the burden of proving that he is not the owner is on the person who affirms that he is not the owner.

Principle. Where title to land becomes material, the fact of present possession alone may serve to create a presumption of ownership, the emphasis being on the occupation or appearance of ownership, and not on the documentary sources of claim and the rule serving merely to shift to the opponent the second burden or duty of producing some evidence to the contrary. If ignore s 251b. Possession is prima facie proof of ownership, it is so because it is as it has been described the sum of acts of ownership. This obviously applies both to prior and to present possession. Per Jaisims C J in Harn v. Dhanda 8 Bom L R 96(98). One of the most common instruments of title to real estate is the presumption from long possession that such possession is lawful rather than unlawful—in other words that it is supported by a grant. It has become a well established rule that the perceivable possession of real estate is presumptive evidence of title until the contrary is shown. The title which must be safeguarded and all the avenues of approach to it watched with the utmost eyes of the law that no one is wronged. Theoretically, it vests, possesses the foundation upon which every title rests. It constitutes also the only means of enjoyment of property. Hence it is necessarily the conspicuous bridge or sign of ownership. This is a principle firmly imbedded in all common law jurisprudence. Butt Jones § 75. It is held that the presumption arising from possession is a presumption of seisin in fee. Bull N P 103, 109, Asher v. Whitlock, L R 1 Q B 1=35 L J Q B 17.

Scope of the section. The fact of possession in the eye of law suggests always ownership and whether it is put in Latin is pactio est conditio possidentis, or in colloquial Anglo-Saxon that "possession is prima facie evidence of title to it, both with regard to moveable and immovable property. Indeed it may be said that the presumption has attended its full growth. Pollock says "It has been said that there is no doctrine of possession in our law. The reason of this appearance in appearance capable of deceiving even learned persons is that possession has all but swallowed up owner-ship, and the rights of a possessor, or one entitled to possess, have all but monopolized the very name of property." Pollock on Torts, § 17. The same learned judge in comparing the status of owners in older time and now, says that the owner in possession was protected against disturbance but the rights of owner out of possession were obscure and weak. To this day it continues so with regard to chattels. For many purposes, the true owner of goods is the person and only the person entitled to immediate possession. But § 116. This presumption of ownership from possession is founded on the theory that such possession is rightful. Among other grounds which have been assigned for this presumption are those that it is in accord with the general principles of law to suppose until the contrary is shown, that possession is lawful rather than unlawful, that since the rightful owners of property are not likely to consent that then property remain in the continued possession of others who assert title thereto it is natural conclusion that possession of this character is authorized by some grant or license, and finally, as stated by Judge Story, "presumptions of this character are adopted from the general infirmity of human nature, the difficulty of preserving the monuments of title and the public policy of supporting long and uninterrupted possession." Ricard v. Williams, 7 Wheat (U S) 109, Binn. Jones § 71. Possession affords prima facie presumption of ownership, for men generally own what they possess. Hebb v. Fox, 7 F R 397. Thus it is sufficient to maintain trespass on real property, must a wrong doer. Elliot v. Kemp 7 M & W 312, Nort. Et. 295. "If a person is in actual possession, that is evidence that he is seized in fee, unless there be something to show that he had a less estate. I think that if nothing further be shown, it is at least some evidence of a seisin in fee." Per Patterson J in Doe v. Penfold, 9 C & P 536. The law on the subject is thus stated by Ellenborough, C J. "As to the first point made in this case on the part of the defendant, viz., that the ownership alleged was not sufficiently proved, it was proved by the captain in the ordinary way that the owners by whom, as such, he was appointed and employed, were the persons in whom the ownership is by the declaration averred to be. And though it afterwards appeared by his answers on cross examination, that the ownership was devised to those persons under a bill of sale executed by himself as attorney to one Lawrence Williams the former owner it did not on that account become necessary for the plaintiffs to produce that bill of sale, or the ship's register or to give any further proof of such of their property, the mere fact of their possession as owners being sufficient prima facie evidence of ownership without the aid of any documentary proof or title deeds on the subject until such further evidence should be rendered necessary in support of the prima facie case of ownership which they made in consequence of the introduction of some contrary proof on the other side." Robertson v. French & East 130. In Jones v. Williams 2 M & W 326 Parke B said. Ownership may be proved by proof of possession and that can be shown only by acts of enjoyment of the law itself. Possession, therefore, has a twofold value it is evidence of ownership and is itself the foundation of a right to possession. Hori v. Dhondi 8 Bom L R 96. Under this section possession, when long and continued upto a recent date leads to a presumption of title. This section refers to the presumption to be made of ownership based on the circumstances of such possession and allows the plaintiff with such prima facie title to claim a decree where no superior title is proved on the other side. Per Ranade J in Hanmantao v. Secretary of State 2 Bom L R 1111=25 B 237 see also Ma In Lun v. Ma Mo Hta L B R (139th 1900), 85. Where a prior usufructuary mortgagee is in possession under an unregistered instrument which was not compulsorily registrable a subsequent mortgagee under a registered instrument must be presumed to have had notice of such possession and could not claim any priority over the unregistered instrument. Bhulji Rai v. Idid Narin 25 A 366=A W N 1903 81. Under this section possession short of the statutory period which may give a title by presumption is sufficient to trust a presumption of ownership and shift the burden of proving title to the other side. But where neither side can show title the possession which attracts the presumption of ownership must be a possession founded on a prima facie right. Falun Singh v. Secretary of State for India 6 S L R 20. A benamidar cannot maintain a suit for possession of immovable property and the onus of proving that he is not a benamidar lies on him. Khondhuan v. Narayana 24 Ind Cr 301. A plaintiff who has omitted to sue under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act, when he has disposed of even after the summary relief under that section is proved by limitation rely in a regular suit for ejectment on s 110 of the Evidence Act. Harathan v. Iswar Das 2 Pat L J 61=38 Ind Cr 797. Where nothing else is known, the person in possession of property is presumed to be the owner. Laxhoba v. Lathoba 1 Ind Cr 217. Mangtha v. Fahnappa 13 Bur L T 20. Where there is strong evidence of possession on the part of a person opposed by evidence apparently strong also on the part of his opponent, in determining the right due to the evidence on both sides the presumption may well be regarded that possession went with title. Promode Kumar v. Madan

S 110

John, 35 C L J 396 = 27 C W N 305 Though section 110 of the Evidence Act recognizes a presumption that the person in possession also has a good title there is no corresponding section saying that the person with the title should be presumed to be in possession. Kashi Nath v Ganesh, 1923 Bom 361 = 77 Ind C 506 The occupation of a site in a town places a presumption of ownership upon the person in possession of it and under s 110 Evidence Act it is evidence of ownership. Unnute v Laxman 1921 Ngt 199 Where the plaintiff is in possession of property of which he says he was the owner the onus of proving that he was not the owner lies on the defendant. Ni am Din v Arianan Das, 103 Ind C 56 Under this section, the presumption is that a woman had power to dispose of all property that was in her possession at the time of her death. Raj Bachan Singh v Shri Thakurji, 40 W N 1179 Where a person is in possession of property and he uses it for four months of every year for letting his cattle, such possession is prima facie evidence of title but Court should not say that the person's ownership is established. Kashinad v Atman, 119 Ind C 520 = A I R 1929 Ngt 318 Prior peaceful possession is prima facie evidence of ownership under this section and is a good title against all persons except the true owner and can be relied on in successfully maintaining a suit for reclamation against another who has no title to the land in dispute. Agao v Jagjeevan 118 Ind C 680 Possession acquired tortiously is sufficient against a stranger who can show no better right. 3 Ghent Ex 617

Possession, meaning of. The word "possession" connoted by this section is to be understood as opposed to juridical possession and to denote actual present possession. Ali bin Amin v Aga La U B R 1905 Evidence, 7 Where the possession of a person is perceptible and obtained without ousting any one, it is of such a character as to attract the presumption described in this section and is good against the whole world except the person who could show a better title. To say that a possession is not within the meaning of this section unless it is a possession according to title, would be to render the section meaningless and to introduce a doctrine subversive of the established principles of property law. Hamithao v Secretary of State, 2 Bom L R 1111 = 25 B 387 The mere length of possession by a mortgagee is not in all cases of itself sufficient to justify the presumption that it has become proprietary. Gabadi Anor v En Bashi A W N 1881, 69 This section applies only to actual present possession, and does not declare generally that possession shall always be prima facie evidence of title. Kura Marji v Ahonaz Anstio B C L R 278 This section means that peaceful possession shall be prima facie proof of title. Samibia Sheo v Mahideo, 10 N L R 188

Burden of proof. Possession is prima facie evidence of complete ownership throwing the burden of showing that it is held on some inferior title upon him who seeks to dislodge the possessor. Tina Chand v Lal Chaman I B 91 The burden of proof imposed by this section on the party out of possession of lands seeking to oust the party in possession is only disburged by showing a title of ownership based on prior proprietary title. Aling v a Aling Po Coy, U B R 1897 1901 Vol II 416 The word "possession" connoted by s 110 of the Act is to be understood as opposed to juridical possession and to denote actual present possession and where in a suit for possession based upon title there is also the allegation of wrongful possession obtained by the defendant, the burden of proof of the dispossession lies in the first instance on the plaintiff. But on proof of his previous recent possession and dispossession by defendant and of his prima facie lawful possession on his own account the burden of proof will be shifted to the defendant to prove title to himself and his right to oust the plaintiff. Ali bin Amin v Aga La U B R 1905 Evidence 7 There is no presumption that the property left by a person long deceased is part of undivided estate. When land has been in the exclusive possession of others for a long period, the person as claiming that it forms part of an undivided estate should be required to prove the fact. Aling Lee Po v

- S 110. Maung Lee Gale v U B R (1897 1901) Vol II, 118. Where in a suit to eject the defendant from a house which he had been in his possession for 5 years without interruption on the ground that he had entered the premises temporarily with the permission of the plaintiff's father and the defendant in reply alleged a sale, the burden of proving permissive occupation clearly lay on the plaintiff. Ma Hpya v Chany 11 Ind Cr 777. In a suit for possession of land on the ground of dispossession or discontinuance of possession such dispossession or discontinuance of possession must be proved within 12 years of suit under art 112 of the Limitation Act and if that is not done the claimant is entitled to recover. Maung Ngau v Ma Ngau Zin L B R (1892 1896) Vol II 375. Where the plaintiff alleged a temporary gift and the defendant an outright gift, it was held, on the authority of s 110 that the defendant, being in possession was entitled to retain the land and that there was no trustworthy evidence adduced by the plaintiff that the defendant was not the owner of the land in question the defendant was not called upon to make out a title of his own. Maung Nyo v Maung Hmaw U B R (1892 1896) Vol II, 371. Where the defendant is in possession of land there being no wrongful dispossession of plaintiff and plaintiff asserts permissive occupation by defendant and the defendant asserts possession of land by gift outright, held that the burden of proof lies on the plaintiff. Maung Inn v Maung Pan L B R (1902 1903) Vol II, Evidence 7. Where the question is whether any person is owner of any thing of which he is shown to be in possession the burden of proving that he is not the owner is on the person who affirms that he is not the owner. Ma Hla v Ma Thail U B R (1892 1896) Vol II, 377. There is a clear distinction as to the onus of proof between a case in which a plaintiff sues to obtain possession of land by redemption of a mortgage and that in which the defence to a suit for possession of land is twelve years adverse possession by the defendant. In each case, it is for the plaintiff to plead his title and if that title is put in issue, he must make it out by at least prima facie evidence before the defendant can be put to proof of his defence. In the second case, where the defence is twelve years adverse possession the defendant must plead and make out the title he alleges and thus show that the title of the plaintiff which otherwise had been proved or admitted was lost. Parmanand v Sahib Ali, 11 A 438.

Where plaintiff who averred that defendant had been in possession for over 20 years of certain land and had regularly paid the government revenue thereon during that period as the registered holder of the land in the thugys books however stated that during this period defendant had only been in permissive occupation having rented the land from plaintiff without paying rent for it, the defendant on the other hand, while admitting that the land was originally owned by plaintiff, asserted that plaintiff had sold the land out and out to him and that he had been in adverse possession ever since for over 20 years, held that the burden of proof lay on plaintiff to establish her title and to show that defendant's occupation was permissive only and not adverse. Ma Ba v Maung Keen L B R (1872 1892) 474. Where the land in suit is in the possession of the defendant and the plaintiff alleges that it was mortgaged to the defendant's deceased husband and the defendant replies, that the transaction was an absolute sale, held, that it is for the plaintiff to prove the mortgage which he alleges. U Nyo v Ma Shue L B R (1893 1900) 514. When a claimant under s 278 or the plaintiff in a suit under s 283 proves possession s 110 Evidence Act applies and he is entitled to succeed unless the other party proves that he is not the owner or that he holds in trust for the judgment debtor. Maung Pan v Maung Yon 1 U B R 1901 4th Qr Civ Pro 8. A person seeking to oust another out of the possession of the landed property, to which the latter has already succeeded and in whose favour mutation of names has also been effected, after regular enquiry by a Revenue Officer is bound in the first instance to prove that his right is superior to that of his adversary. Aasibulhussa v Mansoor Ali 120 P W R 1909=4 Ind Cas 965. Possession is prima facie evidence of title against any one claiming against the person in possession. Arisana Iyer v Secretary of State 6 M L T 306=5 Ind Cas 121=33 M 173. This section plainly lays down that the burden of proof

5 111 Manohar v Bepari Singh, A W N 231=3 A L J 567, Basanta Kumar Ray v Secretary of State, 11 C 858

111 Where there is a question as to the good faith of a transaction between parties, one of whom stands to the other in a position of active confidence, the burden of proving the good faith of the transaction is on the party who is in a position of active confidence

Proof of good faith in transactions where one party is in relation of active confidence

Illustrations

(a) The good faith of a sale by a client to an attorney is in question in a suit brought by the client. The burden of proving the good faith of the transaction is on the attorney.

(b) The good faith of a sale by a son just come of age to a father is in question in a suit brought by the son. The burden of proving the good faith of the transaction is on the father.

Principle. In the ordinary transactions of life fairness and honesty are presumed and conveyances, sales and contracts generally are presumed to have been made in good faith until the contrary appears. Burr Jones Es § 13. The allegation of bad faith is one which the plaintiff according to section 101 is bound to prove. To require the defendant to prove good faith is in contradiction to that section. The reason why this duty is imposed on the defendant is this: if it were not so the transaction could rarely be inquired into. The plaintiff having been entirely in the hands of the defendant would be destitute of the means of proving affirmatively the mala fides of the transaction whilst the defendant in such a transaction, may fairly be subjected to the duty not only of dealing honestly but of producing clear evidence that he has done so. Mait Es 86. The broad principle on which the Court acts in cases of this description is that, wherever there exists such a confidence, of whatever character that confidence may be, as enables the person in whom confidence or trust is reposed to exert influence over the person trusting him, the Court will not allow any transaction between the parties to stand unless there has been the fullest and fairest explanation and communication of every particular resting in the breast of the one who seeks to establish a contract with the person so trusting him. Per Pageood V C in Tote v Williamson, 1 Eq at p 536.

Scope of the section. The rule is that the burden of proof is always upon the party alleging a fraud but there is one large class of cases which forms an important exception. When a question arises between a trustee and a beneficiary or between other parties who are in a fiduciary relation as to the good faith of transaction between them, a peculiar burden is imposed upon the one in whom the trust is reposed. When the complaining party proves such relation the burden of proof is cast upon the trustee or other person holding the relation of trust to show that the transaction is fair and reasonable and that all proper information has been given to the other party. To state the rule more broadly, when confidential relations exist between two persons, resulting in one having an influence over the other and a business transaction takes place between them relating in a benefit to the person holding the influential position, the law presumes everything against the transaction and casts the burden of proof upon the person benefited to show that the confidential relation has been, as to that transaction, it left unsuspended and that it was fairly conducted as if between strangers. In equity persons standing in certain relations to one another—such as parent and child, man and wife, attorney and client, confessor and penitent, guardian and ward—are subject to certain presumptions when transactions between them are brought in question and if a gift or contract, made in favour of him who holds the position of influence, is imputed by him who is subject to that influence, the Courts of equity rest upon the former the burden of proving that the transaction was entered into by him of mature intelligence. *Per Lord I. in *Earl v. Leake 10 L. R. 2 P. 40 D. 167. One of the most important requisites of the validity of the transactions between persons acting under the influence of the confidence and relation is, that the party presumably under the influence of the other should be not independent of advice for a lawyer who is divided entirely to the interest of the party he is called upon to advise, and in whom that party has entire confidence. Butt v. Jones 139 J. R. 1040. In Rhodes v. Bate L. R. 1 Ch. App. 277, Lord Justice James said, I take it to be a well-established principle of this Court, that persons claiming in a confidential relation towards others cannot exclude themselves from holding benefits which others may be conferred upon them. Butt v. Jones 139 J. R. 1040. In other words every contract entered into by persons claiming in such a relation is invalid by being ultra vires, and may be vitiated by silence as to matters which one of two independent parties making a contract would have been bound to communicate to the other. It does not matter whether the omission is deliberate, or proceeds from mere error of judgment or inadvertence. Walton v. Kerman, 5 D. & W. 1 p. 29. The mere fact that the mortgagee was a money lender and that the mortgagee was excluded for purposes of litigation during a litigation on behalf of the mortgagee, is not sufficient to create such a relation of active confidence between the mortgagee and mortgagor as to throw the burden of proof of good faith under section 111 of the Evidence Act on the mortgagee. Thindas v. Janaj Singh, 26 A. 130 (P. C.) = 31 I. A. 16 = 8 C. W. N. 560. Persons taking a benefit from another whom they stand in a position of commanding influence, must take upon themselves the whole proof that the thing is righteous. *Forbes v. Shree 1 O. C. 63, Phitchard v. Lal, 25 A. 558 = A. N. 1903 20* To prove "good faith" of a transaction in which one party stands in a fiduciary relationship to the other it is certainly not necessary to prove that all the accounts on which the contract is based are correct. Shamshoon Dutt v. Suria Datta, 12 C. W. N. 1102 = 36 C. 193.

Position of active confidence. The words "active confidence" indicate that the relationship between the parties must be such that one is bound to protect the interests of the other. This is the case between father and son, where the son is just come of age, and between legal practitioner and his client. Manby v. Scott 26 Sub. sections (2) & (3) of section 1b of the Indian Contract Act run as follows:—(2) In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing principle, a person is deemed to be in a position of active confidence towards another—(1) where he holds a real or apparent authority over the other, or where he stands in a fiduciary relation to other or where he makes a contract with a person whose mental capacity is temporarily or permanently affected by reason of age, illness, or mental or bodily distress—(3) Where a person who is in a position to dominate the will of another, enters into a contract with him and the transaction appears on the face of it or on the evidence adduced, to be unconscionable the burden of proving that such contract was not induced by undue influence shall lie upon the person in a position to dominate the will of the other. *See Sastry v. Sastry 10 L. R. 1040. But again, this habitual influence may itself be presumed to exist as a natural consequence of the condition of the parties, though it be not actually proved that the one habitually acted as if under the domination of the other. There are many relations of common occurrence in life from which the Court presumes confidence put in the general course of affairs and influence exerted, in the particular transaction complained of. (*See Lord Kingsdown in Smith v. Kay, (1839) 2 H. L. C. 750, 779*) Persons may therefore not only be proved by direct evidence of conduct but presumed by reason of standing in any of these suspected relations, as they may be called, to be in a position of* commanding influence over those from whom they take a benefit. In either case they are called upon to rebut the presumption that the particular benefit was procured by the exertion of that influence and was not given with due freedom and deliberation. They must take upon themselves the whole proof that the thing is righteous. [Gibson v. Jeyes, (1801) 6 Ves 266, 276]. A stringent rule of evidence is imposed as a safe guard against evasions of the substantive law. [Pollock & Contract p 581]. The law is thus stated in Fate v. Williamson, (1866) L R 2 Ch 55 61 by Lord Chelmsford. 'Wherever two persons stand in such a relation that, while it continues confidence is necessarily reposed by one and the influence which naturally grows out of that confidence is possessed by the other and this confidence is abused, or he influence is exerted to obtain an advantage at the expense of the confiding party, the person availing himself of his position will not be permitted to retain the advantage although the transaction could not have been impeached if no such confidential relation had existed. So nothing can be more important than the jurisdiction long asserted and upheld by the Court in watching over and protecting, those who are placed in a situation to require protection against acts of those who have influence over them by which acts the person having such influence obtains any benefit by himself. In such case the Court has always regarded the transaction with jealousy.' [Per Lord Hatherley in Turner v. Collins (1871) L R 7 Ch 329 (338)]—a jealousy almost invariable, in Lord Emswold's words (Hatch v. Hatch 9 Ves at p 296) Pollock & Contract p 582.

S 111

'Position' implies lawful relation. See Hargrave v. Eversard, 6 Ir Eq Rep N 9 273 where the parties were paramour and adulteress. Whitley v. Stokes Vol II, p 912. But the cases in which this jurisdiction has been actually exercised are considered as merely instances of the application of a principle 'applying to all the variety of relations in which dominion may be exercised by one person over another. Per Sir S Romilly arg. Huguenin v. Baseley 14 Ves 285 and adopted by Lord Cottenham in Dent v. Bennett, 4 My & Cr 269 (277) Billage v. Southee 2 H 534 540 Pollock & contract p 583. In Parfitt v. Lauless, L R 2 P & D 462 Lord Penance laid down that such position includes the positions of a parent and child, man and wife, doctor and patient, attorney and client, confessor and penitent, and guardian and ward. But the list is by no means exhaustive. His lordship added to the list of suspected relations that of promoters of a company to the company which is their creature. Fraser v. New Sombbrero Phosphate Co 3 App Ca at p 1230. But the soundness of this decision is doubted by Sir Frederic Pollock. He says 'But is not personal confidence essential to make the pre-ent doctrine applicable? And has any case gone the length of putting in a promoter the burden of proving in the first instance that a contract between them and the company was a fair one?' Cf Fden v. Ridsdale Railway Lamp and Lighting Co (1889) 23 Q B D 369=58 L J Q B 579, where the duty is put on the ground of agency. So this section refers to transactions between attorney and client, doctor and patient, guardian and ward, trustee and ces que trust spiritual advisers and those whom they advise, wherever in fact a real or apparent authority is calculated to give one party to the transaction the means of dictating terms to and robbing the other party of perfect freedom of will. Huguenin v. Baseley, 2 W & T L C 597 Cur Contract 68. As to certain well known relations indeed the Court is not bound by authority to presume influence. As to any other relation which the Court judges to be of a confidential kind it is free to presume that an influence founded on the confidence exists or to require such proof thereof as it may think fit. In the absence of any special relation from which such influence is presumed the burden of proof is on the person impeaching the transaction, and he must show affirmatively that pressure or undue influence was employed. Blackie v. Clark 15 Beav, 595 Tobler v. Poler, 31 Beav 629 Pollock & Contract 584. To treat undue influence as having been established by proof of the relations of the parties having been such that the one naturally relied upon the other for advice and the other was in a position to dominate the will of the first in giving it is erroneous. That merely proves influence. It must be further established that a person in a position of domination has used the position

III S

30 P L R 288=116 Ind C 18,899= A I R 1927 Loh 309

Relation of confidence is presumed to continue 'Where a relation of confidence is once established either some positive act or some complete absence of abandonment must be shown in order to determine it it will not be considered as determined whilst the influence derived from it can reasonably be supposed to remain. Per Turner L J in Rhodes v Bate (1866) 1 Ch. 252 577 560 = 35 L. J. 1 267 Holman v Lohrey 4 D. M. G. 270 Where the influence has its inception in the legal authority of a parent or guardian it is presumed to continue for someone after the termination of the legal authority, and there is what may be called a complete emancipation so that a free and unfettered judgment may be formed independent of any sort of control objection that without this extension the rule would be practically meaningless. It is said that is a general rule a person should escape from the termination of the authority before the judgment can be supposed to be wholly emancipated this of course does not exclude actual proof of undue influence at any subsequent time Pollock & Colvill p. 787

Pollock & Conhact p 787

Agent. It is possible for an agent dealing directly with his principal to make a contract which the courts will uphold but such transactions to be unenforced unless they are approved by the master. There must be no misrepresentation, and an entire absence of concealment or suppression of any fact within the knowledge of the agent which might influence the principal, and the payment of or establishing the perfect fairness of the contract in itself, and that there has been on the part of the person trusted that it is clearly shown that the removal of all doubts respecting the fairness of the contract. Condit v. Blodwell, 22 N. F. 491 (2m), Ex parte Lacey 6 Ves. 625, Boobman v. Rothschild, 3 Sum. 153 Rothschild v. Broolman, 2 D. & C. 188, Gill v. Tuppermore, 3 Beav. 78, Phil Chand v. Laidla 25 A. 358 = 23 A. W. N. 70 That within v. Ali Hosam, 13 B. L. R. 127 = 21 W. R. 310 1 I A 192 (P. C.), Kamatal v. Kamin Deb, 1 B. L. R. 100, 10 W. R. 128 Alfred Khan v. Enay Ali 18 C. 545 (P. C.) = 18 I A 144, Puckton v. Wooma, 10 W. R. 128

V. Noonan, 10 W R 128

Parent and child. A similar rule is applied to the dealings of a parent

ՆԱԽ ԶԵՄԵՐՈՒՄԻ ԶԻՐԿԱՆ ԴԱՄԱՆ ԸՆԹՈՑ ԶՆԻ ԲԶԶՈՒԼՆԱԽԱՆԻՉՈՒՄԸ ԶՈՐ ԿԱՅԱՆ ԻՄՈՒՅ ԲԱՆԱԿԱՆ

(The following text is mirrored bleed-through from the reverse side of the page and is therefore illegible.)

In the case of a child's gift of its property to a parent the circumstances attending the same way as the other two, but with a different set of parameters. The results are shown in Table 1. The results show that the model is able to predict the behavior of the system with a high degree of accuracy. The model is able to predict the behavior of the system for a wide range of parameters, and the results are consistent with the experimental data. The model is able to predict the behavior of the system for a wide range of parameters, and the results are consistent with the experimental data.

but it cannot be deemed prima facie void the presumption is in favor of its validity and, in order to set it aside, the Court must be satisfied that it was upon the parent to show, in the clearest and most satisfactory manner, that it is in every particular worthy of receiving the sanction of a Court of Equity

1985-1986

Funkelplant, 26 L. I Ch 753; Hantopp v Hantopp, 26 L. I Ch 471; Dens

date v. Dennsdale 37 L. J. Cl. 806, Buy v. Oppenheim, 26 Beav. 594, Polls v.

1974-75, 1975-76, 1976-77, 1977-78, 1978-79, 1979-80, 1980-81, 1981-82, 1982-83, 1983-84, 1984-85, 1985-86, 1986-87, 1987-88, 1988-89, 1989-90, 1990-91, 1991-92, 1992-93, 1993-94, 1994-95, 1995-96, 1996-97, 1997-98, 1998-99, 1999-00, 2000-01, 2001-02, 2002-03, 2003-04, 2004-05, 2005-06, 2006-07, 2007-08, 2008-09, 2009-10, 2010-11, 2011-12, 2012-13, 2013-14, 2014-15, 2015-16, 2016-17, 2017-18, 2018-19, 2019-20, 2020-21, 2021-22, 2022-23, 2023-24, 2024-25, 2025-26, 2026-27, 2027-28, 2028-29, 2029-30, 2030-31, 2031-32, 2032-33, 2033-34, 2034-35, 2035-36, 2036-37, 2037-38, 2038-39, 2039-40, 2040-41, 2041-42, 2042-43, 2043-44, 2044-45, 2045-46, 2046-47, 2047-48, 2048-49, 2049-50, 2050-51, 2051-52, 2052-53, 2053-54, 2054-55, 2055-56, 2056-57, 2057-58, 2058-59, 2059-60, 2060-61, 2061-62, 2062-63, 2063-64, 2064-65, 2065-66, 2066-67, 2067-68, 2068-69, 2069-70, 2070-71, 2071-72, 2072-73, 2073-74, 2074-75, 2075-76, 2076-77, 2077-78, 2078-79, 2079-80, 2080-81, 2081-82, 2082-83, 2083-84, 2084-85, 2085-86, 2086-87, 2087-88, 2088-89, 2089-90, 2090-91, 2091-92, 2092-93, 2093-94, 2094-95, 2095-96, 2096-97, 2097-98, 2098-99, 2099-00, 2100-01, 2101-02, 2102-03, 2103-04, 2104-05, 2105-06, 2106-07, 2107-08, 2108-09, 2109-10, 2110-11, 2111-12, 2112-13, 2113-14, 2114-15, 2115-16, 2116-17, 2117-18, 2118-19, 2119-20, 2120-21, 2121-22, 2122-23, 2123-24, 2124-25, 2125-26, 2126-27, 2127-28, 2128-29, 2129-30, 2130-31, 2131-32, 2132-33, 2133-34, 2134-35, 2135-36, 2136-37, 2137-38, 2138-39, 2139-40, 2140-41, 2141-42, 2142-43, 2143-44, 2144-45, 2145-46, 2146-47, 2147-48, 2148-49, 2149-50, 2150-51, 2151-52, 2152-53, 2153-54, 2154-55, 2155-56, 2156-57, 2157-58, 2158-59, 2159-60, 2160-61, 2161-62, 2162-63, 2163-64, 2164-65, 2165-66, 2166-67, 2167-68, 2168-69, 2169-70, 2170-71, 2171-72, 2172-73, 2173-74, 2174-75, 2175-76, 2176-77, 2177-78, 2178-79, 2179-80, 2180-81, 2181-82, 2182-83, 2183-84, 2184-85, 2185-86, 2186-87, 2187-88, 2188-89, 2189-90, 2190-91, 2191-92, 2192-93, 2193-94, 2194-95, 2195-96, 2196-97, 2197-98, 2198-99, 2199-00, 2200-01, 2201-02, 2202-03, 2203-04, 2204-05, 2205-06, 2206-07, 2207-08, 2208-09, 2209-10, 2210-11, 2211-12, 2212-13, 2213-14, 2214-15, 2215-16, 2216-17, 2217-18, 2218-19, 2219-20, 2220-21, 2221-22, 2222-23, 2223-24, 2224-25, 2225-26, 2226-27, 2227-28, 2228-29, 2229-30, 2230-31, 2231-32, 2232-33, 2233-34, 2234-35, 2235-36, 2236-37, 2237-38, 2238-39, 2239-40, 2240-41, 2241-42, 2242-43, 2243-44, 2244-45, 2245-46, 2246-47, 2247-48, 2248-49, 2249-50, 2250-51, 2251-52, 2252-53, 2253-54, 2254-55, 2255-56, 2256-57, 2257-58, 2258-59, 2259-60, 2260-61, 2261-62, 2262-63, 2263-64, 2264-65, 2265-66, 2266-67, 2267-68, 2268-69, 2269-70, 2270-71, 2271-72, 2272-73, 2273-74, 2274-75, 2275-76, 2276-77, 2277-78, 2278-79, 2279-80, 2280-81, 2281-82, 2282-83, 2283-84, 2284-85, 2285-86, 2286-87, 2287-88, 2288-89, 2289-90, 2290-91, 2291-92, 2292-93, 2293-94, 2294-95, 2295-96, 2296-97, 2297-98, 2298-99, 2299-00, 2300-01, 2301-02, 2302-03, 2303-04, 2304-05, 2305-06, 2306-07, 2307-08, 2308-09, 2309-10, 2310-11, 2311-12, 2312-13, 2313-14, 2314-15, 2315-16, 2316-17, 2317-18, 2318-19, 2319-20, 2320-21, 2321-22, 2322-23, 2323-24, 2324-25, 2325-26, 2326-27, 2327-28, 2328-29, 2329-30, 2330-31, 2331-32, 2332-33, 2333-34, 2334-35, 2335-36, 2336-37, 2337-38, 2338-39, 2339-40, 2340-41, 2341-42, 2342-43, 2343-44, 2344-45, 2345-46, 2346-47, 2347-48, 2348-49, 2349-50, 2350-51, 2351-52, 2352-53, 2353-54, 2354-55, 2355-56, 2356-57, 2357-58, 2358-59, 2359-60, 2360-61, 2361-62, 2362-63, 2363-64, 2364-65, 2365-66, 2366-67, 2367-68, 2368-69, 2369-70, 2370-71, 2371-72, 2372-73, 2373-74, 2374-75, 2375-76, 2376-77, 2377-78, 2378-79, 2379-80, 2380-81, 2381-82, 2382-83, 2383-84, 2384-85, 2385-86, 2386-87, 2387-88, 2388-89, 2389-90, 2390-91, 2391-92, 2392-93, 2393-94, 2394-95, 2395-96, 2396-97, 2397-98, 2398-99, 2399-00, 2400-01, 2401-02, 2402-03, 2403-04, 2404-05, 2405-06, 2406-07, 2407-08, 2408-09, 2409-10, 2410-11, 2411-12, 2412-13, 2413-14, 2414-15, 2415-16, 2416-17, 2417-18, 2418-19, 2419-20, 2420-21, 2421-22, 2422-23, 2423-24, 2424-25, 2425-26, 2426-27, 2427-28, 2428-29, rely, a free agent, that he had adequate independent advice.

[illegible]

was desirous of making it "Pollack on Contract" p 787. The same rule is applicable in cases of persons in loco parents such as uncle, in loco parents 137, step father in loco parentis and step daughter (Kempson v. Ishibe 10 C.

261

S 111. 15, Espey v. Lale, 10 H 260) As regards the fiduciary relationship between guardian and ward Lide Hatch v. Hatch, 9 Vca 297, Woodland v. Irwing, 1 Sm 437. The equitable doctrine of undue influence applies to cases in which the position of the donor and donee has been such that it has been the duty of the donee (e.g. father to advise the donor (son), or even to manage his property for him. In such cases the Court throws upon the donee the burden of proving that he has not abused his position, and of proving that the gift made to him has not been brought about by any undue influence on his part. Lal Shmi v. Roop Lal, 17 M L J 19 = 30 M 169 (F B).

Husband and wife. From the confidential relations which exist between husband and wife a presumption of undue influence arises in relation to any transfer of property between them, and in order to sustain a conveyance or gift by the wife to the husband the burden of proof is upon him to show that the transaction was freely and deliberately made and that it was fair and proper. Bhat Jones Es. § 190, see also Moonshe Bhatia v. Sheemsoomssa, 11 M I A 751. Widool Ali v. Kammumssa, 9 W R 13. Ikum v. Napian, 20 A 447, see also Lord Hardwicke's remarks in Grigby, Cobbet v. Brock, 20 Beav 524, but see Aedby v. Nedby, 5 De G & Sm 377. There is fiduciary relation between persons engaged to be married. Lage v. Howe, 11 Beav 227, see also Coulson v. Allison, 2 D I J 521, 524. Where the husband stood in a position of relative confidence to his wife and she entered into a transaction under his guidance the burden of proving good faith is on him. To uphold the transaction it must be shown she was given that care and advice which was due to her in her situation. Purata Prosad v. Nasir Ahmed, 11 O L J 219 = 79 Ind Crs 850 = 1925 Oudh 16. Where the vendor had been living separately and was not under the vendee's influence the rule as to burden of proof in section 11 does not apply. Jur Lal v. Sheo Chand, 6 Lah I J 403 = 85 Ind Crs 293 = A I R 1925 Lah 123.

Spiritual adviser. According to the English law spiritual influence would be presumed between a clergyman and any person placing confidence in him. Dent v. Bennett, 7 Sm 26 p. 546, see also Nollidge v. Prince, 29 L J Ch 857. Lyon v. Horne, 6 Gr 65. Utmed v. Skinner, 36 Ch D 145. Worley v. Longman (1893) 1 Ch 776 = 62 L J Ch 515. The same rule is applicable in India where the transaction is between a guru and his disciple. (Mann Singh v. Umadat, 12 A 123) or a pindharashmi lady and her family priest. Kamru v. Krishna, 16 C W N 649.

Solicitor or pleader and client. Where a solicitor or a pleader purchases or obtains a benefit from a client, a Court of Equity expects him to be able to show that he has taken no advantage of his professional position, that the client was so dealing with him as to be free from the influence which a solicitor must necessarily possess, and that the solicitor has done as much to protect his client's interests as he would have done in the case of a client dealing with a stranger. Sastry v. Ang, 5 H L C at p. 65. Gibson v. Jeyes, 6 Ves 266. McPherson v. Hill, 3 App Crs 254, 272, see also Furshong v. Moona, 1 B I R 95. Kammi Sundari v. Kahi Prosanna, 12 C 22. Umohori v. Komauhat, 3 C 473. Shanmudhone v. Susila Bala, 76 C 49 = 12 C W N 1102. The Court does not hold that an attorney is incapable of purchasing from his client, but watches such a transaction with jealousy and throws on the attorney the onus of showing that the bargain is speaking generally as good as any that could have been obtained by due diligence from any other purchaser. Fisam v. J G for Gibbalter, I R P C 516, 556, 559. While the relation of solicitor and client subsists the solicitor cannot take the gift from his client. Morgan v. Munnell, 6 Ch D 638, but see Jam Perisel v. Prince Phoolpattee, 7 W R 99. The principle that, in the absence of competent independent advice, a transaction between persons in the relation of solicitor and client or a confidential relationship of a similar character cannot be upheld if impugned unless the person seeking to enforce the contract can prove affirmatively that the person standing in such confidential position has disclosed all the information in his possession without reservation, in fact, further, how that the transaction was itself a fair one is one of general application and not a technical rule of English law. The same principle applies although the relationship of solicitor and client in a strict sense has been discontinued, so long as relationship is proved or may be presumed to continue Albion v. Clayhall, (1907) 97 L. J. P. C. 148, Agnew v. Debenham, (1923) A. C. 673=92 L. J. P. C. 148. If it can be shown that the solicitor had fulfilled all the duties which attached to his confidential relationship towards his client the fact that he subsequently made a considerable profit on the transaction will not render it void and unenforceable, but in the absence of such evidence, a purchaser from the solicitor is not entitled to a decree for specific performance of the contract Dominion Banknote Co. v. Hibbert, (1923) A. C. 673=92 L. J. P. C. 148. A solicitor must not deal with his client on his own account as in undisclosed principal Pollock on Contracts 587, see also Kapoor v. Dymally, (1923) 29 C. W. N. 491 P. C., Valabai v. Raj Begam, 19 C. W. N. 163 (P. C.)=23 Ind. Cas. 642, In re Fishard, 12 Ind. Cas. 785. The rule applicable to solicitor and client applies to certificated conveyancer counsel and confidential adviser and their clients, Rhodes v. Bates, 1 Ch. D. 252 Brown v. Kennedy, 33 Benv. 133. A pleader's clerk is not as a matter of course presumed to occupy the position of active confidence within the meaning of this section towards his clients Minal v. Dharmoo, 9 C. P. L. R. 35. As between attorney and client, the existence of fiduciary relationship alone or the fact that certain bills of costs were not taxed but were settled out of Court by execution of a deed, will not justify a Court in reopening accounts settled on which the bond is based, unless sufficient grounds of suspicion exist or the bills are prima facie shown to be extortionate Shanmugam Dutt v. Sunita Bala, 12 C. W. N. 1102, Lambert v. Smith, (1891) 1 Ch. 73. The pleader stood in a fiduciary capacity to his client and must therefore be deemed to be in a position to dominate the will. And under s. 111, Evidence Act, the onus lay on him to prove that his client's consent to the appropriation was not due to undue influence on his part. In re Vindas on behalf of Vaidanabai S. L. R. 223=15 Ind. Cas. 785=13 C. P. L. J. 518. An executed person, who acts as mutual to another first come of age, stands in a position of active confidence towards the latter within the meaning of s. 111, Evidence Act. Where a deed in favour of a person standing in the position of active confidence towards the vendor is impeached as being bid for want of consideration, the good faith of the transaction is certainly in question and section 111 of the Evidence Act applies Swal Singh v. Bahoo, 25 N. L. R. 150.

Medical attendant and patient. The rule applicable to a transaction between a solicitor or a pleader and his client is also applicable in a transaction between a medical attendant and his patient as their relationship is also considered as a confidential one Dent v. Bunnell, 1 W. & A. C. 269, Brillay v. Southey, 9 H. 531, Spence v. Logan Dm. 319, but see Khalie v. Chai, 13 Benv. 599, 603, Pillai v. Karier, 1 Ann. 1.

Other persons. The donee on the strength of a deed of gift, sued the son of donor for possession of property which had belonged to the deceased donor. In evidence the donee produced a deed of gift from which it could be seen that the donor was in old man of 100 years of age, that the donee was very intimate with him and had lent him money, that the old man not only distributed his property with him and his wife but he striped himself of all the property he was so careful to hold that the donor's son had merely to prove that the donee was in a position by so doing he was able to shift the onus of proving good faith on to the donor to the will of the gift donor and that he was in a position to do so. Said v. Sayar Khondak, 11 R. 190 and 75.

Application of the rule in cases of Wills. The rule underlying this section in some cases has not been made applicable to Wills, as to which under this section it is not proper to say Kryew v. Krasovonough 6 H. L. C. 3 Henderson v. Atterhall, 5 D. W. G. 801 111 317 Wallace v. Smith, 29 Benv. 291 Leigh v. Lawless, 1 R. 2 P. & D. 162 165, Clay v. Lovemore (1930) A. C. 119. In Leigh v. Lawless the Court said "There is a difference between the case of Wills and the case of contracts or gifts or settlements or deeds is regarded the burden of enforce a document executed by a purdanashin lady, all that is necessary is to convince the Court that the transaction was a fair one and that the lady understood the act to which she was subscribing. Bhagwati v. Chohi, 21 All L J 689 = 55 Ind Cas 698 see also Motilal Das v. The Eastern Mortgage and Agency Co. Ltd., 25 C W N 265 = 17 I A 265 (P C), Kamant v. Digbijai Singh, 43 A 525 = 15 L W 1 = 14 I A 351 (P C). The Court when called upon to deal with a deed executed by a purdanashin lady, must satisfy itself upon the evidence, first that the deed was actually executed by her or by some person duly authorised by her with a full understanding of what she was about to do, secondly that she had full knowledge of the nature and effect of the transaction into which she is said to have entered, and, thirdly, that she had independent and disinterested advice in the matter. These principles will be found to fall broadly into two groups, namely, first, cases when the person who seeks to hold the lady to the terms of her deed is one who stood towards her in a fiduciary character or in some relation of person to confidence and secondly cases where the person who seeks to enforce the deed was an absolute stranger and dealt with her at arms length. In the former class of cases the Court will act with great caution and will presume confidence put and influence exerted, in the latter class of cases the Court will require the confidence and influence to be proved intrinsically. Independent and competent advice does not mean independent and competent approval, it simply means that the advice shall be removed entirely from the suspected atmosphere and conveyed from the clear language of an independent mind free from that taint of interest and the party acting should know precisely the nature and consequences of the transaction. It is not an inflexible rule that a purdanashin lady must have independent legal advice. The Court should have regard to the intellectual attainments of the lady concerned and will naturally be disinclined to set aside the deed of the lady concerned where she is proved to have been of business habits, to have been literate and to have possessed a capacity to judge for herself. Satish Chandra Ghosh v. Kalidasa Das, 34 C L J 529 see also Arishna Kishore v. Narendra Chandani, 34 C L J 33, Hua Bibi v. Ramdhon Lal 6 Pat L J 465 = 2 Pat L 1 752 = 62 Ind Cas 340, Sri Ram v. Nand Keshore 5 Lah 495 = 1925 Lah 196 (2), Fazlunnessa v. Mulhtar Ahmad 47 A 703 = 52 I A 312 = 89 Ind Cas 649 = 42 C L J 531 = 23 A L J 1000 = 49 M L J 758 (P C). The mere declaration by the transferor, a purdanashin lady, subsequently made that she had not understood what she was doing obviously is not in itself conclusive. It must be a question whether, having regard to the proved personality of the transferor, the nature of the transfer, the circumstances under which it has been made and the whole history of the parties it is reasonably established that the deed executed was the free and intelligent act of the settlor or not. If the answer is in the affirmative, those relying on the deed have discharged the onus which rests on them. Of course fraud, duress and actual undue influence are separate matters. Lalai Lunnassa Begum v. Debi Lal Sh., 101 Ind Cas 29 = 51 C W N 693 = 25 A L J 514 = 6 Pat L 1 490 = A I R 1927 P C 81. A person who takes a document from a purdanashin lady is bound to prove the validity of the document from every possible angle of attack, when the bonafides of the document is challenged. Kalyani Bibi v. Sahajan Bibi 111 Ind Cas 716 see also Ruhulla v. Hossain Ali 33 C W N 929 = A I R 1928 P C 301 = 48 C L J 412 = 55 M L J 84 (P C) see also Beni Dun v. Ham Nares A I R 1929 A 941, Tappauddin v. Kulabuddin, 10 All 761 = 50 Pooj L R 288 = 116 Ind Cas 799 = A I R 1929 Lah 309, Mahammad Ibrahim v. Bidi Marom 5 Pat 184 = 117 Ind Cas 658 = A I R 1929 Pat 410, Ananda Priya v. Bejoy Krishna, 91 Ind Cas 705 = A I R 1926 C 613, Thirathnan v. Gunjeswari 96 Ind Cas 571 = A I R 1926 Pat 29, Ham Samtan v. Gobinda Das 5 P 616 = A I R 1926 P 552.

S 112

112

Birth during marriage conclusive
proof of legitimacy

The fact that my person was born during the continuance of a valid marriage between his mother and my father, or within two hundred and eighty days after its dissolution, the mother remaining unmarried, shall be conclusive proof charge of adultery rested on the bare fact that she gave birth to a child 330 days or 331 days after the date when petitioner had last access to her. Held that though under the circumstances very considerable doubt is thrown upon the honesty and truth of the wife's assertion that the petitioner was the father of the child Courts are not justified in the absence of any other evidence, in holding that the child is not the child of the petitioner and that, under s 112, Evidence Act, Courts are bound to assume that the child is legitimate unless it is proved that it could not have been begotten by him. P v P 77 P R 1911. The 280 days chosen in the section is no doubt the average period of gestation, but medical authorities show that it is only an average and that the period is often longer or shorter in individual cases. Sri Datta Venkata v Gatham 27 M L J 780=16 M L J 503. It may be regarded as proved that the period of gestation may be 296 days and most authorities agree that the interval may be as long as 308 days. The period fixed by the legislation for the purposes of s 112 is 280 days. Under section 60 of the Evidence Act the Court is entitled to consider and act upon the opinion of experts contained in treatises to which it is referred. John Hone v Charlotte Hone 2 M L J 391=11 M L J 417=1913 M W N 953 (F B). Where a boy was born about seven months after his father and mother were lawfully married and it was not disputed that they had opportunity of access to each other at a time when he could have been begotten of them. Held that the boy was the legitimate son of his parents. Mahbub Ali v Say Khan 26 Ind Crs 969. Where at the time of conception of a child its mother had been lawfully married to A and subsequently on divorce she remarried B and the child was born within three months of the marriage. Held that the child must be treated as the legitimate offspring of B in the absence of proof that B had no access to the mother at the time when child would have been begotten. S 112 of the Evidence Act refers to the point of time of the birth of a child and not to the time of its conception as the deciding fact in a case of disputed legitimacy. Palani v Sethu 20 L W 69=81 Ind Crs 456=A I R 1924 Mad 677=47 M I J 150. Pal Singh v Jagu 7 Lah 368=27 P L R 531=A I R 1926 Lah 529, Sethu v Lalani, 49 V 553=A I R 1926 M 628. Where the husband died on 7 10 1923 and the wife was living with him at that time and the child was born on 25 5 1924 held, that this section was applicable and that no evidence could be adduced, to disprove legitimacy. Ponnamamy v Annam Kanoo, 6 Mys L J 249.

S 112

Had no access to each other now proved. In this section it should be remembered that the words "access" and "non access" mean the existence or non-existence of opportunities for sexual intercourse. Banbury Peagee 1 Sm 2 Sm 159 5 Cl & J 250. In the above case Lord Eldon said Lord Hale in Hospell v Collins decided that the issue for the jury was as to the fact of access or as I understand him to mean sexual intercourse. For the access in question is of a peculiar nature not being access in the ordinary reception of the word but access between husband and wife viewed with reference to the result namely the procreation of children. By access I mean opportunities of having sexual intercourse. Per Alderson Bin Cope v Cope 1 M & Rob 275. Access is such access as affords an opportunity of sexual intercourse. Shay v Thiphot 2 Myl & K 349. Lord Longdale in one case calls it "generating access", saying. The absence of sexual intercourse where there has been some society intercourse or access has been called non generating access. Hargrave v Hargrave 9 Ben 225. In R v Inhabitants of Mansfield, 1 Q B 141 it appeared that a wife was deserted by her husband who went to live with another woman that the wife at the end of three or four years married another man and had two children that eleven years after the second marriage she again cohabited with her husband. It not appearing where the husband was between the time of his deserting and returning to his wife it was held that the evidence was insufficient to show non access when the children were begotten.

The question is and Lord Denman whether in this case there be any evidence of illegitimacy and to establish that it is necessary to show non access of the husband. That may be proved by circumstances one of which certainly is an adulterous intercourse between the husband or wife and another party. But here the whole proof consists only of that fact. We are not told what the husband was doing or where residing at the time the children were begotten" In Bury v Philpot, 2 Myl & K 349, the wife of P left him and went to live with her father. Shortly after, her father dying, she formed a connection with one H, with whom she went to live. P took a house opposite where they resided and had frequent interviews with her. She had two children during this time. It was held that they must be declared legitimate. "Access" said the Master, "if it is such access as affords an opportunity of sexual intercourse, and where the fact of such access between a husband and wife within a period capable of raising the legal inference as to the legitimacy of an after born child is not disputed, probabilities can have no weight, and a case ought never to be sent to a jury." There is nothing against the evidence of access except evidence of the adulterous intercourse of the wife with H, which does not affect the legal inference, for if it were proved that she slept every night with her paramour from the period of her separation from her husband I must still declare the children to be legitimate. The interest of the public depends upon a strict adherence to the rule of law. In Van Aernam v Van Aernam, 1 Barb Ch 575 the wife of the plaintiff was for several years living in the same town with him as the kept mistress of another person, the husband making no exertions to break up the intercourse. The Court held that in the absence of evidence of non access the husband would be presumed to be the father of children begotten upon the wife during that time. Lawson Pre Est pp 145 46 see also Nga Hun v Chou, 26 Ind Cis 996.

From proof of "access"—as this word is used in this connection—the presumption of sexual intercourse is very strong. Plowes v Berry 31 L J Ch 650. In that case B was married in 1829, became a lunatic in 1833 and was confined in a lunatic asylum until his death. His wife who lived twenty five miles away occasionally visited her husband, but the keepers of the asylum had strict orders not to allow them at any time to remain alone together. He was allowed freedom of the grounds, and the porter sometimes being absent it was possible for a person to enter without being seen. In March 1855, she visited the asylum, remaining alone for sometime with her husband. A child was born in December 1835. There were rumours at that time that Mr. B was living in adultery with one D. But the Court held that the child was legitimate. See the corrected report of the case in 33 L J Ch 315. In King v Luffe, 5 Fust 207 it was held that non access of the husband need not be proved during the whole period of the wife's pregnancy—it was sufficient if it was naturally impossible (as where he had access only a fortnight before the birth) that he could be the father.

That husband and wife slept together affords a strong and irresistible inference of sexual intercourse. Icoge v Filmonds 25 L J Ch 125 see also Russell v Russell (1924) P 1. "But in the absence of such irresistible evidence, the fact of sexual intercourse must be tried like every other fact to which no direct evidence is applicable. Proof that the husband and wife are living in the same town, and so had opportunities of meeting and, therefore, of sexual intercourse, would, in the absence of any proof raising a presumption to the contrary, be sufficient to establish the legitimacy of a child born of the wife. Proof that they had been in the same room or the same house together would be much stronger evidence of the fact, the strength of which however would vary with the circumstances, and is neither would be direct proof of sexual intercourse, but of facts from which, taken by themselves, sexual intercourse would be inferred. Such inference must, as in all other cases be capable of being repelled by the proof of facts tending to raise a contrary inference. Morris v Davis 5 Cl & F 163 Bahadur v Yun 28 P L 1906.

But proof of access is not conclusive. R v Inhabitants of Minspell, 1 Q B 111. Cope v Cope 1 M & Rob 275, R v Shepherd, 6 Biaz 253, Pantlauer v Pale 1 M H C 178. It being only proved that the opportunity for sexual intercourse had existed—that the parties lived in the same house—and the fact if not being proved evidence is admissible to disprove the presumption that it did take place. The parties may be allowed within the four walls and the fact of sexual intercourse not only disproved by direct testimony but by circumstantial evidence raising a strong presumption against it.

§ 112 the fact to state this principle briefly—the proof of sexual intercourse being conclusive, the presumption cannot be attacked, but the evidence by which such fact is to be established may be contradicted. The law is not so unreasonable as to demand proof of non access by witnesses, who were with her every minute of the time whenever she is supposed to have been begotten with a child. If such facts and circumstances are proved, is would induce a rational and well founded belief that the husband could have no access, it is sufficient. Lauzon Pre Est p 118. The mere fact that the husband was, during the period within which the child must have been begotten, suffering from a serious carbuncle, does not in itself rebut the legal presumption under section 112. Narendia Nath Pahari v Hanugobind Pahari, 21 C 111 P C = 29 I A 17 = 6 C W N 116 = 1 Bom L R 243. One B died of small pox after a few days illness on the 16th May, 1895, and his widow gave birth to a son on the 4th January, 1896. In a suit by the reversionary heirs for a declaration that the child was not the son of B, Held that the suit was governed by s 112 Evidence Act and the burden of proof was on the plaintiff. Irtok Nath v Lachmin 25 A 403 (P C) = 7 C W N 617 = 5 Bom L R 471 = 30 I A 152.

A sues B, his father, and C the adopted son of B, for partition. B disowned A's paternity, and stated that his mother D lived separate from him for a long time and that he had no access to D during the period when A could have been conceived by her. B married a first wife, and again married D as he had no son by the former. They both quarrelled subsequently. D sued B for maintenance and B met it by bringing one for restitution of conjugal rights, and became reconciled to each other. Though she lived in her mother's house she was constantly visiting B in his house without the knowledge of his first wife. When D was under the state of conception, B executed a deed of settlement in favour of C in which he did not disown the legitimacy of A. Held that (1) in those circumstances the onus lay on B to prove non access within the meaning of s 112 of the Evidence Act, and the fact that B believed D to be guilty of infidelity and produced witnesses to prove it, did not discharge the onus. A's legitimacy must in these circumstances be presumed. Chegorapati v Chegorapati (1911) 1 M W N 312 = 10 Ind C 369. In order to establish the illegitimacy of a person born during the continuance of a valid marriage between his mother and any man it is necessary to show conclusively that the parties to the marriage had no access to each other at any time when he could have been begotten. Dalipa v Rela, 19 P L R 1914 = 22 Ind C 409. The presumption created by s 112 of the Evidence Act can only be rebutted by proof of non access, and to prove non access, the evidence must be such as to exclude all doubt. If the husband has had access, adultery on the wife's part will not justify a finding of illegitimacy. Proof of impotence would be equivalent to proof of non access. Nga Tun E v M Chou J U B R (1914) 3rd Q 23 = 26 Ind C 396 = 16 Cr I J 81 see Bhogwant Singh v Narayan Singh 56 P W R 1917 = 39 Ind C 29. Kahan Singh v Nutha 7 Lrb 181 = 90 Ind C 123.

Conduct of supposed father and mother. On the question of access the conduct of the supposed father or mother towards the child is relevant. Cope v Cope 1 M & Rob 275. In the case of Worris v Davis 5 Cl & F 163, the wife concealed the birth of a child from her husband and declared to him that she never had such a child; the husband disclaimed all knowledge of it and acted up to his death as if no such child was in existence; the wife's paramour aided in concealing the child, reared and educated it as his own and left it all his property by Will. This repelled the presumption that the child was legitimate. Any evidence of the conduct of husband and wife towards each other is relevant. Goss v Froman 99 Ky 318. In the Laubury Peccage Case, 1 Sm & S 155 Lord Redesdale said: "I admit that the law presumes the child of the wife of A born when A might have had sexual intercourse with her or in due time after to be the legitimate child of A but this was merely considered a ground of presumption and might be met by opposing circumstances. The fact indeed, that any child is the child of any man is not capable of direct proof and can only be the result of presumption drawn from facts either certain or proved by credible testimony, by which may be determined the proof of a fact."

alleged, but of which there was no direct proof. It is, therefore, of high importance to consider in a question of legitimacy whether the fact of such knowledge as would demonstrate the legitimacy did take place, or whether by circumstances such acknowledgment was rendered impossible, as by the child being a posthumous child. If, on the contrary, it appears that the supposed father was ignorant of the birth of a child, and that the fact of his birth was concealed from him, such concealment is strong presumptive proof that there had existed no sexual intercourse which could have made him the father of such a child. When a father brings up a child as legitimate it amounts as his will been said to a duly assertion that he is legitimate. Berkeley Peerage Case, 4 Camp 409. So, the fact of the wife living in open adultery coupled with other facts eg, that the husband had only on one single occasion an opportunity for access, and that the wife concealed the birth of the child from her husband, is sufficient to rebut the presumption of intercourse. Cope v Cope, 1 M & Rob 275. And the illegitimacy of a child of a married woman is established beyond dispute when it is shown that she was living in adultery at the time it was begotten, and that her husband was residing in a part of the country which made access impossible. The Barony of Sale 1 H L Cas 507, Guney v Guney, 32 L J Ch 456. The presumption still holds where the parties are living apart from each other by mutual consent (St George v St Margaret, 1 Salk 123, Sidney v Sidney, 3 P Wms 275, Morris v Davies 5 Cl & F 163), but it is otherwise where they are separated by a decree of the Court, for in such a case the presumption is that they obey the decree. But the presumption, in the first case, is, of course, rebuttable by proof of non access. Law Pre Lv p 150.

There is, of course, a presumption that children born of a married woman during the life time of her husband are the legitimate offspring of that woman and her husband— but this is, after all a mere presumption, and as such rebuttable. So where such a woman had admittedly lived for years together with another person and they both had admitted and asserted such children to have been born of them, held, the above presumption must be regarded as having been completely rebutted and the children being the illegitimate sons of such other person, he was bound to maintain them, and persons, therefore, who have come into possession of his properties on his death, are liable to give the children maintenance to the extent of the property that has so come into their hands. Bahadur Sing v Yaru, 28 P R 1906. Where parentage of the plaintiff is challenged, though the burden is initially on him to show that he was the son of his parents, it is shifted on to the defendants as soon as he showed that he has been acknowledged by his parents to be their son and that he has been accepted as such by repute and habit for the last 23, 40 years, and it would require much clearer and stronger and more reliable evidence on the defendants' part to justify a finding against the plaintiffs' paternity. Krishna Rao v Raja of Puttapur, 102 Ind Cas 715=A I R 1927 Mid 733.

Declarations of husband and wife. Neither the declarations of the wife nor her testimony that the child was the child of a man other than her husband are admissible (Stegall v Stegall, 2 Brock 257, Pendell v Pendell 3 Strange 925, Cope v Cope, 1 M & Rob 275, Uchley v Sprigg 33 L J Ch 315, Stevens v Moss, 2 Comp 591), nor of the wife that the husband had not access or opportunities for access (R v Aca, 11 E t 13., Goodwright v Moss, Comp 591, Cross v Cross 3 Paige, 159), nor of the husband that he was not father of the child or had not access or opportunities for access. Wright v Holdgate 3 Cook, 158. King v Substant of Danton 5 Ad & Lill 150. Sir James Fitzjames Stephen says "Neither the mother nor the husband is a competent witness as to the fact of their having or not having had sexual intercourse with each other nor are any declarations by them upon that subject deemed to be relevant facts when the legitimacy of the woman's child is in question whether the mother or her husband can be called as a witness or not, provided that in applications for affiliation orders when proof has been given of the non access of the husband at any time when his wife's child could have been begotten the wife may give evidence as to the person by whom it was begotten." Steph Dig Et Cr 98, see also R v Luffe, 8 E t 207, Cope v Cope, 1 M & R

S 112. 272 L. J. Jeffer v. Edmunds, 27 L. J. 125 (135) R. v. Mansfield 1 Q. B. 111, Morris v. Davies 4 C. & P. 21; Huac v. Dragger, L. L. 23 Ch. D. 172. But a deposition of the husband is admissible to prove that he had never sexual intercourse with his wife before the marriage. The Pondett Terrace, (1903) A. C. 39. In that case Lord Halsbury L. J. said "I shall submit to your lordships that the evidence tendered is properly admissible. There was at one time authority for saying that if the husband and wife were within the four walls you must presume that there was intercourse and that you could not possibly contradict it. I think that view is completely exploded. The question is to be treated as a question of fact, and like every other question of fact when you are answering a presumption it may be answered by any evidence that is appropriate to the case. My lords that is not exactly the question which arises upon the objection taken here. The question is whether it is possible for a husband to be asked whether he had intercourse before marriage with the woman who afterwards became his wife. I confess, I shall be startled if I thought that that which appears to have been in the mind of Sir John Romilly (Jude Inou v. Inou 22 B. & W. 181 23 B. & W. 273) at the time he gave the decision referred to could be held to be the law of England. Is it conceivable that a man taking to wife a person whom he imagined to be a pure virgin and finding out that he had been deceived and that the woman was pregnant when he married her should not be at liberty to say afterwards that, so far as he was concerned, he had every reason to believe that he was not a virgin, having spurious issue put upon him, he should not be at liberty to say 'I never had intercourse with my wife before marriage'? The testimony of the parents, that they have or have not had connection in, on the same grounds of decency, morality, and policy,—been, until recent times, uniformly rejected by the Judges. Taylor § 950. But the rule is otherwise under this section. So in Indian married women can be examined as to non access of her husband during her married life without independent evidence being first offered to prove the legitimacy of her children. Isavio v. Ingles 18 B. 165, see also John Hauc v. Charlotte Hauc 39 M. 166, Bai Kamla v. Babu Bai, 95 Ind. Cis. 834=28 Bom. L. R. 607, Parbati v. Maharaj, 10 Ind. Cis. 188. In Premchand Hia v. Bai Galab, A. I. R. 1927 Bom. 591, Blackwell J. said:—
 Having regard to s. 7 Indian Divorce Act IV of 1869, I think that the rule laid down by the House of Lords in Russell v. Russell (1924) A. C. 687, to the effect that neither a husband nor a wife is permitted to give evidence of non intercourse after marriage to bastardize a child born in wedlock applies to divorce suits in India. But such statement should be corroborated. Vedanta Chari v. Marie 97 Ind. Cis. 359=1926 Mad. 1150, see also Parbati v. Maharaj 10 Ind. Cis. 188, but see John Hauc v. Charlotte Hauc 39 M. L. J. 591 (F. B.). The law of England is that the declarations of a father or mother cannot be admitted to bastardise the issue born after the marriage. The Evidence Act does not contain any such rule. Bai Kamla v. Babu Bai, 28 Bom. L. R. 607=A. I. R. 1926 Bom. 348.

Proof of marriage. It is upon the person who claims to be the legitimate issue of his parents to bring forward satisfactory evidence in support of their marriage. In such case no certain inference can be drawn from the evidence as to the conduct of relations and friends. Thal in Amjal v. Nawab Ali Khan, 9 Bom. L. R. 261=5 C. L. J. 1=17 M. L. J. 56. It is a well recognised rule of law that when a particular relationship is shown to exist such as marriage then its continuance must prima facie be presumed. For the purpose of s. 112 of the Evidence Act, the burden of proving that the divorce of the plaintiff's mother took place at a time which disentitles him from relying on the action lies on the defendants. It is not the plaintiff's duty to show when the divorce took place. If the defendants are unable to show that the divorce took place at a time which excludes the plaintiff from the operation of s. 112 then the conclusive proof in favour of the plaintiff arises and can only be displaced by its being shown that the parties to the marriage had no access to each other at any time when the plaintiff could have been begotten by the husband of his mother. Bluma v. Dhulappa 7 Bom. L. R. 95. This section cannot be applicable in any way to a marriage which is neither void ab initio (batil) nor also lately void but is fasid, i.e. irregular, inasmuch as this section is based on a division of marriages merely into two categories (valid and invalid) and cannot be applicable to Mahomedan Law which divides marriages into the categories void ab initio, fasid and valid. In any case if s 112 is held applicable, the word 'valid' in that section should be construed as 'lawful' so that the presumption would not apply to fasid marriages. Kamra v Hasan Ahmad, A I R 1926 Oudh 231=92 Ind Cas 82

Hindu Law Under Hindu Law, it is not necessary in order to render a child legitimate that the procreation as well as the birth should take place after marriage. Ootagappa Chetty v Collector of Pudukopoly 14 B L R 115 (1973) P C

Question of legitimacy is question of evidence The question of a child's paternity is not one of succession inheritance marriage or caste of any religious institution or usage within the meaning of s 13 of the Burma Laws Act. Nya Tan v Michon, U B R (1914) 3rd Q 33=26 Ind Cas 996=16 Cr L J 81. Where the point of decision is one of evidence (e.g. paternity) only the case would be governed by s 112 and not by the personal law of the parties. Ibid

Mahomedan Law The section proceeds upon adopting the period of birth as distinguished from conception as the turning point of legitimacy, but under the Mahomedan law questions of legitimacy are referred to the date of the conception of the child and not to the period of his birth. Muhammad Mahdad v Muhammad Ismail 10 A 289. The ordinary period of iddat for Mahomedan women is three months from the date of her divorce or from death of her husband. But if she be in the family way at the time of happening of either of these two events the period of iddat extends to the date of delivery of a fully or partly formed child whether it takes place before or after expiry of three months. A remarriage before expiry of iddat is void, but it is irregular and not void if it takes place after the iddat period is over but before delivery. In the last mentioned case a child born more than 280 days after the divorce by her first husband or his death but less than six months after her remarriage with the second husband is to be considered legitimate under s 112 of the Indian Evidence Act and is entitled to inherit her mother's second husband's property particularly where he admits the child to be his. Aurul Hasan v Muhammad Hasan 107 P W R 1910=78 P R 1910. According to the Mahomedan law a child, born six months after marriage or within two years after divorce, or the death of the husband is presumed to be his legitimate off-spring. But, if the question to be determined is one of evidence it will be governed by this Act. Ali haq Ali v Budh Singh 7 A 297. Neither paternity nor legitimacy can be obtained by adoption and a child begotten by Zena cannot be made legitimate by the subsequent marriage of its parents before its birth, section 112 of the Evidence Act being inapplicable to Muhammadans. Zafar Ali v Sograb 15 N L R 1=13 Ind Cas 883. But it has been held by the Allahabad High Court that the rule as to legitimacy contained in this section is a rule of procedure and not of substantive law and is such applicable to Muhammadans. Hayna v Imma 73 Ind Cas 783=1923 All 570, see also Mahar Ali v Budha Singh, 7 A 297 (F B), Manaj v Abdul 63 Ind Cas 286=43 A 673=19 A L J 713. Sibt Mahomed v Mahomed, 48 A 625=96 Ind Cas 582=24 A L J 723. The rule of Mahomedan law regarding gestation is a rule of evidence within the meaning of s 21 Evidence Act and the Courts are not bound by the rule of Mahomedan law in this respect. To such case this section applies. Ibrahim Bibi v Chitragh Dutt, A I R 1930 Lah 97, see also Muhammad v Ali Balsh, 76 P R 1891. Hayna v Imma, A I R 1923 All 570.

Presumption of legitimacy Where a party admits the paternity of the other party but pleads that he is of illegitimate descent the legal presumption being in favour of legitimacy the onus lies on the party alleging illegitimacy to prove it. Dulay Singh v Suraj Dutt 13 Ind Cas 178. In the Buddhist law there is no such thing as judicial separation, but an order under s 183 of the Criminal Procedure Code, until it is rescinded, is for all practical purposes the same thing as an order for judicial separation and if, while the order is in force a child is born to the wife the onus is shifted on to her of proving her legitimacy. Ma Mph v Ma Shur Bhu 6 Ind C 14 629. Before a presumption of legitimacy can arise under this section all the facts specified in the section must be proved. Maroti v Bhaip 69 Ind C 14 65. Where plaintiff claims to recover property as the son of B by his lawfully married wife D and defendant denies that D ever gave birth to a child and sets up that plaintiff is the son of one S the onus of proof is on the plaintiff to show that D gave birth to him or to any child before invoking the presumption under s 112. Lao Vir Singh v Batumika 11 A 170-20 A 1 271 66 Ind Cus 902. There is no presumption in favour of legitimacy without laying the foundation for it under s 112 of the Evidence Act or a presumption that a valid marriage had taken place between the parents. Chokulungam v Suman Bhattar 79 Ind C 14 623. In order to disprove legitimacy it must be shown that the parties to the marriage had no access to each other at any time when the child could have been begotten. Where the evidence showed that the father was living in another place and nothing more was proved the presumption under this section applied and there was no question of divorce under those circumstances. Kannaphan v Kullammal 1929 M W N 696. The presumption that a particular woman has passed the age of child bearing is one of fact to be determined partly by the light of general knowledge and partly by the life history of the person in question. It has several times been held to apply where the age of fifty three years has been passed but each case must depend on its particular circumstances. Hargras v Hargras 55 L J Ch 503. He White (1901) 1 Ch 570. Hills Fe Ltd 7. Widow's Trust 1 R 111 q 408. In re Miller's Estate L R 11 Eq 21. Druidson v Hampton 18 Ch D 213. Lyllon Edeson 19 Bery 567. Corton v May 9 Ch D 388. In re Hooley (1898) 2 Ch 567. Where divorce in the sense of a legal dissolution of marriage, has not taken place a child born must be taken to be born during the continuance of a valid marriage between a woman and her husband. Kannaphan v Kullammal V I R 1930 Mad 194.

S 113

113 A notification in the Gazette of India that any portion of British territory has been ceded to any Native State, Prince or Ruler, shall be conclusive proof that a valid cession of such territory took place at the date mentioned in such notification.

Scope of the section St 24 & 2, Vict c 67, s 25 does not protect s 113 of the Evidence Act though it does not disallow it. This section has provided that a notification in the Gazette that a territory has been ceded to a native prince shall be conclusive proof of a valid cession at the date mentioned in the notification. The value of this section depends on the constitutional question of prerogative. If the crown alone has power to cede territory then this provision of the law is valid and binding so long as it is not disallowed but if on the other hand, that power can only be exercised with the authority of Parliament, it follows, as a matter of course, that the Legislative council exceeds its powers, and that section 113 was and must continue to be bad law. Damodar Gardham v Ganesh Deoram, 10 B H C 37. In this case on appeal to the Privy Council (1 B 367 at p 461) Lord Shelborne said: Nothing in their judgments, turns in this case upon the Indian Evidence Act of 1872, section 113. The Governor General in Council being precluded by the Act 24 & 25 Vict chap 67, section 22, from legislating directly as to the sovereignty or dominion of the crown over any part of its territories in India, or as to the allegiance of British subjects, could not by any legislative Act purporting to make a notification in a Government Gazette conclusive evidence of a cession of territory exclude inquiry as to the nature and lawfulness of that cession. The British Crown has the power without the intervention of the Indian Parliament to make a cession of territory within British India to a foreign prince or feudatory. Lachmiparam v Partab Singh, 2 A 1. Damodar v Deoram 1 B 367 (P C)=3 I A 102. This section was an attempt, for political reasons, to exclude enquiry by Courts of justice, into the validity of the acts of the Government. But it has been decided by the Privy Council in Danodai v Deoram 1 B 367 (P C) that the Indian Legislature had no power to do this and the section is, therefore, a dead letter. Markby Ev 87

S 114

114 The Court may presume the existence of any fact which it thinks likely to have happened, regard being had to the common course of natural events, human conduct and public and private business, in their relation to the facts of the particular case

Court may presume existence of certain facts

Illustrations

The Court may presume—

(a) that a man who is in possession of stolen goods soon after the theft, is either the thief or has received the goods knowing them to be stolen, unless he can account for his possession,

(b) that an accomplice is unworthy of credit unless he is corroborated in material particulars,

(c) that a bill of exchange, accepted or endorsed, was accepted or endorsed for good consideration,

(d) that a thing or state of things which has been shown to be in existence within a period shorter than that within which such things or states of things usually cease to exist is still in existence

(e) that judicial and official acts have been regularly performed,

(f) that the common course of business has been followed in particular cases,

(g) that evidence which could be and is not produced would, if produced, be unfavourable to the person who withholds it

(h) that, if a man refuses to answer a question which he is not compelled to answer by law the answer, if given, would be unfavourable to him,

(i) that when a document creating an obligation is in the hands of the obligor the obligation has been discharged

But the Court shall also have regard to such facts as the following, in considering whether such maxims do or do not apply to the particular case before it — as to illustration (a)—a shop keeper has in his till a marked rupee soon after it was stolen, and cannot account for its possession specifically, but is continually receiving rupees in the course of his business as to illustration (b)—A a person of the highest character, is tried for causing a man's death or an act of negligence in arranging certain machinery B, a person of equally good character who also took part in the arrangement, describes precisely what was done, and admits and explains the common carelessness of A and himself as to illustration (c)—a crime is committed by several persons A, B and C three of the criminals, are captured on the spot and kept apart from each other Each gives an account of the crime implicating D and the accounts corroborate each other in such a manner as to render previous concert highly improbable

as to illustration (e)—A, the drawer of a bill of exchange was a man of business B the acceptor, was a young and ignorant person, completely under A's influence as to illustration (d)—it is proved that a river ran in a certain course five years ago but it is known that there have been floods since that time which might change its course as to illustration (e)—a judicial act the regularity of which is in question, was performed under exceptional circumstances

s 114.

as to illustration (f)—the question is, whether a letter was received. It is shown to have been posted but the usual course of the post was interrupted by disturbances.

as to illustration (g)—a man refuses to produce a document which would bear on a contract of small importance on which he is sued, but which might also injure the feelings and reputation of his family.

is to illustration (h)—a man refuses to answer a question which he is not compelled by law to answer but the answer to it might cause loss to him in matters unconnected with the matter in relation to which it is asked.

is to illustration (i)—a bond is in possession of the obligor but the circumstances of the case are such that he may have stolen it.

Scope of the section. The effect of this section coupled with the general repealing clause at the beginning of the Act, is to make it perfectly clear that Courts of justice are to use their own common sense and experience in judging of the effect of particular facts and that they are to be subjected to technical rules whatever on the subject. Vide the Speech of Honble Mr Stephen in the Legislative Council. As regards relation of presumption to law of evidence Vide p 65 Supra. The illustrations given are for the most part cases of what in English law are called presumptions of law artificial rules as to the effect of evidence by which the Court is bound to guide its decision, subject however, to certain limitations which it is difficult either to understand or to apply, but which will be swept away by the section in question. Ibid. A 'presumption' is a rule of law that Courts or juries shall or may draw a particular inference from a particular fact or from particular evidence, unless and until the truth of such inference is disproved. Lawson Pre Lo 639. Presumptions are of two kinds natural and legal or artificial. The natural presumption is when a fact is proved wherefrom by reason of the connection founded on inference, the existence of another fact is directly inferred. The legal or artificial presumption is where the existence of the one fact is not direct evidence of the existence of the other, but the one fact existing and being proved the law raises an artificial presumption of the existence of the other. Quibick v Loder, 13 N J (L) 72. The terms of this section are such as to reduce to their proper position of mere maxims which are to be applied to facts by the Courts in their discretion, a large number of presumptions to which English law gives to a greater or less extent an artificial value. Nine of the most important of them are given by way of illustration. Steph Intro p 177. Presumptions of law are in reality, rules of law and part of the law itself, and the Court may draw the inference whenever the requisite facts are developed, whether in pleading or otherwise while all other presumptions, however obvious being only inferences of facts, cannot be made without the intervention of a jury. Best on Presumptions 18. Lawson Pre Ev 641. Justice v Lang 52 N Y 523. When certain facts are admitted or proven the Court takes notice without further proof of all such presumptions and inferences arising from them as are warranted by uniform experience and also all such consequences as are known to flow from the laws which govern the matter and which are applicable to the proven or admitted facts. Heisk v Sullivan, 93 Ill 261 (Am). A presumption must be based upon a fact and not upon inference or upon another presumption. Lawson Pre Ev Rule 118. A presumption cannot contradict facts or overcome facts proved. Ibid Rule 119. The principle laid down by s 114 of the Evidence Act is one of a very wide application which covers not merely the particular instances given in the illustrations to the said section, but all sorts of analogous cases in which the actual facts are distinguishable from the facts presumed by any one of the illustrations but are equally amenable to the general principle enunciated by the section itself. Rustom Singh v Emperor, 15 Cr L J 410=24 Ind Cas 146. Where the fact giving rise to such a presumption as may be drawn under this section is undisputed and no explanation negating the presumption is offered, the Court is justified in laying the onus proper where, but for the presumption the onus could not be laid. But where explanation negating the presumption is forthcoming the Court is not in a position to draw the presumption until it has heard the evidence in support of the explanation and therefore, must ignore the presumption for the purpose of determining where the onus proper lies on the principle "when conflicting evidences in a point covered by a presumption of law is to be gone into, the presumption of law is functus officio is a presumption of law." Such a presumption therefore, cannot shift 'the burden of proof' in the strict sense of that term and the most that it can effect is a shifting of "the burden of evidence"—the burden of going forward with new evidentiary matter—and s 4 of the Act indicates that it is for the Court, which is taking evidence to decide whether such a presumption is strong enough to produce even that limited effect. Pakkoo v Dayal, 1 N L R 169. The course of conduct which this section calls 'common' can only be that which is most common in the experience of the Judge who has to decide the point. Secretary of State v Nandlal 24 N L R 87=107 Ind Cas 206=A I R 1928 Nag 52. The distinction between a mere inference and a presumption of fact is that a presumption of fact is an inference drawn under section 114 of the Evidence Act and will include a presumption of the nature described in the illustration Sita Ram v Nanu, 25 A L J 833.

The illustrations appended to this section are not statements of the law qualified only by particular exceptions. They are merely what they call themselves illustrations or instances of the application of certain maxims out of many possible instances. Gorinda v Emperor, 69 Ind Cas 957=23 Cr L J 673.

ILLUSTRATION (A)

Recent possession of stolen property In a criminal case the burden of proof always lies in the first instance on the prosecution, for the accused is presumed to be innocent. As the case proceeds however the burden of proof may shift to the prisoner. R v Stoddard 23 J P 340. Thus, as soon as it has been established that the prisoner was found in possession of stolen goods shortly after they were stolen, it lies upon him to satisfy the jury that he came into the possession of them honestly. Pouell Es 155. So the possession of stolen property recently after the commission of a theft, is prima facie evidence that the possessor was either the thief or the receiver according to the other circumstances of the case. R v Langmead, 1 L & C 427. Taylor § 140, Russell Law of Crimes p 1182. In R v Langmead 1 L & C 427, Pollock, C B said 'If no other person is involved in the transaction, and the whole of the case against the prisoner is that he was found in possession of the stolen property, the evidence no doubt points to a case of stealing rather than a case of receiving' but in every case, except indeed where the possession is so recent that it is impossible for any one else to have committed the theft, it becomes a mere question for the jury whether the person found in possession of the stolen property stole it himself or received it from some one else. If there is no other evidence the jury will probably consider, with reason, that the prisoner stole the property but if there is other evidence which is consistent either with his having stolen the property, or with his having received it from some one else, it will be for the jury to say which appears to them the more probable solution. In the same case Blackburn J said 'When it has been shown that property has been stolen, and has been found recently after its loss in the possession of the prisoner he is called upon to account for having it, and on his failing to do so the jury may well infer that his possession was dishonest, and that he was either the thief or the receiver according to the circumstances. If he had been seen near the place where the property was kept before it was stolen they may fairly infer that he was the thief. If other circumstances show that it is more probable that he was not the thief the presumption would be that he was the receiver. The jury should not convict the prisoner of receiving unless they are satisfied that he is not the actual thief. See also R v Smith Ry & M 295, Bayn v King Emperor, 11 A L J 91=18 Ind Cas, 684=14 Cr L J 124, In re Puthemthil & Weir 777. This presumption when unexplained (R v Exall 4 F & F 922) either by direct evidence, or by the character and habit of the possessor, or otherwise, is usually regarded by the jury as conclusive. 2 East P C 656, R v —, 2 C & P 459, State v Adams, 1 Hyw 463, Taylor § 140. By 'conclusive' is meant merely that, like other presumptions, it requires

S 114

th it the fact presumed to be taken as true if no evidence to the contrary is offered, if such evidence is offered, then the presumption as such ceases and all the evidence goes to the jury with no rule of presumption to find them, the fact on which the presumption is based being then merely evidence along with the other facts Green v § 34 The following considerations have been emphasized, from the point of view of a definite rule (1) The possession must be unexplained by any innocent origin (2) possession must be fairly recent, (3) and the possession must be exclusive Wigmore § 2513 Illustration (1) to the section is merely an example and it cannot be read as limiting the presumptions which may be drawn from recent possession of stolen property Husein v Emperor 17 Cr L J 32=32 Ind Cas 160 The possession by the accused of the jewels of a person who has been murdered for the sake of her jewels, if unexplained, is presumptive evidence that the accused was the murderer as well as that he committed theft In Namamalai Konan 14 L W 418, but see Azimuadin v Emperor, 32 C L J 19=59 Ind Cas 204 Before a presumption under this illustration can arise, it must be proved that the goods found in the possession of the accused have been stolen The presumption can not arise when it may reasonably be presumed that the property in question is stolen property In a criminal case the onus is on the prosecution to prove beyond reasonable doubt the guilt of the accused and the burden never changes Safya Charan v Emperor 52 C 223=88 Ind Cas 515 Reg v Isaac, (1914) Cr App R 45 49 The presumption does not arise until it is clearly proved that the article belongs to the complainant and that it was stolen Maung v Emperor, 1 Rang 520 see also Bhoses v Emperor, 21 A L J 836=L R 4 A 245 Cr Where accused persons are found in possession of stolen property soon after the theft and they are unable to explain their possession they can be held guilty of receiving stolen property knowing it to be stolen under s 411 I P Code Yamin v Emperor L R 5 A 81

Possession unexplained The reasons on which this presumption is founded are well stated in a learned note to the report of Cockin's case, 2 Leum, 254 "As a general proposition, where a person is in possession of property it is reasonable to suppose that he is able to give an account of how he came by it, and when the property in question has belonged to another it is generally not unreasonable to call upon him to do so. If the change of possession has been recent he will not be likely to have forgotten, still less if it be an article of bulk or value. If then, it be reasonable under such circumstances to call upon the party in possession to account for such possession it can not be unreasonable to presume against the lawfulness of that possession when he is unwilling to give an account or is unable to give a probable reason why he cannot. Now there is no reason in general why an honest person should be unwilling, and therefore the law presumes that such person is not honest and that he is the thief. The property must have been taken by some one. He is in possession and might have taken it and he refuses to give such information upon the matter as an honest man ought. C is indicted for stealing a piece of wood the property of H. It is found in the possession of C five days after it was taken from H. On the trial C states that he bought it from a neighbour. This is a reasonable explanation and overthrows the presumption. C must be acquitted unless the prosecution produce the neighbour and contradict C. R v Crouchurst 1 C & K. 370. In that case Alderson B observed: 'In cases of this nature you should take it as a general principle that when a man in whose possession stolen property is found gives a reasonable account of how he came by it, as by telling the name of the person from whom he received it, and who is to be a real person it is incumbent on the prosecutor to show that that account is false, but if the account given by the prisoner is unreasonable or improbable on the face of it, the onus of proving its truth lies on him. Suppose, for instance, a person were to charge me with stealing this watch, and I were to say I bought it from a particular tradesman, whom I name, that is prima facie a reasonable account and I ought not to be convicted of felony unless it is shown that that account is a false one. See also R v Smith 2 C & K. 206 see R v Schama, 56 L J K B 396 Id v Morris 56 L J K B 810, R v Granbery 53 F L L 128

Explanation not inconsistent with the identity of the property. The explanation to be given by the accused of his possession of the stolen property must not be inconsistent with the identity of the property. A beetle head is stolen from the house of W. Fifteen months thereafter it is found in E's house and identified by W as his. E is called on to explain his possession. If E says "I cannot remember where I got it," this will be sufficient and he must be acquitted. But if E says, "I bought this beetle head at a sale eight years ago, this contradicts the identity, which remains a question on which E's guilt or innocence depends." Queen v Evans, 3 Cox C C 270, Lauson Pre Et 605. In that case Iderson B said to the jury: "If the prisoner said in the first instance, 'why, really I cannot tell where or how I got this beetle,' I should have said that this was a reasonable statement and that he ought not to have been indicted for stealing it, in that case it being assumed that the prisoner does not deny that the article found might once have been the property of the prosecutor. Where however, the prisoner is shown to have claimed the thing so found in his possession and sworn by the prosecutor, to be his own property by right of a purchase made eight years ago, and a continued possession up to the present time, I should say that that was not so reasonable an account of his possession as to exempt him from the necessity of accounting for it to the satisfaction of the jury, for if it be true the prosecutor is wrong and the identity of the thing found with that is disputed. If the prosecutor should satisfy the jury that the beetle in question was his, then the statement of the prisoner accounting for his possession of it must be false, and he must be presumed to have stolen it, although it was not found in his possession until fifteen months after the loss. The question therefore is simply one of identity. Is that beetle the thing which was bought by the prisoner at the sale of his mother's goods eight years ago or is it another and different beetle which was in the possession of the prosecutor within fifteen months when it was lost? If the latter be the case, the prisoner is guilty."

Possession must be recent. It is clearly established that, in order to put the accused on his defence his possession of the stolen property must be recent although what shall be deemed recent possession must be determined by the nature of the articles stolen and whether they are of a nature likely to pass from hand to hand, or of which the accused would be likely from his mode of life, or vocation, to become possessed innocently. Best § 211. So where it is not recent, within this rule depends upon the cost, bulk or quantity of the thing stolen. Suppose the Pitt Diamond or the Crown Jewels were stolen, and after the lapse of one or two years, found in the possession of a person in a comparatively humble station of life, who refused to give any account of where he got them would there be anything harsh or unreasonable in presuming that he had not come by them honestly? But suppose the goods were merely a pair of shoes or a coat such as in his station of life would be natural and proper for the prisoner to wear and that these were found in his possession until after a few months from the time of the commission of making a violent presumption as to deem him to have obtained them dishonestly at once. Even if the point were not settled by authority it should come by a simple process of reasoning to the conclusion that there can be no absolute rule for drawing, from recent possession, the inference of guilt, a presumption of guilt without reference to the nature of the property. The possession of a metallic or paper piece of small value and small denomination, after it was stolen might last some time as evidence than the possession of the library of Horace or Virgil or Plato or Orator or elephant five years after its theft. It would be more probable that the prisoner had obtained it by other means. It is equally clear, upon the same principle, that a watch or a ring or a recent possession of a stolen property, that the prisoner should afterwards be found in possession of it, is not evidence of its being stolen. Lauson Pre Et § 605. It is also clear that a person who has been in possession of a stolen property, and afterwards is found in possession of it, is not evidence of its being stolen. 235 The rule is that a person who has been in possession of a stolen property, and afterwards is found in possession of it, is not evidence of its being stolen.

S 114

note to this case, by the author "If the property" says the writer "has not recently changed hands, if the time since it passed from the possession of the rightful owner is considerable, then the likelihood of his having forgotten (where he obtained it and thus explain his possession) is increased, and with it the difficulty of giving an account. After an interval of time the means of proof are lessened. People move away from place to place, they die and little circumstances are confounded together, those of the time with those subsequent or antecedent. The memory of two persons equally honest and intending the truth may not be equally strong, they may differ from each other in the recollection of facts, or enmities may have grown up, and the occasion may be laid hold of to gratify a vindictive feeling. Again the circumstances in life of the party may be a material point in the question. A man engaged in important daily vocations in which his mind is employed will take less notice of transactions of a different nature, his memory will be less strongly impressed with particulars regarding them he will perhaps never recur to them. Of course therefore, the impression will be less lasting. It will become overlaid with new and more interesting matter till the traces of it are lost, and this effect will be likely to happen more or less soon as the object is of less or more value or of less or greater bulk, and as it may happen to be an article that is more or less frequently brought under the party's view. Judges, therefore, hold and most reasonably hold, that a person is not to be called upon to give an account at a distant period after the theft. The question, however, of distance of time or recent possession must be at all times one of fact under the circumstances and a jury under the Judge's direction must ultimately decide. In Coolin's Case 3 Lew. 235, Coleridge J said to the jury "If I was now to lose my watch and in a few minutes it was to be found on the person of one of you it would afford the strongest ground for presuming that you had stolen it, but if a month hence it were to be found in your possession, the presumption of your having stolen it would be greatly weakened, because stolen property usually passes through many hands."

Two bolts of woollen cloth were stolen from M. Two months after they are found in the possession of P. The presumption is that P stole them. R v Patridge, 7 C & P 551. In that case Patteson J said "I think the length of time is to be considered with reference to the nature of the articles which are stolen. If they are such as pass from hand to hand readily two months would be a long time but here that is not so." An axe and a saw were stolen on March 1st. On June 1st they are found in A's possession. This raises no presumption against A. R v Adams 3 C & P 600, R v Heutlett, 2 Russ on Cr 728 (note) R v Deuchers, 2 Stark Ev 449 note. R v —, 2 C & P 459. A horse disappears from the possession of its owner on December 17 1849. On June 20 1850 it was found in the possession of C. This does not raise a presumption that C is the thief. R v Cooper, 3 C & K 318. In that case Maule J said he thought there was no case to go to the jury—the possession was not sufficiently recent. Where a man is found in possession of a horse six or seven months after it is lost and there is no other evidence against him but that possession, he ought not to be called to account for it.

A shovel is stolen from A in August, 1841. In March 1842 it is found in C's house. This raises no presumption that C stole it. R v Cutendon 6 Jur 267. In that case Gurney B said to the jury "I have frequently had occasion to tell you gentlemen, that when property proved to be stolen is found shortly after the theft in the possession of a party, that person is to be presumed to be the thief, unless he can explain satisfactorily how he came by it. But in this case I do not think the possession of this shovel sufficiently recent to raise that presumption against the prisoner. A period of six months has elapsed since the property was lost in which time it might have passed through several hands. A beetle herd is stolen from W. Fifteen months afterwards it is found in the possession of F. This does not raise an inference that F is the thief. Queen v Ears 3 Cox C C 270. In that case it was said "In cases where property of such insignificant value as that laid in this indictment is shown to have been stolen so long, is fifteen months before it is discovered in the possession of a stranger, that person ought not to be called on to answer for that possession on n charge of felony for it might reasonably be inferred that he had come honestly by it, in that long interval reference being always had to the character and value of the thing itself." From the possession of stolen property soon after the theft the Court may presume that the person in possession is either the thief or the receiver of the goods knowing them to be stolen. An important, if not the most important circumstance to be considered in dealing with the presumption, is the length of time which has elapsed between the loss of the property and the finding of it. No definite rule can be laid down as to the precise time which is too great to make it necessary for the prisoner to account for his possession. In re Puthenmthil, 2 Weir 777. A bullock was stolen from a pen underneath a house during the night. On the following day, the accused offered to find it, if he were given Rs. 8. On receipt of the money the accused told the complainant where the bullock was to be found. The bullock was just tied up in the place indicated by the accused. Held that it must, from the circumstances spoken to, be presumed that the accused was in possession of the bullock when it was tied up in the jungle, from which possession, it might undoubtedly be presumed that he was the person who stole the animal. Don Be v Crown, 1 L B R 332. An accused cannot be convicted for the possession of stolen cooking utensil fourteen months after theft. Empress v Keshub Dutt, A W N 1881, 150. But when stolen property is traced to the possession of an accused person three weeks after the theft took place the proper presumption is, not that he was one of those who committed the theft, but that he received the stolen property knowing or having reason to believe it to be such. Whether a presumption of theft or of receipt of stolen property should be drawn would depend on the circumstances, the length of time that has elapsed after the theft, how much of the stolen property is found in the possession of the person in question, the circumstances which led to the recovery and other facts connected with the discovery of the property. Sessions Judge v Gorle, 1912 M W N 97=13 Ind Cas 828=13 Cr L J 140. The presumption under this illustration would not arise by the fact that the stolen property was found in the possession of the accused more than a month after the death of the thief. Queen Empress v Burke 6 A 224=A W N 1884, 55 see also Empress v Dallna A W N 1887 281. Possession of Currency Notes of not large value a year and half after their theft is not by itself evidence of any guilty knowledge on the part of the possessor, so as to support a conviction for dishonest retention of stolen property. In such a case the fact that the accused gave a false explanation of his possession is not sufficient to warrant his conviction. Vellai Ocha Thevan v Emperor, (1912) M W N 362=15 Ind Cas 315=13 Cr L J 475. But the presumption would arise where the accused is in possession of the stolen property three weeks after it was stolen. Seni Raja v Public Prosecutor 3 M L J 30=7 Cr L J 30. Empress v Bisnath 12 C P L R Cr 5 see also Comyan v Emperor, 1914 M W N 84=25 Ind Cas 330, R v Partidge, 7 C & P 511.

No fixed time can be laid down to determine whether possession of articles is recent or otherwise. But every case must be judged on its own facts. If a few stolen articles are found in possession of a person under circumstances which may give rise to the probability of his coming by them honestly sometime after the theft the presumption under the law might not arise against him. Emperor v Fkabbai 27 Cr L J 617=94 Ind Cas 361=A I R 1926 Cal 925, Necha v Emperor A I R 1928 Nag 213=109 Ind Cas 801. Where, more than six months after the dacoity, some ornaments consisting of a pair of bangles a bracelet and ear rings were found in the possession of the accused held that having regard to the nature of the ornaments which were of common description and were likely to pass from hand to hand the case was not covered by s 114 illustration (a) and the accused should not have been called upon to explain their possession. Emperor v Sighor, 3 A L J 803=4 Cr L J 436=29 A 138. Where the possession of property stolen some years before, reasonably and circumstantially explained, such explanation should not be rejected merely because it is unproved. Tatu v Empress, 15 P R 1591 Cr see also In re Bhami Laxman Shenbaga 8 M L T 418=8 Ind Cas 145=1910 M W N 419, Smith v Emperor, 19 Cr L J 189=43 Ind Cas 605. In view of the plain terms of ill (a), by which the Courts of this country must he guided the possession of stolen property, sufficiently soon after theft permits out of the presumptions set out therein being drawn and the question, which of the two presumptions indicated in the illustration should be drawn, must depend on the facts in each particular case irrespective of any rule of English law. Raja Kiyet v Queen Empress, 1 L B R 39. The presumption concerning stolen goods in this illustration arises only when the stolen goods are found 'soon after the theft'. 13 months after the occurrence cannot be regarded as soon after the theft. Jamullahdin Isre 20 M L J 389=11 L W 43=53 Ind Cas 819, Jorenullah v Emperor, 22 C W N 597=16 Ind Cas 158=19 Cr L J 702. Isamkut v Emperor 20 A L J 178=65 Ind Cas 819=23 Cr L J 193. Chhotey Lal v Emperor 80 Ind Cas 722=26 Cr L J 578=A I R 1925 All 220, Mangal v Emperor 96 Ind Cas 670=27 Cr L J 986, Naghi v Emperor, 27 Cr L J 807=95 Ind Cas 471=A I R 1926 Lah 528. Alta v Emperor 27 Cr L J 112=91 Ind Cas 544=A I R 1926 Lah 272.

S 114

Possession must be exclusive. In order to give rise to the presumption in this illustration the possession must be exclusive. The possession of a watch by the wife of the accused is not sufficient. Seorenson v U S 8th C C A 168 Fed 785. It is not sufficient that the stolen goods were found in the house of the wife of the accused where he does not live. People v Kubulis 298 Ill 529, Wigmore § 2513, Louison Pre Et p 599. The two accused in this case were husband and wife and both were in possession of the stolen property within such a short time of the theft as to raise the usual prima facie presumption against them of being concerned in such theft, held that the general presumption that a wife acts under the influence and control of her husband was applicable to the present case and consequently the guilt of the wife must be confined to the offence of assisting her husband by dishonest possession or dishonest disposal of the stolen property under s 411 I P Code. M. Myit v Queen Empress U B R (1897 1901) Vol I, 171. Where stolen property was found in the camp of a party of refugees it was held that it was not proved in whose possession it was to justify the conviction of any one of them for theft. Nga Shue v Queen Empress L B R (1872 1892) 397. Where it was proved that some ghee was stolen from the lines in a train and the stolen ghee was found in a wagon in that train in which there were five porters and a policeman. Held that the possession of the stolen ghee could not be attributed to the porters and therefore, the presumption arising out of possession of stolen ghee did not arise in the case. Natarao v Emperor, 111 Ind Cas 732=29 Cr L J 924.

ILLUSTRATION (B)

Corroboration of evidence of accomplice. Although as a matter of law, corroboration is not necessary to convict an accused person on the evidence of an accomplice an accomplice should as a rule be presumed to be unworthy of credit unless he is corroborated in material particulars, except where there are special circumstances in a particular case to disregard the rule. Rahi Balsh v Empress, 16 P R 1886 Cr. The general rule under which the evidence of an accomplice is discredited must, as the illustration given in the Evidence Act shows be subject to the qualification that the less heinous the offence disclosed, the less liable would the evidence of the accomplice be to suspicion and discredit. Emperor v Lalshim 6 Bom L R 1091=29 B 264. For further discussion on this topic Vide notes under s 133 infra.

ILLUSTRATION (C)

Presumption as regards Bills of Exchange. Bills of exchange and promissory notes enjoy the privilege of being presumed prima facie to be founded on a valuable consideration. Collins v Maun 1 B & P 651. Holliday v Morris 5 B & C 501. The law raises this presumption in favour of these instruments, partly, because it is important to preserve their negotiability in fact, and partly, because the existence of a valid consideration may reasonably be inferred from the solemnity of the instruments themselves, and the deliberate mode in which they are executed Story Bills §§ 16 178, Taylor § 118 These S 114 and other special rules of evidence have also been incorporated in the Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), vide ss 118 122 So the legal presumption is that a note is of the value of the sum promised thereby to be paid Lawson, Pre Evs 94 "The law was thus framed and has been so administered in order to encourage the free circulation of negotiable paper by giving confidence and security to those who receive it for value, and this principle is so comprehensive in respect to bills of exchange and promissory notes which pass by delivery, that title and possession are considered as one and inseparable and in the absence of any explanation, the law presumes that a party in possession holds the instrument for value until the contrary is made to appear and the burden of proof is on the party attempting to impeach the title These principles are certainly in accordance with the general current of authorities and are believed to correspond with the general understanding of those engaged in mercantile pursuits" Goodman v Simonds, 20 How 343, Lawson, Pre sumptives Evs 95 But where fraud or illegality or duress is shown in its inception the burden is on the holder to show regularity Bailey v Bidwell, 13

 M & W 76, Fitch v Jones, 5 El & B 239 In Bailey v Bidwell, 13 M & W 74
Baron Parke B said "It certainly has been the universal understanding that if the note were proven to have been obtained by fraud or affected by illegality, that afforded a presumption that the person who had been guilty of illegality would dispose of it and would place it in the hands of another person to sue upon it, and that such proof casts upon the plaintiff the burden of showing that he was a bona fide indorsee for value" In certain states of America want of consideration, like fraud, casts the burden on the holder Wallace v Banl 1 Ala 567 But the English rule is that where there is 'no fraud nor any suspicion of fraud, but the simple fact is that the defendant received no consideration for his acceptance the plaintiff is not called upon to prove that he gave value for the bill" Whitaker v Edmonds, 1 Ad & Lill 638 overruling Thomas v
Newton, 2 C & P 606 and Heath v Sanson 2 B & Ald 291 see also Robinson
v Reynolds, 2 Q B 634 Bailey v Bidwell 13 M & W 72, Berry v Alderham
 14 C B 91, Smith v Brane 16 Q B 241, Holt v Mahomed 20 B 267
Sulharam v Gulab 16 Bom L R 743 Mudhoram v Nanda 58 Ind Cas 982
 But this presumption does not arise where the endorsement is forged or the consideration is unlawful Banla v Secy of State 36 C 239 Ramdas v Lal
Chand, 101 Ind Cas 325=1927 141 137

ILLUSTRATION (D)

Continuance of things or state of things When the existence of an object, condition quality or tendency at a given time is in issue the prior existence of it is in human experience some indication of its probable persistence or continuance at a later period The degree of probability of this continuance depends on the chances of intervening circumstances having occurred to bring the existence to an end The possibility of such circumstances will depend almost entirely on the nature of the specific thing whose existence is in issue and the particular circumstances affecting it in the case in hand So far then, as the interval of time is concerned no fixed rule can be laid down the nature of the thing and the circumstances of the particular case must control Higmore § 137 These presumptions are founded on the experienced continuance or immutability, for a longer or shorter period of human affairs When therefore the existence of a person or personal relation or state of things is once established by proof the law presumes that the person relation or state of things continues to exist as before, till the contrary is shown, or till a different presumption is raised from the nature of the subject in question Price v Price 16 M & W 232 When things are once proved to have existed in a particular state, they are presumed to have continued in that state until the contrary is established by evidence either direct or presumptive Best Fr § 105 Although this rule has long had the sanction of the highest authority, it will be observed that it is stated in very general terms, and it must have a reasonable interpretation
 It is a presumption always disputable, sometimes entitled to considerable weight but frequently liable to be rebutted by very slight circumstances The rule has

- S. 114. been held to apply to the continuance of minority, a given state of health, a state of war and to other cases where obviously, after a limited time, the presumption could have very little weight Burr Jones § 68 (n). Thus, where a jury found that a certain custom existed up to the year 1689, the Court held, that, in the absence of all evidence of its abolition, this was in legal effect a verdict finding that the custom still subsisted at the time of the trial in 1810 Scales v Key, 11 A 1 819, Paylor § 196. In this way, continuance of ownership of property, of residence (R v Palmer, 1 Esp 301) of an agent's authority, and the like, may be presumed Green Ev § 11. So, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, the settlement of a paper, or the appointment of a party to an official situation, will at least for a reasonable time, be presumed to remain in force. So a partnership, agency, tenancy, or other similar relation, once shown to exist, is presumed to continue till it is proved to have been dissolved Taylor § 196. So, if a debt be shown to have once existed its continuance will be presumed in the absence of proof of payment, or some other discharge Jackson v Irwin, 2 Cimp 50. Thus all the members of a Christian community being presumed to enter into the common faith, no man is supposed to disbelieve the existence and moral government of God till it is shown from his own declaration State v Stenson, 7 L R 383, Paylor § 197. The ordinary legal presumption is that things remain in their original state Jurattulla v Hussain Begam 11 M I A 194. So the presumption is in favour of the existing state of the thing and not against it Secy of State v Jyoti, 53 C 533 P C = 39 C W N 745 = 24 A L J 761. Presumption should not be made against but in favour of the existing state of things Secretary of State v Raja Jyoti Prasad, 30 C W N 745 = 24 A L J 761 = 53 C 533 = 53 I A 100. The presumption under this section relates to the existence of certain facts and not their probative value Nanda Kumar v Emdad Ali 44 C L J 265 = A I R 1927 Cal 49. Where in a suit for arrears of rent the right of the plaintiff to claim rent is proved up to the time immediately preceding the suit then it is for the defendants to show how the plaintiff lost that right Sarda v Bai, 7 L R 406. Proof of the existence at a particular time of a fact of a continuous nature give rise to a rebuttable presumption within local limits that it existed at a subsequent time or has previously existed. The limits of time within which the inference of continuance possesses sufficient probative force to be relevant must obviously vary with each case—always strongest in the beginning the inference steadily diminishes in force with the lapse of time at a rate proportionate to the quality of permanence belonging to the fact in question, until it ceases or perhaps is supplemented by a directly opposite presumption. To put the matter shortly, it will be inferred that a given set of facts or sets of facts whose existence at a particular time is once established in evidence continue to exist as long as such facts usually exist. The inference of continuance whether backwards or forwards whether onwards or downwards is an inference of fact and may therefore be rebutted Secretary of State v Upendra Nivarn Roy 71 Ind Cas 849 = 1923 Cal 247 = 36 C I J 336. If a person is shown at one time to be a member of a joint Hindu family it must be held under s. 114 illustration (d) of the Evidence Act that he never separated at all unless the contrary is proved Sula v Rallo 57 Ind Cas 339. Where evidence about acts of ownership does not exist and can not reasonably be expected it is usual to presume that the owner's possession once proved continued till it is shown to have been interrupted Secretary of State v Mushtal Singh 7 S L R 169 = 24 Ind Cas 813. This illustration does not compel but certainly permits the Court to make a presumption as to the continuance of the state of things Huanmoy v Ranjan, 29 Ind Cas 691 = 20 C W N 48. see also Saudamini v Secy of State 38 C L J 47. Under this illustration a person who is once proved to be a profligate is presumed to continue as such during his lifetime. But the presumption is rebuttable Mussammat Shahal v Allah Bachayo 9 S L R 196 = 34 Ind Cas 501.

Subsequent existence. Similar considerations affect the use of subsequent existence as evidence of existence at the time in issue. Here the disturbing contingency is that some circumstance operating in the interval may have been the source of the subsequent existence, and the propriety of the inference will depend on the likelihood of such intervening circumstances having occurred and been the true origin. This general principle that a prior or subsequent existence is evidential of a later or earlier one has been repeatedly laid down, and has ever been spoken of as a presumption. Wigmore § 437. In R v Biddell, 1 B & Ald 124, Best J said 'I am to presume a thing always (to have been) in the state in which it is found unless I have evidence that at some previous time it was in a different state.' But a future continuance is never presumed. Lanson Pre El 235.

ILLUSTRATION (E)

Presumption as regards Judicial and Official Acts. The general experience that a rule of official duty on requirement of legal conditions, is fulfilled by those upon whom it is incumbent, has given rise occasionally to a presumption of due performance. This presumption is more often mentioned than enforced, and its scope as a real presumption is indefinite and hardly capable of reduction to rules. It may be said that most of the instances of its application are found attended by several conditions, first that the matter is more or less in the past and is incapable of easily procured evidence, secondly that it involves a mere formality or detail of required procedure, in the routine of a litigation or of a public officer's action, next, that it involves to some extent the security of apparently vested rights so that the presumption will serve to prevent in unwholesome uncertainty and finally that the circumstances of the particular case add some element of probability. Wigmore § 2631. There is a well known maxim of law omnia praesumuntur rite esse acta, this is an inference of reasonable probability arising out of the experience of mankind. The law assumes that any act done in public or any formal act privately done will be performed in due form by the person authorized to do it. Powell Ex 391. In Benniman v Wise, 11 R 366, Buller J said that in the case of all peace officers, Justices of the peace constables etc., it was sufficient to prove that they acted in those characters without producing their appointment. Where successive decisions are inconsistent with a general order of the Court a reversal of that order ought to be presumed. Bohn v Delessert 1 Coop 21, Man v Ricketts 2 Coop 8 21. Again, on an indictment of bigamy, proof of the solemnization of the first marriage in a Wesleyan Chapel in the presence of the Registrar, and of entry of such marriage in his book has been held to raise a prima facie presumption that the marriage was duly registered. R v Mannuoring 26 L J M C 10=7 Cox 192. This illustration authorises the presumption that a particular judicial or official act has been performed regularly but it does not authorize the presumption without any evidence that the act has been performed. Deputy Legal Remembrancer v Sarwarjan, 6 C W N 845, Hira v Jagat, A I R 1928 Pat 600=9 Pat L T 523, Hutanaiam v Rambharai Rai 7 Pat 733=A I R 1928 Pat 459. From the mere fact that the warrant for the arrest of a judgment debtor bore the signatures of the sheristadar, it cannot be presumed under s 114 (e) that the sheristadar had been duly appointed to sign warrants. Deputy Legal Remembrancer v Sarwarjan 6 C W N 845 see also Gudhar v Harish 27 C W N 1042=37 C L J 331, Khudu v Empejar 3 Pat L J 636. While sanctioning the prosecution of accused for an offence under Penal Code s 294 A the name of the accused was shown on the back of the paper instead of in the body of the sanction merely because there was not sufficient space left on the front side. held that the initial presumption was that all the official acts were done in a regular manner and hence the sanction was valid. Emperor v Duan Chaud A I R 1930 Lah 81. Where a committing Magistrate writes at the foot of the deposition that the cross examination is being reserved by him and that the accused has not been given an opportunity for cross examination. All official acts must be presumed to have been done properly and it is difficult to suppose that the Magistrate who must be presumed to have known the law did not give the accused an opportunity of cross examination to which he was entitled by s 208, Criminal Procedure Code. Emperor v Mahrab, A I, R 1930 Sind 54.

S. 114

Regularity of Judicial Acts Where a Court having general jurisdiction acts in a case its jurisdiction to so act will be presumed. Lawson Pre Ev Rule 6 Nothing shall be intended to be out of the jurisdiction of a superior Court, but that which specially appears to be so and nothing will be presumed to be within the jurisdiction of inferior Courts but that which is expressly alleged. Peacock v Bell, 1 Samuel 74 'It is a general rule' said Hightman J that all judicial acts exercised by persons whose judicial authority is limited to locality must appear to be done within the locality to which the authority is limited. R v Tetness 11 Q B 80, Dempster v Parnell 1 Scott N R 30, R v Bloomsbury 4 Ll & S 20 The rule, said Hoboyd J in King v Inhabitants of All Saints, 7 B & C 785 that in inferior Courts and proceedings by Magistrates the maxim omnia præsumentur rite esse acta does not apply to give jurisdiction has never been questioned. Here then the jurisdiction should at all events have appeared on the face of the examination, supposing proof of it abunde not to have been necessary. But where the proceedings are under a special authority granted to any tribunal in a special case or for special purposes the jurisdiction is not presumed but must be shown. Lawson Pre Ev Rule 9

The regularity of the proceedings of Courts of general powers is presumed, and so of the proceedings of inferior Courts jurisdiction being once shown to exist. The maxim of omnia præsumentur rite esse acta finds perhaps, its best application in restraining the validity of judicial proceedings. They are presumed to be regular. Baynath v Sri Bhogwan 96 Ind Crs 591 = A I R 1926 All 691 So too after verdict a Court of review will assume that the necessary facts to sustain it were proved. On the same principle the regularity of the proceedings of a military Court and the correctness of acts of legislative bodies are presumed. Lawson Pre Ev 52 Ishail v Kanto 21 C 335 Hash Behary v Nabay 3 B L R A C 99 = 11 W R 465

A judgment is produced which was confessed before a Justice of the peace. The law requires that the confession should be entered on the minutes of a docket and the judgment made thereon. The docket is lost. The presumption is that the entry was properly made. Slicer v Bank of Pittsburg 16 How 571. It appearing that a probate Court had jurisdiction to render a certain judgment, the question arises whether all the proceedings were regular. The presumption is that they were. State v Huchman 27 Pt St 479, Lawson Pre Ev 56. The presumption that judicial acts have been regularly performed applies to the acts of the Court alone. Jameson v Judith Kuer 87 Ind Crs 235 = A I R 1925 Oudh 633. Every Court is furnished with machinery for giving effect to its orders and it would be unjust to think that the subordinate staff attached to such Court failed in its duty of carrying out the orders of the Court. Bhannon Prasad v Laxmi Narain 1924 Nig 385. Where on appellate judgment is silent on a point which is specifically mentioned in the grounds of appeal inference can be drawn that it was given up. To hold otherwise would be to contravene s. 114 and to presume that the Court failed to do so. Iblul Hasan v Thafu Ham, 1923 Lah 124 = 68 Ind Crs 710. After a guardian appointed by Court has filed his accounts and they have been accepted by the Court as correct, a presumption is to their accuracy does certainly arise and it is open to parties to rely on them in subsequent proceedings between the guardian and ward. Gopal v Sarju 21 O C 74 = 44 Ind Crs 599. The presumption arising under this section as to the legality and correctness of a Court's proceedings can only be overturned by exceptionally strong evidence. Sheo Das Shan v Assessor Singh, 5 O L J 179 = 46 Ind Crs 52. But when an applicant before the Court is attempting to rebut that presumption it is not for the Court itself to give assistance to the otherside or to deal with the matter otherwise than impartially. Sohagbat v Surendra Mohan 1 Pt L W 296 = 44 Ind Crs 661. Before the deposition of a medical witness given before a committing Magistrate can be admitted in the sessions trial it must either appear in the Magistrate's record or must be proved by the evidence of witnesses to have been taken and attested in the prisoner's presence. It should not be merely presumed under s. 114 illustration (c) to have been so taken and attested. Queen Empress v Ruding'

9A 720 = A W N 1887 228 Where a point is definitely raised in the grounds of appeal and the Court makes no mention thereof in its judgment it must still be presumed to have performed the judicial act of writing a judgment regularly and properly Har Chaitan v Lochman A I R 1923 Lah 91

Regularity of Official Acts The presumption is that one who is proved to have acted in an official capacity possessed the necessary and proper capacity and authority Lauson Pie Et Rule 13 Butler v Lord 1 Cr & M 663 In Re Murphy 8 C & P 310 Coleridge J said 'With regard to the 1st objection these trustees are public officers. They all acted as such before the signing of this rate, and I cannot say that there is no evidence that they are trustees. If the proof of their once acting is not enough would proof of the times be so? Where is the line to be drawn? I think it is evidence to go to the jury that they were trustees'. The presumption is that public officers do as the law and their duty requires them Lauson Pie Et Rule 14 The production of a bond with the certificate of due registration endorsed thereon raises a strong presumption in favour of the due registration of the bond and in the absence of clear proof that the requirements of law are not complied with the Court is bound to admit the document in evidence. The onus does not lie upon the plaintiff that the requirements of the Act were complied with Lanuchanda v Farand 3 A L J 153 If the proceedings under section 61 of the Chauldani Act are conducted in compliance with the provisions of Regulation VII of 1822 which are applicable to the proceedings under the Chauldani Act and after full notice to all the parties concerned, then the order under section 61 is final and binding upon the Civil Court. If it was found that there was an order under section 61, the presumption under section 114 illustration (e) that official acts have been regularly performed would arise Dauluntha Nath v Bidhu Bhushan, 9 Ind C 13 322 A document purporting to be a copy of a deposition in a suit in Court in Cutch is certified to be a true copy by an officer higher than the trial Judge but not by the Political Agent of Cutch in a manner which fully satisfied the requirements of ss 76 (1) and 56 of the Evidence Act. Held that under s 114 of the Evidence Act a presumption arose that the document was a correct copy of the record of that deposition as recorded by or under the supervision of the Judge who tried the suit Vallabh Day v Pitan Sankar, 30 Bom L R 1519 = 113 Ind C 313 It must be assumed that a process issued by the Court which has been accepted by the Court as having been duly served was served in the manner provided by law and with all the formalities laid down there Praya Ram v Sohana 109 Ind C 561 = A I R 1928 Lah 910 The meaning of this section, illustration (e) is that, if an official act is proved to have been done it will be presumed to have been regularly done Wahelal v Emperor, 53 C 718 = 96 Ind C 264 = 30 C W N 713 = A I R 1926 Cal 968 An order issued under s 31 may be an order by a police constable issued during the control of the public at any place of public resort. There is a presumption that the Magistrate's order to levy tolls was legal and even apart from it a police constable is entitled to assume that a toll collector was acting rightfully Shamundar v Emperor 91 Ind C 56 = 27 Cr L J 24 = A I R 1926 All 261 Entry in Wanbulat being an official act is presumed to be correct Ganga Ram v Lachman, 55 Ind C 63 = 1925 All 176 The presumption is that official acts are legally performed and where the jurisdiction of a settlement officer has not been questioned in the trial Court it must be presumed that he acted regularly and within his jurisdiction Babu Balgobind v Belurial 1923 P 96 (3) = 66 Ind C 471 The presumption in favour of survey records of rights cannot be displaced by Bathwana for irrigation maps Sita Ram v Gaya Prasad, 1923 P 37 Under this illustration it is presumed that official acts have been regularly performed. 'Regularly performed' means performed with due regard to form and procedure. The regular performance of official acts does not imply that the representation made to them must be correct Jagdeo Narain v Balak Gope, (1921) Pat 343 = 63 Ind C 226 The action of a Deputy Commissioner under Regulation XVII of 1836, is purely ministerial. His acts therefore, are official acts and the presumption contained in s 114 illustration (e) of the Evidence Act applies to them Juala Bakhsh v Nawa Azish Ali, 49 Ind C 402 Regard should be had to the presumption in favour

S. 114 of the due performance of official acts Procurno Coomaz v Secretary of State, 26 C 792 = 1 C W N 69,

ILLUSTRATION (I)

Presumption as regards common course of business. In commercial transactions the presumption is that the usual course of business was followed by the parties thereto. Lawson v. Fyfe 15 Rule 15. "Where the maxim of omnia rite acta presumuntur optima there indeed if the event ought probably to have taken place on Tue day, evidence that it did take place on Tue day, or Wednesday is strong evidence that it took place on Tue day. Henry v. Boulden 69 L & B 773, see also section 16 supra. Where the name of the accused was printed on the title page of a seditious booklet and the lower Court convicted him under s 124 I P Code relying on s 111 ill (f) and there was no other evidence on record to attribute the authorship to him. Held the presumption could be made if there were anything to show that the accused had no name-sake or that his name could not have been adopted by any other person. In the absence of ill evidence the mere fact that the title page bears his name does not justify the conclusion that he and nobody else could be the author thereof. Ranjit Singh v. The Crown, 26 P L R 103 = 88 Ind Cas 346 = 26 Cr L J 1124. Where letter is duly posted there may be a presumption that it reaches the addressee in the ordinary course of business. Habib v. Samuel 59 Ind Cas 32 = 23 A L J 961, Paan v. Maan, 1908 Ind Rul Oudh 59. Where the facts of a particular case can form a foundation for a fair presumption that an application was made, then the Court would be entitled to presume that it was made. Mulchand v. Jamamba 27 Bom L R 671 = 89 Ind Cas 228 = A L J R 192, Bom 113. Where upon the evidence a presumption of fact under section 111 illustration (f) of the Evidence Act is drawn by an Appellate Court, such presumption is binding upon Court of Second Appeal. Ram Chandra v. Kannam 53 Ind Cas 62. Where sums are paid before the presiding officer of the Court at the time when a receipt is given for them the presumption under this section is that the ordinary course of business was followed in the case in question. The mere statement by appellants' counsel that these sums are not always paid at the time when the receipts are given is sufficient to throw the onus on the prosecution of proving that the plea was wrong. Emperor v. Amudisha, 1923 Lah 566. This illustration is not exhaustive and the general language of the section applies to all acts and proceedings which might be presumed to have been done in the usual course of business. Laxmi Pathya v. Ram Chandra 2 M W N 133 = 20 M L F 228 = 31 M L J 311 = 35 Ind Cas 421.

ILLUSTRATION (G)

Withholding evidence—presumption from. The omission of a party to an action to testify to facts or to produce evidence in explanation of or to contradict adverse testimony raises a presumption against his claims except where the evidence is not peculiarly within his power or is merely cumulative or is privileged or incompetent or its necessity could not have been reasonably anticipated by the party. Lawson v. Fyfe Rule 22. It is certainly a maxim said Lord Mansfield in Blatch v. Archer Cowp 63 that all evidence is to be weighed according to the proof of which it was in the power of one side to have produced, and in the power of the other to have contradicted. The omission of a party to testify to facts within his knowledge in explanation of or to contradict adverse testimony is proper subject of consideration both in the Courts of Equity and in the Courts of law. Lawson v. Fyfe 154. A refuses to produce a deed which is part of a title which he claims. The presumption is that if produced, the deed would injure his claim. Haldane v. Harrey 4 Burr 2486. In cases like this it is laid down that the case of written evidence presents the strongest illustration of the extent of the rule. The non production of documentary evidence within the party's power raises, it is said, in several cases a very strong presumption that if produced it would militate against him who withholds it. Therefore in an action of trespass where the plaintiff relied upon bare possession although it appeared that he had taken the premises under an agreement in writing which was not produced the Judge charged the jury that having proved that he was in possession of the close at the time of the trespass, the plaintiff must have a verdict, but that to entitle him to more than nominal damages he should have shown the duration of the term. In affirming this direction Maule J pointed out that the plaintiff had the means of showing the quantum of his interest and that "the non production of the lease raised a presumption that the production of it would do the plaintiff no good." Iryman v Knowles, 13 C B 222. In All Gen v Dean of Windsor 24 Beav 679, the Master of the Rolls said "Evidence is always to be taken most strongly against the persons who keep back a document, and the circumstance that the body keeping it back is a corporation does not in the slightest degree affect this principle although it exonerates the present members from blame in that respect. It is true it is argued, that this deed is lost, and that nothing of wilful suppression is to be presumed against the predecessors of the present Corporation, and yet the circumstances undoubtedly require an explanation which they cannot now receive." It is well observed by Mr Erans in substance, that if the weaker and less satisfactory evidence is given and relied on in support of a fact when it is apparent to the Court and jury that proof of a more direct and explicit character was within the power of the party, the same caution which rejects the secondary evidence will awaken distrust and suspicion of the weaker and less satisfactory, and that it may well be presumed if a more perfect exposition had been given it would have had open deficiencies and objections which the more obscure and uncertain testimony was intended to conceal. 2 Erans loc. cit., 149.

In Brathurte v Coleman, 1 H & W 229 which was an action by the indorsee against the drawer of a note, the only evidence of notice of dishonour was the statement of the defendant to a witness "I have good defence to the action in the first place the letter was not sent to me in time." The defendant had been notified to produce his letter but did not do so. Lord Lydell directed the jury that they might presume that the letter if produced, would be found to have contained a notice in proper time. On appeal Dennan G J thought the direction right. "The defendant admits" said he, "he received the letter and as he does not produce it it might be fairly inferred by the jury that it was in time." But the other members of the Court were of a contrary opinion and a new trial was ordered. But in the case of Curlews v Corfield, 1 Q B 814, which six years later came before the same Court and nearly before the same Judges, a different conclusion was reached. In Bell v Francis, 4 Mon & Gr, 447, also an action by the indorsee against the drawer of a bill of exchange it appeared that the defendant had told a witness that he expected to receive by post a notice of its dishonour, and afterwards gave him a letter he received by post, requesting him to negotiate a renewal of the bill, but the letter, which had found its way into the defendant's hands was not produced at the trial. It was ruled that the jury was warranted in inferring that no notice of dishonour had been given. See also Lobb v Stanley 5 Q B 574. When a party does not produce a document in his possession the Court may presume that its production will damage his case. Raghunath v Hotlat 1 A L J 121. Where Government had to prove that certain service mam lands were excluded from the Zamin dari but failed to produce the record of the original settlement it cannot be suggested that it was withheld because it was against the Government. Lal Shm v Secretary of State 117 Ind C 15 292-A I R 1929 Mad 399. Where certain account books the production of which would have thrown considerable light upon some of the issues of the case were not produced in Court by a company carrying on business and the non production was not sought to be explained held that the Court was entitled to draw an inference under s 114 (g) of the Evidence Act. Gujarat v Hotlat, 31 Bom L R 1310 see also Kansha Ram v Sanhar Das 111 Ind Cas 596=10 Lah L J 93. The non production of account books by a party when such account books would throw much light on the case raises adverse presumption. Jag Prasad v M Singh, 23 A L J 97=86 Ind Cas 123=29 C W N 941=A I R 1927 (P C) 93 see also Syed Hasan v Sheonarayan 3 O W N 25 Gulzar Singh v Madho Ram, A I R Oudh 11. The Firm of Jowala Das v Ullam Chand 1923 Lah 585, Datta Ram v Basanta Kumar, (1922) P C 378 Padmanav v Gopi Kishore 56 Ind Cas

S 114 129 Debendra v Narendra, 24 C W N 110=30 C L J 417, Sanhara Linga v Com of Income Tax, A I R 1930 M, 209 (F B)

Every deed being the best evidence of its own contents, its non production raises the presumption that it contains some defeasance, in other words, there is some endorsement on the document which the plaintiff does not like. Mohammad v Zalu, 24 A L J 964=97 Ind Crs 82=A I R 1926 All 741, Ahmed v Ali Ebrahim, 27 Bom L R 746=1925 P C 177, Seenath Roy v Secretary of State, 50 C 276=70 Ind Crs 510=1923 Cal 233=36 C L J 345, Secretary of State v Upendra Nath Roy 36 C L J 346 Harendra v Durga 62 Ind Crs 697 Where a document is a very old one the possibility of its having been lost and being no longer in existence is naturally much brighter than in the case of a document of recent date. Consequently the presumption arising from non production of the document is not quite as strong in the case of an old document as in the case of a recent one. Rampj Das v Mihar Lal, 71 Ind Crs 654=A I R 1923 A 411 Where a party does not produce certain books saying that they have been destroyed and the matter dealt with by the books could be easily proved by secondary evidence which is admittedly in the possession or power of the party and which it does not attempt to place on the record the opposite party is entitled to the presumption that these books if produced would have gone against the contentions of the party not producing them. Secretary of State v G T Sami, A I R 1930 Lah 364

Exception A does not produce one of his muniments of title. He proves that it is in the possession of B from whom he cannot obtain it. There is no presumption against A. Gilbert v Ross, 7 M & W 121 Unston v Downes 1 Ad & El 32 In the first case it has been ruled that where the evidence alleged to be withheld is unattainable the presumption does not arise. Therefore if a deed be in the possession of an adverse party and not produced or if it be lost and destroyed no matter whether by adverse party or not, secondary evidence is clearly admissible and if the deed be in the possession of a third person who is not by law compellible to produce it and he refuses to do so the result is the same. Lauson Pie Et 169

Necessary witnesses not called. Where a witness is not called by the prosecution which it was the duty of the prosecution to call what happens is that at the most there arises a presumption that if the witnesses had been called he would not have supported the prosecution. Kishora Maharani v Emperor, A I R 1929 Pat 601 The failure to examine a material witness justifies the inference that the witness, if examined would have deposed against the prosecution. Mian Say Mahammad v Emperor, 29 Punj L R 11=107 Ind Crs 100=29 Cr L J 212=A I R 1928 Lah 123 This section says that a Court may presume that evidence which could be and is not produced would if produced be unfavourable to the person who withholds it. The Court may presume this but it cannot be taken as a principle of law that the Court must presume it. Iditja v Emperor 11 Luck C 195=103 Ind Crs 560 see also Mahdunay v King Emperor 86 Ind Crs 375=26 Cr L J 427=1 Bur L J 2 The presumption indicated in this illustration arising from non production of evidence cannot displace the contrary inference supported by adequate evidence. Dennisett v Dennisett 131 W 293=63 Ind Crs 719 (P C) Where in a suit for profits of land the recorded collections are sufficient by law, and the defendant neither produces nor gives any evidence to show what was collected the Court would be justified in presuming that the full amount of the rents had been collected and is assessed, the profits in the book of the gross rental. Irighunath v Hon Dayal 5 Ind Crs 751

Where the plaintiffs are the best persons to give evidence as to the income possessed by them in a religious institution to prove the locus standi for the purposes of s 92 Civil Procedure Code and they merely put the defendants into the witness box their failure to go into the witness box goes strongly against them. Karpi Singh v Gopal Singh A I R 1940 Lah 1 see also Gurabish Singh v Gurab Singh A I R 1927 P C 230, Ilah Dutt v Dhurjan, A I R 1930 Lah 101 But non production of witnesses called by prosecution when their evidence was unnecessary cannot justify adverse inference when there is nothing else on record to justify it. Jowaya v Emperor A I R 1930 Lah 163, see also Krishna Wilsona v Emperor 1930 Ind Rul 173

S 114

ILLUSTRATION (H)

Refusal to answer—presumption for This illustration does not contemplate the testimony of a party in a civil or criminal suit because 'every person in the kingdom except the sovereign may be called upon and is bound to give evidence, to the best of his knowledge, upon any question of fact material and relevant to an issue tried in any of the Queen's Courts' unless he can show that he is exempted by some exception in his favour. Per Willes J in Hard v Fernand, 12 C B N S 339. So in such a case he is compellable by law to give answer. So also this illustration does not contemplate the cases of witnesses who is not compelled to answer on the grounds of privilege. (vide ss 131-129) To make adverse presumption for not answering in those cases would be extremely inequitable. This illustration contemplates cases where a person is not bound to answer but can answer if he so desire, e.g. the case of an accused under s 342 Cr Pro Code. Sub-section (2) of that section runs thus: 'The accused shall not render himself liable to punishment by refusing to answer such questions, or by giving false answers to them, but the Court and the jury (if any) may draw such inference from such refusal or answers as it thinks just.' So the practice of refusing to answer questions in the Sessions Court and of putting in a written statement may be attended with great risk to the accused for the Court may draw from such refusal an inference adverse to the accused. King Emperor v Dwyendra, 19 C W N 1013. This presumption rests on the following principle, namely, If a person by his very existence in civilized society owes a duty to the community to disclose for the purposes of justice all that is in his control which can serve the ascertainment of the truth, this duty includes equally the mental impressions preserved in his brain, the documents preserved in his hands, the corporal facts existing on his body, and the chattels and premises within his control. Wigmore § 2194.

ILLUSTRATION (I)

Documents in the hands of obligor—Presumption from When in the course of dealing, a debtor gives security to his creditor for the payment of the debt in the shape of documentary evidence either alone or accompanying mementos of title, it follows that on the payment of debt the document should no longer be allowed to remain in the creditor's custody, and hence has arisen the rule that possession by the debtor of the evidence of a debt, as a note, bond, bill or draft raises the presumption of payment. Burr Jones § 70(a) Abdul Karim v Mary Hunsray 1 B 295 Shearman v Fleming, 5 B L R 619 Ganesh v Kheloo, 22 W R 26, Bunayal v Dunker 20 Ind C 18308. So the obligor's possession of the instrument after maturity is usually said to raise a presumption of payment, the inference being based on the principle already stated. Wigmore § 2018, Gibbon v Heatherstonhaugh 1 Stark 225 Leembridge v Osborne, 1 Stark 374, Shepherd v Currie, 1 Stark 451. So the possession of an uncancelled note by the debtor under circumstances free from suspicion is a strong circumstance in favour of payment, and should turn the scale if the other testimony on the issue of payment is conflicting and evenly balanced. Burr Jones § 70 (a). But there are various limitations laid down in particular concerning the obligor's opportunity of surreptitious access to the obligee's papers. Wigmore § 2518. Figg v Byrnett 3 Esp 196. So counter explanations may be shown by circumstances explaining the possession otherwise, as where the debtor has access to the place of custody of the instrument. Wigmore § 156, Law on Pre Li Rule 76. So also in running such a presumption the Court has to take into regard any facts or circumstances indicating that it might have been stolen. Ram Nath v Roggha, 25 O C 125, see also Ganesh v Kheloo 22 W R 265. A father held the note of his son for £125. On the father's death his representatives sue on the note but the son produces it and claims it. It appears that he had means of access to his father's papers. There is no presumption that the note

S 114 It has been said Giey v Giey 17 N Y 552. In that case the Court said 'Is the production of this note by the defendant, under the facts of this case, evidence of its discharge, so when it is proved not to have been paid or still held? I think it is not.' Pothier (Obligations, 73) says that Borsen holds that possession of the note affords a presumption of its payment but if he alleges a release he must prove it, for a release is a donation and a donation ought not to be presumed. Pothier differs and thinks it should be presumed unless the creditor shows the contrary. But Pothier agrees with Borsen, that if the debtor was the general agent or clerk of the creditor, having access to his papers, possession alone might not be a sufficient presumption of payment or release—so if he was a neighbour into whose house the effects of the creditor had been removed on account of a fire. The latter presumption seems applicable in this case. Here the case shows without contradiction that the defendant, living at home with his father and a key that fitted his father's desk where the note was kept. The presumption under s 111 of the Evidence Act, sub (1) that, when a document creating an obligation is in the hands of the obligor, the obligation has been discharged is subject to the qualification that, when the bond is in possession of the obligor but the circumstances of the case are such that he may have stolen it, these circumstances are to be considered by the Court in deciding whether the maxim would apply or not. Kali Prasad v Narayan 103 Ind Cas 158. In a suit to enforce a mortgage the defendant's case was that the mortgage debt had been discharged and that the mortgage deed had been returned to him. The plaintiff denied these allegations and pleaded that the deed had been stolen from him. It was found that at the time of executing the mortgage the defendant had deposited with the plaintiff the title deeds of the mortgaged property and that they were still in the possession of the plaintiff. Held that the fact that the defendant did not get back the title deeds at the time of the alleged discharge considerably weakened the presumption in his (defendant's) favour arising from the possession by him of the mortgage deed. Attoor Naidu v Kothandaram 46 C L J 292=29 Bom L R 1355. The presumption of discharge would not arise where the defendant did not produce the document and the onus is on him to prove the discharge. Dhuan Singh v Gurdit Singh 6 Lah 297=26 P L R 491=89 Ind Cas 234. Under s 111 (1) of the Evidence Act, it is open to the Court to presume that if a document creating an obligation is in the hands of the obligor the obligation is discharged. But in raising such a presumption the Court has to take into regard any facts or circumstances indicating that it might have been stolen. The burden shifts as the evidence is developed and when both the parties produce their evidence, the question on whom the initial onus lies ceases to be of much importance. Jam Nath v Raggha 2 O C 125=68 Ind Cas 892=1922 Oudh 211. If the promisor is in the hands of a maker there is a presumption that it has been paid off. If the drawee alleges that the maker came into possession of the note unlawfully, the onus is on him to prove it. Hung Myat v Hla May, 12 Bur L T 116=52 Ind Cas 650 (Haudhurz Hamed v Mandu Das 17 C W N 49=39 I A 184 (P C)). Bunayal v Dular 20 Ind Cas 308. Illustration (1) only refers to presumption that may be raised. It does not follow that such presumptions would shift the onus of proof. Where in a suit on a usufructuary mortgage bond, the defendant pleaded discharge and produced the bond but there was no endorsement of discharge written thereon and the person through whom the money was said to have been paid was not examined, held that the lower Courts were right in holding that the mere production of the bond was not enough to shift the burden of proving the discharge which lay on the defendant. In re Para Thurunge 2 L W 604=13 M L T 94=(1915) M W N 653.

OTHER PRESUMPTIONS

Acceptance An estate is devised to, or a gift is made to A. The law presumes that it is beneficial to A and that he accepts it. He may disclaim it, but to work thus a disclaimer must be proved. Tousson v Fielnell 3 B & Ald 31, Thompson v Leach 2 Salik 619. In the first case it was said 'I think that an estate cannot be forced on a man. A devise, however, being prima facie for the devisee's benefit, he is supposed to assent to it until he does some act to show his dissent. The law presumes that he will assent until the contrary is proved. When the contrary, however, is proved it shows that he did never assent to the devise and consequently that the estate never was in him." 'Prima facie' said Ibbott, C J, "every estate whether given by Will or otherwise is supposed to be beneficial to the party to whom it is given." And Bayley J added "The law indeed, presumes that the estate devised will be beneficial to the devisee and that he will accept of it until there is proof to the contrary."

Advancement The English doctrine of advancement is applicable in this country as between a father and daughter, both of English extraction and living under English law. Hurrosoundary Debi v M S Stevenson 2 W R 141, see also Kerwick v Kerwick 32 C L J 490 (P C). According to the law prevailing in the Bombay Presidency, a purchase by a husband in the name of his wife does not raise any presumption of a gift to the wife or of an advancement for her benefit. Motulahu v Purshotam 6 Bom L R 975=29 B 306. There is no presumption of an advancement by the name of a son being used as purchaser, other than in the case of a stranger being used. Sayyad v Ullap, 13 M 1 A 232, Gopee Krist v Ganga Proshad, 6 M 1 A 53.

Adultery A married man enters a house of prostitution and remains there all night. The presumption is that he committed adultery while there. Eians v Eians 41 Cal 103 (Am), Isley v Astley, 1 Hagg Ecc 720, Lawson Pie Ev 323.

Alteration Alterations, erasures and interlineations appearing on the face of writings, whether under seal or not, are presumed to have been made before their execution or completion. Lawson Pie Ev 452. In the early history of the common law the Judges examined the question themselves and if the deed or other instrument appeared to be interlined they refused to admit it, subsequently this practice was altered and the question whether the alteration was made before or after the delivery of the deed was left to the jury. And finally the presumption of law was varied so that the alteration had been made before the delivery, on the ground that any other view would be presumption in favour of fraud and forgery. Tatum v Calamore, 16 Q B 745. But in India in an ordinary case the party who presents an instrument which is an essential part of his case, in an apparently altered and suspicious state, must fail from the mere infirmity or doubtful complexion of his proof, unless he can satisfactorily explain the state of the document. But this wholesome rule admits of exceptions if there be, independently of the instrument, corroborative proof strong enough to revert the presumption which arises against an apparent and presumable falsifier of evidence. And such corroborative proof will be greatly strengthened if there be reason to suppose that the opposite party has withheld evidence which could prove the original condition and import of the suspected document. Though the onus of proof of the genuineness of an instrument in its altered state lies upon the party producing and claiming under it yet the altered and suspicious appearance of the instrument may be explained by proof of its original state when executed and its existing state sufficiently accounted for, to rebut the presumption of the deed having been falsified and tampered with, after execution, by the party claiming under it. Musamut Khoob Koonoor v Baboo Moodunaram, 1 W R P C 36=9 M 1 A 1. It lies upon the parties who seek to enforce an altered instrument to show the circumstances under which the alteration took place. Ramasamy v Bhayani Iyyar 3 M H C R 247. An alteration made while the instrument is in the custody of one party, although not made with his knowledge or consent, has the same effect in voiding the instrument as if made by him on the principle that he who has the custody of an instrument made for his benefit, is bound to preserve it in its original state. Kanhaiyalal v Sitaram 81 Ind C 847. An action is brought on a contract to indemnify A on certain notes made on March 16th. The contract is also dated March 16th, but when produced it is seen that the figures '16' describing the notes have been written over the figures '15' and in the date of the instrument the figures '16' have been written over the figures '17'. The presumption is that these alterations were made at the time of its execution and the contract, is

S. 114 admit this. Beaman v Russell 20 A 205-29 49 Am Dec 775. In that case it was said: "Amidst the conflict of authorities on this point, and with the little aid that can be derived from the modern English cases, I should be disposed to fall back upon the ancient common law rule—that an alteration of a written instrument if nothing appear to the contrary should be presumed to have been made at the time of its execution. I think this rule is demanded by the usual condition of the business transactions of this country, and especially of this State—where a great portion of the contracts made are drawn by the parties to them, and without great care in regard to interlineations and alterations. To establish an invariable rule such as is claimed in behalf of the defendant, that the party producing the paper should in all cases be bound to explain any alteration by extrinsic evidence would I apprehend do injustice in a very majority of the instances in which it should be applied. Such a rule might be tolerated—might perhaps be beneficially adopted—in a highly commercial country like that of Great Britain, in regard to a negotiable paper, which is upon stamped paper, the very cost of which would induce special care in the drawing of it, but I am persuaded its application here could not be otherwise than injurious. It is not often that an alteration can be accounted for by extraneous evidence, and to hold that in all cases such evidence must be given, without regard to any suspicious appearance of the alteration, would, I think, in many instances be doing such manifest injustice as to shock the common sense of most men. In this conflict of opinion," says Woodruff, I in Mayhew v Snuffer, 21 D Smith 1 (Am) after an exhaustive review of all the authorities "it appears to me the sensible rule and the rule most in accordance with the decisions of our own State is that the instrument, with all the circumstances of its history, its nature, the appearance of the alteration, the possible or probable motives to the alteration, or against it, and its effect upon the parties respectively ought to be submitted to the jury, and that the Court cannot presume from the mere fact that an alteration appears on the face of the instrument, whether under seal or otherwise, it was made after the signing. Some alterations may be greatly to the disadvantage of the holder or party setting up the instrument. Shall it be presumed that he made them unlawful against his own interest? Others may be indifferent to him and favourable to some other. No presumption in such a case can exist against him." But where the alteration is in a different handwriting from the rest of the instrument, or in a different ink, or is in the interest of the party setting it up, or is suspicious on its face, or the execution of the instrument is denied under oath, the burden of proof rests on the party producing the instrument to explain it to the satisfaction of the tribunal. Falconer Pr Ex Rule 84.

Assent. A statement is proved to have been made in the presence of H it will be presumed that H heard it. Hochreiter v People, 2 Abb App Dec 363.

Attestation. Mere attestation of a deed does not necessarily impart an assent to all the recitals contained therein. Imam Ali v Bay Nath, 10 C W N 551=3 C L J 776=33 C 613. Mena Singh v Bhagnani 5 Ind. Cas 212, Lal Bahadur v Ranibadi 37 A 350. Langa v Jagadishore, 21 C W N 225 (231)=14 C 187. An attesting witness is a witness who has seen the deed executed and who signs it as a witness. Ramu v Lazmanao 10 Bom L R 943=35 B 44.

Benami. The mere fact that the deeds are in the possession of the mortgagee does not of itself prove that the mortgagee was a mere benamidar for the mortgagor. Ilavar v Vishnu, 1923 Bom 429. Property purchased by the father of a joint Hindu family in the name of his minor son is presumed to be benamie and on the father's death becomes the property of the family. Bhaghat Chandra Dey v Huro Gobind Pal 29 W R 269. Sayyud v Ullap 13 M I A 232. Meechappa v Vannu Ba Bu 8 Ind Cas 450, Bhubannamohun Das v Kumudhala 23 C W N 131. Devan Bai Brijay Bahadur v Indrapal 26 I A 226=26 C 871=1 C W N 1, Seth Mani Lal v Brijay Singh, 2, C W N 419 (P C). Srenam C. Gopal 11 M I A 29. Narain v Krishna 8 M 214. Narasinha v Srinivasha, 33 M 112.

Best evidence Best evidence not produced though available raises adverse presumption Kameshwar v. Bajit Lal, 33 C W N 430=27 A L J 261=49 C L J 108=31 Bom L R 721

Bond Independently of a statute of limitation or in the absence of one after a lapse of twenty years the law raises a presumption of the payment of a bond. Law Pte Ev 370 'These presumptions to be drawn by the Court in the case of stale demands,' says Chancellor Kent 'are founded on substantial justice and the clearest policy. If the party having knowledge of his rights will sit still and without asserting them permit persons to act as if they did not exist, and to acquire interests and to consider themselves as owners of the property, there is no reason why the presumption should not be raised. It is therefore well settled that the presumption that a demand has been satisfied prevails as much in this Court as it does at law.' Giles v. Barendse, 5 Johns Ch 515. Every presumption says the Master of the Rolls in Pulering v. Stamford, 2 Ves Ir 583, 'that can fairly be made, shall be made against a stale demand. It may arise from the acts of the parties or the very forbearance to make the demand affords a presumption either that the claimant was conscious it was satisfied or intended to relinquish it.' Lauson Pte Ev 371. But in India this presumption is of little value as a bond becomes time barred after a lapse of the time mentioned in the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908).

Character The character habits and personal appearance of a person are presumed to continue as proved to be at the time of the past. Law Pte Ev Rule 32. It might be too much to say that a character when once formed is presumed to remain unchanged for life. Still the law, founded on a full knowledge and just appreciation of the general course of human affairs, indulges a strong presumption against any sudden change in the moral as the mental and social condition of man. It is not looking to common experience in human conduct generally found to be true that a thorough change from a bad to a good character is brought about within four years. It may and it is to be hoped often does occur but such is not the common course of life. On the contrary there is strong probability that one whose general character was bad four years since is still of doubtful or dispraised fame. Sleeper v. Van Middles Worth Denio, 431 Law Pte Ev 230.

Child bearing age The presumption that a particular woman has passed the age of child bearing is one of fact to be determined partly by the light of general knowledge and partly by the life history of the person in question. It has several times been held to apply where the age of fifty three years has been passed, but each case must depend on its particular circumstances. Haynes v. Haynes, 35 L J Ch 303. Re White (1901) 1 Ch 570, Wills Ev 2nd Ed 57. In re Thornhill, (1904) W N 112 C A. A widow, aged fifty six years and three months who had never had but one child (born when she was between twenty one and twenty two years of age) and lived afterwards with her husband for twenty four years until his death is presumed to be past child bearing. In re White, (1901) 1 Ch 570. In delivering the judgment Buckley J said 'A number of cases have been cited but the material ones to my mind are these Haynes v. Haynes, 35 L J Ch 303 where it is held that a spinster aged fifty three years and two months must be presumed to be past the age of child bearing, and the head note adds a query whether this limit of age is not too low. In re Widdow's Trust L R 11 Eq 403 where Mallins V C made the presumption in the case of a widow of the age of fifty two years and four months who had never had any children, and in the case of a spinster of the age of fifty three years and nine months. In re Jullner's Estate L R 14 Eq, where the age of the lady was forty nine years and nine months. She was married and had never had a child. The marriage had taken place in 1846 and the decree was pronounced in 1872, so that there had been twenty six years of married life no issue, and the husband was living. Dandoon v. Kumpston 18 Ch D 213 where the lady was a spinster of the age of fifty four, and Hydson v. Ellison 19 Berr 565 where she was a spinster and aged fifty six. It will be observed that in all the cases to which I have referred the ages were less than that of the lady in the present case, but it will also be remarked that

S 114

I have not mentioned my case of a widow who had no children. In re Widow's Trust, L R 11 Eq 108. In these circumstances I have to consider whether the cases relating to spinsters do not equally apply to widows who have had children. The only difference that occurs to me is that there is nothing to show in the case of spinsters whether they are or have been capable of child bearing, which in the case of a widow who has had a child there is. On the other hand, if there has been a long lapse of time since the birth of a child—as in this case twenty four years—the presumption will be that the capacity of child bearing has ceased. See also Payne v Long, 19 Ves 571, Groves v Groves 12 W R 15, Levy v Hodges, Jac 585, Miles v Knight, 12 Jur 666, Dodd v Hale, 5 D & Sm 226, Brandon v Woodthorpe 10 B & W 163, Brown v Pringle, 1 H & M, 121, Edward v Fuel, 23 Beav 271, Davis v Bush 8 Jur 114.

Conflicting presumption. In the case of conflicting presumptions the presumption of payment is stronger than, and will prevail against, the presumption of continuance, the presumption of innocence is stronger than and will prevail against, the presumption of payment, of the continuance of life, of the continuance of things generally, of marriage and of capacity, the presumption of knowledge of the law is stronger than, and will prevail against the presumption of innocence, and the presumption of sanity is stronger than, and will prevail against the presumption of innocence. Law Pre Ev Rule 122 'Nothing can be clearer than this,' says Mr Justice Heath in an old case (Jayne v Price, 5 Lunt 326) 'a presumption may be rebutted by a contrary and stronger presumption. Mary B married W who afterwards enlisted and went on a foreign service and was never heard of afterwards, twelve months after his departure she married B. Held, that the issue of B would be presumed legitimate. King v Inhabitants of Gloucestershire, 2 Barn & Ald 356. In this case the conflicting presumptions were the presumption of innocence and the presumption of the continuance of life. If, said the Court, 'W was alive at the time of the second marriage, it was illegal and she was guilty of bigamy. If she had been indicted for bigamy it would clearly not be sufficient. In that case W must have been proved to have been alive at the time of the second marriage. It is contended that his death ought to have been proved, but the answer is that the presumption of law is that he was not alive when the consequence of his being so is that another person has committed a criminal act.' But 'when it is recognized that a presumption is merely a direction of law that when certain facts are presented in an invariable formula the finding thereon shall always be the same way the logical impossibility of a conflict of presumptions becomes apparent. What really happens in a case of so called conflicting presumptions, the legal conclusion or presumption which ordinarily attaches to certain facts is prevented from attaching either by facts or by a rule of law inconsistent therewith. It is a logical and legal impossibility for two rules of law to affix inconsistent conclusions to the same state of facts at the same time. 9 Encyclop Ev 'Presumptions' p 891. The market values so to speak, of the various presumptions have been sometimes sought to be established, but so far there is no recognized standard. Keeping, then, to the expression it is used, we may have the case of one party to a cause relying upon a given presumption and that of the other party upon another. Which party is to prevail? In every case it depends on the nature of the respective presumptions. Burn Jones § 101.

Co sharer's possession. Mere possession or occupation of the property by one co sharer does not constitute adverse possession against the other co sharer. There must be a disclaimer by the assertion of hostile title or other wise. Uyalbi v Umakanta, 31 C 970=9 C W N 32. Where property is owned by several co owners, the mere fact that one of them has not received the profits of the property is no proof that the possession of the other co owner was adverse. Bharat v Ganga 9 Ind Cas 425. The possession of joint property by one co sharer does not constitute adverse possession against any other co sharer, until there has been a disclaimer of the latter's title by open assertion of a hostile title by the former. Bharat Shamsad v Hajunaja, 14

Bom L R 314, see also Sheikh Asud Ali v Sheikh Albar Ali 1 C L R 364 S 114.
Baroda v Ananda 3 C W N 771, Udaram v Dugan, 78 P L R 1909,
Debenbra v Narendra, 23 C W N 900

Death Where among some relations the evidence on the question who died first is quite evenly balanced, the Court is entitled to say the probabilities are in favour of the younger man surviving the elder Kullarn v Laxmibai, (1922) Bom 347

Debts Debts once proved to exist are presumed to continue until the contrary is shown Law Pre En Rule 29 To prove a debt against a bankrupt an entry in his book some months before the bankruptcy showing that he was indebted to the claimant in a certain sense is proved The presumption is that the debt still continues Jacksan v him 2 Coup 48 Where it is found that a money lender has allowed a debt to remain outstanding for a long period without obtaining some document or security for it and without at any time demanding payment the presumption is that the debt has been paid Narain v Dwya Singh, 22 O C 335=51 Ind Cis 95

Delay in enforcing rights Where the long delay of the plaintiff in bringing the suit has prejudiced the defendants and has prevented them from bringing the best evidence that would otherwise have been available to them the tendency of the Court must invariably be to make an inference against the plaintiff unless good cause is shown and the Court should attach great importance to such presumption in testing the credibility of the evidence actually given Big Ray Saran v Basanta Singh 118 Ind Cis 151=A I R 1929 All 561 Under a possessory mortgage of 1876 it was found that possession was not transferred to the mortgagee and no steps had been taken by the latter or his heirs to recover the amount Held that under the circumstances it was reasonable to presume that the mortgage of 1876 had been satisfied and that the onus is on the plaintiff to prove that it was still in force in 1909 Imritabai v Tabhanbai, 40 Ind Cis 676 In a suit for mortgage where there was absence of demand for a period of 36 years the burden of proving existing liability is on the plaintiff Meghraj v Mulundaram, 16 Ind Cis 806, see also Narain v Dunga, 51 Ind Cis 95=22 O C 335, Raja Singh v Teen Singh 9 P R 1866

Documents It is a general though not a conclusive presumption that a document was made on the day of the date it bears Uma Kumari v Rajah Bijoy Singh, 21 C W N 535 P C Parshalan v Naar, 81 Ind Cis 516 Davies v Loundes 7 Scott N R at 211, Owen v Waters, M & W 95, Hunt v Warsey, 5 B & Ad 902 When a document is not produced after due notice to produce, and after being called for, it is presumed to have been duly stamped unless it be shown to have remained unstamped for some time after its execution Closwaldene v Corrie, 18 C B 36, Marine Invest Co v Harrold L R 7 H L 624, Steph Dig 7th Ed Art 86 p 95 There is a presumption as regards the regularity of the execution of a document, Bell v Taylor 1 C & P 117 Lauson Pre En 82, see also Uttam v Hukam 39 A 112, Sitarani v Nanka, 106 Ind Cis 240 Where a document is on plain paper unstamped and unregistered and such as have never seen the light of the day till it was filed and it has been shown that there were occasions when if genuine it should have been produced but it is not produced the presumption is that the document is not genuine but a forged one Deomath v Debenhanath, A I R 1930 Pat 75

Duty All persons are presumed to have duly discharged any obligation imposed on them either by unwritten or written law Best I § 345 Lam v Kalab, 36 Ind Cis 100

Domicile Domicile once shown to exist, is presumed to continue until the contrary is proved Law Pre En Rule 30 It is necessary, said Lord Vestbury in Bell v Kennedy L R 1 Sc App 320 "in the administration of the law, that the idea of domicile should exist, and the fact of domicile should be ascertained in order to determine which of two municipal laws may be invoked for the purpose of regulating the rights of the parties. We know very well that succession and distribution depend upon the law of the domicile. Domicile, therefore is one idea of law. It is the relation which the law creates between an individual and a particular locality or country. To every adult per on the law ascribes a domicile and that domicile remains his fixed attribute until a new and different attribute usurps its place. And Lord Cranworth added, 'It is necessary to bear in mind that a domicile, though intended to be abandoned will continue until a new domicile is acquired and that a new domicile is not acquired until there is not only a fixed intention of establishing a permanent residence in some other country, but until it o this intention has been carried out by actual residence there.

S 114

Encroachment by tenant. The true presumption is to encroachment made by a tenant during his tenancy upon the adjoining lands of his landlord is that the land so encroached upon are added to the tenure and form part thereof for the benefit of the tenant, so long as the original holding continue and afterwards for the benefit of his landlord unless it clearly appeared by some act done at the time that the tenant made the encroachment for his own benefit. This is the clear rule of English law and it is a rule which is supported by reason and principle. Guru Das v Issor Chunder 22 W R 246 (247), see also Naddiar v Mea Jan, 10 C 820.

Fraud. Fraud or breach of trust ought not to be lightly imputed to the living for the legal presumption is the other way and as to the dead who are not here to answer for them selves it would be the height of injustice and cruelty to disturb their ashes and violate the sanctity of the grave unless the evidence of fraud be clear beyond a reasonable doubt. Law Pte Et 119.

Good faith. The normal presumption is in favour of good faith and not of bad faith on the part of the assessee. Jambu Das v Income tax Com A I R 1927 Nag 336=104 Ind Cas 336.

Grant. The gist of the principle upon which a lost grant is presumed is that the state of affairs is otherwise unexplained. When from a certain set of facts, a Court infers a lost grant the process is one of inference of fact and not of legal conclusion. Kashinath v Musari Chandra 31 C L J 501=57 Ind Cas 350. Where certain persons had been in possession of lands under a claim of rent free brahmottar grant for nearly 62 years, a lost grant may be presumed in favour of the owner of brahmottar. Rai Kuan Chandra v Simath Chakravarti 31 C W N 135=100 Ind Cas 473. Whether a presumption of a lost grant should arise or not must depend upon the circumstances of each case. Kiran Chandra v Chakravarti 31 C W N 135=100 Ind Cas 473.

Guilt. Where no motive for the commission of a crime is shown the presumption of the innocence of the suspected person is strengthened. But the commission of the crime being proved and al o facts pointing to the prisoner as the perpetrator, evidence that a motive existed is relevant, and is a circumstance in chain of evidence from which guilt may be inferred. Lawson Pte Et Rule 10.

Hindu Law—Adoption. Where there is no express prohibition nor are there circumstances from which prohibition can be implied the mere fact that a widow and her husband did not live together does not render the adoption made by her invalid. The husband's consent is in the absence of prohibition, always to be implied. Iaxmibai v Saraswatibai 1 Bom L R 420=23 B 789. Where an adoption has been acquie led in for a period of 33 years it is presumed that the necessary consent of some person competent to give away the adopted son had been obtained. Manabao v Ganesh 7 B H C App 33. The Court when it is satisfied that permission to adopt exists, will exact slight proof of the performance of ceremonies but it cannot conversely from the observance of ritual forms infer that the husband's authority, which is essential in cases of adoption by a Hindu widow has been really obtained. Rathnamadhab v Radha 111 Ind 311=2 Ind Jur O S 5.

Hindu Law—applicability. The Hindu and Mohammedan Law can be applied to a person under the first part of section 21 of Act VI of 1871, only when he is an orthodox believer in the Hindu or Mahomedan religion. The mere circumstance that he may call himself or be termed by others a Hindu or a Mahomedan is the case may be, is not enough. His only claim to have a special kind of law applied to him is that he follows and observes a particular religion that of itself creates a law for him. Raj Bahadur v. Bishen Dayal 4 A 313 = A W N. 1892 71. Where the parties are Hindus in the absence of any custom to the contrary or of any satisfactory evidence for showing what form of Hindu Law they have adopted it must be taken that they have adopted in its entirety one form or other of the Hindu Law and that it being uncertain which form they adopted, it is not unreasonable to infer that they adopted the form which prevails in the locality in which they reside. Ramdas v. Chandra Dass, 20 C 409. Where a family migrates from Guzerat where the Musal law prevails, it must be assumed that that law still applies to the family unless it is shown that the family has abandoned it, and adopted the law of the country where it has settled. Mule Das v. Manul 5 M I P 181. See also Parbati v. Jagadish 20 C 433. Chandel v. Manna, 4 B N L R 376.

Hindu Law—Endowment. A person seeking to set aside an alienation on the ground that the property alienated is debuttee or endowed property, must adduce proof that the same was endowed in perpetuity. Proof that the rents and profits have been utilized for the idol is insufficient. Komari Doorga Nath v. Ramchander 2 C 341 (P C) = 4 I A 52.

Hindu Law—Joint Family. Hindu families are ordinarily governed by the law of their origin not by that of their domicile. Lal Lal v. Gunga, W R 1864 36. Where parties, who are not Hindus reside in a Hindu country and adopt the customs of Hindus have lived as Hindu families do joint and separate title they will be governed by the Hindu law of co-partnership and the legal presumptions applicable to the position of a joint Hindu family will be applied to them. Riphan v. Lala Chorahny, 3 C L R 97. In a divided Hindu family there is a presumption of continuance in the interest of every member. Mooney v. Lomun 2 W R 283. If brothers or sisters are living together in a joint Hindu family they must be presumed to be joint in property. Dharm Chand v. Raj Mohushee 5 W R 125. See also Kane 3 W L 16; 5 W R 82. Lalham v. Mulhar 3 T R 107. Kane 4 B N C A C 169, Vardham v. Chootas 1 A W N 100. If a family is joint and there is a nucleus from which the family has grown the presumption is that property acquired by any member of the family on those who allege that it is self-acquired. Pradip v. Lala 133. See also Shu Gol m v. Buan Singh, 1 B L R 100. Kanhayat 29 A 241 P C. Lal Das v. Mula 2 T R 107. Where a member of a joint Hindu family has separated himself for a profession or for the service of a deity or for the purpose of education in the absence of all evidence in the case the presumption is that the expense of the joint family property is to be paid by him. Sutul 25 P L R 1916 = 109 P W R 1916.

Hindu widow. One who claims a share in the property of a deceased with the usual limited interest is a Hindu widow. It is not necessary that that title is must be never. It is not only the annuities of the deceased but also the property of the deceased limited owner of the nature of the property. The alienation was justified by the widow and it is reasonable to say that the widow is entitled to the property. Debi Dayal 12 C W N 100. It is a rule of Hindu law that the requirement of a Hindu widow is that she should be a widow which the property of the deceased is to be paid to her. estate w. d.

Husband. A Hindu widow is entitled to the property of her husband out of the property of her husband. The husband is the owner of the property and the widow is the life tenant. See also L. R.

S. 114

Identity Identity of name is a presumption of identity of person where there is similarity of surname or title or circumlocution or where the name is an unusual one but after when the name is a common one and there are several persons known of the same name and of the same place Law on Pre Ev Rule 57 In Hudson v. Hyde 1 Q B 629 In D. Mannan and v. Factor, where no particular circumstance tends to raise a question as to the party being the same even identity of name is something from which inference may be drawn. If the name were only John Smith which is of very frequent occurrence there might not be much ground for drawing the conclusion. But Harry Thomas Rhodes are not so numerous and from that and the circumstances generally there is every reason to believe that the acceptor and the defendant are identical.

Infancy Infancy once shown to exist is presumed to continue until the contrary is proved. Law on Pre Ev Rule 90 In a statement etc., it is proved that a son is over age. It is never the less presumed that he continues unemancipated in the days of infancy unless there is evidence to the contrary. See Littlehall, 7 Q B 104

In R v Smith 1 Con 260 Law on Pre Ev and to the Jury: 'Where the child is under the age of seven years the law presumes him to be incapable of committing a crime, after the age of fourteen he is presumed to be responsible for his actions as entirely as if he were forty but between the ages of seven and fourteen no presumption of law arises at all and that which is termed a malicious intent—a guilty knowledge that he was doing wrong—must be proved by the evidence and cannot be presumed from the mere commission of the act. The Indian Penal Code has fixed the age of 12 instead of 14. (Rule 83 I P Code)

An infant shall be prima facie deemed to be doli incapax and presumed to be unacquainted with guilt, yet this presumption will diminish with the advance of the offender's years and will depend upon the particular facts and circumstances of his case." 1 Russ 109, Wayne Ex. Law 102

Innocence The law presumes the innocence of a person charged with crime until the contrary is proved beyond a reasonable doubt. Law on Pre Ev Rule 90 'It is greatly to be regretted that the so-called presumption of innocence in favour of the prisoner at the bar is a pretence a delusion an empty sound. It ought not so to be but it is. Justice Choate said that 'this presumption is not a mere phrase without meaning, that it is in the nature of evidence for the defendant that it is as irresistible as the heavens will overcome, that it hovers over the prisoner as a guardian angel throughout the trial, that it goes with every part and parcel of the evidence that it is equal to one witness. That is just what it should be but just what is not. Practically it is of no avail whatever in the trial. The jury tread it under foot, the Judge the same moment he admits it in theory forgets it in argument. It is a dead letter. Nay so far from being merely inoperative it is not hazardous to say that in the trial the presumption is reversed. By Court and jury, by prosecution police, and by the public the accused is presumed guilty. Let every one as he looks upon a prisoner in the dock carefully inquire of him self and answer if this be not so. The reason is plain. The whole course of criminal procedure, from inception to close, is designed to shut out presumptions of innocence and invite the presumptions of guilt. The secrecy of complaint making at the magistrate's office the mysterious inquisition of the grand jury room the publicity of the arrest, the commitment to the lock up the demand of bail the delay of trial, the enforced silence of defence till prosecution has done its worst, all all so many steps and strokes to blicken the accused before he is permitted to open his mouth with a syllable of evidence to break the force of damaging array of circumstances. To suppose that the presumption of innocence, which unbridled nature prompts is not before this time choked and strangled to death, is an absurdity too gross to dispute. The treatment itself of the prisoner negatives the presumption. If he is presumed innocent, why is he manacled? Why is he put in jail? Why is he let out only on bail? Why when he is put on trial, is he put in the dock? Why does he not have place with the bystanders, who are simply presumed innocent? The 'presumption, in the presence of such thing, is a contradiction of terms. How can a person be presumed innocent who is pre-eminently guilty? The fact that he is restrained of his liberty presumes guilt. There is no other construction to be placed on the restraint. Human nature is not capable of any other. Yet human nature ought to presume innocence till the contrary is proved. From ten years at Police Court Judge New York Hunt and Wiegals 1881

Professor Thayer says: 'To sum it up the substance of all this is, as I have said, that the presumption of innocence is a piece of evidence a part of the proof—i.e., a thing to be weighed as having probative quality. What appears to be true may be stated thus: (1) A presumption operates to relieve the party in whose favour it works from going forward in argument or evidence. (2) It serves therefore the purposes of a prima facie case and in that sense it is temporarily, the substitute or equivalent for evidence. (3) It serves this purpose until the adversary has gone forward with his evidence. How much evidence shall he require from the adversary to meet the presumption or, as it is variously expressed to overcome it or destroy it is determined by no fixed rule. It may be merely enough to make it reasonable to require the other side to answer; it may be enough to make out a full prima facie case and it may be a great weight of evidence excluding all reasonable doubt. (4) A mere presumption involves no rule as to the weight of evidence necessary to meet it. When a presumption is called a strong one like the presumption of legitimacy, it means that it is accompanied by another rule relating to the weight of evidence to be brought in by him against whom it operates. (5) A presumption itself contributes no evidence, and has no probative quality. It is sometimes said that the presumption will tip the scale, when the evidence is balanced. But, in truth, nothing tips the scale but evidence and a presumption—being a legal rule or a legal conclusion—is not evidence. It may represent and spring from certain evidential facts and these facts may be put in the scale. But that is not putting in the presumption itself. A presumption may be called 'an instrument of proof,' in the sense that it determines from whom the evidence shall come, and it may be called something in the nature of evidence, on the same reason, for it may be called a substitute for evidence, and even evidence—in the sense that it counts at the outset for evidence enough to make a prima facie case. But the moment these conceptions give way to the perfectly distinct notion of evidence proper—i.e., probative matter, which may be a basis of inference, something capable of being weighed in the scales of reason and compared and estimated with other matter of the probative sort—so that we get to treating the presumption of innocence or any other presumption, as being evidence in this its true sense, then we have wandered into the region of shadows and phantoms. Prof Thayer's article in Yale Law Journal of March, 1897

The rule underlying the presumption of innocence merely means that a person who is accused of a crime is not bound to make any statement, or to offer any explanation of circumstances which throw suspicion upon him. He stands before the Court as an innocent man till he is proved to be guilty. It is the business of the Crown to prove him to be guilty, and he need not do anything but stand by and see what else has been made out against him. Mayne's Criminal Law § 5, see also Innes v. Emperor 42 C. 957 Emperor v. Hangal, 41 C. 601 (616). As far as the case for the Crown is concerned he cannot be called upon to take part in the proceeding except in so far as for his own protection the Court may question him under s. 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code. If there is a piece of evidence against the prisoner which might be cleared up one way or the other by a word from him, he is not bound to say that word. He is entitled to rely on the defence that the evidence as it stands, is inconclusive, and that the Crown is bound to make it conclusive without any help from him. Further, in making out this case, the prosecution is to get rid of every presumption in favour of innocence. The great majority of mankind manage to get through life without committing a crime, and those who assert that a particular person has committed a crime, are asserting a fact against which there is a presumption which may range from something almost insuperable to something evanescent. Probably no amount of evidence would convince a jury that the Commander in

S. 114

Identity Identity of name raises a presumption of identity of person where there is similarity of residence or trade or common times or where the name is an unusual one but dicta where the names are common one and there are several persons known of the same name and of the same place. Lawrie v. The People 10 Ind. 27. In Locke v. Hyle 1 Q. B. 629 Lord Denham said 'In cases where no particular circumstance tends to raise a question as to the party being the same even identity of name is one thing from which an inference may be drawn. If the name were only John Smith which is of very frequent occurrence there might not be much ground for drawing the conclusion. But Henry Thomas Rydies are not so numerous and from that and the circumstances generally there is every reason to believe that the acceptor and the defendant are identical.'

Infancy Infancy once shown to exist is presumed to continue until the contrary is proved. Lawrie v. The People 10 Ind. 27. In a settlement case, it is proved that a son is over age. It is never the less presumed that he continues unemancipated as in the days of infancy unless there is evidence to the contrary. Re Jiles's will, 7 Q. B. 155.

In R v. Smith 1 Con. 260 Lord T. said to the Jury 'Where the child is under the age of seven years the law presumes him to be incapable of committing a crime, after the age of fourteen he is presumed to be responsible for his actions as entirely as if he were forty but between the age of seven and fourteen no presumption of law arises at all and that which is termed a malicious intent—a guilty knowledge that he was doing wrong—must be proved by the evidence and cannot be presumed from the mere commission of the act. The Indian Penal Code has fixed the age of 12 instead of 11. (Section 83 I.P. Code) 'An infant shall be prima facie deemed to be doli incapax and presumed to be unacquainted with guilt, yet this presumption will diminish with the advance of the offender's years and will depend upon the particular facts and circumstances of his case.' 1 Russ. 103. Mayne Fr. Law 102.

Innocence The law presumes the innocence of a person charged with crime until the contrary is proved beyond a reasonable doubt. Lawrie v. The People 10 Ind. 27. 'It is greatly to be regretted that the so called presumption of innocence in favour of the prisoner at the bar is a pretence, a delusion, an empty sound. It ought not so to be but it is.' Rufus Choate said that 'this presumption is not a mere phrase without meaning, that 'it is in the nature of evidence for the defendant that it is irresistible as the heavens will overcome' that it hovers over the prisoner as a guardian angel throughout the trial, that it goes with every part and parcel of the evidence that it is equal to one witness. That is just what it should be but just what is not. Practically it is of no avail whatever in the trial. The jury tread it under foot, the Judge the same moment he admits it in theory forgets it in argument. It is a dead letter. Nay, so far from being merely inoperative it is not hazardous to say that in the trial the presumption is reversed. By Court and jury, by prosecution police and by the public the accused is presumed guilty. Let every one, as he looks upon a prisoner in the dock, carefully inquire of him self and answer if this be not so. The reason is plain. The whole course of criminal procedure from inception to close, is designed to shut out presumptions of innocence and invite the presumption of guilt. The secrecy of complaint making at the magistrate's office the mysterious acquisition of the grand jury room the publicity of the arrest the commitment to the lock up, the demand of bail the delay of trial the enforced silence of defence till prosecution has done its worst no all so many steps and strokes to blacken the accused before he is permitted to open his mouth with a syllable of evidence to break the force of damaging array of circumstances. To suppose that the presumption of innocence which unbridled nature prompts is not before this time choked and strangled to death is an absurdity too gross to dispute. The treatment itself of the prisoner negatives the presumption. If he is presumed innocent why is he manacled? Why is he put in jail? Why is he let out only on bail? Why when he is put on trial, is he put in the dock? Why does he not have place with the bystanders, who are simply presumed innocent? The presumption, in the presence of such thing, is a contradiction of terms. How can a person be presumed innocent who is presumably guilty? The fact that he is restrained of his liberty presumes guilt. There is no other construction to be placed on the restraint. Human nature is not capable of any other. Yet human nature ought to presume innocence till the contrary is proved. From Ten years a Police Court Judge Newbold Funnell and Wingate, 1881.

Professor Thayer says 'To sum it up the substance of all this is, as I have said, that the presumption of innocence is a piece of evidence, a part of the proof—i.e., a thing to be weighed as having probative quality. What appears to be true may be stated thus: (1) A presumption operates to relieve the party in whose favour it works from going forward in argument or evidence. (2) It serves therefore the purposes of a prima facie case and in that sense it is temporarily the substitute or equivalent for evidence. (3) It serves this purpose until the adversary has gone forward with his evidence. How much evidence shall be required from the adversary to meet the presumption, or, as it is variously expressed to overcome it or destroy it is determined by no fixed rule. It may be merely enough to make it reasonable to require the other side to answer, it may be enough to make out a full prima facie case, and it may be a great weight of evidence excluding all reasonable doubt. (4) A mere presumption involves no rule as to the weight of evidence necessary to meet it. When a presumption is called a strong one like the presumption of legitimacy, it means that it is accompanied by another rule relating to the weight of evidence to be brought in by him against whom it operates. (5) A presumption itself contributes no evidence, and has no probative quality. It is sometimes said that the presumption will tip the scale when the evidence is balanced. But, in truth, nothing tips the scale but evidence, and a presumption—being a legal rule or a legal conclusion—is not evidence. It may represent and spring from certain evidential facts, and these facts may be put in the scale. But that is not putting in the presumption itself. A presumption may be called 'an instrument of proof, in the sense that it determines from whom the evidence shall come, and it may be called something in the nature of evidence' on the same reason for it may be called a substitute for evidence, and even evidence—in the sense that it counts at the outset for evidence enough to make a prima facie case. But the moment these conceptions give way to the perfectly distinct notion of evidence proper—i.e., probative matter, which may be a basis of inference, something capable of being weighed in the scales of reason and compared and estimated with other matter of the probative sort—so that we get to treating the presumption of innocence or any other presumption, as being evidence in this, its true sense then we have wandered into the region of shadows and phantoms. Prof Thayer's article in Yale Law Journal of March, 1897.

The rule underlying the presumption of innocence merely means that a person who is accused of a crime is not bound to make any statement, or to offer any explanation of circumstances which throw suspicion upon him. He stands before the Court as an innocent man till he is proved to be guilty. It is the business of the Crown to prove him to be guilty and he need not do anything, but stand by and see what crime has been made out against him. Mayne's Cr. Law § 5 'see il o Umrao v Emperor, 42 C 957 Emperor v Kangal, 41 C 601 (616)'. As far as the case for the Crown is concerned, he cannot be called upon to take part in the proceeding, except in so far as, for his own protection the Court may question him under s 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code. If there is a piece of evidence against the prisoner which might be cleared up one way or the other by a word from him, he is not bound to say that word. He is entitled to rely on the defence that the evidence is it stands as inconclusive, and that the Crown is bound to make it conclusive without any help from him. Further, in making out this case, the prosecution is to get rid of every presumption in favour of innocence. The great majority of mankind manage to get through life without committing a crime, and those who are certain that a particular person has committed a crime are asserting a fact against which there is a presumption, which may range from something almost imperceptible to something very recent. Probably no amount of evidence would convince a jury that the Commander in

S 114 Chief or the Chief Justice had picked a pocket. In the case of a member of the thieving classes it would be the most natural thing in the world. Wynne v. Law p 239

In an action by A against B, A alleged that B, who had chartered a ship had put on board a dangerous commodity by which a loss happened, without due notice to the captain or any other person employed in the navigation. The burden of proving that B did not give the notice was on A. Williams v. East India Co 3 East 101. It was argued in that case that to compel A to prove the want of notice was compelling him to prove a negative which in civil action at least was against the general rule of evidence. But Lord Ellenborough said "That the declaration in imputing to the defendants having wrongfully put on board a ship an article of a highly dangerous, combustible nature imputes to the defendants a criminal negligence cannot be questioned. In order to make the putting on board wrongful the defendant must be cognizant of the dangerous quality of the article put on board, and being so they yet gave no notice considering the probable danger there occasioned to the lives of those on board it amounts to a species of delinquency in the persons concerned in so putting such dangerous article on board for which they are criminally liable and punishable as for a misdemeanour at least. We are, therefore of opinion upon principle and the authorities that the burden of proving that the dangerous article in question was put on board without notice rested upon the plaintiff alleging it to have been wrongfully put on board without notice of its nature and quality. Though the general presumption of law is, in favour of innocence, yet as men seldom do unlawful acts with innocent intentions the law presumes that every act which in itself is unlawful has been wrongfully intended till the contrary appears. Taylor § 118. Lord Mansfield has in clear language pointed out the distinction between these cases, where criminal intent must be proved and those where it will be presumed. "When an act in itself indifferent, if done with a particular intent becomes criminal there the intent must be proved and found but where the act is in itself unlawful the proof of justification or excuse lies on the defendant, and a failure thereof the law implies a criminal intent." R v. Woodfall, 5 Burr 2667. See also R v. Harvey 2 B & C 257, R v. Wallace 3 Ir Law R 5 N 38. R v. Cruvey 1 M & Sel 273. Taylor § 118.

"It seems well established that where in a criminal case there is a conflict between presumption of innocence and any other presumption the presumption of innocence prevails (King v. Inhabitants of Gloucestershire 2 Barn & Ald 386). The strength of this presumption varies according to the seriousness of the charge upon which an accused person is put on his trial. It has been said that "the greater the crime the stronger is the proof required by conviction" (Re Hobson 1 Law C C 261). The same principle was laid down by Lord C J in Bland 18 St T 1186. In this Court it was laid down in the case of Nibbaraj Chandra Roy v. The King Emperor, 11 C W N 1085, that the fact that an accused person was found with a gun in his hand immediately after a gun was fired and a man was killed on the spot from which the gun was fired, may be strong circumstantial evidence against the accused but it is an error of law to hold that the burden of proving innocence lies upon the accused under such circumstances. See also Weston v. Peary 18 C W N 185 = 10 C 898.

Reasonable doubt. It would be a happy thing for the triers of criminal cases if somebody should succeed in defining a reasonable doubt. A great felicity it would be if only some one should portray a reasonable doubt beyond a reasonable doubt. Nothing is more libly spoken of than this doubt yet there is nothing more doubtful. Lawyers roll it as a morsel under their tongues and roll it off at juries and justices as if it were a thing to be apprehended with as much certainty as a stark naked fact. But what a reasonable doubt is it is doubtful whether they stop to think or stopping form any but a very doubtful opinion. Should it be a matter of opinion at all? Should it not be a matter of conviction? Should not every one who is to enquire whether he has it have as absolute an idea of what a reasonable doubt is as he has of any other independent fact in the case? If the case is to turn on the matter of reasonable doubt how can it turn aright, unless the turning point be ascertained and fixed beyond a reasonable beyond all question? The learning of the books on this subject is vast. It begins with the Bible—that is to say, the book writers make it begin there though it does not appear that the inspired writers were sufficiently inspired to hit upon the favourite expression. Its equivalent lawyers since the time of Moses find in the Mosaic provision, which forbade the death penalty till the crime be told thee, and thou hast heard of it, and enquired diligently and behold it to be true, and the thing certain (Deut. xxi 1). This is said to be the implication of Moses as defender of the doubt. Modern authorities do not seem to have done much better. But it is not because they have not tried. One author says that the persuasion of guilt ought to amount to such a moral certainty as convinces the minds of reasonable men beyond all reasonable doubt. But what is the reasonable doubt? Another says that a reasonable doubt may be described by saying that all reasonable hesitation in the mind of the jurors respecting the truth of the hypothesis is attempted to be sustained must be removed by the proof. Another describes it as that degree of certainty upon which the jurors would act in their own grave and important concerns. This seems to approach nearer a solution and resembles a definition once heard in a charge to a jury. The Judge who gave it is admittedly one of the ablest and clearest headed jurists who ever sat upon the Bench. He is the man whom Lufues Choate called one of the ablest minds of the state. As near as memory serves his words were as follows. 'Just what a reasonable doubt is, gentlemen it is not quite easy to say, but you are practical men and I instruct you that you should be satisfied of the defendant's guilt to that degree of certainty which you would require for your guidance in acting decisively in my grave matter of your own within such time as is ordinarily given to a jury for deliberation in the case.' From ten years a Police Court Judge. New York Paul & Wingate 1884.

Insanity In sanity once proved to exist is presumed to continue. But aliter, is to temporary insanity produced by drunkenness violent disease or otherwise. Lawson Pic Et Rule 31. In 1837 H was afflicted with insanity, resulting from a violent disease. There is no presumption that H was insane in 1838. Crouse v Holman 19 Ind 30. In this case it was said. Every man being presumed to be sane till the contrary is proved the burden of proving certainly rests in the first instance on the party alleging the insanity. How far this burden is changed by the mere fact of proof of insanity at a particular period is the precise point of the present inquiry. A careful analysis of the principles upon which presumptions are allowed to have force and effect will show that the proof of the insanity of an individual at a particular period does not necessarily authorize the inference of his insanity at a remote subsequent period or even several months later. The force of presumption arises from our observation and experience of the mutual connection between the facts shown to exist and those sought to be established by inference from those facts. Now, neither observation nor experience shows us that persons who are insane from the effect of some violent disease do not usually recover the right use of their mental faculties. Such cases are usual and the return of a sound mind may be interpreted from the subsiding or removal of the disease which has prostrated their minds. It is not, therefore to be cited as an unqualified maxim of the law—once insane, presumed to be always insane; but reference must be had to the particular circumstances connected with the insanity of an individual, in deciding upon its effect upon the burden of proof or law for it may authorize the jury to infer that the same condition or state of mind attaches to the individual at a later period. There must be kept in view the distinction between the inferences to be drawn from proof of an habitual or apparently confirmed insanity and that which may be only temporary. The existence of the former once established would require proof from the other party to show a restoration or recovery and in the absence of such evidence insanity would be presumed to continue. But if the proof only shows a case of insanity directly connected with some violent disease with which the individual is attacked, the party alleging the insanity must bring his proof of continued insanity to that point of time which bears directly upon the subject in controversy and not content himself merely with proof of insanity at an earlier period. Lawson Pic Et pp 227 228. Where insanity is proved it is presumed to continue. Prinsep

S 114

v. Duce 10 M I A 232 Where a person has been found to be a lunatic under Act XXXV of 1845 the presumption is that he continues to be of unsound mind until the contrary is shown, and if adoption is made by such a person, the onus is on those who assert it to prove that he was of sound mind when he made the adoption. Imanah v Imanah 33 Ind C 578=40 M 660, see also Snool v Watts 11 Beav 105 Hill v Clifford (1907) 2 Ch 236, Van Guilder v Foruett (1897) A C 658=66 L J Q B 740

Intent and knowledge Where a person does an act he is presumed to be doing to have intended that the natural and legal consequences of his act shall result. Lau Pre Et Rule 64 W wrote and published of H that he had colluded with an insolvent tenant in setting up a fictitious distress. In an action for libel brought by H against W the Judge leaves it to the jury to say whether W intended to injure H by the publication. This is error because the tendency of the libel being injurious to H W is presumed to have intended to do so. Hare v Wilson 9 B & C 643 'The Judge', said Truterchee C J in that case 'ought not to have left a question to the jury whether the defendant intended to injure the plaintiff for every man must be presumed to intend the natural and ordinary consequences of his own act'. And Littledale J added 'If the tendency of the publication was injurious to the plaintiff then the law will presume that the defendant, by publishing it intended to produce the injury which it was calculated to effect. A baker is charged with delivering adulterated bread for the use of a public asylum. It is proved that A delivered the bread. The presumption is that he intended it to be eaten. King v Deson 3 M & S 12 Lord Ellenborough said that it was a universal principle that when a man is charged with doing an act of which the probable consequence may be highly injurious, his intention is an inference of law resulting from the doing the act and here it was alleged that he delivered the loaves for the use and supply of the children which could only mean for the children to eat for otherwise they would not be for their use and supply. Lau Pre Et 324 A debtor makes a fraudulent preference by assignment of his property. He makes also a conveyance of his property for the benefit of creditors. The law presumes that the intent of the conveyance was to delay or defraud his creditors. Ex parte Williams, L R 9 Ch App 443 Lord Chancellor Cairns said "It is true that under this as under previous statutes of bankruptcy the act as specified which if done by the bankrupt are not only acts of bankruptcy but are also if followed by bankruptcy void. One is a conveyance or assignment of the bankrupt's property for the benefit of creditors, and the other is a conveyance or assignment fraudulent or by way of fraudulent preference. It is to be observed as to one of these acts namely a conveyance or assignment by way of fraudulent preference special provisions have always been made in bankruptcy legislation making such a conveyance or assignment void by express enactment and reducing it accordingly and as to the other, namely a conveyance in trust for all creditors it has been held from the earliest times of bankruptcy law, that as the effect of such a conveyance must be to delay or defeat creditors the law will presume an intention to delay or defeat creditors and the conveyance would therefore be invalid against and perhaps even without reference to the policy of the bankruptcy laws. B forges C's name to a cheque on the bank of D. C has no account there. The presumption is that B intended to defraud C. R v Ash, 2 Den C C 498. The recorder in Maule J seems to have thought that in order to prove an intent to defraud there should have been some person defrauded or who might possibly have been defrauded. But I do not think that it is necessary. A man may have an intent to defraud and yet there may not be any person who could be defrauded by his act. Suppose a person with a good account at his banker and a friend with his knowledge forges his name to a cheque either to try his credit or to imitate his handwriting, there would be no intent to defraud though there might be parties who might be defrauded, but where another person has no account at his banker but a man supposes that he has and on that supposition forges his name there would be an intent to defraud in that although no person could be defrauded. So also when an act is criminal per se, a criminal intent is presumed from the commission of the act. Lau on

Prie Est Rule 65, see also R v Dixon, 3 M & S 15, R v Munsell 1 Q B 758, R v Farrington R & R 207, R v Hill 8 C & P 276 R v Cool 8 C & P 582, R v Shufford, L & R 169, R v Beard, 8 C & P 113. A 'sane man' said Chief Justice Shaw in Com v Yoil, 9 Metc 93 (Am) "a voluntary agent, acting upon motives must be presumed to contemplate and intend the necessary, natural and probable consequences of his own acts. If, therefore one voluntarily or wilfully does an act which has a direct tendency to destroy another's life the natural and necessary conclusion from the act is that he intended so to destroy such person's life. So if the direct tendency of the wilful act is to do another some great bodily harm and death in fact follows is a natural and probable consequence of the act it is presumed that he intended such consequence and he must stand legally responsible for it. So where a dangerous and deadly weapon is used with violence upon the person of another is this has a direct tendency to destroy life or do some great bodily harm to the person assailed the intention to take life or do him some great bodily harm is a necessary conclusion from the act. Queen Empress v Tulsha 20 A 143, Emperor v Gitali 31 A 148, Ellen Molla v Emperor, 37 C 317 Reg v Gorachand Gope B L R Sup Vol 443. It is practically impossible for the prosecution in cases of kidnapping and abduction to establish affirmatively the intention with which a woman is abducted. But it is fair and justifiable presumption that when any woman is kidnapped or abducted it is undoubtedly with one or other of the intents specified in s 366. The intention is more or less a matter of inference though there may be cases where the matter is capable of direct proof. It is for the accused to explain away incriminating circumstance. Jouaya and others v Emperor, A I L 1930 Lah 163.

Issues. In a number of English cases the Courts have refused to presume impossibility of issue on account of old age in the case of men. Fushington v Boleio 15 Beav 1. Lieton v Prewer, 2 M & K 675. The same presumption was also made in some cases in the case of women. Fraser v Fraser, Joe 586, Condrick v Sonie 24 L T N S 656, Ier v Audly 1 Cox 325, Overhill's Trusts 17 Jur 342, Reynolds v Reynolds 1 Dicl 374. Ornton v Var, I R 9 Ch D 385 but see child bearing age supra. There is no presumption that a person died without issue. Re Jackson, (1907) 2 Ch 314 see also Poundstone v Chela 1 apathi, 33 M L J 295.

Joint Property. Where a piece of land is adjacent to a piece of joint property which is registered in the names of the joint owners of the joint property it is for those who a suit that it is joint property to prove the assertion. Ma I v Mal halom, (1929) Rang 72.

Knowledge of Law. Every one is presumed to know the law when ignorance of it would relieve from the consequences of a wrongful act or from liability upon a contract. Lutson Prie Est Rule 1. The presumption that every body knows the law is often spoken of, but it is clear that there is no such general presumption. When Mr Dunning in arguing before Lord Mansfield said 'The laws of this country are clear evident and certain all the Judges know the laws, and knowing them administer justice with uprightness and integrity.' That learned Judge replied 'As to the certainty of the law mentioned by Mr Dunning it would be very hard upon the profession if the law was so certain that every body knows it the misfortune is that it is uncertain that it costs much money to know what it is, even in the last resort. Jones v Randall, Cowp 39. Is it not a mockery' said Lutson in his report on the Louisiana, Penal Code 'to refer to the common law of England? Where am I to find it? Who is to interpret it for me? If I should apply to a lawyer for a book that it contained it he would smile at my ignorance and pointing to about 500 volumes on his shelves would tell me those contained a small part of it that the rest was either unwritten or might be found in London or New York or that it was shut up in the breast of the Judges at Westminster Hall. If I should ask him to examine his books and give me the information which the law itself ought to have afforded, he would hint that he lived by his profession, and that the knowledge he had acquired by hard study for many years could not be gratuitously imputed.' We may therefore, safely say with My Justice Minto there is no presumption in this country that every person knows the law. It would be contrary to common sense and reason if it were, and all is he did with respect to his learned brother. If everybody knew the law, there would be no need of Courts of appeal whose existence shows that Judges may be ignorant of law. Mutnile v Talwar 2 C B 715. Every doctor said Lord Allthorn in Queen v Myer of Larchesbury, 1 R & Q B 629 must have known that B was the mayor in every election who saw him presiding at the election must have known as a fact that he was the returning officer and every doctor who was a lawyer and who had read the case of Leg v Queens 2 L & L 85 would know that he was disqualified. I am the knowledge of the fact that B was mayor in returning officer was every doctor bound to know as a matter of law that he was disqualified. I say that the ignorance of law does not excuse. But I think that in Mutnile v Talwar 2 C B 715 Minto J correctly explains the law. And Ish J added 'A maxim has been cited which it has been argued imputes to every person a knowledge of the law. The maxim is ignorantia legis neminem excusat but there is no maxim which says that for all intents and purposes a person must be taken to know the legal consequence of his acts. The maxim properly understood is true, but it is a rule of presumption adopted from necessity and to avoid a evil that would otherwise constantly perplex the Courts in the administration of the criminal law—that is the plea of ignorance. Hence the maxim 'that ignorance of law excuses no one.' Lauson Pre Ev 11.

S 114

Legitimacy. It is well established that every reasonable presumption will be indulged in for the purpose of upholding a marriage and establishing the legitimacy of the offspring. Lauson Pre Ev 139.

Marriage. I think that having regard to the general rule which applies to all cases of presumption omnia rite acta presumuntur and to the particular force of the rule as applied to cases of presumption in favour of marriage and legitimacy and against the commission of any crime or offence, and having regard to the cases cited in the argument we are bound in this case to presume that the father was consenting to the marriage and that it was therefore valid. Harrison v Mayor 4 Deg & M & G 153. The presumption of marriage arises from long cohabitation. Mung Nyue v Ma Gyi 117 Ind Cas 64 = A I R 1929 Rang 64. The law presumes in favour of marriage and against concubinage when a man and a woman have cohabited continuously for a number of years. Mohabbat Ali v Mahmmed Ibrahim 36 I A 201 = 51 Bom L R 846 = 6 C W N 517 = 117 Ind Cas 17. Choralalingam Pillai v Suami Bhai 79 Ind Cas 623. Indor Singh v Thalor Singh 3 Lah 207 = 3 Lah I J 317 = 63 Ind Cas 387.

But presumption of a valid marriage from two persons living together as man and woman cannot be drawn where the union is between a man who is an Ahur and a Bahamin widow, who cannot prima facie contract a valid marriage. Gulab Chand v Bharyalat 119 Ind Cas 698 = A I R 1929 Nag 543. A presumption of marriage may be drawn from long cohabitation but if it be known that the connection stated is mere concubinage this presumption cannot arise. As to the relationship of concubinage once found to exist is presumed under the law to continue until the contrary is proved. Mr Indu v Jarnal Singh, 27 P L R 829 = 98 Ind Cas 887 = 8 Lah L J 332 = A I R 1927 Lah 45. Marriage is evidenced not constituted by habit and repute and in a case where no valid marriage is possible no amount of evidence as to habit and repute can establish it. Campbell v Campbell, L R 1 H L 182.

Mahomedan Law. The Mahomedan Law is only the law of this country so far as the Legislature has adopted it is the law of British India and so far as there are clear authorities in it on a particular point. Baya Kishore v Kuti Chandra 7 B L R 19 = 15 W R 347. The intimate connection between law and religion in the Mahomedan faith justifies the presumption that converts to that faith apart from any evidence of customs which the community may since their conversion have voluntarily imposed upon themselves would be governed by the Mahomedan Law. Mahomed Sidel v Haji Ahmed, 10 B L

There is no pre-sumption of joint family in Mohamedan Law Jale Ali v Raj Chandra, 10 C L R 469=8 C 831 N, Karim Baksh v Rahim 21 P L R 1900

Negligence Negligence is not presumed, and the mere fact of injury to the plaintiff is not evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant Lawson Pre Ev Rule 19 (a), see also Chandrasekhar v Abid Ali 80 Ind Crs 902 (N) But when the thing is under the management of the defendant and the accident is such as ordinarily does not happen if those who have its management use proper care, a presumption of negligence arises from the happening of the accident Lawson Pre Ev Rule 19 (b) Where a person is under a duty either by law or by contract, the failure to discharge the duty raises a presumption of negligence against the person charged with such duty Ibid Rule 19 (c), see also Kush Kanta v Chandra Kanta, 23 C W N 104, Vishnu Digambar v B B & C I Ry Co, 85 Ind Crs 116 A presumption of negligence arises against a common carrier of passengers where an injury is received by a passenger caused by the breaking down, or failure of the carrier's vehicle, roadway or other appliances for transportation, or by some error of his servants in operating them In other cases the mere fact of injury does not raise a presumption of negligence on the part of the carrier Lawson Pre Ev 129

Personal appearance Personal appearance of a person is presumed to continue as proved to be at a time past Lawson Pre Ev Rule 32

Possession Where little or no evidence of actual possession or title can be procured, it would be almost impossible to administer justice, without having recourse to legal presumptions Mohamed v Poojany, 4 C 206=2 C L R 416 When evidence of possession is conflicting the presumption is that possession follows title Kisturi Singh v Rajanar Babu 8 C W N, 876

Religion The opinions of individuals, once entertained and expressed and the state of mind, once found to exist, are presumed to remain unchanged, until the contrary appears Thus all the members of a Christian community being presumed to entertain the common faith no man is supposed to disbelieve the existence and moral government of God until it is shown from his own declarations Greent Ev § 42 A child in India under ordinary circumstances must be presumed to have his father's religion and his corresponding civil and social status Slunner v Orde, 14 M I A 309 (329) But now the question is what is the effect of a declaration under Act III of 1872 According to Mr Justice Greaves such declaration does not amount to an abjuration of the status and law under which the parties are born In the goods of Jnanendra Nath Roy 26 C W N 799 But the sounder view seems to be that the declaration puts an end to the presumption that he still continues to be in his father's religion Where in consequence of the conversion of a person from one religion to another, the question arose before the passing of the Indian Succession Act, 1865, as to the law to be applied to such person, that question was to be determined not by ascertaining the law which was applicable to such person prior to his conversion, but by ascertaining the law or custom of the classes to which such person attached himself after conversion and by which he preferred that the succession should be governed Lastings v Gouslars 23 B 539, see also Bai Baiji v Bai Santol, 20 B 53 Abraham v Abraham, 9 M I A 195 Boulton v Orde, 13 M I A 277 But to acquire a new status the change of religion must be made honestly and without any intent to commit a fraud upon the law Per Lord Watson in Slunner v Slunner 25 I A 31 (41)=25 C 537 (516) Slunner v Orde 14 M I A 309 (324) Even where the conversion is bonafide, the convert is not allowed to cast off his obligation which he had previously contracted, and which, at the time of the contract, was indissoluble by any act of his own Mayne & Co Law § 650, Emperor v Lachar 30 M 551

Sanity Sanity once proved to exist is presumed to continue Lawson Pre Ev Rule 31 Every man being presumed to be sane till the contrary is proved, the burden of proof certainly rests, in the first instance, on the party alleging the insanity Crouse v Holman, 19 Ind. 30, Lawson Pre Ev p 227

S 114

Services An agreement to pay for services rendered and accepted is presumed unless the parties are members of the same family or near relations. A and his wife board and lodge in the house of B the brother of A, and assist him in carrying on his business. There is no presumption that either the services on the one hand or the board and lodging on the other were paid for. Dames v Dames 9 C A P 87

Solvency Solvency once shown to exist, is presumed to continue until the contrary is proved. A is proved to be insolvent circumstances on a certain day. A is presumed to continue solvent until the contrary is proved. Hafud v Bull 9 Barb 271. Tauson Per 1: 221

Statutory Presumptions There is no impropriety in referring to a thing as having been done when that thing is required to be done by a section in a statute. Budhaban v G I P Railway Co 21 A L J 825=96 Ind Cas 1039=A I R 1929 All 769 (1 B)

Tenancy, nature of—Presumption The presumption in favour of permanent tenancy implies that there is ground for inferring that the tenure was always intended to be and always is hereditary or that it required that character by subsequent grant. But a presumption in favour of a transaction assumes regularity. It cannot be made in favour of that which offends legal principle. Satya Sai v Harthil 15 C I J 237=16 C W N 227=13 Ind Cas 596

Other presumptions Where a wife alleging that her husband is dead fails to produce such evidence as she ought to know a presumption arises against her. Kauntabai v Umabai 117 Ind Cas 209=A I R 1929 Nag 127. Where there is no evidence that a non-compoundable offence was compounded, it is to be presumed that the criminal Court acted according to law and the presumption is that the criminal case was withdrawn and not compounded. Sadho v Jhura 116 Ind Cas 749=A I R 1929 All 156. Where in a charge of misappropriation the accused pleaded that he was in ill health and that there was some shortage for which he could not account. Held that there was no conclusive presumption of dishonesty and that the conviction on the basis of the confession should be set aside. Srinivasao v Emperor, 109 Ind Cas 605=A I R 1928 M 493=54 M L J 607. The mere signing of a particular entry does not raise an irrebuttable presumption of law against which no evidence can be adduced by the maker of the signature. Emperor v Ram Rang, 109 Ind Cas 221=29 Cr L J 493=A I R 1928 Lah 820. The tendency of English Courts to presume a tenancy in common rather than a joint tenancy has no application to Indian tenures, where the presumption is generally the reverse. Ism Bahadur v Lachoo Koor, 11 C 301 P C=12 I A 23. Presumption regarding the continuance of the existing jurisdiction of a Court in the absence of express words to that effect is usually applicable only to the jurisdiction of a superior Court. Prasad Das v Russell Lal 7 C 157=8 C L R 329. There is no duty cast upon an accused person to disclose his defence in the course of a preliminary enquiry, and no inference can be drawn against the accused for non-disclosure of his defence at that stage. Kumar Prasad v Emperor, 8 Pat L T 636=A I R 1927 Pat 292. Where there is nothing to indicate that the Court had not satisfied itself of the service of notice it must be presumed that the Court was so satisfied. Amor Singh v Rala Singh, 102 Ind Cas 13=A I R 1927 Lah 506. Where the posting of a registered letter is proved but it was returned with a note of the postman that the addressee refused to receive it, the presumption arises that he refused to receive it. Sheer Afzal v Mohan Lal 94 Ind Cas 103=A I R 1926 Lah 520, see also Gurish Chaudia v Kishore Mohan, 23 C W N 319. A school leaving certificate issued by a public servant in a native state can be presumed under s 114, Evidence Act, to be of the same character as a school leaving certificate issued in British India. Maharaj Bhauandas v Krishnabai, 28 Bom L R 1225=50 B 716=A I R 1927 Bom 11. It is a violent presumption drawn from one's knowledge of human nature and of Indian village life which it is the duty of a tribunal in a case of dhatwa poisoning to apply, namely, that the food pertaken at the evening meal by a husband in an ordinarily constituted house is prepared for him and served to him by his wife Emperor v Har Puri, A I R 1926 All 737=97 S. 114

Ind CIs 44

The mere fact that in the Revenue Records the sons of a particular person are shown as jointly owning land is not sufficient to raise a certain presumption that the person was the owner of the land Nath Singh v Mohan Singh 8 Lah L J 485=27 P L R 721=97 Ind CIs 241=A I R 1926 Lm 659 By taking over the sale and paying the full price a co owner waived his own claim to sue held such action on the part of the co owner is presumptive evidence that the sale by another co owner was not had for want of necessity Basant v Chanda, 1923 Lah 502 An entry in Revenue records raised a presumption as to joint family estate Balbur v Gobind, 1923 Lah 532 The mere mention of a common ancestor in a pedigree table is not of itself sufficient to prove that all the land in the possession of his descendants descended from that common ancestor Kartar v Lodh Singh, 5 Lah L J 190=74 Ind CIs 685= 1923 Lah 355 The making of a statement in the document after the suit had been launched and was pending is very different from stating on oath in the witness box and the Court will not attach much weight to the statement even if it is admissible Fadepalli v Rud mamanna, A I R 1923 Mad 225 When a person is at liberty to stop something done in his house and is found not to do so the presumption is that he is an accessory to the doing of that thing and he may be held to be in possession of the materials used in the doing of it Maula v Emperor, 86 Ind CIs 907=26 Cr L J 851 When the vacant plot of land belonged to one party the natural inference would be that it was he who built on the land at his own expense and the onus lies heavily on the other party to prove that it was he that did so Harnam v Hardevibai, A I R 1925 Sind. 716 The fact that a man is arrested in the district where an offence has been committed many months after its commission does not in any way lead to any inference against him Mansha v Emperor 7 Lah L J 51=86 Ind CIs 347 An attempt to fabricate false evidence of alibi will be a strong evidence against a convict if his connection with such attempt is established Mugh v Crown 86 Ind CIs 344 The publication of notice as required by Cls (b) and (c) of s 64 A of the Bengal Court of Wards Act having been proved, and it being proved that Cl (a) had been complied with in part, the Court should under s 114 of the Evidence Act presume that notice had been published in the manner required by s 64 A of the Act W Bariow v Gaja Prasad, 9 A L J 553=15 Ind CIs 729 Where in a suit for the recovery of money due on a registered mortgage bond executed by the defendant in plaintiff's favour, plaintiff does not produce the original but files a certified copy alleging that the original was lost, and the defendant pleads payment, the question of loss is not of much importance except in rendering improbable or probable the correctness of a plea of payment The execution of the bond having been admitted, the onus lies on the defendant to prove payment either by the production of the bond or by other evidence or by both The question of the loss of the original is only material in so far as it may raise a presumption one way or the other under s 114 of the Evidence Act Sogan Nath v Kanta Singh, 32 Ind CIs 31 Section 90 of the Evidence Act, does not enable a Court to presume that unsigned accounts, which do not purport to be in the hand writing of any particular person or persons, were written by the authorised accountants of the temple to which the accounts purport to relate, nor does s 114 of the Act any further help the matter Natum Pillai v Ramanathar, 33 M L J 84 Courts would presume a legal origin where there has been a long continued enjoyment of a claim, if the claim, could have had a legal commencement Suaramiyya v Venkatagari, A I R 1930 M 330 Courts can presume a contract to pay the higher rate and a legal origin and consideration therefor from long continued payment of higher rate Ibid see also Pena Sasupha v Raja Jayaswar, 42 M 175=50 Ind CIs 16 Consideration of motive gives rise to a presumption under section 111 that there is one which cannot be avowed Aitcs v Dela Megha, 1930 Sindh 135

CHAPTER VIII.

ESTOPPEL.

115 When one person has, by his declaration, act or omission, intentionally caused or permitted another person to believe a thing to be true and to act upon such belief, neither he nor his representative shall be allowed, in any suit or proceeding between himself and such person or his representative, to deny the truth of that thing

Illustration

A intentionally and falsely leads B to believe that certain land belongs to A and thereby induces B to buy and pay for it.

The land afterwards becomes the property of A and A seeks to set aside the sale on the ground that, at the time of the sale, he had no title. He must not be allowed to prove his want of title.

Estoppel, meaning of. "Estoppel is when one is concluded and forbidden in law to speak against his own act or deed yet, though it be to say the truth." Co Litt 352(a) cited in Edgital v Bopan 3 B & S 171 (189), Simon v Anglo American Telegraph Co., (1879) 5 Q B D 188 C. A. per Bramwell L J at p 202, Halsbury Vol 13 para. 188. So there is said to be an estoppel where a party is not allowed to say that a certain statement of fact is untrue, whether in reality it be true or not. Estoppel or conclusion, as it is frequently called by the older authorities may therefore be defined as a disability whereby a party is precluded from alleging or proving in legal proceedings that a fact is otherwise than it has been made to appear by the matter giving rise to that disability. Halsbury Vol 13, para. 148. The rule on the subject is thus laid down by Lord Denman in Pickard v Sears, 6 Ad & E 469 at p 471. But the rule is clear that where one by his words or conduct wilfully causes another to believe the existence of a certain state of things, and induces him to act on that belief so as to alter his own previous position, the former is concluded from averring against the latter a different state of things as existing at the same time." The whole doctrine of estoppel of this kind, which is fictitious statement treated as true might have been founded in reason, but I am not sure that it was. There is another kind of estoppel—estoppel by representation—which is founded upon reason and it is founded upon decision also." Per Jessel M R in General Finance & Co v Liberator L R 10 Ch D 15(20). So also in Simon v Anglo American Telegraph Co., L R 5 Q B D 202 Bramwell L J said. An estoppel is said to exist where a person is compelled to admit that to be true which is not true and to act upon a theory which is contrary to the truth.

"On the whole, an estoppel seems to be when, in consequence of some previous act or statement to which he is either party or privy, a person is precluded from showing the existence of a particular state of facts. Estoppel is based on the maxim, Allegans contraria non est audiendus (a party is not to be heard to allege the contrary) and is that species of presumptio juris et de jure (absolute or conclusive or irrebuttable presumptions) where the fact presumed is taken to be true, not as against all the world but against a particular party, and that only by reason of some act done. It is in truth a kind of argumentum ad hominem. Hence it appears that estoppels must not be understood as synonymous with conclusive evidence—the former being conclusions drawn by law against parties from particular facts while by the latter is meant some piece or mass of evidence, sufficiently strong to generate conviction in the mind of a tribunal or rendered conclusive on a party, either by common or statute law. Best Evi § 533. An estoppel may accordingly be taken to be that which concludes the party against whom it is set up, from disputing his own averment, whether that averment be direct, as for example the statement of any given fact, or constructive as legally deducible from the circumstances, and the difference between a mere admission and an estoppel is that the former can be set up as evidence only, while the latter amounts to a legal conclusion. Some misconception has been introduced into the subject by an unhappy description of Lord Coke, in which he says—"An estoppel is where a man is concluded by his own act or acceptance to say the truth" (Co Litt 352) as though the doctrine were based on the principle of shutting out truth by a technicality. It is founded however, in fact, on no such absurdity. The whole principle of estoppel is, that what has once been affirmed, or represented to be truth or established to be so in a judicial controversy, shall not be contradicted by either the affirmant, the party against whom it has been established, or those claiming through him, to the disparagement of those who, being in a position to avail themselves of it, have acted on it." Goodere Ev p 532

Principle "In our old law books," said Mr Smith in his notes to the Duchess of Kingston's case, "truth appears to have been frequently shut out by the intervention of an estoppel where reason and good policy required that it should be admitted. However, it is in no wise unjust or unreasonable, but, on the contrary, in the highest degree reasonable and just, that some solemn mode of declaration should be provided by law, for the purpose of enabling men to bind themselves to the good faith and truth of representations on which other persons are to act." The general principle is thus stated by Lord Chancellor (Campbell) with the full concurrence of Lord Kingsdown, in the case of Cannross v Iomer, 3 H L C 829. "The doctrine will apply, which is to be found, I believe in the laws of all civilized nations, that if a man either by words or by conduct has intimated that he consents to an act which has been done, and that he will offer no opposition to it although it could not have been lawfully done without his consent, and he thereby induces others to do that from which they otherwise might have abstained, he cannot question the legality of the act he had so sanctioned, to the prejudice of those who have so given faith to his words or to the fair inference to be drawn for his conduct. I am of opinion that, generally speaking, if a party having an interest to prevent an act being done has full notice of its having been done, and acquiesces in it, so as to induce a reasonable belief that he consents to it and the position of others is altered by their giving credit to his sincerity, he has no more right to challenge the act to their prejudice than he would have had if it had been done by his previous license." Sarat Chandra v Gopal Chunder, 20 C 296 (311)=19 I A 203. The principle that a party cannot both approbate and reprobate the same transaction, is applicable to Indian cases. The maxim is founded not so much on any positive law as on the broad and universally applicable principle of justice. Shah Makhanlal v Srikrishna Singh, 2 B L R P C 41=11 W R P C 19=12 M I A 157. It is a principle of natural equity which must be universally applicable, that where one man allows another to hold himself out as the owner of an estate and a third person purchases it, for value, from the apparent owner in the belief that he is the real owner, the man who so allows the other to hold himself out shall not be permitted to recover upon his secret title unless he can overthrow that of the purchaser by showing either that he had direct notice or something which amounts to constructive notice of the real title, or that there existed circumstances which ought to have put him upon an inquiry that if prosecuted would have led to a discovery of it. Maung Lee Gale v Maing Kyaw Yau, L B R. (1893 1900), 158

Estoppel is a rule of evidence. "An estoppel is not a cause of action—it is a rule of evidence which precludes a person from denying the truth of some statement previously made by himself" Per Lindley L J in Low v Boueina, (1891) 3 Ch 52 at p 101. In the same case, at p 105, Boueina L J added "Estoppel is only a rule of evidence you cannot found an action upon estoppel. Estoppel is only important as being one step in the progress towards relief on the hypothesis that the defendant is estopped from denying the truth of something which he has said. An illustration of a case of that kind of

CHAPTER VIII

ESTOPPEL

115 When one person has, by his declaration, act or omission, intentionally caused or permitted another person to believe a thing to be true and to act upon such belief, neither he nor his representative shall be allowed, in any suit or proceeding between himself and such person or his representative, to deny the truth of that thing

Illustration

A intentionally and falsely leads B to believe that certain land belongs to A, and thereby induces B to buy and pay for it

The land afterwards becomes the property of A, and A seeks to set aside the sale on the ground that, at the time of the sale, he had no title. He must not be allowed to prove his want of title

Estoppel, meaning of. "Estoppel is when one is concluded and forbidden in law to speak against his own act or deed yet though it be to say the truth" Co Litt 352(a), cited in Ashpall v Bryan 3 B & S 474 (480) Simon v Anglo American Telegraph Co, (1879) 5 Q B D 188 C A per Bramwell LJ at p 202, Halsbury Vol 13 para 188. So there is said to be an estoppel where a party is not allowed to say that a certain statement of fact is untrue, whether in reality it be true or not. Estoppel or conclusion, as it is frequently called by the older authorities may therefore be defined as a disability whereby a party is precluded from alleging or proving in legal proceedings that a fact is otherwise than it has been made to appear by the matter giving rise to that disability. Halsbury Vol 13, para 448. The rule on the subject is thus laid down by Lord Denman in Pickard v Sears, 6 Ad & E 460 at p 474. "But the rule is clear that where one by his words or conduct wilfully causes another to believe the existence of a certain state of things, and induces him to act on that belief so as to alter his own previous position the former is concluded from averring against the latter a different state of things as existing at the same time." "The whole doctrine of estoppel of this kind, which is fictitious statement treated as true might have been founded in reason, but I am not sure that it was. There is another kind of estoppel—estoppel by representation—which is founded upon reason and it is founded upon decision also." Per Jessel MR in General Finance & Co v Liberator L R 10 Ch D 15(10). So also in Simon v Anglo American Telegraph Co, L R 5 Q B D 202 Bramwell LJ said "An estoppel is said to exist where a person is compelled to admit that to be true which is not true and to act upon a theory which is contrary to the truth."

"On the whole, an estoppel seems to be when, in consequence of some previous act or statement to which he is either party or privy a person is precluded from showing the existence of a particular state of facts. Estoppel is based on the maxim, Allegans contraria non est audiendus (a party is not to be heard to allege the contrary) and is that species of presumptio juris et de jure (absolute or conclusive or irrefutable presumptions), where the fact presumed is taken to be true, not as against all the world but against a particular party, and that only by reason of some act done it is in truth a kind of argumentum ad hominem. Hence it 'appears that estoppels' must not be understood as synonymous with conclusive evidence—the former being conclusions drawn by law against parties from particular facts, while by the latter is meant some piece or mass of evidence sufficiently strong to generate conviction in the mind of a tribunal or rendered conclusive on a party either by common or statute law. Best Ev § 533. An estoppel may accordingly be taken to be that which concludes the party against whom it is set up, from disputing his own averment, whether that averment be direct, as for example the statement of any given fact, or constructive as legally deducible from the circumstances, and the difference between a mere admission and an estoppel is that the former can be set up as evidence only, while the latter amounts to a legal conclusion. Some misconception has been introduced into the subject by an unhappy description of Lord Coke, in which he says—“An estoppel is where a man is concluded by his own act or acceptance to say the truth” (Co Litt 352) as though the doctrine were based on the principle of shutting out truth by a technicality. It is founded, however in fact, on no such absurdity. The whole principle of estoppel is, that what has once been affirmed or represented to be truth, or established to be so in a judicial controversy, shall not be contradicted by either the affirmant, the party against whom it has been established or those claiming through him, to the disparagement of those who, being in a position to avail themselves of it, have acted on it” Goodere Et p 532

S 115

Principle “In our old law books,” said Mr Smith in his notes to the Duchess of Kingston's case, “truth appears to have been frequently shut out by the intervention of an estoppel where reason and good policy required that it should be admitted. However, it is in no wise unjust or unreasonable, but, on the contrary, in the highest degree reasonable and just, that some solemn mode of declaration should be provided by law, for the purpose of enabling men to bind themselves to the good faith and truth of representations on which other persons are to act.” The general principle is thus stated by Lord Chancellor (Campbell) with the full concurrence of Lord Kingsdown, in the case of Carnarross v Lormer, 3 H L C 829. “The doctrine will apply, which is to be found, I believe in the laws of all civilized nations, that if a man either by words or by conduct has intimated that he consents to an act which has been done and that he will offer no opposition to it, although it could not have been lawfully done without his consent, and he thereby induces others to do that from which they otherwise might have abstained, he cannot question the legality of the act he had so sanctioned to the prejudice of those who have so given faith to his words or to the fair inference to be drawn for his conduct. I am of opinion that, generally speaking, if a party having an interest to prevent an act being done has full notice of its having been done and acquiesces in it, so as to induce a reasonable belief that he consents to it and the position of others is altered by their giving credit to his sincerity he has no more right to challenge the act to their prejudice than he would have had if it had been done by his previous license.” Sarai Chandran v Gopal Chunder, 20 C 296 (311)=19 I A 203. The principle that a party cannot both approve and reprobate the same transaction, is applicable to Indian cases. The maxim is founded not so much on any positive law as on the broad and universally applicable principle of justice. Shah Mahanlal v Srikrishna Singh, 2 B L R P C 44=11 W R P C 19=12 M I A 157. It is a principle of natural equity which must be universally applicable, that where one man allows another to hold himself out as the owner of an estate and a third person purchases it, for value, from the apparent owner in the belief that he is the real owner, the man who so allows the other to hold himself out shall not be permitted to recover upon his secret title unless he can overthrow that of the purchaser by showing either that he had direct notice or something which amounts to constructive notice of the real title or that there existed circumstances which ought to have put him upon an inquiry that if prosecuted would have led to a discovery of it. Maung Lee Gale v Maung Kyaw Lau, L B R (1893 1900), 158.

Estoppel is a rule of evidence. “An estoppel is not a cause of action—it is a rule of evidence which precludes a person from denying the truth of some statement previously made by himself” Per Lindley L J in Low v Bouetia, (1891) 3 Ch 82 at p 101. In the same case, at p 105 Bouet L J added “Estoppel is only a rule of evidence. You cannot found an action upon estoppel. Estoppel is only important as being one step in the progress towards relief on the hypothesis that the defendant is estopped from denying the truth of something which he has said. An illustration of a case of that kind of

CHAPTER VIII

ESTOPPEL

115 When one person has, by his declaration, act or omission, intentionally caused or permitted another person to believe a thing to be true and to act upon such belief, neither he nor his representative shall be allowed, in any suit or proceeding between himself and such person or his representative, to deny the truth of that thing

Illustration

A intentionally and falsely leads B to believe that certain land belongs to A and thereby induces B to buy and pay for it

The land afterwards becomes the property of A, and A seeks to set aside the sale on the ground that, at the time of the sale, he had no title. He must not be allowed to prove his want of title

Estoppel, meaning of "Estoppel is when one is concluded and forbidden in law to speak against his own act or deed, yet though it be to say the truth" Co Litt 352(a), cited in Ashpital v Byron 3 B & S 174 (489) Simon v Anglo American Telegraph Co., (1879) 5 Q B D 188 C A per Bramucll L J at p 202 Halsbury Vol 13 para 488. So there is said to be an estoppel where a party is not allowed to say that a certain statement of fact is untrue, whether in reality it be true or not. Estoppel or conclusion as it is frequently called by the older authorities may therefore be defined as a disability whereby a party is precluded from alleging or proving in legal proceedings that a fact is otherwise than it has been made to appear by the matter giving rise to that disability. Halsbury Vol 13, para 448. The rule on the subject is thus laid down by Lord Denman in Pickard v Sears, 6 Ad & E 469 at p 474. "But the rule is clear that where one by his words or conduct wilfully causes another to believe the existence of a certain state of things, and induces him to act on that belief so as to alter his own previous position the former is concluded from averring against the latter a different state of things as existing at the same time." "The whole doctrine of estoppel of this kind, which is fictitious statement treated as true, might have been founded in reason but I am not sure that it was. There is another kind of estoppel—estoppel by representation—which is founded upon reason and it is founded upon decision also. Per Jessel M R in General Finance & Co v Liberator, L R 10 Ch D 15(20). So also in Simon v Anglo American Telegraph Co., L R 5 Q B D 202, Bramucll L J said "An estoppel is said to exist where a person is compelled to admit that to be true which is not true and to act upon a theory which is contrary to the truth."

"On the whole an estoppel seems to be when, in consequence of some previous act or statement to which he is either party or privy a person is precluded from showing the existence of a particular state of facts. Estoppel is based on the maxim Allegans contraria non est audiendus (a party is not to be heard to allege the contrary) and is that species of presumptio juris et de jure (absolute or conclusive or irrebuttable presumptions) where the fact presumed is taken to be true not as against all the world but against a particular party, and that only by reason of some act done it is in truth a kind of argumentum ad hominem. Hence it appears that estoppels' must not be understood as synonymous with conclusive evidence—the former being conclusions drawn by law against parties from particular facts, while by the latter is meant some piece or mass of evidence sufficiently strong, to generate conviction in the mind of a tribunal, or rendered conclusive on a party, either by common or statute law. Best Ev § 533. An estoppel may accordingly be taken to be that which concludes the party against whom it is set up, from disputing his own averment, whether that averment be direct, as for example the statement of any given fact, or constructive as legally deducible from the circumstances, and the difference between a mere admission and an estoppel is that the former can be set up as evidence only, while the latter amounts to a legal conclusion. Some misconception has been introduced into the subject by an unhappy description of Lord Coke, in which he says—"An estoppel is where a man is concluded by his own act or acceptance to say the truth" (Co Litt 352), as though his doctrine were based on the principle of shutting out truth by a technicality. It is founded, however, in fact, on no such absurdity. The whole principle of estoppel is, that what has once been affirmed, or represented to be truth, or established to be so in a judicial controversy shall not be contradicted by either the affirmant, the party against whom it has been established or those claiming through him, to the disparagement of those who, being in a position to avail themselves of it, have acted on it." Goodere Ev p 532

Principle "In our old law books," said Mr Smith in his notes to the Duchess of Kingston's case, "truth appears to have been frequently shut out by the intervention of an estoppel where reason and good policy required that it should be admitted. However, it is in no wise unjust or unreasonable, but on the contrary, in the highest degree reasonable and just, that some solemn mode of declaration should be provided by law, for the purpose of enabling men to bind themselves to the good faith and truth of representations on which other persons are to act." The general principle is thus stated by Lord Chancellor (Campbell) with the full concurrence of Lord Kingsdown, in the case of Cairnes v Limerick, 3 H L C 829. "The doctrine will apply, which is to be found, I believe, in the laws of all civilized nations, that if a man either by words or by conduct has intimated that he consents to an act which has been done, and that he will offer no opposition to it, although it could not have been lawfully done without his consent, and he thereby induces others to do that from which they otherwise might have abstained, he cannot question the legality of the act he had so sanctioned, to the prejudice of those who have so given faith to his words or to the fair inference to be drawn for his conduct. I am of opinion that, generally speaking, if a party having an interest to prevent an act being done has full notice of its having been done, and acquiesces in it, so as to induce a reasonable belief that he consents to it and the position of others is altered by their giving credit to his sincerity he has no more right to challenge the act to their prejudice than he would have had if it had been done by his previous license." Sarat Chandra v Gopal Chunder, 20 C 296 (311)=19 I A 203. The principle that a party cannot both approbate and reprobate the same transaction, is applicable to Indian cases. The maxim is founded not so much on any positive law as on the broad and universally applicable principle of justice. Shah Mahkmal v Srikrishna Singh, 2 B L R P C 14=11 W R P C 19=12 M I A 157. It is a principle of natural equity which must be universally applicable, that where one man allows another to hold himself out as the owner of an estate and a third person purchases it, for value, from the apparent owner in the belief that he is the real owner, the man who so allows the other to hold himself out shall not be permitted to recover upon his secret title unless he can overthrow that of the purchaser by showing either that he had direct notice or something which amounts to constructive notice of the real title, or that there existed circumstances which ought to have put him upon an inquiry that if prosecuted would have led to a discovery of it. Maung Lee Gale v Maung Kyaw Lau, L B R (1893 1900), 153.

Estoppel is a rule of evidence "An estoppel is not a cause of action—it is a rule of evidence which precludes a person from denying the truth of some statement previously made by himself." Per Lindley L J in Low v Bouvier, (1891) 3 Ch 82 at p 101. In the same case, at p 105 Bouvier L J added "Estoppel is only a rule of evidence. You cannot found an action upon estoppel. Estoppel is only important as being one step in the progress towards relief on the hypothesis that the defendant is estopped from denying the truth of something which he has said. An illustration of a case of that kind of

S 115, estoppel filling up the gap in the evidence which, when so filled up, would produce this right to relief, is found in the case of In re Bahia and San Francisco Railway Company, L R 3 Q B 581. So "no cause of action arises upon an estoppel itself." Per Bowen L J in In re Ollo's Hope Diamond Mines Ltd (1893) 1 Ch 618 at p 628. Similarly in Hannuman v Hannuman (1909) P 123, C A. Tanell L J at p 111=78 L J D & A 71, said "No consent or admission can justify a decree, it is the duty of the Court to protect the public by seeing that divorce is obtained only on proper evidence, and so fully is the interest of the public recognised in the matter that by the Act of 1860 (23 & 24 Vict C 111), s 7 any person may intervene between decree nisi and decree absolute to show cause why the decree should not be made absolute on the ground of collusion or the suppression of facts, and the King's Proctor may intervene at any time during the progress of the cause or before decree absolute. The grounds and the only grounds on which a decree for dissolution can be made are set forth in section 27 of the Act of 1857. It is sufficient to say that a decree for judicial separation is not made available by the Act as one of such grounds. If such a decree is available at all, it is by virtue of the ordinary rules of evidence. I do not doubt that, as between the parties, the ordinary doctrine of estoppel applies, as was held by the Judge Ordinary in Finnery v Finnery, 29 L J P 21=1 Sw Tr 502, but estoppel is only a rule of evidence and the duty imposed on the Judge by section 29, which emphasises by express enactment the necessity for the Court being satisfied as required by section 31, is not restricted by any such rule." A rule of estoppel is hereby personal against the person estopped and does not create any substantive right in rem except against the person estopped or against his representative. No estoppel can ensue on a representation of a mere opinion or of a point of law. Dharam Prakash v Kalanath Devi, 26 A L J 1106=110 Ind Cris 605=A I R 1928 All 459. The plea of title by estoppel can be pleaded both by plaintiffs as well as defendants in suits. Tej Bahadur v Nallo, 99 Ind Cris 472=A I R 1927 Oudh 97. Estoppel is a rule of evidence which in certain circumstances precludes a person from establishing real facts and compels him to abide by a certain conventional set of facts. Vehery v Saker Khanubai, 7 Bom L R 602, Sita Ram v Amir Begum 8 A 324=A W N 1886, 101. Rule of estoppel although primarily a rule of evidence affects substantive rights. Wahdan v Nasir Khan, A I R 1930 All 434.

Basis of estoppel on equity. What the law and the Indian statute mutually regard is the position of the person who was induced to act, and the principle on which the law and the statute rest is, that it would be most inequitable and unjust to him that if another by a representation made, or by conduct amounting to representation has induced him to act as he would not otherwise have done, the person who made the representation should be allowed to deny or repudiate the effect of his former statement, to the loss and injury of the person who acted on it. Per Lord Shand in Sarat Chander Dey v Gopal Chander Laha, 20 C 296 (311)=19 I A 203.

Rule of estoppel whether applicable in criminal cases. The principle of estoppel has no place in criminal law. Mohoran v Emperor, 40 A 393=16 A L J 414=19 Cr L J 615=45 Ind Cas 51.

Estoppel is neither admission nor presumption. "The branch of the law of Evidence of which that of estoppel forms part is referred to by text writers, sometimes under the head of presumption and sometimes under that of admission. It might, perhaps be ranged under either with almost equal propriety." Goodale Et 530. But this is not true. An admission is nothing but a piece of evidence. It is therefore to be distinguished from those statements of the party which become in themselves the foundation of independent rights for other persons by virtue of some doctrine of substantive law—in other words from binding estoppels, etc. Thus if A claims that his boundary line runs to an oak tree and B admitted this, B's extrajudicial admission of the boundary's location is merely evidence for the truth of the other facts on which A rests his claim. But if B has made his statement to A under such circumstances that A was justified in acting on it and has built up to the line he claimed B's concession may by estoppel become the foundation of a new right for A, wholly irrespective of the validity of the grounds of his original claim. Here the field of substantive law, not that of evidence, is concerned. The statement or representation of B may, however, have been precisely the same in both cases and it is A's reliance and action thereon that bring into effect the doctrine of substantive law. Thus the so-called 'admission' being a common feature in both instances there has been some tendency (Vide Greent Ex § 207) to confound in one treatment the two wholly distinct things. Wigmore § 1057. The subject of estoppels differs from that of presumptions in the circumstances that an estoppel is a personal disqualification laid upon a person peculiarly circumstanced from proving peculiar facts. A presumption is a rule that particular inferences shall be drawn from particular facts whoever proves them. Steph Introduction p 175.

Estoppel and Judicial admissions—nature of conclusiveness. An estoppel that is a representation acted on by the other party by creating a substantive right does oblige the estopped party to make good his representation—in other words but inaccurately it is conclusive so too but for an entirely different reason, a Judicial admission is conclusive, in the sense that it formally waives all right to deny for the purposes of the trial i.e. it removes the proposition in question from the field of disputed issues. But statements which are not estoppels or judicial admissions have no quality of conclusiveness and on principle cannot have. Wigmore § 1059. Estoppel like judicial admissions has the similar effect of concluding all dispute of the fact. But here the distinction is that the estoppel is an obligation made by a rule of law of the same general class as contracts and representation, that it requires some additional act of detriment on the part of the obligee, and that it is absolute as regards the permanent legal relations of the parties and not merely hypothetical or relative to the procedure of a particular litigation between them. Wigmore § 2080.

Different kinds of estoppel according to English law. Estoppels according to English law have been divided into three classes (1) By matter of record (2) By deed (3) In pari.

(1) By matter of record. A matter of record as its name would import is something part of the records of a Court. It is at once the narrative and proof of its proceedings. In modern times the more usual form in which a question of estoppel by record becomes matter of discussion in our Courts, when it occurs in the shape of a judgment, on some matter of disputed right. Goodere Ex 532. The law in India, on this subject is dealt with in Section of the Civil Procedure Code and sections 40 and 41 of the Evidence Act.

Estoppel by deed. An estoppel by deed is that which binds the party to the instrument, and those claiming through them to its statements or operation, as an admission of the truth, thus at least as to the matter intended to be affected by the instrument, and the facts recited in it. The solemnity the seal prohibits all subsequent dispute of the acknowledgment. A good illustration of the doctrine is to be found in the case of Bouman v Taylor 2 A & E 278, where the plaintiff or patentee, had granted to the defendant, a license to use his (the plaintiff's) invention, at a stipulated payment covenanted for by the deed, and the deed contained a recital of the plaintiff having invented the improvements in question, invention being of course of the essence of the validity of the patent. The defendant pleaded that the invention was not, in fact, a new one, setting up the defence as a ground why he should be relieved from the liability to payment, contracted on the faith of the patent's validity. The Court however, held him concluded, that is to say estopped by the recit. It was observed by Mr Justice Tammion "The law of estoppel is not so unjust or absurd as it has been too much the custom to represent. The principle that where a man has entered into a solemn engagement by deed under his hand and seal as to certain facts, he shall not be permitted to any matter which he has so asserted. The question here is, whether there is a matter so asserted by the defendant under his hand and seal, that he shall not be permitted to deny it in pleading. The doctrine of estoppel, however, assumes the legal validity of the deed. Where the instrument itself is open to impeachment on the ground of either fraud, illegality, or immoral purpose, it would not apply, and any of these grounds could be set up to displace the estoppel. "The meaning of estoppel" says Barton Morton, "is this—that the parties agree for the purpose of a particular transaction to state certain facts as true, and that so far as regards the transaction, there shall be no question about them. But the whole matter is opened where the statement is made for the purpose of concealing an illegal contract, for persons cannot be allowed to escape from the law by making a false statement. Horton v Westminster Commissioner, 7 Enc. R 791. Indeed it is not necessary that there should be any actual statement at all. Suppression or omission of the real transaction would suffice. Thus a bond given to a woman securing to her a pecuniary payment in return for future cohabitation, would naturally be silent as to the consideration, but being in fact for an immoral purpose it would be bad and the obligor would not be estopped from showing the nature of the consideration. Goodeve Ex 535. So also a party may prove that he never executed the deed, or that it was obtained by fraud or duress or otherwise tainted with illegality. Collins v Blantyre 1 Sun L C 369, Prtestman v Thomas, 9 P D 70 210, R v Hutchings, 6 Q. B D 300, Poulton v Adjustable, etc Co, (1908) 2 Ch 430.

S 115

In general however in order to conclude the party by his deed by way of estoppel, it should be pleaded for, if his adversary does not rely upon the estoppel, the Court and jury are not bound by it but the jury may find the matter at large according to the fact, and the Court will give judgment accordingly. He asks them their opinion and they are bound to give it. Where however the title of the party is barred by estoppel, and he has no opportunity of pleading it the jury cannot find against the estoppel. Starie on Ex p 461. In India the recital of receipt of consideration in a deed does not operate as an estoppel. Baz Bahadur v Raghubir, 49 A 707=25 A L J 572=100 Ind Cis 1037=A I R 1927 All 385. The strict technical doctrine of the English law as to estoppels in the case of solemn deeds under seal rests upon peculiar grounds that have no application to written instruments ordinarily in use amongst natives in India. Zamindar S G R Bomay Nayl v Viappa Chelli, 2 M H C K 174, Donelle v Kedar, 7 B L R 720, Ram v Kanai, 12 C 663. It would be inequitable to have anything in this country of the nature of the old English doctrine of estoppel by deed. A party giving a labuhyat nominally in favour of another is not estopped from pleading that he did not contract with that other at all, and knew nothing of her. Kedarnath v Benjamin, 20 W R 352, see also Ramgopal v Blaquene 1 B L R (O C) 37 Gokul v Puran Mal, 10 C 1035. Where the plaintiff executed a deed of mortgage he cannot afterwards sue to cancel it, alleging that it was a fictitious one for the purpose of depriving the next reversionary heir of his right to the property. Mutsaddi v Bhagwan, 11 P R 1875.

Estoppel in cases of recital in documents. When a person with a limited interest in certain property styles himself the owner of it and mortgages it to another he would be estopped, if he subsequently acquires the property, from setting up his limited interest as against the claim of the mortgagee. And the auction purchaser of such proprietary interests of the mortgagor with notice of all the facts, being a person claiming from them, would be equally estopped from pleading in a suit against him by the mortgagee, that the mortgagor had no proprietary title at the time of the mortgage. Sera Ram v Ali Balsh, 3 A 80=A W N 1881, 77. But the doctrine that in pari delicto portior est conditio possidentis, or that the Court, finding a man embarrassed by a deceit to which he was himself a party, will not interfere to relieve him from its consequences, cannot be applied in this country without qualification. Where a party to a fraudulent agreement entered into for the purpose of defeating the claims of third parties, wants to be relieved from its effects by showing its real character, the claims of justice, equity and good conscience will be satisfied by safe-guarding the interests of third parties, who have prejudicially altered their position on the faith of the agreement. And no harm is done by allowing the real character of the agreement to be proved as between the parties to it or their representatives. Param Singh v Lahi Mal, 1 A 103. In the case of a benami sale to a tenant, the landlord is not estopped from asserting the tenancy

Sabuktulla v. Han, 10 C L R 199 In a suit for possession of lands, a plaintiff is not bound down by the recital, as to his vendor's title to the lands, in the document of sale but is at liberty to prove such title differently. Gour Monee v. Krishna Chandra 1 C 397 The mere fact of a vendor declaring in her deed of sale of a moiety of a landed estate, that the other moiety did not belong to her was held not to be conclusive against her being the proprietor, Nunhoo v. Boodhoo, 13 W R 2 The rule of estoppel by deed or by writing as now enforced is this that if a distinct statement of a particular fact is made in a deed and a contract is made with reference to that statement then the party who makes that statement cannot deny the truth of it. Phalur Abdul v. Alijan Wahid Ali, 6 O C 355

S 115

Estoppel in pais An estoppel in pais is that which though not existing as matter of record, or under the solemnity of a deed may nevertheless, under the circumstances, conclude equally with the higher species of averment. It may exist in writing not being under seal in oral statement or even in conduct. In ancient times, the recognized estoppels in pais were but few, and these existed only in connection with landed property and its ownership. It was said by Lord Mansfield in Lyon v. Reed 13 M & W 235 'The acts of parties by way of estoppel are but few and are pointed out by Lord Coke, Co Litt 352 (a) They are all acts, which anciently, really were, and in contemplation of law have always continued to be acts of notoriety, not less formal and solemn than the execution of a deed, such as livery, entry acceptance of an estate, and the like. Whether a party had or had not concurred in an act of this sort, was deemed a matter which there could be no difficulty in ascertaining, and then the legal consequences followed.' Of that which has attracted the application of the doctrine there is perhaps nothing which has done so to a larger extent than matters involved in the relationship of landlord and tenant. It is on this doctrine that the maxim—(one applied under circumstances of great variety)—has grown up, that a tenant or those claiming under him, cannot dispute the title of the landlord under whom they came into possession. This has been applied to the case where the letting was by an agent, and the landlord unnamed, and the principle would extend to that of any party coming in under the permission of the owner as in the instance of a lodger, a servant, or any other licensee. Indeed, so far has the doctrine been carried in practice, that where the object is to try the title by one in the possession of a tenant, the only course to be pursued is, first to give up possession, and then bring ejectment. Goodere v. Li 517 A similar estoppel ordinarily arises from the acceptance of a bailment. Standard v. Dunham, 2 Camp 344, Gosling v. Birnie 7 Bag 339 Biddle v. Bond 6 B & S 225, Henderson & Co v. Williams, (189.) 1 Q. B. 521 And the signatory of a bill of exchange or promissory note is precluded as against subsequent holders from denying the truth and genuineness of various matters pertaining, expressly or by implication, upon the bill at the time of his signature. Malsbury Vol 13, para 452 citing Nash v. De Freville, (1900) 2 Q. B. 72 If A deliberately makes an assertion to B intending to be acted upon by B, and it is acted upon by B, A is estopped from saying that it was not true. If it turns out to be false, A is answerable for the damage which may have accrued to B from having acted upon it and B, is entitled in respect of anything done in the belief that it was true to object to demur of its truth by A. Piggot v. Stratton, 1 D. & F. & J 33

Extension of the doctrine in modern times In modern times and in more complicated relationships of society which have been growing up the doctrine of estoppel has been considerably extended in application beyond its more ancient limit and especially in reference to the mercantile and more general transactions of mankind. It has been rested too, less upon technical grounds, than upon the broad basis of good faith and personal honesty—and the principle is to hold men to those representations whether written or unwritten,—whether by word of mouth or of conduct—whether intentional or unintentional,—upon the faith of which others have been induced to act to the change of any previous position. In a case which has always been regarded as a leading one on this subject, that of Pickard v. Sears, 6 Ad. & El. 496, the law

S 115 is thus laid down by Lord Denman C. J. 'That the rule of law is clear, that where one by his words or conduct wilfully causes another to believe the existence of a certain state of things and induces him to act on that belief, so as to alter his own previous position the former is conclusively bound from averring against the latter a different state of things as existing at the same time.' In a somewhat later case of Steele v. Helle 10 Ad. & El. 90 which may be cited as in appendix to Pickard v. Sears Lord Denman added Pickard v. Sears was in my mind at the time of the trial and the principle of that case may be stated even more broadly than it is there laid down. A party, who negligently or culpably stands by and allows another to contract on the faith and under understanding of a fact which he in contradiction cannot afterwards dispute the fact in an action against the person whom he has himself assisted in deceiving. The former case it will be observed might possibly seem by the expression 'wilfully causes' almost to imply a fraudulent representation only and to limit the application of the doctrine in that state of things, — while the latter extends it to cases of mere omission, silence or passive acquiescence, and that not culpably merely in the more obnoxious case of the term but even negligent and a good deal of discussion has arisen as to the precise limit of the rule. It is now however established that the word 'wilful' is to be understood not in the sense of intentionally but practically deceptive. Goodale 41 351.

The discussion of the proposition as laid down by Lord Denman came before the Court in the case of Freeman v. Cooke 2 Lx R. 651, where Lord Hensydale in delivering the judgment after adverting to the rule as laid down by Lord Denman thus commented on it — Whether that rule has been correctly acted upon by the jury in all the reported cases in which it has been applied is not now the question but the proposition contained in the rule itself as above laid down in the case of Pickard v. Sears must be considered as established. By the term 'wilfully' however in that rule we must understand, if not that the party represents that to be true which he knows to be untrue at least, that he means his representation to be acted upon, and that it is acted upon accordingly and if whatever a man's real intention may be he so conducts himself that a reasonable man would take the representation to be true and believe that it was meant that he should act upon it, and did act upon it as true the party making the representation would be equally precluded from contesting its truth, and conduct, by negligence or omission where there is a duty cast upon a person by usage of trade or otherwise to disclose the truth, may often have the same effect. As for instance a retiring partner omitting to inform his customers of the fact in the usual mode that continuing partners were no longer authorised to act as his agents is bound by all contracts made by them with third persons, on the faith of their being so authorised. Lord Hensydale's statement of the law was reviewed by Lord Campbell C. J. in Howard v. Hudson 3 Ld. & Bl. 1, where he said 'Now I refer to the rule laid down in Pickard v. Sears, and in Freeman v. Cooke. If a party wilfully makes a representation to another, meaning it to be acted upon and it is so acted upon that gives rise to what is called an estoppel. It is not quite properly so called but it operates as a bar to receiving evidence contrary to that representation as between those parties. Like the ancient estoppel this conclusion shuts out the truth, and is odious, and must be strictly made out. The party setting up such a bar to the reception of the truth must show, both that there was a wilful intent to make him act on the faith of the representation, and that he did so act.'

Though Lord Campbell in enunciating the proposition he was laying down, makes use of the expression 'wilfully', it will be noticed that he adopts the exposition of the law given in the later case of Freeman v. Cooke, which in effect expounds the word 'wilful' to mean simply intentional, — and this probably, accordingly, was what Lord Campbell intended to convey. In the same case of Howard v. Hudson too, Mr Justice Crompton, in addressing himself to his particular expression, observes — The word 'wilfully' which is used in the judgment in Pickard v. Sears, has been well commented upon, in the judgment in Freeman v. Cooke. As the rule is there explained, it takes in all the important commercial cases, in which a representation is made, not wilfully in any bad sense of the word not maliciously, or with the intent to defraud or deceive but so far wilfully, that the party making the representation on which the other acts, means it to be acted upon in that way. That is the true criterion.

Of course, the principle was equally applicable whether in a Court of law or one of equity. In Money v Jordan, 5 H L C 185, Lord Cranworth L C thus observed: "Well known in the law, founded upon good faith and equity, a principle equally of Law and of Equity, if a person makes any false representation to another, and that other acts upon that false representation, the person who has made it shall not afterwards be allowed to set up that what he said was false, and to assert the real truth in place of falsehood which has so misled the other. This is a principle of universal application and has been particularly applied to cases where representations have been made so as to state the property of persons about to contract marriage, and where, upon the faith of such representations, marriage has been contracted. There, the person who has made the false representations has in a great many cases been held bound to make his representation good." And in a later part of his judgment, he thus adds:—"These principles are plainly and perfectly intelligible, and quite consistent with good sense and I should be in the last degree sorry that any opinion or decision to which I am a party, should add to a notion that I, in the slightest degree question their propriety. Nay, more I think that the principle has been carried, and may be carried much further, because I think it is not necessary that the party making the representation should know that it was false, no fraud need have been intended at the time. But if the party has unwittingly misled another, you must add that he has misled another under such circumstances that he had reasonable ground for supposing that the person whom he was misleading was to act upon what he was saying. It will not do if he merely said something, supposing it to be quite right, and then that some stranger, having heard and acted upon it, should afterwards come to him to make it good. The whole doctrine was very much considered at law, for it is a doctrine not confined to cases in equity, but one that prevails at law also, and there are, in fact more cases upon the subject at law than in equity."

The case of Money v Jordan, supra, was decided originally by the Master of the Rolls. An appeal was then preferred before the Lords Justice, and finally it came before the House of Lords. But up to this point,—(the doctrine is laid down by Lord Cranworth)—both in the lower appellate Court, and on two final appeals in the House of Lords, there was no difference of opinion among the Judges. Lord Cranworth however who on the original appeal to the Lords Justices, and before his promotion to the Chancery was sitting as one of them, both on that appeal and the one to the House of Lords, took up the point that the doctrine under discussion did not apply to a case where the representation was not a representation of a fact, but a statement of something which the party intends or does not intend to do. And Lord Brougham on the appeal before the Lords adopted that view of the case. "She", said his Lordship (referring to the lady the effect of whose statement was the issue in the cause)—"simply stated what was her intention, she did not misrepresent her intention and I have no manner of doubt that, at the time she made that statement, she had the intention which it is stated she professed."

This distinction did not prevail in the original appeal before the Lords Justices because having been dissented from by Lord Cranworth's then coadjutor, the Lord Justice Knight Bruce and being opposed to the view taken of the case by the Master of the Rolls, Sir John Romilly on the original hearing before him, the first appeal that before the Lords Justices, only terminated in the upholding of the original decision and the negation accordingly of this distinction. When the case, however, got to the Lords, on its second and final appeal, Lord Cranworth then risen from Lord Justice to be Chancellor found a supporter for his view in Lord Brougham, and, though he had at the same time an opponent to it in Lord St Leonards the late Chancellor these being the three Lords by whom the appeal was heard Lord St Leonards was in the minority, and the ultimate decision was accordingly in conformity with the opinions on the point of Lords Cranworth and Brougham. Had Lords Cranworth and Brougham simply meant to speak of that which a party held out

S 115, as a mere matter of intention reserving to himself the power to change his mind it would be difficult to dispute their contention. Both however, in the terms in which they state the proposition would appear to carry it further, and were this their real intention, it may be permitted in all humanity, to doubt the soundness of the view, and certainly in doing so we are in pretty good company, for if it be supported by Lords Cranworth and Brougham on the one side, on the other it was opposed to that taken by the Master of the Rolls, Sir John Houston, the Lord Justice Knight Bruce and Lord St Leonards, and with reference to all three of whom it may be said that none are more conversant with the great principles of equity. Indeed though the judgment of the Court of last resort the decision presented the somewhat anomalous state of things of being carried in a conclusive of three Judges by a majority of one only, while had all the five Judges by whom it was collectively heard, been there sitting together to decide, it would have been lost by a minority of two out of five, so that while the dissenting Judges as a body were certainly on such a question, not inferior to the assenting ones it was the numerical minority which ultimately prevailed over the majority. Moreover on the hearing in the Lords Lord St Leonards entered his protest most energetically against the doctrine Goodie L. 555. Your Lordships and Lord St Leonards are asked to consider that a representation of an intention is not a binding act, and that you cannot misrepresent what you intend to do. But if you declare your intention with reference, for example to a marriage, not to enforce a given right, and the marriage takes place on that declaration, I submit that in point of law, that is a binding undertaking. And he goes to cite various well established authorities in support of his view. The case presented much conflict of evidence and can hardly be said to involve the decision of the question in the particular form assigned to it by the passages we have quoted, from the judgments of Lords Cranworth and Brougham, and it may it is submitted be considered, accordingly, to have been left an open one. Indeed on a close analysis of the case, we think it will be found that applying the judgments of these two learned Lords on the legal point to the facts only which they (particularly Lord Cranworth) treated the evidence as establishing, the broader proposition apparently which, according to the report, was broached by them went beyond the exigency of the decision, and might accordingly be so far fairly treated as obiter, if indeed, it was the intention of the two learned Judges to carry that proposition quite so far as their language might ascribe to them. The case so far as it requires to be told to explain the discussion was simply this—A lady (a family friend at the time a spinster of some maturity of age), had in her possession and belonging to her a bond to which a young gentleman about to be married was a party as an obligor with others, but she had already often avowed, that under certain peculiar circumstances in which the bond was given, and her regard for the youth it was her intention never to enforce it against him. In this state of things she was applied to by the gentleman and his friends on the occasion of the marriage and with reference to the marriage arrangements more formally to release the obligation and give up the bond. This, however she declined to do saying that the document itself might be required should she wish to enforce it against the other parties but that she had no intention of ever doing this as against the gentleman in question. This was treated by the family as a practical release and the marriage took place accordingly. The lady subsequently got herself married and an action was afterwards brought, in the name of her husband and her self, to enforce the bond against the party who had under the circumstances detailed above, treated himself as released and married on its faith and a suit was thereupon preferred in equity to restrain the action at law being the suit to the proceedings in which we have been addressing ourselves. The judgments of Lords Cranworth and Brougham were necessarily founded on their own view of the evidence and it was thus as stated by Lord Cranworth himself and adopted by Lord Brougham "I repeat that I do believe that she often and often told this young man that she would never enforce this bond that I believe she said this over and over again knowing that it would come to her ears but that that was all that was said either expressly or impliedly, and said with the qualification, I will not give up my right to the bond, you must trust to my honour." Now this would almost appear to have reserved to the lady the power of changing her mind and whether it were the correct view of the evidence or not, might possibly in itself be sufficient to warrant the judgment ultimately passed by Lords Cranworth and Brougham. At all events it falls, it is submitted somewhat short of invoking the broader proposition ascribed to them as the basis of their conclusion,—while, if so it would fail to disturb the general course of decision which has been pointed out. According to Lord Cranworth, what the lady intended to be acted on was not her intention, but the chance that she might never change it. If there were to be any thing to trust on it was her honour simply that she would not change, with the reservation that she might, if she chose, for she expressly reserved to herself, her right to the bond. It was a deed to learn on, which might be broken not a staff which would not. Goodere Est 57. But it has been held that in order that a representation may operate as an estoppel it must be a representation of an existing fact and of not mere intention or future promises. Also estoppel, does not confer any title but is merely a rule of evidence which prevents one party from denying the existence of a fact which he represented as existing and upon which representation another person had been induced to act to his detriment. Hindustan Co-operative Society v Secretary of State, 56 C 989. A mere representation of an intention cannot amount to an estoppel. An estoppel must be a representation of an existing fact. If binding at all a representation de futuro must amount to a promise. Dhundo v Keshab, 7 Bom L R 179.

Estoppel in equity. The modern or equitable estoppel is founded upon representations and arises out of contract or relations analogous to contract. Casperx Estoppel p 19. The general principle underlying equitable estoppel is thus laid down "No body ought to be estopped from averring the truth or asserting a just demand, unless by his acts or words or neglect he is now averring the truth or asserting the demand would work some wrong to some other person who has been induced to do something, or to abstain from doing something, by reason of something said or done or omitted to say or do." In re Colthe, L R 8 Ch D 807 (817). So "when a person makes to another the representation 'I take upon myself to say such things do exist and you may act upon this basis that they do exist' and the other man does really act upon that basis, it seems to me that it is of the very essence of justice that between those two parties their rights should be regulated by the conventional state of facts which the two parties agree to make the basis of their action." Per Lord Blackburn in Burmahshah v Nicholls, L R 3 App Cas 1004 (1026), Casperx Estoppel 19. It is a principle of natural equity which must be universally applicable that where one man allows another to hold himself out as the owner of an estate and a third person purchases it for value from the apparent owner in the belief that he is the real owner, the man who so allows the other to hold himself out shall not be permitted to recover upon his secret title, unless he can overthrow that of the purchaser by showing either that he had direct notice, or something which amounts to constructive notice of the real title, or that there existed circumstances which ought to have put him upon an enquiry that if prosecuted would have led to a discovery of it." Maset v Manny Gyn Nyo U B R (1892 1896) Vol II 376. Equitable estoppel is not applied in favour of a volunteer. Lovett v Lovett, 67 L J Ch 20—(1898) 1 Ch 82.

The section whether exhaustive of all kinds of estoppels. In Ganges Manufacturing Co v Sowajmull 5 C 669 at p 678, Garth C J said "It has been further contended by the appellants that ss. 115 to 117 contained in Chapter VIII of the Evidence Act lay down the only rules of estoppel which are now intended to be in force in British India, that those rules are treated by the Act as rules of evidence, and that by s 2 of the Act, all rules of evidence are repealed, except those which the Act contains. But if this argument were well founded the consequences would indeed be serious. The Courts here would then be debarred from entertaining any questions in the nature of estoppel which did not come within the scope of ss 115 to 117 however important these questions might be to the due administration of the law. The falsity of the argument is in supposing that all rules of estoppel are all rules of evidence. The enactment in s 115 is, no doubt, in one sense, a rule of evidence. It is founded upon the well known doctrine laid down in Pickard v Sears 6 Ad & L 169 and other cases, that where a man has made a representation to another of a particular fact or state of circumstances and has thereby willfully induced that other to act upon that representation and to alter his own previous position he is estopped as against that party from proving that the fact or state of circumstances was not true. In such a case the rule of estoppel becomes so far a rule of evidence that evidence is not admissible to disprove the fact or state of circumstances which has been represented to exist. But "estoppels" in the sense in which the term is used in English legal phraseology, are matters of infinite variety and are by no means confined to the subjects which are dealt with in Chapter VIII of the Evidence Act. A man may be estopped, not only from giving particular evidence but from doing acts, or relying upon any particular arguments or contention, which the rules of equity and good conscience prevent him using as against his opponent. A large number of cases of this kind will be found collected in the notes to Doe v Oliver 2 Smith's L C 5th Ed p 775, and whatever the true meaning of section 2 of the Evidence Act may be as regards estoppels which prevent per on from giving evidence we are clearly of opinion that it does not debar the plaintiffs in this case from using them as a defence in their present contention as against the defendants. Similarly in Kupchand Ghosh v Sarveswar Chaudhary 33 C 915 at p 921-10 C W N 717-3 C L J 629 Mr Justice Woodroffe said "This is admittedly not a case of estoppel by misrepresentation, which is dealt with by section 115 of the Evidence Act. If it is in estoppel at all, it is an estoppel by agreement. Sections 116 and 117 of that Act mention certain well known cases of this kind of estoppel, viz that of the tenant, the licensee, the buyer and acceptor of a Bill of Exchange. The case does not come within any of these, though it has been argued in part on the analogy of the tenant's estoppel. It has however been correctly submitted that these sections are not exhaustive of the doctrine of estoppel by agreement." See also Bhargava Bewah v Hummat Baidyakar, 20 C W N 1335 (1340), Golla v Sitaram 23 M L J 335, but see Asmutiunnessa v Harendra Lal 35 C 901-12 C W N 721-8 C L J 31 where none of the previous cases were considered. "This equity differs essentially from the doctrine embodied in s 115 of the Indian Evidence Act 1873 which is not a rule of equity but is a rule of evidence that was formulated and applied in Courts of law. Whereas the former takes its origin from the jurisdiction assumed by Courts of Equity to intervene in the case of, or to prevent fraud' Municipal Corporation of Bombay v Secretary of State for India 29 B 580-7 Bom L R 27. When the principles of the law of estoppel, by which the Courts in India are to be governed, are found in s 115 of the Act there is no need to fall back upon the analogies of the Mohammedan Law in a case of presumption arising between the Hindus Ajudhia Chaudhuri v Chhatrapal, 1 A L J 210-A W N 1907, 85.

S 115

Requisites of section 115 To constitute an estoppel under this section, the following things are necessary namely—

(1) A false representation or concealment of material facts, (2) The representation must have been made with a knowledge of the facts (3) The party to whom it was made must have been ignorant of the truth of the matter, (4) It must have been made with intention that the other party should act upon it (5) The other party must have been induced to act upon it Brynm v Preston 69 Lexis 287-5 Am St Rep 49 (6) Or acts, conduct, or declarations of a person, by which he designately induces another to alter his position injuriously to himself but it must be executed and not merely executory Camp Rul Cas 1 of AL 104

Declaration, act or omission This section deals with a case of estoppel by misrepresentation Rup Chand v Sarveswar, 33 C 915 (921) Under this section such misrepresentation may be made by declaration, act or omission Ichha bhai v Natha bhai, 28 B 399 (407). "It is a very old head of equity" said Lord Eldon in Evans v Bicknell 6 Ves 183, that if a representation is made to another person going to deal in a matter of interest upon the faith of that representation the former shall make the representation good if he knows it to be false.' But the misrepresentation need not be in express terms, and is frequently scarcely to be described as a misrepresentation at all but may be implied from the general conduct of the party making it, and it will be sufficient to show that under the circumstances, any reasonable man would be deceived. Casperz Estoppel, 20, see also Pickard v Sears 6 A & E 469, Cornish v Coke, 8 L J Ex 114, Cornish v Abington, 23 L J Ex 262 Freeman v Cole, 8 L J Ex 114, Dixon v Kennaway Co., (1900) 1 Ch 833 Foster v Pyne Penloon Co., 63 L J Q B 50, Sarat Chandra v Gopal Chandra 20 C, 296. The law on the subject is thus stated by Brett J in Carr v London and North Western Railway Co., L R 10 C P 347=44 L J C P 109 —

"1 If a man by his words or conduct wilfully endeavours to cause another to believe in a certain state of things which the first knows to be false and if the second believes in such a state of things and acts upon his belief he who knowingly made the false statement is estopped from averring afterwards that such a state of things did not in fact exist

"2 If a man either in express terms or by conduct makes a representation to another of the existence of a certain state of facts which he intends to be acted upon in a certain way and it be acted upon in that way in the belief of the existence of such a state of facts, to the damage of him who so believes and acts, the first is estopped from denying the existence of such a state of facts

"3 If a man whatever his real meaning may be so conducts himself that a reasonable man would take his conduct to mean a certain representation of facts and that it was a true representation and that the latter was intended to act on it in a particular way and he with such a belief does it in that way to his damage, the first is estopped from denying that the facts are as represented

"4 If in the transaction itself which is in dispute one has led another into the belief of a certain state of facts by conduct of culpable negligence calculated to have that result, and such culpable negligence has been the proximate cause of leading and has led the other to act by mistake upon such belief to his prejudice, this second cannot be heard afterwards as against the first to show that the state of facts referred to did not exist. This cause was approved of in the much later case of Seton Laing & Co v Lapone L R 19 Q B D 68, by a unanimous judgment of Lord Esher and Lords Justices Fry and Lopes. In that case Lord Esher said "An estoppel does not in itself give a cause of action it prevents a person from denying a certain state of facts. One ground of estoppel is where a man makes a fraudulent misrepresentation and another man acts upon it to his detriment. Another may be where a man makes a false statement, negligently, though without fraud and another person acts upon it. And there may be circumstances under which where a misrepresentation is made without fraud and without negligence there may be an estoppel." See also Coventry v G E Ry Co 11 Q B D 776, Sarat Chandra v Gopal Chandra, 20 C 296 (P C), Ex parte Adamson, 8 Ch D 897

In Carr v L & N W Railway, L R 10 C P 68 Brett J classifies ordinary instances of estoppel by conduct under four heads. Fraud, Intentional but innocent misrepresentation, Foolish but misleading conduct, and culpable negligence. It must not be taken, however, that this classification is exhaustive, a man's conduct may give rise to estoppel in infinite number of ways. Pouell Ev 468. Estoppel, like acquiescence, is not a question of fact but of legal inference from the facts found. To create an estoppel it is not sufficient to find that it may well be doubted that the plaintiff would have acted in the way he did but for the way in which the defendant had acted. It must be found as a fact that the plaintiff would not have acted in the way he did, and that the defendant by his declaration, act or omission, intentionally caused or permitted another person to believe a thing to be that, and to act upon such belief. Narsingdas v Rihumabhai, 6 Bom L R 440=28 B 410

Intentionally. In Pickard v Sears, 6 A & E 469 nt 474, Lord Denman said "The rule of law is clear that, where one by his words or conduct wilfully causes another to believe the existence of a certain state of things and induces him to act on that belief, so as to alter his own previous position the former is concluded from averring against the latter a different state of things as existed at the same time." The rule is laid down in Pickard v Sears, supra, was explained by Parke B in Freeman v Cooke, 19 L J Ex 114 at p 119. "The rule was founded on previous authorities, on the cases of Graves v Key, 3 B Ad 313, and Heane v Rogers, 9 B & C 586, and has been acted upon in several cases since. The principle is stated more broadly by Lord Denman in the case of Gregg v Wells 10 A & L 90, where his Lordship says that if a party negligently or culpably stands by and allows another to contract on the faith of a fact which he can contradict, cannot afterwards dispute that fact in an action against the person whom he has himself assisted in deceiving. By the test 'wilfully' however, in that rule we must understand, if not that the party represents that to be true which he knows to be untrue, at least that he makes his representation to be acted upon, and that it is acted upon accordingly, and whatever a man's real meaning may be he so conducts himself that a reasonable man could take the representation to be true and believe that it was meant that he should act upon it, and did act upon it as true, the person making the representation would be equally precluded from contesting its truth and conduct by negligence or omission when there is a duty upon a person by usage of trade or otherwise to disclose the truth, may often have the same effect—as, for instance, a retiring partner omitting to inform the customers of the firm, in the usual mode that the continuing partners were no longer authorised to act as his agents, is bound by all contracts made by the firm with third persons on the faith of their being authorised. In Houder v Hudso 2 El & Bl 1, Crampson J said 'The word 'wilfully' which is used in the judgment of Pickard v Sears has been well commented upon in the judgment of Freeman v Cooke. As the rule there explained, it takes in all the important commercial cases in which a representation is made, not wilfully in any sense of the word not maliciously, or with intent to defraud or deceive, but so far as wilfully that the party making the representation on which the other acts means it to be acted upon in that way. That is the true criterion.' See Mudhu Chunder v Law, 13 B L R 394, Corinth v Great Eastern Railway Co 11 C B D 776, Selon Lang & Co v Lafone L R 19 Q B D 68, Cornish v Abington 4 H & N 549. So there is no ground for the suggestion that the person making the representation which induces another to act must be influenced by a fraudulent intention. Sarat Chunder v Gopal Chunder, 20 C 298. In the above case, commenting on the cases of Ganga Sahai v Hara Singh, 2 A 809 and that of Vishnu v Krishnan 7 M 3 Lord Shand said "In the former of these cases it was laid down by a majority of the Judges that if the element of fraud be wanting there is no estoppel. The latter case was one in which an adoption having taken place, the alleged adopted son claimed to set aside a deed of gift of certain property by his adoptive father, granted by him in his life in favour of a stranger. (In that case also) the Court seems to have taken the view that in order to create estoppel the representation founded on must have been made with an intention to deceive, and an opinion was indicated that the law of estoppel under the Indian Evidence Act in some respects differed from the law of England. It was there said (7 Mad 8). The term intentionally was, no doubt, adopted advisedly. By the substitution of it for the term 'wilfully' in the rule stated in Pickard v Sears 6 A & L 169 and explained in Freeman v Cooke, 2 Exch 651 and Cornish v Abington 4 H & N 549, it was possibly the design to exclude cases from the rule in India to which it might be applied under the terms in which it has been stated by the English Courts. Their Lordships are unable to agree in this view. On the contrary, as the rule had been modified in England by there substituting the word 'intentionally' in the rule established for the word 'wilfully' which had been previously used it seems to their Lordships that the term 'intentionally' was used in the Evidence Act for the purpose of declaring the law in India to be precisely that of the law of England. A person who by his declaration, act or omission, had caused another to believe a thing to be true and to act upon that belief, must be held to have done so 'intentionally' within the meaning of the statute, if a reasonable man would take the representation to be true, and believe it was meant that he should act upon it. And to this view effect was given in the case of Cornish v Abington, supra and the later cases "Estoppels may arise on various grounds," says Brett M R in Seton v Lafone, L R 19 Q B D 68 "all of which the judgment in Carl v North Western Railway Co, L R 10 C P 307, endeavours to state and each of the grounds on which an estoppel may arise, there stated, is intended to be independent and exclusive of the others. An estoppel does not in itself give a cause of action; it prevents a person from denying a certain state of facts. One ground of estoppel is when a man makes a fraudulent representation, and another man acts upon it to his detriment. Another may be where a man makes a false statement negligently though without fraud, and another man acts upon it. And there may be circumstances under which where a misrepresentation is made without fraud and without negligence, there may be an estoppel. While it is not in all cases necessary to show actual knowledge of the facts on the part of the one against whom the estoppel is claimed, it should at least be shown that the declarations were made under such circumstances that he ought to have had such knowledge or that they were made negligently and recklessly. Erans v Edwards 13 Com B 777. He cannot urge as an excuse, that he had forgotten them. When a person through misapprehension, ignorance or inadvertence, does acts or makes declarations which mislead another to his injury, but when at the same time there is no wilful deception or culpable negligence and no intention that the representation should be acted upon as true by the other party and when nothing accompanies it that is equivalent to a promise that the representation is true the person making the declarations or doing the acts is not estopped from proving the truth against the party thus misled. It follows that there is no estoppel when the declarations are made in good faith and in ignorance of the real facts—in other words, when made innocently and by mistake. Burr Jones § 277, Muhammad v Golahand, 26 P L R 1903. It is not essential that the intention of the person whose declaration, act or omission has induced another to act or abstain from acting, should have been fraudulent or that he should not have been under a mistake or misapprehension. Helan Das v Durao Das Mundal, 4 C L J 423. Under this section not merely may there be active inducement on the part of the declarant of a belief in the mind of another person but it is enough if declaration is such by which the declarant in the ordinary course permits some body else to believe in the truth of that declaration and to act on that belief. Barkat Ali v Prosonna Kumar, 33 C W N 873=A I R 1929 Cal 819. It is not necessary, according to law as at present received that there should be any fraudulent intention established in connection with the misrepresentation which is the subject of estoppel. Balbir v Jugat, 3 Pat. L J 451=46 Ind Cas, 473.

S 115

Who can take advantage of the representation. Only the person to whom the representation was made or for whom it was designed can avail himself of it. A person who receives statements at second hand, not intended for him, clearly has no right to act upon them. Indeed it is equally clear that a mere bystander who has overheard a statement made to and for another has no better right to act upon it than if it had been communicated without authority to him, and so it has been decided. If however, the declaration was intended to be general, then, it seems that one who did not hear it, but to whom it was made known directly afterwards, or within the time to be allowed for acting upon it, may act upon it. This should be the limit of the law more than that would be to make a man responsible for an act not his own or that of his agent. Bigelow on Estoppel, 6th Ed page 708. Only such person can take advantage of a representation for whom it was meant. Jogesh Chandra v Entaz Ali, A I R 1927 Cal 34=97 Ind Cas 625. Estoppel applies not only in favour of the person induced to change his position but also in favour of the transferee of such a person. Bhanya Lal v Sheo Gobind 7 L R 213 (Rev.) Jayamath v Syed Abdullah, 16 A L J 576=45 Ind Cas 770=22 C W N 891 (P C). When plea of estoppel is available to the decree-holder it is likewise available to the purchaser at the auction sale. Swamatha Mallala v Darmalinga, (1917) VI W N 88. Parties who, by false representations, induce others to enter into contracts are estopped from afterwards falsifying their statements, and, if necessary may be compelled to make them good. W R 1864, 11.

S 115.

It is not necessary that the representation should be false to the knowledge of the party making it, though in the early cases this appears to have been the law provided that (1) it is intended to be acted upon in the manner in which it was acted upon or (2) the person who makes it so conducts him-self that a reasonable man would take the representation to be true and believe that it was meant that he should act upon it in the manner Halsbury Vol 13 § 540

How a representation may be made The form of representation may be oral or written G I P Ry v Hanmandas 11 B 57 Where there is no representation a party cannot be estopped Damodar v Choudhury, 69 Ind Cas 131=1922 P C 349=16 L W 692 A representation to form the basis of an estoppel may be made by statement or by conduct, and conduct includes negligence Halsbury Vol 13 p 377, Permau v Coole 2 Ex. Ch 634

Representation must be of existing facts A mere representation of an intention cannot amount to an estoppel White Church v Carter (1902) A C 117 (130) An estoppel must be a representation of an existing fact Dhondo Goring v Keshab Bhaskar 7 Bom L R 179 (184) Section 115 of the Evidence Act requires that to create an estoppel there must be a representation by means of a declaration act or omission that a thing is true & that the representation is as to some state of facts alleged to be at the time actually in existence If the representation relates to a promise de futuro it can be binding not as an estoppel but as a contract Jethabhai v Nathabhai 28 B 399 (407) This case followed the rule laid down by Lord Macnaghten in George White Church Ltd v Carter (1902) A C 117 (130) where His Lordship said 'That is not a representation of an existing fact If it is anything it is a promise de futuro, which cannot be an estoppel See also Maddison v Alderson 8 App Cas 467 (473) In Alderson v Maddison L R 5 Lx D Stephen J said

Besides these there is a class of false representations which have no legal effect. These are cases in which a person excites expectations which he does not fulfil, as, for instance, where a person leads another to believe that he intends to make him his heir, and then leaves his property away from him. Though such conduct may inflict greater loss on the sufferer than almost any breach of the contract, and may involve greater moral guilt than many common frauds, it involves no legal consequences unless the person making the representation not only excites the expectation that it will be fulfilled but legally binds himself to fulfil it in which case he must as it seems to me contract to fulfil it See also Jorden v Money 5 H L C 185 Citizens Loan of Louisiana v First National Bank of New Orleans, L R 6 L & I A 352 Byrd v 6th Ed 637 Saunders v Becht 40 C L J 67 In re Blackham (1917) 34 L L R 159 Tanfield & Co v Gardiner 101 L F 233 (239) Ma Pau v Ng Po 39 Ind Cas 335, Bayang v Bhagwan 11 O C 301 M Eton v Drogheda Harbour Commissioner 16 W R 11, Chadwell v Manning (1956) A C 231 The doctrine of estoppel by representation is applicable to some state of facts alleged at the time to be in existence and not to promises de futuro which if binding at all must be binding as a contract Deben v Dymally 89 Ind Cas 164, Hindustan Co-operative v Secy of State A I R 1930 Cal 238 The principle of estoppel in this arising from a person's conduct has no application where the state of things which it was sought to conclude that person from denying was a future state of things M Eton v Drogheda Harbour Commissioners 16 W R 34 In Maddison v Alderson 32 I J Q B 737=9 App Cas 473, Lord Shelburne said 'I have always understood it to have been decided that the doctrine of estoppel by representation is applicable only to representations as to some state of facts alleged to be at the time actually in existence and not to promises de futuro, which if binding at all, must be binding as contracts' A representation as to a future course of conduct cannot create an estoppel White Church (George) Ltd v Carter (1902) A C 117=85 L R 349, see also Ma Pau v Ng Po Chet, U B R (1916) 111 Qr 143=39 Ind Cas 335

Estoppel, whether should be pleaded. An estoppel in pais need not be pleaded in order to make it obligatory Chit Ruy v Petaua Jan, 2 M H C L 31. If a man were to represent another as his agent, in order to procure a person to contract with him as such, and this person were so to contract, the contract would bind the principal equally with one made by himself, and no form of pleading could leave such a matter at large, and enable the jury to treat it as no contract. Freeman v Coole, 2 Ex R 660, Taylor § 92, see also Sanderson v Collman, 4 M & Gr 209, Fleming v Bank of New Zealand, (1900) A C 557. The rule of estoppel is a rule of evidence and should be pleaded with sufficient clearness. Abdul Rahim v Basura 61 Ind Cts 807=6 P L J 273=2 P L R 556. A person invoking the plea of estoppel must clearly plead precise facts which led him to believe that his transferor was the real owner and must show the precise nature of the inquiries he relied on. Ram Sarup v Maya Shankar, 43 Ind Cts 556=33 P W R 1918=46 P R 1918. Where plea of estoppel is not set up in the pleadings or issues it cannot be availed of later, because estoppel is eminently a matter of pleadings. Pappannal v Alamelu 119 Ind Cas 152=A I R 1929 Mad 467. The question of estoppel is a mixed question of law and fact. Nagudas v Kara Jesang 6 Bom L R 630. No question of estoppel by acquiescence can possibly arise where a person has built a house on another's land in the latter's absence and when the plea of estoppel is not raised in defence the Court can rightly reject that argument. Duarla v Sanilatha 94 Ind Cts 307, but see Hivalal v Palsuram 80 Ind Cas 946=1925 Nig 946. A question of estoppel can only be raised by pleading. Purgan v Dhanpal, 63 Ind Cts 739. Shailh Abdul Rahim v Mt Banira 6 P L J 273=2 P L R 556=61 Ind Cas 807, Ram Sarup v Maya Shankar 46 P R 1918=45 P L R 1918=33 P W R 1918=43 Ind Cts 556, Prasanna v Badulla, 47 Ind Cts 935, Chandi v Samla, 22 C W N 179.

Onus of proof. To entitle a plaintiff to recover from a defendant, on the ground of estoppel a loss occasioned through culpable neglect on the part of the defendant, the plaintiff must prove that the negligence complained of occurred in the particular transaction in which his loss arose and also that such negligence was the proximate, direct or real cause of the loss. Longman v Bath Electric Tramways, 74 L J Ch 424=(1905) 1 Ch 646. A person who relies on an estoppel by negligence must show that he was led into the belief on which he acted to his detriment. A solicitor was ordered by his client to invest the title to and prepare a conveyance of property adjoining his (the solicitor's) property. In the conveyance a small portion of the solicitor's property was confused but the client did not believe that he was buying the small portion in question. The client subsequently brought an action claiming the land. Held that the solicitor was not estopped from setting up the truth. Bell v Marsh 72 L J Ch 360=(1903) 1 Ch. 528=88 L R 605=51 W R 325. The estoppel must be strictly interpreted and any point in doubt must be decided against the estoppel. Nihal Singh v Naram Singh, 6 Lah L J 45=80 Ind Cts 525=1924 Lah 469. The onus of establishing facts giving rise to estoppel is upon the person who pleads it. Mitra Sen v Jauli, 46 A 728, Ahmed v Safizan, 97 Ind Cts 897, Buendra v Bauluntha 46 Ind Cts 474.

When truth of the matter known to both the parties no estoppel arises. Where the party affected has received timely notice that the representation is not true he cannot enforce the estoppel. Dunston v Paterson 2 C B N S 495. Sandy v Hodgson 10 Ad & El 472. So the party claiming the estoppel must not himself have been negligent. Where the condition of the title is known to both parties or both have the same means of ascertaining the truth there can be no estoppel. Brant v Yugma Coal & I Co 93 U S 326 (Am). Knouff v Thompson 16 Penn State 361. He must show good faith and diligence to learn the truth. Vorgan v Farrel, 58 Connecticut (Am). Camp Rul Cts Vol XI p 103. This section does not apply to a case where the statement relied upon is made to a person, who knows the real facts and is not misled by the untrue statement. There can be no estoppel where the truth of the matter is known to both parties. A false representation, made to person who knows it to be false is not such a fraud as to take away the privilege of infancy. Mohrce Babce v Dhanmodas, 30 C 339 P C=30 I A 114=7 C W N 441=5 Bom L R 121. Estoppel by conduct does not arise where the party misled had actual or constructive notice of the real state of facts. Maug Sa v Ma Kyol,

- S 115 L B R 1893-1900, 512 There can be no estoppel when the truth of the matter appears on the face of the proceeding Tara Lal v Sorobor Singh, 27 C 107 P C = 27 I A 33 = 1 C W N 233 = 2 Bom L R 5 When both parties are equally conversant with the true state of facts, it is absurd to refer to the doctrine of estoppel Suammatha v Suammatha 18 M L J 32 = 99 Ind Cas 772 = A I R 1927 Mad 154, see also Debi Prosad v Bagnath, 95 Ind Cas 585 = A I R 1926 Oudh 506 It is a settled principle of law that if a person either knows a certain fact or is presumed in law to know a certain fact the principle of estoppel cannot apply Iulloo v Indra, 93 Ind Cas 873 = 13 O L J 151 = A I R 1926 Oudh 330 No estoppel exists where the other party knows the truth Padayachi v Krishna Suam 21 L W 336 = 85 Ind Cas 855 = A I R 1925 Mad 95 = 17 M L J 622 Agilip Prosad v Rajo Koer, 2 Pat 585 = (1923) Pat 177 = 1 Pat L J 531 A statement of fact which is false within the knowledge of both parties will not act as estoppel Faria v Kunkar L R 1 A 185, see also Lalatachala v Irunthanaathachi, 1923 Mad 568 = 1923 M W N 225, William Jack & Co v Joosab 25 Bom L R 1170, Rajambal v Shanmuga (1922) M W N 481 Where A and B convey property to C thinking him believe that they are sole owners of the property and C acting on that representation takes the property for consideration A and B are estopped from asserting the title of a third person to the property even though C has transferred the property to D who was aware of the title of the parties Sarada v Gosta, 86 C L J 78 Where the plaintiff was fully cognizant of his own rights and position the admission of the defendants made in a previous suit between the parties which did nothing to influence either plaintiff's beliefs or notions could not operate as an estoppel in the present suit Mehra v Dew Ditta, 2 Lah 88 = 3 Lah L J 223 = 62 Ind Cas 665 There cannot be a case of estoppel where the person pleading the estoppel was put on notice and could by reasonable diligence have discovered what the true facts were Sarada Prosad v Ananda Moy, 46 Ind Cas 223 So this section does not apply to cases where the statement relied upon is made to a person who knows the real facts and is not misled by the untrue statement Jagannath v Jalkishen Prosad 1 Pat L J 16 = 34 Ind Cas 375 Estoppel does not arise where both parties have equal means of knowledge both of the facts and of the law Tel Chand v Gopal Devi 13 Ind Cas 452 = 46 P R 1912 see also Piasanna Kumar v Srilanto Raut, 16 C L J 202 = 17 C W N 137 There can be no estoppel where the whole of the record deed or document, in which the statement relied on is contained, shows the truth Menanj v Secretary of State 14 Bom L R 654

Estoppel by representation—change of position brought about by it A, by word or conduct induces B to believe that a certain state of things exists, and B in that belief acts in a way in which he would not have acted unless he so believed and is thereby prejudiced then A cannot in any subsequent proceeding between himself and B or any one claiming under B be heard to deny that that state of things existed But A will not be estopped from averring the truth in any other proceeding The estoppel only arises in favour of some person whom A has induced by word or conduct to do or abstain from doing some particular thing Pouell Ev 9th Ed 468 Where one by his words or conduct wilfully causes another to believe the existence of a certain state of things and induces him to act on that belief, so as to alter his own previous position, the former is concluded from averring against the latter a different state of things as existing at the same time Pickard v Sears, 6 Ad & D 469 So it is clear that if a person so conducts himself that another reasonably draws a certain inference and acts thereon the person so conducting himself cannot gainsay such inference Cornish v Abington 4 H & N 549 Carr v L & N W Railway Co L R 10 C P 307 In re Blackley Ordinance Co, (1867) L R 3 Ch 154 Hollins v Fowler L R 7 H L 757, Newton v Luddard 12 Q B 925 In re Collie 8 Ch D 817 Horsfall v Halifax and Huddersfield Union Banking Co 52 L J Ch 599 Couldrey v Burtrum, 19 Ch D 394 The other party must have acted upon the act or conduct Daniels v Er Ins Co 48 Connecticut, 105, Earl v Stevens 57 Vermont 474 Before an estoppel can take place it would be necessary for the party relying on the same to establish that he had been led to do something detrimental to his own interest owing to the action of the other person Nisar Ali v Muhammad Ali, 119 Ind C 337 = A I R. 1929 Oudh 491 = 6 O W N 519. What this section mainly regards is the position of the person who has been induced to act, and the principle on which the law rests is that it would be most inequitable and unjust to him that if another by a representation made or by conduct amounting to a representation, has induced him to act as he would not otherwise have done, the person who made the representation should be allowed to deny or repudiate the effect of his former statement, to the loss and injury of the person who acted on it. If the person who made the statement did so without full knowledge, or under error, sibi imputet, it may in the result be unfortunate for him, but it would be unjust even though he acted under error, to throw the consequences on the person who believed his statement and acted on it as it was intended that he should do. The main question, in determining whether an estoppel has been occasioned, is whether the representation has caused the person to whom it has been made to act on the faith of it Sarat Chandra Dey v Gopal Chandra Laha, 20 C 296 (P C) = 19 I A 203. In determining whether an estoppel has been created, the main question is whether the representation has caused the person to whom it has been made, to act on the faith of it Helan Das v Durga Das, 4 C L J 323. Where a person negligently allows another to contract on the faith of a fact which he can, but does not contradict he cannot afterwards question such fact in an action against the person whom he has assisted in deceiving. An estoppel of this kind is not created by a wilful, negligent and culpable misrepresentation, unless the person so deceived does an act in accordance with the misrepresentation Anderson v Taylor, 70 P R 1866. The meaning of this section is that no declaration, act or omission will amount to an estoppel unless it has caused the person whom it concerns to alter his position, and to do this he must both believe the facts stated or suggested by it and act upon such belief Durga v Shinguri 7 A 511 = A W N 1885, 135, see also Solano v Lalla Ram Lal, 7 C L R 431, Shinguri v Durga, 7 A 878 (T B) = A W N 1885, 260, Nanakchand v Chameli Kunwar, 17 A L J 288. Statement by one of two persons that another is his partner, he not being so in fact will not be evidence to render the other liable as an ostensible partner, the statement not having been made to the person who seeks to render the other liable, and not having come to his knowledge as a matter of notoriety, and it not being shown that he has acted on the faith of such statement Edmondson v Thompson, 31 L J Ex. 207. It is a settled principle of the rule of estoppel that in order that a particular declaration, act or omission of a certain person may constitute estoppel against him, the person pleading estoppel in his favour must show that he in accepting the truth of his declaration and relying upon the truth thereof, has acted upon such belief and changed his position to his detriment Ahmad v Safi-an, 97 Ind C 387 = A I R 1926 Oudh. 61. Person making a representation cannot subsequently deny what he represented when the person to whom it was made acted upon it Bengal Nagpur Railway Co v Co Operative Hindustan Bank Ltd 53 C 622 = 97 Ind Cas 606 = A I R 1926 Cal. 1059. Where the plaintiffs made statements in a suit inconsistent with those made by their father in a previous suit against the same defendants but the plaintiffs did not claim the property in suit through their father and there had been no change in the position of the defendants by reason of the prior inconsistent statement the plaintiffs were not estopped Nripendra Nath v Basanta Kumar 29 C W N 861 = 89 Ind Cas 207 = A I R 1925 Cal 1195. A tenant desiring to erect pucca structures on the leased land asked the permission of the landlord whose agent in reply wrote to say that the lease was a permanent lease and gave the tenant right to erect buildings, but it did not entitle him to hold at fixed rate and that the rent was liable to enhancement after proper legal notice and that pending consideration of a proposal to fix the rent permanently, the tenant might commence the house if he liked. Held that the statement of the latter was a statement of fact and not an expression of opinion, and the house having been erected, the landlord was estopped from ejecting the tenant by virtue of this section A H Forbes v

S 115

Sir L E Bait, 30 C W N 19=52 I A 178=11 C L J 513 (P C) In delivering the judgment Mr Inceer Ali said 'Lestoppel prevents the plaintiff from evicting from their holding, the defendants, whom he, the plaintiff, induced by his representation and conduct to believe that they had a fixity of tenure, although not of rent in the lands that had been leased to them. It gives effect to the representation that induced them to act as they did. In the case of Ramsdin v Dyson, L R 11 L 129, the principle which governs this class of cases is stated by Lord Kingsdown in the following terms—'The rule of law applicable to the case appears to me to be this. If a man, under a verbal agreement with a landlord for a certain interest in land, or what amounts to the same thing, under an expectation, created or encouraged by the landlord, that he shall have a certain interest, takes possession of such land with the consent of the landlord and upon the faith of such promise or expectation, with the knowledge of the landlord, and without objection by him, lays out money upon the land, a Court of equity will compel the landlord to give effect to such promise or expectation. This was the principle of the decision in Gregory v Mishall 18 Ves, 328 and as I conceive open to no doubts. This principle has been accepted by this Board in the case of Imad Yar Khan v The Secretary of State for India 28 I A 211=5 C W N 634. The exposition of Lord Shand in Sarat Chander Dey v Gopal Chander Laha L R 19 I A 203 of the rule of equitable estoppel embodied in section 115 of the Indian Evidence Act has been quoted in extenso in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice in the present case, and does not need repetition. Their Lordships desire to record full concurrence with the principle there laid down. Where the plaintiff was not induced to take any action, on the strength of misrepresentation by the defendant, and the interest of the plaintiff did not suffer by such misrepresentation, estoppel does not arise. Lalla Prosad v Raghunandan L R 5 All 321. The phrase 'act on such belief' means that the party must have altered his position with reference to the subject matter of the representation. William Jacobs & Co v Joorab Mahomed 25 Bom L R 1170. A person cannot use as an estoppel a statement by which he has been in no way misled or induced to alter to his own detriment his previous position. Bhagwan Singh v Daulatram, L R 3 A 173 (Rev), Gusain v Ram Ratha 50 Ind Cas 128, Abdulla Fatch, 63 Ind Cas 809.

Before advantage can be taken of the doctrine of estoppel the representation of the party sought to be estopped and the action of the party seeking to estop must be shown to be connected together as cause and effect. There must be proved first of all a declaration, act or omission on the part of the person sought to be estopped, and secondly that, by such a declaration, act or omission the person seeking to estop was led to believe a thing to be true and thirdly, that by such act or omission the party seeking to estop was not only led to believe a thing to be true which in fact was untrue but was act upon such belief to his prejudice. Ram Boran v Ram Nihora, 57 Ind Cas 263 see also Gujabai v Sadash 22 Bom L R 974=58 Ind Cas 394. Kannulal v Paul Saha 5 P L J 521=1 P L T 516=57 Ind Cas 373. Rajib Hussain v Zinghaji 54 Ind Cas 962, Harlat v Basanta Singh 75 P W R 1918.

Where by his admission of a compromise before the Revenue Court the plaintiff induced the defendant to withdraw his suit in that Court, he is estopped from bringing another suit in a Civil Court. Gulab v Badhau, 45 Ind Cas 331. Before applying the rule of estoppel it must be shown that a previous inconsistent statement in some way affected the result of the litigation in which it was made. But if the defendants were never proper parties to the previous litigation they cannot in any way be estopped from pleading something inconsistent with their former statement. Raghunath v Sheolal, 13 N L R 69=39 Ind Cas 849. If a man under a verbal agreement with a landlord for a certain interest in land or what amounts to be something under an expectation created and encouraged by the landlord that he shall have a certain interest takes possession of such land with the consent of the landlord and upon the faith of such promise or expectation with the knowledge of the landlord and without objection by him, lays out money upon the land, a Court of equity will compel the landlord to give effect to such promise or expectation. The crown that of the purchaser by showing either that he had direct notice, or something which amounts to a constructive notice, of the real title, or that there existed circumstances which ought to have put him on an enquiry that if prosecuted, would have led to a discovery of it Jitesh v. Ishul Chunder 10 C L R 469. Unless a person is found guilty of either an overt act or of an act of omission which is likely to induce the other side to believe that he is entitled to commit the particular act complained of there can be no question of estoppel. A plea of estoppel in such case can only be maintained if the conduct of the person against whom the estoppel is alleged is found to be fraudulent Ram Dat v. Chhotik, 4 O W N 1019. Where the vendor by his conduct induced a belief in the vendee that he had a good title to the property, he is estopped from going back on the same even where he was not fully aware of his legal rights Matu Doyal v. Laj Sahai 25 A L J 878. Where certain lands belonging to a Talukdar were wrongly described as rent free lands in the village accounts but on a reference by the Government an order was passed to the effect that they were not rent free but the order was not given effect to and the entries in the accounts continued as before. Held that the Government was not estopped from subsequently giving effect to their previous order and levy rent on the lands Sun Singh v. Secretary of State 28 Bom L R 1213 = A I R 1926 Bom 590. No actual verbal representation is necessary to give rise to estoppel. It is quite enough that the conduct of the party leads another to act in the belief that he asserts no claim to the property Azulullah v. Ghellam 17 S L R 63 = 80 Ind Cas 994.

S. 115

Where parties to a suit by mutual agreement make terms and inform the Court of them, which sanctions the arrangement and makes an order in conformity with it, either party who has had the benefit of the arrangement and order is not at liberty to resile from the agreement Shoo Golan v. Beni Prosad 5 C 27 = 4 C L R 29. Where what really induced a party to abandon a portion of his claim was not the acts of the other party, relied on as estoppel but an extraneous cause independent of such party there was no estoppel Beni Prosad v. Multesar, 21 A 316 = A W N 1899, 101. In order to avail himself of the doctrine of estoppel, the plaintiff should prove that the defendant, by representation which he knew to be unfounded intentionally misled the plaintiff into a position prejudicial to the interests which he would otherwise have possessed Pichurayyan v. Subbayan 13 M 128. In order to prevent the owner of land, who is charged with standing by and allowing another person who believes he had a good title thereto, to enter on the land and spend money in improving it, from recovering possession thereof, fraud and deceit on the part of the owner must be clearly proved Tanlois v. Ratray 3 C L R 1. In order to raise an equitable estoppel against the lessors it is incumbent upon the lessee to show that the conduct of the owners, whether consisting in abstinence from interfering, or in active intervention is sufficient to justify the legal inference that they had, by plain implication, contracted that the right of tenancy under which the lessees originally obtained possession of the land should be changed into a perpetual right of occupation Beni Ram v. Kundan Lal 21 A 496 (P C) = 3 C W N 502. A plea of estoppel by general conduct raised by the plaintiff will fail if it is proved that a proper inquiry would have acquainted the plaintiff with fact Phundo v. Bhysma A W N 1883 246. The plaintiff who upon misrepresentation by defendant, released a right to him believing his statement in preference to getting information any where which information he might have easily obtained, is relieved from fulfilling the terms of the release Mela Ram v. Denu Doyal 75 P R 1869.

The rule of estoppel ought not to be applied rigorously as against a pundah woman. The same inferences should not be drawn from or same construction should not be placed upon, her silence and delay in bringing a suit as might be reasonable and proper in another case Kant Fatma v. Abbas Ali, A W N 1887, 84. The Court ought to decline to redress a party asking for it who has countenanced the acts of which he complains Bhaya v. Yussammal Lelhrance Koer 16 W R 123. Where a representation is such that a reasonable person would act on the faith of it, the person who has made the representation cannot get rid of the estoppel by saying that person, to whom he made the representation would not have been deceived if he made proper enquiries

Nandalal v Rukhman, 13 C P L R 30

Parties who, by false representation, induce others to enter into contracts are estopped from afterwards falsifying their statements, and, if necessary may be compelled to make them good Radha Krishna v Shreefumsissa W R 1864, 11

A judgment by consent raises an estoppel, just in the same way as a judgment after the Court has exercised a judicial discretion in the matter Laxmishankar v Vishnuram, 1 Bom L R 534=24 B, 77 An attesting witness to a Will cannot sue to have it quashed on any ground, as he is estopped from doing so by being an attester of the Will Jumma v Imam, 138 P R 1889 Though the person, who elects to take a legacy under a Will, may be estopped from setting up a title contrary to its provisions still if such person be in possession, he cannot be ousted except by one who can prove a better title to the property Prabodh v Harish, 9 C W N 309 On a decree being passed on compromise the judgment debtors will be estopped from objecting to the execution of the same Kashi Das v Ishan Chander, 31 C 914 (P C)=9 C W N 49 The Civil Procedure Code allows of a decision by an umpire in certain events and hence, parties who have submitted to the decision of an umpire, without taking any objection, cannot afterwards call that decision in question in a Court Kupu v Venkataramayya, 4 M 311 A person can be precluded by his conduct from objecting to an irregularity in procedure which he himself invites Tammana v Putabhata, 2 Bom L R 90 Where interest has been paid by a banker to a depositor at a certain rate per cent, a renewed deposit will also carry interest at the same rate, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, and the banker will be estopped from questioning such rate Makundi v Balalishen, 3 A 328 The owner may be, in respect of a trade mark, as in respect of any other right estopped by his conduct from denying the title of another person Lacergue v Hooper, 8 M 149 A purchaser of immovable property in the name of B, and allowed B to occupy and retain possession of the property B mortgaged the property to C for a valuable consideration Held that A and those claiming through him were estopped from asserting as against C, his or their title to the property, and the mortgage was valid Kally Dass v Gobind Chander, Marsh 569 Ram Mohnee v Pran Koomaree, 3 W R 87, Smith v Mohlum, 18 W R 526, Haldars v Bindoo, Marsh 293 On a decree being passed on compromise, the judgment debtors will be estopped from objecting to the execution of the same Kashi Das v Ishan Chander, 31 C 914 (P C)=9 C W N 49

If a gentleman entrusts to his own men of business a blank paper duly stamped as a bond, and signed and sealed by himself in order that the instrument may be duly drawn up and money raised upon it for his benefit, and if the instrument is afterwards drawn up and money obtained upon it from persons, who have no reason to doubt the bonafides of the transaction, the bond must, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, be taken to have been drawn up in accordance with the obligor's wishes and instructions Walidumussa v Sugra Das, 5 C 39 Where persons claim under X and Y, they are bound by X and Y's admission of P's being entitled equally with themselves to ancestral property Chundumun Bohoo v Thakoor Rai Beharee, 5 W R 145 A party refusing a registered letter sent by post cannot afterwards plead ignorance of its contents Leoft Ali v Pearce Mohun, 16 W R 223 When a trustee mortgages trust property by asserting it to be his own, he will be estopped afterwards from setting up the trust and claiming to recover it, from a bonafide purchaser for value, without notice in execution of the decree obtained on the mortgage This, however, will not affect the right of the beneficiaries under the trust Gulzar v Fida 6 A 24=A. W N 1883, 182 If the heir of a deceased Hindu stands by and allows a stranger to enter into possession of the deceased's property, every person claiming under him will be bound by the decree in a suit of which he had notice instituted bonafide against the party in possession for the recovery of the debt due by the deceased to the plaintiff Uma Sundari v Nityanand, 3 C L R 157 When once a widow asserted a proprietary right in certain property she will not subsequently be permitted to enforce her claim for maintenance against such property in the hands of a purchaser Golabu v Ramthahal, 1 N W P 275

S 115

A person having right of pre-emption may dispute or affirm the validity of the sale of the land to a third person. If, by his conduct towards the vendee after the sale, he makes the latter believe that he had elected to affirm the sale, he is estopped from attacking the sale or enforcing his right of pre-emption over the property. Dana Ichua v Jagannath, 138 P R 1888. In a pre-emption suit on the foreclosure of a mortgage, the mortgagor did not appeal from the foreclosure decree but allowed execution to take place under it. Held that such a conduct was sufficient to indicate that the mortgagor had acquiesced in the sale being made absolute. Jouaher Lal v Kalandar, 155 P R 1882. A obtained a decree for pre-emption against B on condition that the price should be paid by him within a certain time. Before the money was paid, A mortgaged the land to B, the consequence of which was that he did not pay the price. In a suit for redemption by A, B pleaded that A had lost his right of pre-emption by his failing to act up to the condition of the decree. Held, that B having accepted the mortgage from A and made A believe by such conduct that he treated him as the proprietor of the land in question was estopped from pleading as he did. Gubang v Vasna, 131 P R 1890.

The defendant, in consideration of money advanced by S entered into a mortgage with plaintiff, who sued for possession after foreclosure. Held, it does not lie in a defendant a mouth to object to the suit brought by S in plaintiff's name. Sreenath v Cheradenath, 17 W R 192. Where a wife has mortgaged property as her own to the plaintiff, the husband becoming security on the ground that his wife had no authority to pledge it neither can the defendant, an execution creditor, attach the property, nor has the auction purchaser any title as against the plaintiff. Danu Pershad v Mann Singh, 8 W R 67. A person who mortgages property as unencumbered when as a matter of fact, it is subject to a charge cannot, when he subsequently becomes himself entitled to enforce such charge set up such charge against the mortgagee. Radhey Lal v Mahesh Prasad, 7 A 864 = A W N 1885.

If a creditor in execution of a money decree which he holds against his debtor, sells certain property as that of the latter, he will be estopped from afterwards setting up as against the purchaser a previous mortgage which had been created in his own favour of which he had given no notice to the purchaser at the time the property was sold and in ignorance of which the purchaser bid for the property and paid the full price. Agochand v Rakhma, 12 B 678. Where a decree is obtained upon his mortgage by a mortgagee, and the mortgaged property is sold under the decree for paying off the mortgagee, the interest of the latter is well as that of the mortgagor passes to the purchaser. The mortgagee is completely estopped from disputing that such is the effect of the sale, so far as his interest is concerned although the officer of the Court may only have described the sale as one of the right title and interest of the mortgagor. Shashni v Salvador, 5 B 5.

A mortgagee who has the mortgaged property sold in execution of a decree other than that upon his mortgage without disclosing his mortgage lien is ever estopped from setting up the mortgage against the title of a bona fide purchaser at the execution sale. Muhammad Hanud v Shub Sahai, 21 A 303 = A W N 1899 87. Where a mortgagee in execution of a money decree puts up property for sale without notice of his mortgage and thus allows an innocent purchaser to purchase for full value in ignorance of the mortgage he is estopped from afterwards enforcing the mortgage against that purchaser. Ounor Seth v Baynath, 7 C P L R 15. Where the plaintiff's were present at the time when possession was given to defendants in virtue of an unregistered mortgage deed and gave their consent to the mortgage, they could be equitably estopped from claiming possession of the same property under a registered instrument as against the defendants. Somnath Das v Sindu Sudany, 5 C P L R 97. Where a decree-holder brings to sale, in execution of his decree, property under his mortgage without notifying his encumbrance upon it, and misleads the bidder, and induces him to purchase the property as unencumbered, he cannot subsequently claim as against such bidder his mortgage right. Mc Connell v Mayer, 2 N W P 315. The rule laid down by Lord Denman in the case of Pickard v Sears (6 Ad & El 10), that where a man by his words or conduct wilfully induces another to believe in a certain state of facts, so as to alter his own previous position, the former is estopped as against the latter, from averring a different state of facts as existing at the same time, is embodied in s 115 of the Evidence Act. Annath Nath Deb v Bishtu Chander Roy, 4 C 783 affirmed on appeal, 9 C 265 P C = 9 I A 147

S 115.

Where a mortgagee relinquished the debt due under his bond and the mortgage security in consideration of his getting some other land instead, and the relinquishment was acted upon by a third person to his prejudice the mortgagee was estopped from asserting his mortgage right as against such third person or his representative in interest provided the relinquishment was not made conditional on the conveyance of the land bargained for, and provided also that such third person did all he could to give effect to the contract in pursuance of which the relinquishment took place. Velu Rangaswami v Balakrishna Ruddy, 12 M L J 366

When a prior encumbrancer with a full knowledge of his title stands by and through his agency allows the mortgagor to deal with the property as if it was unencumbered, held that by such conduct he loses that priority to which the prior date of his encumbrance would, had he acted otherwise, have entitled him. Rai Seeta Ram v Kishun Dass 3 Agr 402. A man who has represented to an intending purchaser that he has not a security in property to be sold, and induced him under that belief to buy, cannot, as against that purchaser, subsequently attempt to put his security in force. Mumoo Lall v Lalla Choonce Lall 21 W R 21

The defendant had received a conveyance of half of a certain piece of land from S J (S J having right to convey only two fifths of the said land, the remaining two fifths and one fifth belonging respectively to a brother and sister of S J). When S J gave the conveyance, it was endorsed by his sister. This endorsement amounted to an estoppel as against her, or any one claiming through her, against saying that S J had not full right to convey. Blaquiere v Ramdhione Dass Bourke O C 319. The fact that a certain person empowered to dispute a sale does certain specified acts, thereby silently showing his acquiescence in such sale, will constitute an estoppel and prevent him from setting aside the same and he cannot contend that as the acts of acquiescence took place after the sale he had not by such acts misled the vendee or induced him to enter into the sale transaction. Nihola v Bihani Ram 81 P R 1898. Where without objection, a defendant allowed a purchaser of the plaintiff's interest in the suit to substitute his name on the record (the original plaintiff having withdrawn from the suit) he was estopped from contending that the suit had abated. Bu Chandra Roy v Bansu Dhar Roy, 3 B L R A C 215. An auction purchaser not questioning the acts of his predecessor within 12 years will be estopped from objecting to them, on the ground of implied acquiescence. Siddyal v Gouree Roy 18 W R 231. In a proceeding for setting aside a sale the judgment debtor, with the consent of the decree holder filed a compromise, and asked for time for paying the decretal amount, binding himself not to contest the validity of the sale if he failed to pay the amount on the day fixed. On his prayer being granted he without paying the full decretal amount on the day fixed took further time. Held that it would be contrary to reason and equity that he should turn round and repudiate the agreement and that the agreement estopped him from contesting the legality of the sale. Uttam Chandra v Khetia Nath, 29 C 577.

A purchaser of land, who lies by for five years allowing another person to occupy the land and afterwards to sell it, is estopped by his own conduct from afterwards claiming the land from a bona fide purchaser without notice. Mohesh Chandra v Issur Chunder 1 Ind Jur N S 266. A plaintiff suing to realise his security under a mortgage, is estopped from recovering on the mortgage when he has allowed the auction purchaser to buy without notice of the mortgage in a suit in which he himself brought the property to sale. Jagannath v Gangi Reddi 15 M 303. When a person in execution of a money-decree brings to sale property subject to a hypothecation to his partner, which is not disclosed to the intending purchaser, and the sale has taken place, obtains an assignment of the hypothecation deed and sues on it he is

S 115. estopped from denying that the sale took place free of encumbrances Kastura v Venkateshachalapathi 15 M 112 Where a decree-holder, by mistake, put up to sale the same piece of land under different numbers on two different occasions, he is estopped from setting up his purchase so as to defeat the rights of the purchaser at the second sale Pinnappa v Muralappa 7 M 107 A mortgagee-purchaser at an execution sale of his mortgage or interest in the mortgaged property would where such mortgagor is estopped from asserting his title as against certain persons be equally estopped Pureshnaath v Inathnath 9 C 265=9 I A 117 P C see also Itaram v Rini Chauda, 1 B 111 A person who steps in during an auction sale assumes the character of a principal agent, and depositing another acting as agent purchases the property, cannot afterwards in equity turn round and claim to have purchased not for the principal but for himself and obtain a profit out of his purchase Lohsee Narain v Kally Puddu, 23 W R 358 A tenant who sold by a kobala a non transferable holding is estopped from setting up the invalidity of the sale by him Bhogirath v Hapi-mudra 1 C W N 673 The owner of a property cannot afterwards dispute the sale of his property to a bonafide purchaser, if it took place in his presence, and without any objection on his part Jouala v Jendand, 87 P R 1277 An alienation by a party subject to the customary law cannot, after a long silence be questioned by parties interested in it, as such silence amounts to estoppel by conduct. And where the collaterals are not merely guilty of laches in questioning the alienation but are also found purchasing the land from the transferor to the exclusion of the other collaterals or cultivating the lands under the purchasers, or exchanging it with them they must be taken to have acquiesced in the alienation and estopped from suing to contest it. Imir v Zebo, 12 P R 1902

The fact that a judgment debtor has voluntarily satisfied a decree does not estop him from appealing against the same Mula Shah v Hirpa Ram 142 P R 1888 A decree in a suit which ought to have been instituted against a person but which has been wrongly instituted against his mother, though that mistake was not due to the son's misrepresentation, and in which the son has conducted the defence on behalf of his mother in the full knowledge that he and his mother should have been sued against, does not operate as an estoppel against him from contesting its validity in a subsequent suit Mohunt Das v Nil Komial, 4 C W N 283

The maxim  caveat emptor applies to execution sales. In execution proceedings a judgment-debtor is not bound to come forward. In the absence of any misleading on his part so as to estop him from asserting his title mere silence on the part of the judgment debtor, or his omission to come forward cannot operate as an estoppel Gurupada v Japa 14 B 558 A decree altered by agreement of parties with respect to the mode of payment and the interest payable cannot be executed as a decree. And the acquiescence of the judgment debtor in such execution cannot estop him from objecting to further execution of it Debi Rai v Golil Pershad 3 A 585 (I B) An application by the judgment-debtor for the postponement of an execution sale would not amount to an estoppel under section 115 of the Evidence Act so as to preclude him from maintaining that the execution of the decree is barred by lapse of time Mina Koomari v Jagga Selani 10 C 196=13 C L R 385=10 I A 119 P C A judgment creditor by putting up the rights and interest of his judgment debtor in a talook for sale in execution is not estopped from afterwards claiming a portion of that talook under a different title e.g. under a mortgage Chunder Kant v P Wise, 17 W R 342 A purchaser at an execution sale of a holding who proves that in the sale-certificate granted to him, the annual rent is described as Rs 8 does not thereby establish the plea of estoppel that the landlord is not entitled to realise rent at a higher rate. To establish the estoppel it is necessary to prove a statement anterior to his purchase, which may influence his conduct Aman Ali v Mir Hossain 10 C L J 605=4 Ind Cas 739 The auction purchasers at a sale in the execution of a decree were not estopped from asserting as against a person claiming to be a mortgagee prior to the sale of the property purchased, that in fact the property was their own independently of the auction sale Pandit Hanuman v Mufti Assadullah, 7 N W P 145 There could be no question of estoppel by conduct between a judgment-debtor and the purchaser at auction, who derives his title from proceedings which are entirely in rem as regards the former Vasanti v Lallu, 9 B 285. An heir does not lose his rights as heir though he cannot prove a Will, under which he claimed a larger share in a former litigation, in which no question of inheritance was raised Moulvie Ahmedoolah v Gour Husee 15 W R 201. When in a suit for redemption the assignee of a usufructuary mortgage put forward or consented to put forward the original mortgagor as the person entitled to redeem, he is not thereby estopped from afterwards giving for redemption in his own account, for the defendant could not be said to have been in any way induced to alter his position or to do any act in consequence of any conduct on the part of the plaintiff Mahammad v Mannu 11 A 386 = A W N 1889 136. Where a plaintiff, who was the nearest heir, allowed other heirs to join him in a redemption suit, and such heirs spent money and actively assisted in prosecuting the litigation the plaintiff could not, after recovering the property, assert his superior title as the nearest heir, and that he was estopped by his conduct from asserting such superior title, the principle being that where a person has conducted himself so as to mislead another, he cannot gainsay the reasonable inference to be drawn from his conduct. Bhaquant v Rayu 9 Ind Cas 415. Where a person brought on the record at the instance of the decree holder as the representative of a deceased judgment debtor was on his own application struck off as not being such representative, and the decree holder did not contest the order for striking him off held that the decree holder on an appeal by such person as to costs which had been disallowed him was estopped from pleading that the appellant was not a representative of the deceased judgment debtor, and therefore not entitled to appeal. The Bank of Upper India v Bishan Dayal, A W N 1892 10. A bequest in a Will which ran thus—"my elder brother, V's self acquisition to the extent of Rs 10,000 is kept with me. So, that money should be given to him"—was treated as a legacy in satisfaction of the indebtedness of the testator to his brother and the legatee was not estopped from claiming the legacy under the Will by that fact that, in a suit brought by a brother of his claiming his share in the testator's estate as family property he had supported his brother and had also claimed a share and it was then decided that the property was the sole property of the deceased and that neither he nor his brother had a right to a share therein Rayamannar v Venkata Krishnayya 25 M 361 = 12 M L J 183. Where a purchaser under a registered instrument purchased the property with full knowledge of the existence of an optionally registrable but unregistered encumbrance thereon the doctrine of equitable estoppel applied and the purchaser could not claim as against the said encumbrancer Miran v Ramasa 6 C P L R 112. In a suit for pre-emption under s 9 of the Oudh Laws Act, the defendant, in order to establish a plea of estoppel has to prove that he property was offered to the plaintiff at a certain price and that he expressly consented to the purchase of the property by the defendant vendee and the Court should not be satisfied with anything short of this. Some Judges have thought that such a plea should not be allowed at all in a case like this Bank of Upper India v Munshi Alopi Prasad, 10 O C 257. Where tenants have paid, for a period extending over fourteen years, an enhanced rate of rent an implied contract to pay at the same rate in future years may be inferred though they now and then expressed discontent without however resorting to the Revenue Courts for redress. Their conduct, in accepting pattas containing these terms even after protest, may operate as estoppel in subsequent years Bhupathi v Ramayya Appa Rao, 17 M 54. A grantee of lands as long as he holds a religious office in a temple is estopped from setting up a title inconsistent with that of the grantor, and an alienee from such grantee is similarly estopped and the alienation itself is invalid as against the trustee of the temple Thayelbagam v Venkatarama Krishnayyan, (1916) M W N 119 = 33 Ind Cas 808. When a grantor, by a recital is shown to have stated that he is seized of specific estate upon the assumption that such an estate was to pass, an estate by estoppel is created between the parties and those claiming under them, in respect of any afterwards acquired interest of the grantor, the newly acquired title being said to "feed

- S 115. the estoppel is applicable to Hindu conveyances in cases before the Evidence Act Krishna Chandra v Rasal Lal, 23 C L J 501=21 C W N 218=33 Ind Cas 568 It is not competent to a mortgagee to go behind a mortgage to dispute the right of the mortgagor to enforce redemption Jangi Ram v Sheoraj Singh, 30 Ind Cas 234 In a suit by a creditor to recover money the debtor pleaded that the plaintiff was bound by the terms of a contract arrived at between the debtor and a third person for the purpose of paying off the plaintiff's debt There was no proof that the defendant was induced by the plaintiff to break his contract with the third person In the circumstances the defendant could not invoke the aid of the doctrine of equitable estoppel against the plaintiff and contend that he was bound by the contract entered into between them Babu Narendra Bahadur v Oudh Commercial Bank, Ltd, 30 Ind Cas 323 A party who has entered into a compromise is not estopped from urging that if the sale in suit is set aside at all at the instance of another it must be set aside in its entirety Ichhamoni Das v Prosanna Kumar 31 Ind Cas 858 Acceptance of rent by a landlord from the mortgagee on behalf of the mortgagor does not estop the landlord from setting up the invalidity of the mortgage Must Raj Lal Kuor v Rudra Pratap, 34 Ind Cas 764 On the sale of a non transferable occupancy holding held by the proprietors of a share in a mauza in execution of a money decree against them without any objection on their parts as to its saleability in these execution proceedings, a purchaser of the proprietary share of these properties would be estopped from objecting to the sale on the ground that the holding was not saleable by the custom of the locality Ramu Pal v Pralash Chandra 32 Ind Cas 757 An estoppel arises when a man is not allowed to deny the truth of some matter which he has made another to believe to be true So where it is alleged between the parties that the claim petition of the defendant should be allowed but without costs and that the plaintiff should apparently in consideration of the 1st defendant giving up his costs refrain from instituting a suit section 115 does not apply and there is no estoppel Venkatarama v Narayana (1915) M W N 237=28 Ind Cas 536 Where land stood in Revenue Registers and the tax receipts appeared to be, in the joint names of husband and wife the very fact that the wife was living on the property ought to have put the mortgagee on enquiring to ascertain what her real interest was So she was not estopped from showing that the land was her sole and separate property P L R M Meyappa v Ma Meyek 8 Bur L T 124 Under Hindu Law a son has from birth an indefeasible right as a co parcener in the family property and mere unfriendliness on the part of his father cannot destroy that right, unless and until he is regularly separated off and given his share of the family estate He is therefore competent to contest the alienation of ancestral property if opposed to the principles of Hindu Law But he loses his competency under s 115 of Act I of 1872 where he has condoned all that his father has done and he himself gains considerable benefit out of his father's objectionable transactions Maharaja of Bobbili v Venkataramanayulu 16 M L T 181=27 M L J 409 A plaintiff who by taking objection to the admissibility of a certain agreement upon which the defendants relied, practically compelled them to withdraw their previous suit is estopped from asking the Court to grant him a declaratory decree upon the basis of that very agreement Alam Shah v Nurzanah Shah, 63 P W R 1913=114 P L R 1913=18 Ind Cas 804 An act may involve and amount to a distinct declaration which may create an estoppel So, if a man take an active part in carrying out a mortgage on behalf of another, as by signing the deed his acts may amount to a declaration of the validity of the mortgage as against any claim but his own Ussamat Barro v Mr Muhammad 279 P L R 1913=20 Ind Cas 291 A suit was dismissed on the ground of default. The plaintiff appealed. The appellate Court ordered restoration on the condition of the appellant paying Rs 10 to the respondent within a week. The money was not paid within a week and the appellate Court dismissed the appeal. Subsequently the appellate Court set aside its previous order of dismissal on an explanation being given of delay. The pleader of the defendant then accepted the payment of Rs 10 and the case was remanded to the first Court. The defendant having accepted the compensation money was equitably estopped from appealing from the order of remand Hazanilal v Gangacharan, 18 Ind Cas 525 Where a person obtains a release from a liability upon the understanding of foregoing a definite claim against a third party, that person is estopped from asserting or enforcing the claim to the detriment of the third party Hahulan v Nasir Khan, A I R 1930 All 434

S. 115.

Mistake A mere mistake in a deed common to all parties, or on account of which no one has acted to his detriment or altered his position, will not create an estoppel Schobfield v Lochwood, 33 L J Ch 106 Boole v Haymes, L R 6 Lq 25 But it must be a genuine mistake, and not disputed by either party Halsbury Vol XIII p 370, see also Meghraj v Tyebali, A I R 1925 Bom 61, Syed Ali v Manujan, 7 L R 201 (Rev), Vertannes v Robinson, 102 Ind Cas 639=A I R 1927 P C 151

Estoppel against a minor The authorities on the question whether this section applies to minors are divergent Whilst it has been held by some of the Judges of the Calcutta High Court in Brahmo Dutt v Dharmadas Ghose 26 C 381, that the section applies only to persons of full age, the contrary view was held by the Bombay High Court in Ganesh Lal v Bapu 21 B 198 In Dharma Das Ghose v Brahmo Dutt, 2 C W N 330=27 C 616 Jenkins J said 'on the 20th of July 1895, the plaintiff executed in favour of the defendant a mortgage over premises in Calcutta known as No 15, Bolorum Ghosh's Street, and No 153, Cornwallis Street, to secure Rs 20,000 and the present suit is brought to have the deed cancelled on the ground that at the time of its execution the plaintiff was an infant This contention is based on section 115 of the Evidence Act as interpreted by Ganesh Lal v Bapu, 21 B 201, in which it is no doubt, said that having regard to that section proof of fraud on the part of the infant is not essential The learned Judge in that case relies on the fact that in Sarat Chunder v Gopal Chunder, 20 C 296 and in Mills v Fox, 37 Ch D, 153, no suggestion is made of the exception of an infant from the doctrine of estoppel Now in the first of these cases the individuals sought to be affected were not infants The case of Mills v Fox, 4 Deg & J 458, on the other hand turned on special circumstances which do not allow of its being an authority for the broad principle laid down by the Bombay Court On appeal (Brahmo Dutt v Dharma Dass 26 C 381=3 C W N 468) Maclean C J said Our attention has been directed to a case (Ganesh Lal v Bapu, 21 B 198), decided by the High Court at Bombay, which holds that section 115 of the Evidence Act is applicable to the case of a minor Speaking with every respect, I am unable to assent to that view and I may point out that the cases upon which the learned Judges in that Court rely as substantiating their proposition when carefully examined appear to one not to warrant the conclusion arrived at This has been pointed out by Mr Justice Jenkins, and concurring as I do in his criticism I need not refer to what he has said The case of Mills v Fox 37 Ch D 153 is quite distinguishable In the same case Ameer Ali J said "Then it was argued that the plaintiff was estopped under s 115 of the Evidence Act by his misrepresentation in respect of his age To hold that an infant may estop himself in regard to contracts by conduct or misrepresentation would be practically to sweep away all the limitations the law has imposed on the capacity to contract and a person labouring under a disability would be enabled to endorse by his own act his legal capacity to contract In the Liverpool Adelphi Loan Association v Farnhurst and Wife, 9 Exch 422 it was held that a person under a disability to contract was not liable upon the contract nor for a wrong arising out of or directly connected with the contract and which is the means of affecting it and parcel of the same transaction The same principle was followed in Burlett v Wells, 1 B & S 836 It follows therefore that when the present law declares that an infant shall not be liable upon a contract, or in respect of a fraud in connection with a contract he cannot be made liable upon the same contract by means of an estoppel under s 115 I, therefore, agree that there is no estoppel whatsoever in this case founded upon any representation or alleged representation on the part of the plaintiff On appeal to the Privy Council, their Lordships said "But their Lordships do not think it necessary

S. 115 to deal with that question now. They consider it clear that s. 115 does not apply to a case like the present where the statement relied on is made to a person who knows the real facts and is not misled by the untrue statement. There can be no estoppel where the truth of the matter is known to both parties. Mohori Bibee v Dharma Das, 30 C W N 539 (P C) = 7 C W N 441. In Jagor Nath v Lalla Prasad, 31 A 21 = 5 A L J 674, Banerjee J said: 'I do not, however, deem it necessary to express any opinion on the point, although it seems to me to be difficult to hold that in no case would the doctrine of estoppel be applicable to infants (see Bigelow on Estoppel, p. 399, et seq). In my opinion, the law of estoppel can only be applied subject to the other provisions of law and therefore when, as held by the Privy Council, a contract by a minor is void under the provisions of the Contract Act, the law of estoppel cannot be invoked in aid to validate that which is void under the law. See also Stileman v Dawson 16 L J Ch 205. The following rule is laid down by Dulal J in Radha Krishna v Bhore Ltd 50 A 862 = 26 A L J 837 = A I R 1929 All 626 citing from Amir Ali and Wooroffe's Evidence Act: 'A person under disability cannot do by an act in pais what he cannot do by deed. He cannot by his own act enlarge his legal capacity to contract or to convey. He cannot be made liable upon a contract by means of an estoppel under this section if it be elsewhere declared that he shall not be liable upon a contract. To say that by acts in pais that could be done in effect which could not be done by deed would be practically to dispense with all the limitations the law has imposed on the capacity to contract. So if a person sues an infant upon a contract such contract having been entered into on the faith of a representation by the infant that he was of full age, the infant will not be estopped from pleading his minority in answer to a claim to fix him with personal liability for a money decree notwithstanding his fraudulent representation. But though this section may not apply the Court may in other cases acting on well recognized principles of equity relieve against an infant's fraud. In the latest case of the Bombay High Court Madgarkar v J said: 'The question in this appeal is whether the plaintiffs respondents can set up an estoppel against the minor Bhumappa on the ground that he had represented himself to them as a major when he with the widow Madura passed the sale deed in their favour. It is argued on behalf of the appellant that the view of this Court differing from the other High Courts that an estoppel can be pleaded by a minor must now be held to be overruled on the strength of the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the very recent case of Sadiq Ali v Jai Kishore, A I R 1928 P C 152 = 32 C W N 874 = 47 C L J 628. For the plaintiffs respondents it is argued that the question was expressly reserved by their Lordships of the Privy Council as early as Mohori Bibee v Dharmadas Ghose, 30 C 539 (P C) = 7 C W N 441 and the consistent decisions of this Court from Ganesh Lal v Babu, 21 B 198 Dadasaheb Dasaratnao v Bai Naham, 41 B 480 = 41 Ind Cas 180 = 19 Bom L R 561, Jasraj Bastmal v Sadashiv Mahadev, A I R 1923 B = 46 B 137 cannot be held to be overruled by the observations in the recent Privy Council case, Sadiq Ali Khan v Jai Kishore, supra, particularly as similar observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council are to be found in Mahomed Syedot v Yeoh Doi, A I R 1916 P C = 43 L A 256 (P C) = 19 Bom L R 163. This last however, was a case from the Straits Settlements and their Lordships observed: 'A case of fraud by the appellant on the subject of his age was set up but it cannot be doubted that the principle recently given effect to in the case of R Leslie Limited v Shell, would apply and such a case would fail. In that case it was held by Lord Sumner and other Judges that where a minor by fraudulently representing that he was of full age, induced the plaintiffs to lend him money such an action by the plaintiffs to recover the amount of the advance on the ground that he had obtained it by fraudulent misrepresentation must fail, even though fraud was proved against the minor. On the present question, the other High Courts have differed from this Court. Dhurma Das v Brahma Dutt, 2 C 616 = 2 C W N 33 on appeal 26 C 381, Khan Gul v Lakha Singh, A I R 1923 Ind 609 Paucullarama v Ithumoolam, 38 M 1071 = 23 Ind. Cas 749, Jagannath v Lalla Prasad, 31 A 21 = 5 A L J 674 = (1903)

A W N, 267, Ganganand v Rameshwar, A I R 1927 Pat 271=6 Pat 388. As for the observations of the Privy Council in the recent case of Sadik Ali v Jas Kishan, supra, cited for the appellant, the arguments are not reported but the question was one of minority on which the two lower Courts differed. Their lordships of the Privy Council agreeing with the trial Court held that the mortgagors were proved to be minors and the mortgage deed executed by them was a nullity. They proceeded to observe as follows: 'The fact of minority being established at the date of the execution by the mortgagors of the deed founded on is sufficient for the decision of the case such a deed executed by minors being admittedly a nullity according to Indian law and incapable of founding a plea of estoppel.' I am unable to interpret this decision otherwise than as overruling the view of this Court and as agreeing with the view of the other High Courts. By no ingenuity of argument can the view of this Court be reconciled with the judgment that a deed executed by minors is incapable of founding a plea of estoppel. Accordingly, in this view of the law even if in s 115, Evidence Act the word person includes minors, the general intention of the adjective law of the legislature is to the rule of evidence in this section must give way to the particular intention of the substantive law in s 11 of the Contract Act per Best C J in Churchill v Chase 5 Bing 177. Balangouda v Galigippa 31 Bom L R 340=118 Ind Cas 698=A I R 1929 Bom 201, see also Maung Pin v Ma Lun A I R '927 Rang 103=5 Bur L J 111. If a minor by his conduct allow his mother to act as the guardian of her sons and manager of the family property and to mortgage it, it is immaterial for the purposes of estoppel that his conduct was due to a mistaken impression as to his age. Aathubhai v Mulechand 3 Bom L R 325. A minor, who represents himself to be a major and competent to manage his own affairs and collects rent, would be estopped by his conduct from recovering again the same rent by filing a suit through his guardian. Bhim Ratun Singh v Shree Nanhai, 29 C 126=6 C W N 132. Where there is no evidence of fraudulent misrepresentation on the part of the minor, the principle of estoppel cannot be invoked. Kumar Gangwanand Singh v Maharaja Sir Rameswar Singh 5 Pat 388=8 Pat L T 730=102 Ind Cas 419=A I R 1927 Pat 271. See also Jasraj v, Sadash, 1923 B 169. The mere fact that the purchaser from the guardian of a minor of properties belonging to the minor took a letter from the minor stating that there was necessity for the alienation does not estop the minor from impeaching the sale so long as it is not shown that the minor caused or permitted the vendee to believe that necessity existed. Sunder v Mulechand, 115 Ind Cas 175=A I R 1929 Nag 231. Where a minor executes a sale-deed dishonestly representing that he was a major and the vendee believes that representation and acts upon it, the minor is not estopped from setting up his minority and the sale is void as a plea. Kumar v, Sadash, 5 Pat L W 521=94 Ind Cas 853=A I R 1926 M 607. The rule of evidence cannot be a rule of evidence, and a rule of evidence cannot be so collected as to allow a person to be allowed to profit by his own fraud is subject to the express provisions of s 11 of the Contract Act. The minor is not to be forced to restore the amount of a loan taken by him. Pundir v Bhagwantrao, 96 Ind Cas 803=A I R 1927 Pat 271. Where a person then alleged to be a minor was represented by a guardian with whom he had a common interest and took a loan from him, the minor is not estopped from pleading in a subsequent suit against him in the prior suit was invalid. Ind Cas 606=24 A L J 847=A I R 1927 Pat 271. The conduct of minors cannot be pleaded as a defence to the act of their guardians during the minority. Ind Cas 606=24 A L J 847=A I R 1927 Pat 271. The act of their guardians during the minority had acted for their benefit and to the benefit of the minor, the benefit which the transaction would have conferred on the minor, the minor can no longer be restored to the position of a minor and the interest of one of them. Ind Cas 606=24 A L J 847=A I R 1927 Pat 271.

- S 115. Cas 112, 13 Bom Mchls v Kaval Jay 5 O L J 511-13 Ind Cas 39 Though in a case of contract or transfer of property a minor cannot be held to be estopped by his conduct within the meaning of section 115 of the Evidence Act, yet when he enters into possession of property on a title obtained on his behalf by his guardian he can not be allowed to set up his title to the property as at bar to a suit for judgment on the expiry of the lease. Pannasami v Subramania, 13 Ind Cas 112 A minor mortgagor who enters into the transaction and misrepresents his age is under no equitable obligation to refund the money when the transaction turns out to be void. Varadachari v Lall Khayya 26 M L J 215-10 L W 221-3 Ind Cas 11 Where a minor represents to another that he is a major, and that other lends money on a promissory note signed by the minor the minor may be in a suit on the promissory note stopped from pleading his minority. Jerry v Saffin 23 Bom L R 975, 20 Cal Harp Mchls v Abdul Halim 20 Ind Cas 267 Teetondal v Gharamal, 11 C L R 101-62 Ind Cas 237 but see Jimboythachi v Jayadharasami 57 Ind Cas 678 But where there have been no misrepresentations by a minor as to his age or where misrepresentation has not misled the opposite party there can be no estoppel and infancy can be successfully pleaded. Masonia v Sata, 1 Lah 359-59 Ind Cas 393 Defendant No 1 who did not look a minor, represented to the plaintiff and intentionally caused her to believe that he was a major and sold to her his house. When the plaintiff sued to recover possession of the house he pleaded minority. Held that the defendant No 2 being a person within the contemplation of this section and having by direct declaration intentionally caused the plaintiff to believe that he was a major was precluded absolutely from denying the truth of that assertion. Dattashah v Bai Aham 19 Bom L R 761-11 B 150-11 Ind Cas 150 But the law of estoppel must be read subject to other laws such as the Contract Act and a minor cannot be made liable upon a contract by means of estoppel under s 115 of the Evidence Act. Holani Bhai v Hem Chander, 20 C W N 118-32 Ind Cas 388 As a general rule except in cases of fraud the doctrine of estoppel is not applicable to infants and the Courts never assume to hold that his acts during his infancy have created an estoppel against him to disaffirm his contracts, much less will the Court hold the infant estopped by the acts or admissions of other persons. Jam Chandra v Joyam Majhi 16 C L J 180-17 C W N 10

Person. "The term person in this section is amply satisfied by holding it to apply to one who is of full age and competent to enter into a contract and I cannot bring myself to think that it could have been the intention of the Legislature by such a general expression to include such a grave change in the law of estoppel in relation to minors. Bhomo Datt v Dhorma Das, 26 C 381-3 C W N 468 but see Kleau Gul v Lalha Singh 10 Lah L J 413-111 Ind Cas 175-A I R 1928 Lah 609 (F B) where it has been held that the person in this section is a comprehensive term and includes a minor. Balangoula v Gadigeppa 31 Bom L R 310-118 Ind Cas 698-A I R 1929 Bom 201 but see Golul Das v Gulabrao 89 Ind Cas 143 The word 'person' in this section should not be narrowed down so as to exclude a minor. Wasimda ham v Sita Ram 1 Lah 389-59 Ind Cas 393

Admission whether operates as estoppel. Admissions do not operate by way of estoppel but it is for the party making them to explain those admissions. Secretary of State of India v Jidyarati A I R 1929 Lah 743 An admission made by the defendant when both the plaintiff and the defendant were under a misapprehension of the real facts does not stop the defendant from proving the contrary. Nauab Syed Ali Hussain v Munigan 7 L R 201 (Rev) An admission made by a theladar in a previous case that he was an exproprietary tenant made on a misunderstanding of the law cannot create estoppel against him. Sonju Ram v Bhairasa Ram L R 5 A 43 (2)

Attestor of a document—if and when estopped. The mere attestation of a party does not estop him from asserting that he had the knowledge of the contents of a document or that he was not bound by the recitals in the document But, if the person attesting asserts the facts that are stated in the document he is estopped Firm of Bhauba Ram v Ram Phaya Mall, 116 Ind Cas 716 Feroze Din v Nawab Khan 9 Lih 221=112 Ind Cas 89=A I R 1928 Lih 432, Bhaquan Singh v Ujagar Singh, 47 C L J 189=107 Ind Cas 20=30 Bom L R 267=32 C W N 538=26 A L J 553=A I R 1928 P C 20=51 M L J 251 (P C) So mere attestation of a document cannot amount to an estoppel Ram Sarup v Krishen Sahai, A W N 1883 142, Jeeva v Yocoob 6 Rang, 512, Ibid 1222 v Ibdulla 26 P L R 215=7 Lih L J 179=87 Ind Cas 652=A I R 1925 Lih 413 Izzatullah v Ghalam 80 Ind Cas 994=17 S L R 63, Udai Ram v Gayendra 70 Ind Cas 815 Attestation of a deed by itself estops a man from denying nothing whatever except that he has witnessed the execution of the deed It conveys neither directly nor by implication, any knowledge of the contents of the documents To operate as estoppel, the signature must be shown by independent evidence to have been meant to involve consent of the transaction Pandurang Meskendeya, 42 M L J 436=26 C W N 201=20 A L J 305=35 C L J 409 P C, see also Baldeo Sahai v Sunder Kuar, 7 A L J 664=7 Ind Cas 264

Party estopped from pleading fraud It is not open to a party to plead his own fraud against another not a party to the fraud Ram Lal v Har Lal, 27 A L J 423=115 Ind Cas 113=A I R 1929 All 237 Estoppel is an equitable relief and a party who has cheated another of his rightful claims cannot be allowed to raise an estoppel to deprive him further of his rights Kolumann v Peddi, 1923 M W N 679 To allow a party to conceal his cultivation by falsifying the records and then afterwards to plead that his records are incorrect would be infringing the maxim that no man shall be allowed to profit by his own fraud Shadeo Prasad v Ram Sahai L R 3 A 257 (Rev) The payee of a forged hundi who knowing that it is forged, fraudulently endorses it over to another person, cannot, in a suit by such person for the recovery of the consideration paid by him for the hundi set up the forgery of it as a bar to the suit Bishnu Churn v Rajendra 5 A 302=A W N 1883 50 A person sued for possession of half the properties on the ground that it was joint property of himself and the defendant The defendant pleaded that the plaintiff's share was sold to him by the plaintiff The plaintiff was held under these circumstances to be estopped from raising the plea that the sale was colourable and made to defraud his creditors and according to the rule of pari delictum he cannot plead his own fraud Dogor Mal v Jamnat, 38 P R 1892, see also Hurry Sunkar v Kali Coomari W R 1864, 265 Nawab Sidhu v Ojoodhyaram, 5 W R 83 (P C)=10 M I A 540 The Court of equity will not have recourse to the doctrine of estoppel or acquiescence for the benefit of a party who does not come into Court with clean hands Jahanaddi v Debiath, 20 C W N 657=33 Ind Cas 762

Estoppel against law It being the duty of a Court to give effect to a statute in spite of conduct of the parties there can be no estoppel against a statute Venkataswar v Rimanatha 119 Ind Cas 472=A I R 1929 Mad 622 Sheikh Ahmed v Babu Deep 53 B 676=31 Bom L R 778 Bhaquan Singh v Tasdaq Hussam 27 A L J 889=115 Ind Cas 612=A I R, 1929 All 549 Nawab of Murshidabad v Bilash Roy, 56 C 252=A I R 1929 Cal 433 Badam v Ibid 13 R D 859, Rajnarain v Universal Life Assurance Co, 7 C 594=10 C L R 561 There cannot be an estoppel on a point of law giving rise to the jurisdiction of the Court Ram Singh v Imperial Bank of India Ltd, A I R 1928 Lih 802 When a particular act is declared to be void and unlawful by statute, a party cannot by representation any more than by other means, raise against him an estoppel so as to create a state of things which he is under a legal disability from creating Khan Gul v Lakha Singh 10 Lih L J 413=111 Ind Cas 175=A I R, 1928 Lih 69 (F B) The doctrine of estoppel has no application to a proposition of law but refers only to a belief in a matter of fact Nihal Singh v Hira Singh, 98 P R 1880 A mistaken impression of law regarding the validity of an adoption is not a ground on which an estoppel can be based Though the fact that a person long held the property of another, as his adopted son under an invalid adoption, may enable him to acquire title to the property by prescription, it will not alter his status in his natural family, nor would it give him the status of an adopted son. Aiyanaachariar v Lalshmi Ammal 21 M L J 500=10 Ind Cas 194, see also Gulingaswamy v Ramalal shammamma, 18 M 53=4 M L J 27, confirmed on appeal 22 M 398 P C. A person is not concluded by his statements as regards the method of valuation of a suit, for it is an admission on a question of law and not of fact. Gurish Chandra v Secretary of State, 10 Ind Cas 80. An estoppel cannot be invoked to defeat an express provision of law. Chandoo v Mushidhar, 13 O L J 138=92 Ind Cas 732=A I R 1926 Oudh 311. Where a transaction is expressly forbidden by the statute the rule that the grantor cannot derogate from his grant does not operate, for on a point of law there can be no estoppel and there is no rule of law standing in the way of a party asking the Court to hold that a particular transaction which is a matter of fact is void should be declared to be of no effect. Kesorbai v Jamadar, 20 N L R 162=A I R 1925 Nag 125. No Court can enforce as valid, that which competent enactments have declared shall not be valid, nor is obedience to such an enactment a thing from which a Court can be dispensed by the consent of the parties, or by a failure to plead to argue the point at the outset. Savajmul v Triton 52 C 408=23 A L J 105=29 C W N 893 P C. There cannot be any estoppel against a statute nor can the parties contract themselves out of any statute. Jnanendra Nath v Nalini, 87 Ind Cas 565=A I R 1925 Cal 1262. The plea of estoppel being a rule of equity cannot have the effect of validating a void contract. Duarka Prasad v Nari Ahmed, 78 Ind Cas 850=11 O L J 219. The general law of estoppel cannot be allowed to override specific provision of law such as that contained in Order 21, rule 2(3) Civil Procedure Code. Motoomal v Teoomal 79 Ind Cas 89=1925 Sind 140, see also Kesharbai v Janadoo, 20 N L R 162=82 Ind Cas 126. A representation as to a question of law cannot give rise to an estoppel. Rajambai v Shanmuga, 70 Ind Cas 653=1923 Mad 11. There cannot be any estoppel against a statute and a statutory defence not set up in a prior suit can be set up in a subsequent suit. Nafar Chandra v Bhushi Molla, 65 Ind Cas 581. A representation as to a question of law cannot give rise to an estoppel. Rajambai v Shanmuga, (1922) M W N 481. So there is no estoppel against the prohibition of a statute. Sanyib v Santosh, 26 C W N 329=1922 Cal 436=49 C 507. Alimuddin v Chintaharan 23 C W N 437=51 Ind Cas 403. Bangshi v Kamala, 26 C L J 90. An admission on a point of law is not an admission of a 'thing' so as to make the admission matter of estoppel within the meaning of s. 115 of the Evidence Act. Jogant v Silan 21 A 255=A W N 1885, 66, Tel Chand v Gopal Devi 13 Ind Cas 482=46 P R 1912. No estoppel can be pleaded against the directions and prohibitions enacted by the statute law and against the rights accruing to any party by reason of such directions and prohibitions. Chudambarachallur v Landilima, 38 M 519.

S 115

There can be no estoppel against an Act of Parliament or against an Act of Legislature and the principle of estoppel cannot be invoked to defeat the plain provisions of the Statute. Ahmed Bhouddin v Babu Devi, A I R 1930 Bom 13=3 B 676=31 Bom L R 778. Jagabandhu v Madha Krishna 36 C 280=4 Ind Cas 444, Ibdul Latif v Kanthu 38 C 512=13 C L J 693. Madanlal v Ripusudanprasad A I R Nag 191. As between a mortgagor and a mortgagee the principle of estoppel which is otherwise clearly recognised is inapplicable where the mortgage is void as contrary to a statute. Mahamaya Devi v Hari das, 42 C 155=19 C W N 295=20 C L J 183.

Declaration, act or omission must be of an unequivocal and ambiguous character. To create an estoppel against a party, his declaration, act or omission must be of an unequivocal and unambiguous character. Goyanan v Vilo 6 Bom L R 861. Estoppel to have any judicial value must be clear and not ambiguous; it must be free, voluntary and without any artifice. Mouji v National Bank of India 2 Bom L R 1011 25 B 199, see also Iba v Sounbar 3 Bom L R 832, Isajinnathji v Virjunddas 7 Bom L R 836. To create an estoppel the declaration, act or omission must be of an unequivocal and unambiguous character.

Astamoorthu v Rama Mudali, 96 Ind Cas 915 = A I R 1926 Mad 1052 Just as an estoppel cannot be created by an ambiguous document so too it cannot be created by an ambiguous act Mamsa v Sallayyu, 46 Ind Cas 609 A representation, to found an estoppel must be clear and unambiguous, not necessarily susceptible of only one interpretation, but such is will reasonably be understood in the sense contended for, and for this purpose the whole representation must be looked for Low v Bonerue (1891) 3 Ch 83 C A, Freeman v Cooke, 2 Exch 654, Whitechurch v Cavanagh, (1902) A C 117 (115), Lewis v Lewis, (1901) 2 Ch 636 (C A), Onward Building Society v Smithson (1893) 1 Ch 1 Halsbury Vol XIII, p 379 This is merely an application of the old maxim applicable to all estoppels, that they "must be certain to every intent" Co Litt 352 (i), Halsbury Vol 13, p 379, see also Ram v Ram, 13 B L R 12 P C, Puccius v Poorna 8 W R 125, Gojanan v Nilo, 6 Bom L R 864 Nihal v Asaram, 80 Ind Cas 525 = 6 Lah L J 45

S. 115

Plea of acquiescence—Necessary elements Where one person constructed a building on another's land in the belief that the site belonged to him and though the owner of the land was aware of it he did not object to the same and the building was allowed to be used for a period of 20 years Held, that the owner of land had acquiesced in the construction and that he could not after such lapse of time turn round and ask for a demolition of the building Mahomed Husain v Barkat Husain 12 R D 407 The acquiescence to deprive a man of his legal right must amount to fraud Mata Bhabu v Kaldnu 99 Ind Cas 894 = A I R 1920 Oudh 135, Mustafa Husan v Saudul Nisan, 99 Ind Cas 255 = A I R 1927 Oudh 66 = 3 O W N 232 The mere fact that more than two years were allowed to lapse after the building had been begun by a trespassers before a suit for possession of the site was instituted, does not establish acquiescence, especially when a protest had originally been made by the owner of the site before building was begun Mahadeo Patil v Narayan, 104 Ind Cas 565 = A I R 1927 Nag 318 Acquiescence implies that a person who is said to have acquiesced did so with knowledge of his rights and the other person acted in the bona fide belief that he was acting within his rights The absence of either of these elements makes the doctrine inapplicable The acquiescence which will deprive a man of his legal rights must amount to fraud Suchit v Mahamed Habib Ullah, 99 Ind Cas 199 = A I R 1927 Oudh 89 Where in answer to a suit for the demolition of a building as having been unlawfully created on land belonging to the plaintiff it is pleaded that the plaintiff acquiesced in the erection of the building, it is not enough to show merely that the plaintiff did not interfere with the progress of the building, but it must be shown that the plaintiff knowing the defendant to be under a mistaken belief that the land upon which he was building was his own, purposely remained quiet until the building was completed Chhotu v Inayatulla, A W N 1899, 191 If a party having a right, stands by and sees another dealing with the property in a manner inconsistent with that right, and makes no objection while the act is in progress, he cannot afterwards complain Per Cottonham L C in Duke of Leeds v Earl of Amherst, (1816) 2 Ph 117 (123) = 14 L J Ch 5 But acquiescence cannot rehabilitate or render valid a transaction which is ultra vires and illegal Further, it must be borne in mind that estoppel by acquiescence connotes among other things, that the person estopped in effect has represented to the person who is intruding his right that he is not entitled to complain that his right is being invaded and that the party relying upon his representation has altered his position to his detriment under a mistaken impression that he was legally justified in acting as he has done Gowinda v Lamcharan 29 C W N 931 = 52 C 748 = 59 Ind Cas 501 = A I R 1925 Cil 1107 Where a person allowed another to exercise the powers of a lambardar, though he was not expressly appointed by the revenue officer for a long time, he cannot afterwards impeach his actions as lambardar Lamrao v Ghulamam 8 N L J 195 Laches can be proved only by an ambiguous evidence of waiver, abandonment or acquiescence Narayan v Bala, A I R 1925 Nag 101

A mere delay in filing a suit for the removal of an encroachment does not per se constitute an acquiescence Narayan v Laxmanrao, 105 Ind Cas 256

S 115 In applying the doctrine of estoppel by acquiescence in a case of erection of buildings the primary thing to consider is whether the person who acted in contravention of his rights had a bona fide belief or not that he did possess a right to erect the building. Ali Bala Hanji v. Hasim, 101 Ind. Cas. 630 = A. I. R. 1927 All. 511. So in order to sustain a plea of acquiescence and to raise a bar of equitable estoppel it is incumbent upon the party relying on it to show that the conduct of the owner whether consisting in abstinence from interfering, or in active intervention, was sufficient to justify the legal inference that he had by plain implication contracted that the right of occupation under which the defendant originally obtained possession of the land should be changed into a perpetual right of occupation. Gharia v. Ram Singh, 100 Ind. Cas. 855 = A. I. R. 1927 Nig. 180. See also Narayana v. Pazman, 105 Ind. Cas. 256. Where the plaintiff who claimed to be a bona fide purchaser for value allowed a subsequent transferee to build on the property and there was evidence of negligence on his part to take the necessary steps to protect his rights he was estopped from asserting his title. Yung Kyung v. P. I. Firm, 6 Rang. 643, see also Imam v. Ibrahim, A. I. R. 1929 Outh. 292. Coincident with common law doctrine of estoppel there is an equitable doctrine which was explained in several well known cases. In Lumsden v. Dyson, L. R. 1 H. L. 129 at p. 140, Lord Cranworth L. C. made the following weighty observations: 'If a stranger begins to build on my land supposing it to be his own, and I, perceiving his mistake, abstain from setting him right and leave him to persevere in his error a Court of equity will not allow me afterwards to assert my title to the land on which he has expended money on the supposition that the land was his. In a case of that description the estoppel rests upon the particular basis of actual acquiescence. It seems that that is the true ground of the decision in De Bure v. Ill, 47 L. J. Ch. 381 = 8 Ch. D. 286. In that case Thesiger, L. J. delivering the judgment of the Court of Appeal said (47 L. J. Ch. at p. 389, 8 Ch. D. at p. 314): 'If a person having a right and seeing another person about to commit or in the course of committing an act infringing upon that right stands by in such a manner as really to induce the person committing the act and who might otherwise have abstained from it, to believe that he assents to its being committed he cannot afterwards be heard to complain of the act.' In Wilmore v. Barbur, 49 L. J. Ch. 732 = 15 Ch. D. 96 Ery J. states that the doctrine of acquiescence which deprives a man of his legal rights must amount to dishonesty. Jones Brothers v. Woodhouse, 92 L. J. K. B. 638 = (1923) 2 K. B. 117. By acquiescing in what is done by another a person may be estopped from afterwards alleging a different state of facts from that which the other assumed to exist. Mold v. Wheatcroft, 27 Beav. 260 Fisher v. Maqnay, 5 M. & Gr. 778. Rule v. Jewell, 18 Ch. D. 660. In re Burnard's Bank, Peel's Case, L. R. 2 Ch. 674. Sheridan v. Barret, 4 L. K. Ir. 223. Thompson v. Rouse, (1893) P. D. 70. It must be shown that it is the duty of the acquiescing party to have spoken. McKenzie v. British Lumber Co., 6 App. Cas. 82 = L. T. 431 and that he had knowledge of the matter in which he is alleged to have acquiesced. Ramsden v. Dyson, (1869) L. R. 1 H. L. 129, Lynch v. Commissioners of Sewers, 32 Ch. D. 79 = 55 L. J. Ch. 409. See also The Gupat Ginning Co. v. Motilal, 31 Bom. I. R. 1310. Atamoonthe v. Nambudripad, 96 Ind. Cas. 915 = A. I. R. 1926 M. 1072. Ramratan v. Shroddattarai, 73 Ind. Cas. 137. Paddu v. Mahabir Prasad, 53 Ind. Cas. 663. Sauai v. Kalloo, 44 Ind. Cas. 517.

A party is not estopped from setting up a defence on the ground of acquiescence in a contract where the contract is illegal. Joseph v. Joseph, 5 Bur. L. J. 86 = A. I. R. 1926 Rang. 186.

Where the defendants regarded through mistake certain land to be their own and partitioned it among themselves and there is no evidence to the effect that the plaintiff knew that the defendants were partitioning his land as theirs and the plaintiff kept silent knowing that the defendants were likely to be prejudiced by the partition and by subsequent claim on the part of the plaintiff the plaintiff has done nothing and is not estopped from setting up his title and possession to the land by the principle of acquiescence. Mubarak v. Mahomed, 97 Ind. Cas. 266 = A. I. R. 1926 All. 721. Where a party has derived any advantage and taken benefit under the order of the Court, he is to be deemed to have acquiesced in it and should not be allowed to challenge it at any subsequent proceeding or by way of appeal Jogesh Chandra v Faza Ali, 95 Ind Cas 10 = A I R 1926 Cal 960 Generally speaking if a party having an interest to prevent an act being done has full notice of its having been done and acquiesces in it so as to induce a reasonable belief that he consents to it and the position of others is altered by their giving credit to his sincerity, he has no more right to challenge the act to the ir prejudice than he would have had if it had been done with his previous license Though mere acquiescence is not equivalent to consent, yet consent need not be by word and may be by act, and if consent can be intimated by conduct as well as by act it is clear that acquiescence may under certain circumstances be taken to be consent Uniam v Paruk, 85 Ind Cas 540 = A I R 1925 Cal 993

Where a person objected to another putting up a structure on his land and objected before the Municipal authority who however refused to go into the question of title, he cannot in any sense be held to have acquiesced in the act Kokla Kumari v Kahan Val 1923 All 452, see also Moola v Bahasu 1923 All 507

Estoppel by silence Mere omission to speak does not create estoppel in the case of a person who is under no duty to speak Kanchan v Kamala 21 C L J 441 It is essential to an estoppel that the person estopped should be under a duty to some other person to speak or to act, and that his failure to perform that duty should have caused damages to that other person Jones Brothers v Woodhouse (1923) 2 K B 117 = 92 L J K B 639 see also Proctor v Bennet 36 Ch D 740 Potal v Everett, 1 Q B D 669 (675) Barton v London, E W Ry 24 Q B D 77 Re Lewis (1904) 2 Ch 656, Re Walker 26 T L R 260 So a mere silence cannot operate as an estoppel unless it is established that there was duty to speak Bhagawan Dutt v Lachummarayan 119 Ind Cas 882 Mere silence or omission to act does not create estoppel unless there is a duty to speak Umaram v Parul Chand 85 Ind Cas 540 = A I R 1925 Cal 993 see also Suresh Nath v Jabel Jh 85 Ind Cas 747 Chadwick v Manning (1896) A C 231 (234), Fox v Mackreth 2 Bro C C 400, Lewis v Lewis (1904) 2 Ch 677 "It cannot be doubted that there may be cases in which there is deception by omission, but silence may be treated as deception only where there is duty to speak in other words as Bigelow points out 'duty to speak which is the ground of liability arises wherever and only where silence can be considered as having in active property that of misleading' (Bigelow on Fraud, vol I p 597) To take one illustration The silence of A in the presence of B and C who are negotiating in regard to a sale of property from B to C, stops A from claiming the property as against C, upon the conclusion of the sale, but knowledge by an owner of property that some one is about to buy it from a third person does not impose upon the owner a duty to seek out the purchaser and advise him of the facts Pickart v Sears 6 A & E 469 The essence of the matter appears to be, that in the one case silence may be treated as a true cause of the change of position, in the other case it cannot be so considered The question consequently arises whether there has been on the part of the defendants a disregard of a duty to speak As was observed by Lord Chancellor Fisher in Fox v Mackreth 2 W & F I C 709 the question in such cases is not whether an advantage has been taken which in point of morals is wrong or which a man of delicacy would not have taken, but it is essentially necessary that there should be some obligation on the party sought to be made liable to make the discovery so as to bring his silence within some definition of fraud Again as pointed out by Story (Equity Jurisprudence §§ 204-207) it is not every concealment which entitles a party to the interposition of a Court of Equity, 'the case must amount to the suppression of facts which one party under the circumstances is bound in conscience and duty to disclose to the other party and in respect to which he cannot innocently be silent' or in other words, 'the true definition of undue concealment which amounts to a fraud in the sense of a Court of Equity and for which it will grant relief, is the non-disclosure of those facts and circumstances which one party is under some legal or equitable obligation to communicate to the other and which the latter has a right, not merely in foro conscientiae but juris et de jure, to know' Per Mooljee in Joychandia v Srinath 1 C L J 23 (28)=32 C 357, see also Volunt Das v Nil Komul, 4 C W N 283 Ukennie v British Linen Co, 6 App Cts 82 Chabit Das v Doyal Mouji, 6 Bom L R 557 Gheran v Kuny Behary 9 A 413 (419), where one of the three brothers sold ancestral property and the other brothers with knowledge of the sale kept quiet while the vendee was spending moneys in building on the land. Held that the plaintiff's long silence coupled with the fact that they knew all along of the building operations and abstained from asserting their own rights showed that they acquiesced in the sale and that they were consequently estopped from asserting those rights in a suit Dhanpat Rai v Gwandutta 3 Ld. 204=64 Ind Cts 320-10 P L R 1922 An abstinence from interference on the part of the owner of land, upon which another man is building does not raise an equitable estoppel against him. In order to estop the owner it must be proved that besides his abstinence there was a mistaken belief in the builder that the land was his own property. Mahammad Umordaga v Mura 6 A L J 57=1 Ind Cts 821 see also Kanal v Broughton, 5 C W N 846

S 115

The principle, that where a person by his words or conduct wilfully causes another to believe the existence of a certain state of things and induces him to act on that belief so as to alter his own previous position the former is concluded from averring against the latter that a different state of things existed at the time has no application where the person against whom estoppel is sought to be applied is under no duty to speak Kanchan v Kanula 21 C L J 441=29 Ind Cts 734 Silence cannot operate as an estoppel unless it is established that there was duty to speak Bhagwinderat v Lachmi Narayan, A I R 1930 Pat 150=119 Ind Cts 882 A duty to speak arises whenever a person knows that another is acting on an erroneous assumption of some authority given or liability undertaken by the former, or is dealing with or acquiring an interest in property in ignorance of his title to it Stand v Stand 7 Man & G 417 It is the duty of a man who knows that another is relying on a document bearing a counterfeit of his signature to give notice of the forgery without delay Ukennie v British Linen Co 6 App Cts 82, 109 Ogilvie v Western Australian Mortgage, (1896) A C 257 P C Erang v Dominion Bank, (1901) A C 806 (P C), Halsbury Vol XIII p 396 No general rule can be formulated as to when silence may be unlawful in transactions between men at arm's length. The presence of the silent party, when the transaction takes place, makes a much clearer case for estoppel than when he is absent. The main test to be applied is—whether the silence may be attributed as a true cause not necessarily the entire or main cause, but one of the causes of the change of position and whether upon due regard to all the circumstances it is just that the defendants should be prejudiced in the manner in which they have been prejudiced by the omission of the plaintiff to speak. Thomas Barclay v Syed Hussain 6 C L J 60 When silence is of such a character and under such circumstances that it would be a fraud upon the other party for the party which has kept silence to deny what his silence has induced, it will operate as an estoppel Jalpomull v Saroda, 7 C L J 604

Estoppel by omission The acquiescence or estoppel which will deprive a man of legal rights must amount to fraud. A man is not to be deprived of his legal rights unless he has acted in such a way as would make it fraudulent to set up those rights. The element, or the requisites necessary to constitute fraud of that description are these—In the first place the plaintiff must have made a mistake as to his legal rights. Secondly, the plaintiff must have expended some money or must have done some act (not necessarily upon the defendant's lands) on the faith of the mistaken belief. Thirdly, the defendant, the possessor of the legal right, must know of the existence of his own right which is inconsistent with the right claimed by the plaintiff. If he does not know of it he is in the same position as the plaintiff and the doctrine of acquiescence is founded upon conduct with a knowledge of your legal rights. Fourthly, the defendant, the possessor of the legal right must know of the plaintiff's mistaken belief of his rights. If he does not there is nothing which calls upon him to assert his own rights. Lastly, the defendant the possessor of the legal right, must have encouraged the plaintiff in his expenditure of money or in other acts which he has done either directly or by abstaining from asserting his legal right. Where all these elements exist, there is fraud of such a nature as will entitle the Court to restrain the possessor of the legal right from exercising it but nothing short of this will do. Hemangan Deb v. Bhoj Singh, 73 Ind Cas 223 see also Bishan Singh v. Balanda 4 Lah L J 419. The estoppel under this section may arise by reason of either a declaration, an act or omission, but in either case there must be an intention on the part of the person against whom the estoppel operates to cause or permit a belief in the mind of another. In the case of a mere omission no such intention can well be imputed unless the true facts are known to the person whose omission is in question, but where there is a deliberate declaration or act causing or permitting such belief and inducing another to act upon it, it must be presumed that such declaration or act was intended to have its ordinary and natural effect upon the mind and actions of the other party. Ralli v. Forbes 3 Pat L 1 167=67 Ind Cas 744=(1922) P 209. Mere acquiescence on the part of the true owner or omission to volunteer any advice or assistance to intending purchasers who could themselves have ascertained the truth by reasonable inquiry cannot affect the legal rights of such owner. A person is not to be deprived of his legal right unless he has acted in such a way as would make it fraudulent for him to set up the same. The illustration to section 115 of the Indian Evidence Act sets forth that one is bound who intentionally and falsely leads a purchaser to suppose he is taking a perfect title. There is an obligation to truth in speech, and act, but no obligation to speak or act, where no confidence is given or accepted, merely for the purpose of guarding, or furthering the interests of strangers proceeding wholly in initium and with an omission to inquire which is equivalent to knowledge. Basantappa v. Janu 9 B 96.

S died leaving three sons and a daughter. H, who was the plaintiff in this case, died more than 12 years prior to the suit, and upon his death his three sons got their names entered in the revenue papers to the exclusion of H. It was found that up to the time of her marriage, the plaintiff did live on amicable terms with, and indeed was supported by her three brothers, and ever since, there had been no feeling of unfriendliness. The three brothers executed a deed of sale in favour of G. Plaintiff brought a suit against G for recovery of her share of inheritance under the Mahomedan Law, by avoidance of the deed of sale mentioned above. The defence to the action was that the plaintiff, having omitted to enter her name in the Government record, was estopped from maintaining her claim against the defendant who was a transferee without notice. Held, that there was no evidence on the record to show that the omission on the part of the plaintiff to have her name entered in the Government Revenue records were intentional within the meaning of s. 115 of the Evidence Act or that it was by reason of such omission that the defendant altered his position so as to operate as an estoppel against the plaintiff and that as the plaintiff's title was admitted, she should get a decree in her favour. Gobor-dhan v. Hasiat, A W N 1887, 110. The doctrine of estoppel cannot be said to rest absolutely upon any notice of duty on the part of the person sought to be estopped, and the word "omission" used in section 115 of the Evidence Act does not mean only an omission to perform such a duty as is prescribed by law. Mani Ram v. Ram Lalai, 27 Ind Cas 611.

Estoppel by waiver. Where a party to a suit agreed to a decree in favour of his opponent on certain conditions which were not afterwards fulfilled and the compromise fell through, the admissions made by him for the purpose of compromising the litigation do not amount to a waiver of his right. Nor do they prevent the party's representative from pleading the true state of facts in any other litigation. Pikaya Ram v. Warmisser, 50 Ind Cas 361. Parties may by their conduct in the course of a suit preclude themselves in a subsequent suit from asserting rights which they have waived deliberately. Jinka v. Kama-lathammal, 7 M H C 263. A waiver is an intentional relinquishment of a known right or such conduct as warrants an inference of the relinquishment of such right. Hence there can be no waiver unless the person against whom the waiver is claimed had full knowledge of his rights and of facts which could enable him to take an effective action for the enforcement of such rights. No one can acquiesce in a wrong while ignorant that it has been committed and that the effect of his action will be to confirm it. Dhanul Dhar v Nallam, 6 C L J 62, Blennet-Harsett v Day, 2 B & B 128, Darby v Fouden R Co, 2 H L C 13, Beauchamp v Mann, 6 H L C 223, Iustin v Chambers, 6 C L J 1, La Banque v La Banque, 13 App Cas 11, Imbilal v Whitewall, 6 C L J 111, Nripati v Jalendra 91 Ind Cas 107, Jahandar v Ram Lal, 31 C 110.

S 115

Order of Court. There can be no estoppel where a party acts under a mistaken impression as to the legal effect of an order. Abdulla Sahib v Muhammad Husam 5 Mys L J 182. An involuntary act done by a person in pursuance of an order of Court cannot operate as an estoppel against him and prevent him from enforcing the remedy given to him by law. Ishor Das v Buta Lal, 11 Ind Cas 67 = A I R 1929 1 d 12, see also Muni Lal v Durga Prasad 5 Pat L J 125 = 3 Pat 930 = 80 Ind Cas 667 = 1124 P 673 = 1924 Pat 251. Balghobind v Sheo Kumar 82 Ind Cas 181 = 22 A L J 791. Where a party has adopted an order of the Court and acted under it he cannot after he has enjoyed a benefit under the order contend that it is valid for one purpose and invalid for another. Jogendranath v Khoda Bux 72 Ind Cas 554.

Application of equitable estoppel in case of part performance. Where there was a prior agreement that the plaintiff would grant a permanent lease to the defendant on certain terms and conditions and the defendant came into possession in pursuance of it and erected superstructures on the land but no lease was executed as required by a '07 T P Act and the plaintiff sought to eject the defendant it has been held that the doctrine of equitable estoppel could be applied and that the conduct of the plaintiff can be deemed to be fraudulent. C H C Arth v Indu Nath Maunders, 55 C 1090. Though a party has complete power to resile from an incomplete agreement such a power will be denied when the actings and conduct of the parties have carried the incompletely executed engagements into effect. The doctrine of part performance does not apply to a case when a Hindu widow even though purporting to relinquish her estate remains in possession thereof. Rad Bahadur Man Singh v Nauatalabati 73 Ind Cas 822 = 2 Pat 607 = 4 Pat L J 337. Under the English law equity will not fail to support a transaction clothed imperfectly in those legal forces to which finally attaches after the bargain has been acted upon. The law of India is not inconsistent with the principles applied by equity in such cases but on the contrary follows them. Mahomed Musa v Aghore Kumar 19 C W N 251. When in pursuance of an agreement to transfer property the intended transferee has taken possession, though the requisite legal documents had not been executed subject to the all important proviso that specific performance can be obtained between the parties to the agreement in the same Court and at the same time as the subsequent legal question falls to be determined. Gajendra Nath v Moulani 27 C W N 159 see also Pitamber v Ramchurn 28 C W N 157.

Estoppel and Adoption. In a suit by a reversioner for a declaration that an adoption by a widow is invalid no estoppel arises as against the plaintiff by reason of the mere fact that he concurred in the adoption which was supposed by all parties concerned to be legal and valid. Gurlingaswamy v Ramalalshamma 18 M 53 = 1 M L J 237. In delivering the judgment on this point Muttusami Ayyar J said: 'No estoppel can arise from ignorance of law which both parties must be presumed to know. The adoption took place in 1883 whilst this suit was brought in 1892. There are not in this case equitable considerations consequent on the growth of a new family or rights of property under an invalid adoption conceived in for a considerable interval of time. It must also be remembered that according to true Hindu theory, adoption is both a religious and a secular act and estoppel cannot take the place of a religious act on which rests the conventional Hindu belief that a valid adoption generates filial relation and religious competency to make funeral and annual offerings with efficacy." This case was confirmed on appeal, in 22 M 398 (P C). But the conduct of a widow who actively participates in an adoption and thereafter in treating the boy as her own son by marrying him to a girl of her own choice and allowing him to perform the funeral ceremony of her husband, estops her from disputing the validity of the adoption. Kaunabumal v. Theasami, 15 M 186=2 M L J 111, Rajni Inayalia v. Lakshmbai, 11 B 381. A widow represented that she had authority to adopt, and the ceremony of adoption was carried out on the faith of the representation and the marriage of the adopted son was celebrated by the adoptive mother, the adoption was then challenged by a reversioner and the adopted son in order to defend his right incurred heavy responsibilities. held that the adoptive mother was estopped from maintaining a suit for a declaration that she had no authority to adopt. Dharm Kanuoi v. Balwant Singh, 5 A L J, 568=A W N 1905 231=30 A 519, see also Durga v. Ahirwale, A W N 1882, 97, Santappayya v. Rangappayya, 18 M 397=5 M L J 66.

The rule of estoppel by conduct does not apply to a case where no doubts were entertained by the adopter as to the validity of an adoption made by him, and all that could be urged against him was that he had a foundation for a belief in the person adopted that the adoption was valid and that his subsequent conduct contributed to the persistence of the adoption in that belief and that in consequence of that belief the adopted obtained from claiming a share in the inheritance of his natural family. Iskhan v. Krishna 7 M 3 (F B). Where an adoption made by a Hindu widow is invalid for want of permission from her deceased husband, she is not estopped from repudiating or denying it by the circumstance of her having for some time treated it as effective. An adoption ab initio invalid may be raised to the level of a valid adoption on the ground of estoppel only when, by a course of conduct long continued on the part of the family which has purported to affiliate him his situation in his original family has been so altered that it would be impossible to restore him to it. Parathibogamma v. Ram Krishna Iyer, 18 M 14=5 M L J 44. Kutari v. Babaji, 19 B 371. Where a person is treated by another in such a way as leads him to believe that he is the adopted son of that other and on that footing and on account of such acquiescence and by reason of such encouragement he severs his connection with his natural family or undergoes a change of circumstances in such a way that when restored to his natural family his position would be very different from what it would have been if he had never left it the person treating him as described above and the one who claim through him will be estopped from questioning the adoption. Umaram Gogoi v. Purul Chand 85 Ind Cas 510=A I R 1925 Cal 993 see also Mahamad v. Ghulam 96 Ind Cas 777, Iedla v. Iedla, 19 L W 83=77 Ind Cas 214. Though an adoption is invalid circumstances may arise in which the likelihood of hardships to be caused to the adopted boy in upsetting the adoption on which all the parties acted for a number of years may be so great that it would be inequitable and unjust not to hold that an estoppel is created against the person adopting for having changed his position. It was not cast upon the person who sets up the estoppel to prove conclusively that he was in fact adopted by the father residing from the story of the adoption, but it is enough diminished if he proves to the satisfaction of the Court that the likelihood of his being prejudiced by the alteration of position was so great that the Court will presume that the adopted boy must have been diminished. Also estoppel being simply a principle of the law of evidence, it creates no substantive rights of an absolute character but commonly operates to close the mouths of certain people who have acted in a certain way from setting up what may be true facts of the case, and the estoppel will operate only as against the adoptive father and not against his amasa son. Paasunamayya v. Venkata Ramayya, (1927) M W N 311=103 Ind Cas 875=A I R 1927 Mad 777. The parties were Agarwallas and the adoption was made in the manner customary among the Agarwallas. The story of the regular Brahminical adoption of the same body previous to the Agarwalli adoption was invented with the object of giving to later adoption the rights of collateral succession. Two acts and representations of the plaintiffs were set up as estopping them from questioning the adoption related to this Agarwalli adoption. held, that the 1

S 115

were not estopped from questioning the adoption and denying that the adopted son required any rights of collateral succession by the adoption Dhandraj v Sonu Basi, 32 C 492=52 I A 231=27 Bom L R 837=23 A L J 273=49 M L J 173 (P C) Where a person executed a registered document declaring he had adopted another and in mutation proceedings described himself as the guardian of such adopted son and even entered into a compromise wherein for valuable consideration he gave up all intention of repudiating such adoption, he would be estopped from alleging there was no adoption Kumar Dutt v Duan Ramdhur 1923 A 58 Representation on a matter of law is as to the validity of an adoption creates no estoppel Rajambal Amma v Shadnaga 70 Ind Cas 653=1923 Mad 11

An adoption by a minor widow who has not attained sufficient maturity of understanding to appreciate the nature of her act is invalid There is no personal estoppel preventing the widow from disputing the validity of the adoption and recovering her husband's properties from the adoptee unless the latter's position has been prejudiced Ramchori v Saraswati 60 Ind Cas 246=12 L W 544=(1920) M W N 721 A person setting up an estoppel under s 115 of the Act must be induced to believe in a fact and not in a proposition of law So where a Hindu widow adopted an orphan and subsequently supported the adoption, her conduct, even if it can be regarded as equivalent to a representation that an orphan can be validly adopted does not give rise to an estoppel Gobind v Chandrabhaga, 12 N L R 100

Estoppel by acts of Government officer A Government officer had no authority to waive the rights to which the Government might be entitled by escheat, and a decree founded thereon by a competent Court in India did not operate as estoppel The Collector of Masulipatam v Caraly Venkata Naramapah, 2 W R 61 P C=8 M I A 529

Inconsistent pleas It is an elementary rule that a party litigant cannot be permitted to waive the rights to which the Government might be entitled by escheat, and a decree founded thereon by a competent Court in India did not operate as estoppel The Collector of Masulipatam v Caraly Venkata Naramapah, 2 W R 61 P C=8 M I A 529

Inconsistent pleas It is an elementary rule that a party litigant cannot be permitted to assume inconsistent positions in Court to play fast and loose to blow hot and cold to approve and reprobate to the detriment of his opponent Durjendra Narayan v Jogesh Chandra 39 C L J 40=79 Ind Cas 520 see also Bama v Nema, 35 C L J 53, Ram Pratap v Sheo Lal L R 5 A 243 (Rev) A party who asserted all along that the lands could be identified, cannot turn round and assert the contrary on appeal Chalai v Swendra, 1 Pat 75=3 Pat L T 17=65 Ind Cas 616 A person who successfully sues another for rent cannot subsequently be heard to impugn that the defendant was a tenant Jitan Vahlon v Lala Bhagwan 64 Ind Cas 262

Neither he nor his representatives Where a person by his own solemn and deliberate act, wilfully induces another to believe the existence of a certain state of thing, and to deal with him on the faith of it, he and as a general rule his heirs or those who claim under him are conclusively bound by the representation so made and will never be allowed to contradict it to the prejudice of the other Usooshee Syeed Meer Ali v Syed Ali 5 W R 289 The purchaser at the execution sale requires the right title and interest of the judgment debtor and does not consequently occupy a position of greater advantage than the judgment debtor does in the application of the doctrine of estoppel Nanai Lal v Jogenara Chandra 23 C W N 403=39 C L J 222=82 Ind Cas 297, Nandu v Jogendra 70 Ind Cas 960=1923 Cal 53 The transferee of a party is his legal representative Syed Ali Hasan v Syed Ali, 10 O & A L J 1229 It is not open to the representative of a lessor to prove that the status of the original lessee was other than what was described in the deed of lease Imoi Chandra v Goursunder 1923 Cal 603 Where the conduct of a grandfather has given rise to estoppel the grand on claiming through him is bound by it Yoman v Dhanu 1 I L J 31=5 Ind Cas 569 A subsequent mortgagee is bound by the representation made by the mortgagor to prior mortgagees and is estopped from challenging the validity of the prior mortgage so far as it affects the share which was subsequently mortgaged Gurdajal v Tund Husain, 51 Ind Cas 766 A mortgagee who purchases the property at a sale in execution of his decree on the mortgage is bound by an estoppel that would have bound his mortgagor Kahdas v Prasanna, 55 Ind Cas 189 The doctrine of estoppel is applicable to persons claiming under those whose conduct had led to a change of position Rajah of Deo v Ahulla 45 C 909=45 I A 97 (P C), Badr Bishal v Brij Nath 50 L J 458=47 Ind Cas 931, Jagannath v Syed Adulla 16 A L J 576=35 M L J 46=20 Bom L R 851=22 C W N 891=28 C L J 162=45 Ind Cas 770 (P C). The equitable doctrine of estoppel as laid down in 11 B L R 46 which applies to any person is equally binding on the purchaser of his right title and interest at a sale in execution of the decree. Mahomed Mo. offer v Kishor Mohun Day, 22 C 909 (P C)=22 I A 129=5 M L J 101. In Debendranath Sen v Mirza Abul Samed 10 C L J 150 (165), Mookherjee J said 'It was ruled by this Court in Kishor Mohun v Mohamed 18 C 188 (198) contrary to the principle deducible from Richards v Johnston, 4 H & N 660 and Heine v Rogers, (1891) 1 Q B 230 that the estoppel that would bind A would also bind the execution purchasers of his interest. This view was subsequently affirmed by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee and they rested their conclusion on the ground that the principle of estoppel founded in that case upon the decision in Ram Coomar v Moqueen L R 11 I A sup Vol 40 applied not only to A, but also to the execution purchasers of the interest of A who were equally bound by it, as they had purchased only his right title and interest. This is in accord with the statement of the rule by Kay L J in Maded v Thomas 18 W R 201. No doubt the statement sometimes has been made by text writers (Hulum Chand on res judicata 204 and Casperx on estoppel, 2nd Ed 66) apparently on the basis of judicial dicta of the highest authority that as there is no privity between the purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree and the judgment debtor whose property is sold the purchaser at the execution sale is not bound by the same rule of estoppel as the judgment-debtor. Thus in Anundo Moyee v Debendra Chandra 14 M I A 101 Lord Justice James observed that the title of a purchaser under a judgment-decree could not be put on the same footing as the title of the mortgagor or of a person claiming under a voluntary alienation from the mortgagor. Again in Imrit Koor v Debee Pershad 18 W R 201, Sir Richard Couch remarked with reference to purchasers at an execution sale that they were not in the position of persons taking a conveyance direct from the party and were therefore not bound by what the judgment debtor might have stated on some previous occasion. Somewhat to the same effect are the observations of Sir Barnes Peacock in Dinendra Nath v Coomar Ram Kumar, 7 C 107=8 I A 65. There is a great distinction between a private sale in satisfaction of a decree and a sale in execution of a decree. Under the former the purchaser derives title through the vendor and cannot require a better title than that of the vendor. In the latter, the purchaser, notwithstanding he requires merely the right title and interest of the judgment debtor acquires that title by operation of law and is to the judgment debtor and freed from all alienations or incumbrances affected by him subsequent to the attachment of the property sold in execution. On the authority of these observations it was ruled by this Court in Parbu Lal v Mulu 14 C 401 that a purchaser at an execution sale was not the representative of the judgment debtor for the purpose of the rule of estoppel. Substantially to the same effect are the decisions in Rango Moon v Raj Coomaree 6 W R 197 Gow Sauter v Hem Chander 16 C 355 and Bashu Chander v Laxay Ali 20 C 236. There can be no question, however, that the rule so widely formulated in these judicial dicta, is neither supported by authorities nor defensible on principle. It will suffice for our present purpose to refer to the judgment of the Full Bench of this Court in Ishan Chunder v Beni Madhab 21 C 62 in which it was pointed out that the view taken in these cases is based on a misapprehension of the passages from the decisions of the Judicial Committee in Anandamoyee v Dhuvendranath 11 M I A 101 and Dinendra v Ram, L R 8 I A to which we have just referred. See also Radha Kant v Ramnaram 16 C W N 475 (480) Krishna Pati v Vilramal 18 M 13, Sicamuntha v Narmalinga (1917) M W N 83, Bepin v Joachswar, 11 C L J 256 Nandlal v Jogenha 28 C W N 403, Sashibhusan v Debnath 60 Ind Cas 705, Prodhot v Jori, 16 Ind Cas 792. A person is not estopped from instituting a suit for a share of joint ancestral property by the circumstance that he claims under one who, when sued on a former occasion as trustee,

S 115. never pleaded that he was a co-purchaser. Surnomoyee v Gunga, 2 W R 264. An admission by an adoptive mother, in a suit brought by her mother in law to set aside the adoption, that an alleged monomulleeputtar, under which her mother in law had previously professed to adopt a son to her deceased husband, was valid would not estop her adoptive son from denying the validity of that instrument in a suit subsequently brought by him for the assertion of his rights under the adoption. Imundomoyee v Sheeb Chunder, Marsh 450. Where a trustee does any act in breach or repudiation of the trust, such act is not binding, by way of estoppel on his successor in the trust. Shri Ganesh Dharmadhar v Heshavai, 15 B 625. A compromise by father as next reversioner is not binding on son the real reversioner. Dorasmay Roidy v Muthunigun, 19 M L J 1 = 32 Ind Cas 50.

The doctrine of estoppel cannot bar the plaintiff's claim in a suit when the person making the representation is not the person at whose representation the plaintiff claims the property. Rajah of Bobbili v Bhojayamm, 4 M L J 192. A widow coming through her husband cannot impeach a settlement come to by her husband with other members of the family whereby he released by necessary implication the interest which he had in the property. Dadabhai v Cousry, A I R 1925 P C 306. A purchaser at an execution sale is bound by the same rule of estoppel as the judgment debtor and consequently he cannot dispute the validity of a mortgage which the mortgagee himself is estopped from questioning. Nandalal v Jogendra Chandra, 36 C L J 421.

Constructive estoppel. The law knows no such thing as constructive estoppel. Parvotam Gir v Iboda, 21 A 505 P C = 3 C W N 517 = 1 Bom L R 700 = 26 I A 175.

Fraud, whether necessary to give rise to estoppel. This section embodies this rule of English law on the subject of estoppel. The doctrine of estoppel is based on a fraudulent purpose and a fraudulent result. If therefore the element of fraud is wanting, there is no estoppel. There must be deception and change of conduct in consequence. Ganga Sahai v Hua Singh, 2 A 809 (F B).

Estoppel, whether can arise when document is inadmissible. The rule of estoppel does not apply where the document giving rise to it is not in evidence in the case in which it is inadmissible for want of registration. Raju Balu v Krishnasai Ram Chavli, 2 B 213. An enhancement suit was decided in a compromise by which the landlord accepted nazarana from the tenants and gave them permanent heritable rights with powers of transfer. The landlord subsequently sued the transferees of the tenants for ejectment and pleaded that the compromise being unstamped and unregistered was invalid in law. Held that the compromise having been acted upon by the parties the landholder was estopped from suing the tenants for ejectment. Aheta Ali v Ram Prasad, 8 L R 365 (Rev). The rule that an occupancy tenant who makes usufructuary mortgage of his holding to another man is estopped from alleging that the other man is his sub-tenant has no application where the mortgage is unregistered and so ineffective to pass the mortgagor's rights in the property. Ram Charan v Shiva Jagat, L R 3 A 161 (Rev).

Landlord and tenant. Where a landlord wrongly described a person as an ex-proprietary tenant in a rent suit, he is not estopped from denying the same in a subsequent suit for ejectment. Lachmi Bhawan, 8 L R 8 (Rev). Where a landlord sued the tenant in ejectment and the tenant agreed to pay a higher rent provided the landlord did not eject him and the landlord collected the enhanced rent in that case he is estopped from ejecting the tenant. Ram Nath v Bhaquant Prasad, 8 L R 320 (Rev). See also Ali Khushalo v Sahib-ada Shabbar Ali, 8 L R 341 (Rev). Where a landlord executes a money decree as a rent decree and the judgment debtor takes no objection, he is not thereby estopped from contending subsequently that the decree was only a money decree and not a rent decree. Bhagandutt v Lachmi Narayan, 119 Ind Cas 882. A misdescription of a person as occupancy tenant in rent receipts and suits for arrears of rent does not amount to grant of occupancy rights or bare the effect of estoppel Ashofi v Kishor Ramani, L R 6 All 64 (Rev). A tenant by acquiescing in the payment of enhanced rent is not precluded from raising any objection under section 23 of the B T Act. H H Meynel v Deepa Pandal, 3 Pat 825. There is no peculiarity in the law of estoppel in India as distinguished from that of England, the law of India is compendiously set forth in s. 115 of the Evidence Act. Taking of a rent each year under a mistaken belief may bar by estoppel the owner from any claim for mesne profits during the particular year or years for which such rent was received. Mitra Sen Singh v Mt Jani Kuar 26 Bom L R 1131=40 C L J 463=20 L W 766 (P C)=16 A 728=51 I A 326=52 Ind Cas 946. A grove holder after cutting the trees in the grove was allowed to remain in possession on payment of rent. He planted fresh trees and for 3 or 4 years, the zamindar did nothing to prevent it. Held, he was estopped by his inaction from ejecting the grove holder. Ram Singh v Hannu, L R 4 A 352=90 A A L R 1087. Where the tenants knew perfectly well what their rights were and they were not deceived or encouraged in any way, the mere silence of the landlord or his inaction does not create an estoppel against him. Further to create an estoppel it must also be shown that he was aware of what his rights were and that he had the power to prevent tenants from building. Budhan Peli v Madanmohan Lal, 1923 P 111=68 Ind Cas 653=3 Pat L J 485 see also Syed Ali v Mani Chandra, 27 C W N 969. The granting of receipts in the ordinary course of business by a landlord to his tenant is not an admission of such a formal and deliberate character as to prevent the former from denying the relationship of tenant. Habib v Salamat, L R 4 A 174 (Rev). A decree holder landlord who in execution of a rent decree purchases the holding subject to liability for a second rent decree is not estopped from proceeding against other properties in execution of the latter decree. Jural Ashore v Bhatu Modi 1 Pat L R 311=19.3 Pat 205. The rule that a person cannot be permitted to derogate from his own grant is not a universal application and certainly cannot apply to the case of a landlord where, by a bona fide surrender by the tenant, he acquires statutory right of re-entry into the land which was originally dismissed in favour of the tenant. Ram Oiaon v Doman Katal 2 Pat 598=4 Pat L J 362=75 L W 126. The mere fact that a tenant's status is incorrectly described in a receipt issued by the zamindar does not estop him from denying the status. Partab v Dunga Nawan, L R 4 A 8. Where the buildings have been in existence for a long period and certainly for more than 20 years and the landlord has been aware of their erection and kept quiet and did not turn round and claim to demolish the buildings. Saligram 66 Ind Cas 603=(1922) A 210.

S 115

rents from the alienee, he is as much bound by the alienation as if he had expressly assented to it. Baghbar Singh v Kedar Nath 1 W N 189 107, see also Gunga v Ham Gudi 2 Agr 18 Guda v Hamji 3 P R 1900, Fal v Godar Khan, 161 P R 1883. An owner of land omitting to sue for demolition of buildings when the infringement of his right is first threatened or commenced, is estopped from claiming demolition, but is only entitled to compensation. Bhagh v Nadir 57 P R 1871. A tenant cannot be permitted to object to the terms of a patta when he has accepted previously similar patta for a series of years for that constitutes a representation by conduct that the landlord may proceed on the footing that the parties were proper ones, which, of course, would have the same effect as representation in so many words. See Santurachari Swami v Lavada Pillai 27 M 332. The service of a notice for ejectment under s 36 of Act XII of 1881 presupposes the existence of the relationship of landlord and tenant between the person who issues it to a suee and the person to whom it is served. And the landlord cannot afterwards bring a suit for ejectment in a Civil Court to eject the same person from the same land, alleging that he is not tenant but only a purchaser. Buldeo v Indad 15 A 189=A W N 1893 93.

The previous acceptance of a pattah from one who was neither a tegi tenant nor lawfully entitled to the Zeomrah but who performed the service for some time, apparently under a deed of assignment executed in his favour by the previous Zeomrahdar is a good defence to a suit by lawful owner against the ryots to enforce acceptance of patta when the owner's conduct is such as to justify the belief of the ryots that the assignee was authorised to collect rent from them until the assignment was questioned by the owner and a notice of his title given to them. Ahadur Subramanya 11 M 12. The Rajah of Tipperah granted Sanad chits to certain tenants permitting the tenants to construct embankments to a silted up tank and to re-excavate the tank, but no rent was reserved for the tank. The tenants acting upon that sanad spent money in re-excavating the tank. In the circumstances and having regard to a long course of conduct implying the rent-free character of the tank the Rajah was estopped from revoking the license granted and from asserting that the subject matter of the grant should come under a new liability. Rajah Birendra Kishore v Aliam Ali 16 C W N 304. Parties holding a permanent settlement from the Government cannot question the validity of a Mokurruree pattah previously granted by themselves. Karee Abdool v Borod Kant, 15 W R 391. A party having enough in him to make a Mokuraree grant substantial and valid cannot in a Court of Equity deny its efficacy. Jeelan Singh v The Collector of Baelingunge 2 W R 77. Syed Ameer Ali v Heera Singh, 20 W R 291.

Where the Government purchased the zemindari rights of a pergunnah at an auction sale and have thus waived their rights to cancel the tenures of the defendant talukdars and recognised their rights and the zemindar subsequently purchases those rights from the Government he cannot enforce against the talukdars any rights which had been waived by his vendor. Jooqui Kishore v Khaya Ahsanoolah 4 W R Act X Rent 6. Where a decree has declared a certain rate of rent payable, the landlord is not prevented by the mere fact that he has not insisted on the rent being paid at that rate but has accepted the lower one, from recovering at the rate given by the decree. Syed Musam v Pirthee Singh, 3 Agr 263. The mere fact that the plaintiff had applied to the Revenue Court, under s 36 of the N W P Rent Act for the ejectment of the defendant as tenant does not estop him from asserting in a subsequent suit for ejectment, in a Civil Court, that the defendant is unlawfully in possession, as a trespasser. Zebbede Bibi v Sheo Charan 22 A 83=A W N 1899, 189, see also Hamid Ali v Wilayat 22 A 93=A W N 1899 193. A lessee is estopped from showing that the lease is void and that no interest passed to him. Bamandas v Admadhab, 20 C W N, 1340=24 C L J 511=35 Ind Crs 751. Where a zemindar agreed not to eject his tenant so long as he paid rent in consideration of the receipt of the large amount of arrears due from a previous tenant, he is estopped from ejecting the tenant so long as he paid rent. Yusuf-aman v Bodhan, 29 Ind Crs 656.

Hindu widow Estoppel arises in the case of a reversioner where he consents to an alienation made by a Hindu widow Srinivasagharachari v Gopal charari, (1927) M W N 231=A I R, 1927 Mad 438 Where the widow and the next reversioner joined in conveying a property by which they transferred the absolute interest in it the reversioner cannot after he comes into possession challenge the transaction under the rule of estoppel Amar Krishna v Ruyendra 87 Ind Cis 790=A I R 1925 Cal 1205 Where the reversionary heirs to a Hindu widow's estate caused the purchasers of the estate to believe that he approved of the sale by the widow and that such rights as he had he was willing to give up he is estopped from questioning the transaction of purchase subsequently Kama Sastri v Annamma, (1925) M W N 495=83 Ind Cis 764=A I R 1925 Mad 638=43 M L J 284 A document recited that the executants' reversioners had given their consent to the deed, and the endorsement showed that the Sub Registrar read the document to the executant and the reversioners and had their thumb marks put in a second time It was held that it was not a mere attestation but would estop them from questioning the validity of the deed Sunder Singh v Bhan Singh, 90 Ind Cis 1032=26 P L R 736 The mere fact that a reversioner cultivated the lands alienated by the widow under the vendee so long as the widow lived, does not estop him from claiming the properties on the death of the widow Bahar Khan v Kishan Chand 72 P R 1919=52 Ind Cis 845

Where the next presumptive reversioner consented to and joined in a gift by a Hindu daughter into her father's estate as a limited owner and on the death of the daughter succeeded to the estate as actual reversioner he or any one deriving title from him was estopped from challenging the gift Mahadeo Prasad v Mata Prasad 19 A L J 799=63 Ind Cis 721, see also Shunmugha v Koyappa 60 Ind Cis 635=(1920) M W N 679, Basappa v Falappa 23 Bom L R 1040 After the death of a last male holder, a reversioner entered into a compromise with the widow of the last male holder and other reversioner and on the basis of that compromise the property was divided After the death of the widow, he is precluded from claiming as reversioner Kanhailal v Brij Lal, 40 A 487 (P C)=22 C W N 914 (P C) A reversioner who has voluntarily signed the deed executed by a widow cannot legally claim in opposition thereto Shub Chandra v Dulchen, 28 C L J 123=48 Ind Cis 78 Where a Hindu reversioner relinquished his rights to a portion of the inheritance in favour of the widow in consideration of receiving a relinquishment from the widow of all her interest in the remaining portion of the inheritance neither he nor any person claiming through him, could set up that her relinquishment was not binding on him and did not operate on the portion of the inheritance relinquished in favour of the widow Jogendra v Monunda 47 Ind Cis 978 The attestation of a reversioner to a document implies only that there was necessity for the alienation and does not create estoppel Namaswamy Pillai v Kuthalingam, 21 M L J 30=(1917) M W N 78=38 Ind Cis 40, but see Ganda Singh v Sulab Singh, 159 P L R 1914 But where the reversioners induced the purchaser to believe the recitals of the document to be true and to act on them they are estopped by conduct Bhubaneshwar v Haradhan, 21 C W N 728 In Hari Kishen Bhagat v Kashi Pershad, 43 C 876 the Judicial Committee only laid down that a thoughtless reversioner should leave a door of escape from an uncomfortable position rather than bind him down conclusively by the stringency of the equity brought about by his conduct Paraswamedd v Mahamedd 6 L W 290=22 M L J 260=42 Ind Cis 496 Where a Hindu widow, in possession of her deceased husband's separate immovable property, his concubine and his illegitimate daughter, with the concurrence of the next reversioner effect a distribution of the property, in pursuance of an instrument in writing to which they were parties and a remoter reversioner attests such instrument and consents to, and assists in the distribution of the property, such remote reversioner would be estopped by his conduct from questioning the legality and validity of the distribution or of assignments made by those who shared in such distribution Sia Das v Gur Sahai, 3 A 362 A reversioner by unknowingly accepting the mortgage of the land in the joint holding sold by a widow to another reversioner, is not estopped from contesting the validity or its sale Sheva v Hayat 32 P W R 1914=103 P L R 1914=23 Ind Cas 525 The interest of a Hindu reversioner is an interest expectant on the death of a qualified owner, it is not a vested interest, it is a spes successionis or a mere clause of succession, it cannot be sold mortgaged, assigned or relinquished, for a transfer of a spes successionis is a nullity and has no effect in law. But though transfer of his interest is void, he may, by becoming a party to a compromise and by taking the benefit of the compromise, be estopped from claiming as a reversioner Nalhe Choudhury v Suldeo Chaudhury, A I R 1930 All 430

s 115

Estoppel by acts of agents 'The principal whose negligence has enabled his agent to cheat a third party acting with ordinary caution is universally estopped from denying the authority of his agent' Per Erie C J in Ex parte Swan, 7 C B N S 400 (492). A principal who has by his conduct led other persons to believe that his agent is clothed with a larger authority than that which he actually possesses where such persons have acted in that belief to their detriment, cannot rely upon any secret limitation of his agent's authority or upon any private understanding he may have with him of which the rest of the world must necessarily be ignorant. Strangers' said Lord Ellenborough, 'can only look to the acts of the parties and to the external indicia of property, and not to the private communications which may pass between a principal and his broker and if a person authorise another to assume the apparent right of disposing of property in the ordinary course of trade, it must be assumed that the apparent authority is the real authority' Pickering v Busi 15 Earl 38 (43) Carper Estoppel, 177. Similarly in Ramsden v Dyson 1 E & I A 128 (158) Lord Cranworth said 'If indeed the principal knows that the person dealing with his agent have so dealt in consequence of their believing that all statements made by him had been warranted by the principal and knowing this allows the person so dealing to expend money in the belief that the agent had an authority which, in fact he had not, it may be that in such a case, a Court of Equity could not allow the principal afterwards to set up want of authority in the agent. But this equity where it exists depends absolutely on the fact that the knowledge on which it rests can be brought home to the principal' Carper Estoppel 178. But an agent cannot set up his own breach of trust Harris v Truman 51 L J Q B 338. Where a tenant without Zemindar's permission makes a grave on the abadi the mere fact that the servants of the Zemindar stood by and did not object cannot amount to the agent's acquiescence so as to stop Zemindar from interfering with the grave Khuda Dal v Jasshawar 215 Ind Cas 628. An endorsement by an agent of a decree holder on a notice of sale that a property need not be sold does not stop the decree holder from executing the decree against the property Parthasarathy v Muhammad 82 Ind Cas 434=A I R 1925 Mad 270.

Difference between s 115, Evidence Act, and section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act The difference in language between s 43 of the Transfer of Property Act and the language of the illustration to s 115 of the Evidence Act seems to be that under s 43 of the T P Act, mere erroneous representation will apparently suffice and the representation need not be intentionally false whereas the illustration to s 115 of the Evidence Act uses the words 'intentionally and falsely'. Again under s 43 there is nothing said about the belief of the transferee in the truth of the erroneous representation whereas the illustration to s 115 implies that the transferee must have believed the intentional and false representation and acted in the faith of such representation Halkudhar Narain v Sudar Sayal 28 M L J 41=27 Ind Cas 785.

Family arrangements Where parties settled their disputes amicably and each of the contending parties took a share of the properties entered into possession and subsequently dealt with the items allotted to them as their own by selling and mortgaging them, they are estopped from challenging the validity of the settlement Jagdom Sahay v Rupnarain 5 Pat L R 375=1921 P 736. Where an agreement relating to division of family properties is entered into and the parties enter into possession of the properties allotted and occupy it for a long time, they are estopped from setting up their independent rights.

dehors the agreement and from denying the rights of the other parties. Bahadur Singh v. Ram Bahadur, 15 A 277=21 A L J 140=71 Ind Cas 105=1923 A 201. It would not be reasonable, or conducive to the peace and welfare of families to construe acts, done out of kindness and affection, to the disadvantage of the doer of them. Where two surviving brothers constituted a Mitak hira family, and the elder brother naturally and properly treated his younger brother, who had been born deaf and dumb, as a member of the family, and entitled to equal rights until it became absolutely clear that his majesty was menial, held that there was no ground for supposing that the elder brother intended to divest himself of his own property or to waive any rights, accruing to him by reason of his younger brother's incapacity and that there was no principle of law founded on the doctrine of estoppel or laches or the law of limitation or otherwise to hold under the circumstances of the case that the elder brother's acts and conduct had an effect and operation which he could not have intended or contemplated. Lala Muddun Gopal v. Ahluwalia Koer 18 C 341 (P C)=18 I A 9.

One estoppel against another. In the case of one estoppel against another the parties are set free and the Court has to see what their original rights are. Juanlal v. Behari Lal, 152 P W R 1918=15 Ind Cas 69.

Benami. Where a father whether Hindu or Muhammadan purchases a property in the name of one of his sons the ordinary presumption is that it is a benami transaction and not that it is in advancement in favour of the son. Where the vendor from the son in such a case had various indications which should have led him to make inquiries into his vendor's father's claim at the time when the deed was presented for registration he could not urge that the father was estopped by his conduct from setting up a title against him. Ghulam Dastgir v. Tejaswini, 73 P R 1918=159 P W R 1918=47 Ind Cas 367. If parties allow their benamidar to sue in his own name and not in a representative character, they cannot come in on his death under Order 22, rule, 3. Doraisami v. Chidambaram, A I R 1930 Mad 221=53 M L J 18.

Estoppel by election. Where a man has an option to choose one or other of two inconsistent things when once he has made his election, it is final and cannot be retracted. Per Lord Blackburn in Scarf v. Jardine L R 7 App C 360. Quod semel placuit in electionibus, amplius displicere non potest. Co Lit 116 a. A man cannot approbate and reprobate at the same time. Casper on Estoppel p 167, Acrr v. Houchope 1 Bligh 1. 'You cannot both eat your cake and return your cake. Per Crompton J in Clarke v. Dickson, 1 B & E 152. To illustrate the doctrine of election suppose A by Will or deed, gives to B property belonging to C, and by the same instrument gives other property belonging to himself to C, a Court of equity will hold C to be entitled to the gift made to him by A only, upon the implied condition of his conforming with all the provisions of instrument by renouncing the right to his own property in favour of B, he must, consequently make his choice, or, as it is technically termed, he is put to his election, to take either under or against the instrument, if C elects to take under and consequently to conform with all the provisions of, the instrument, no difficulty arises, as B will take C's property, and C will take the property given to him by A, but if C elects to take against the instrument, that is to say, retains his own property and at the same time sets up a claim to the property given to him by A an important question arises whether he thereupon incurs a forfeiture of the whole of the benefit conferred upon him by the instrument, or is merely bound to make compensation out of it to the person who is disappointed by his election. W & F Leading case Vol 1 p 312. It is an obligation imposed upon a party to choose between two inconsistent alternative rights or claims, in cases where there is clear intention of the person, from whom he derives one that he should not enjoy both. Every case of election, therefore presupposes a plurality of gifts or rights, with an intention, express or implied, of the party, who has a right to control one or both, that one should be a substitute for the other. The party who is to take, has a choice, but he cannot enjoy benefits of both. Story Eq Jur § 1077, see also section 35 of the

S 115 Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) and, section 180 of the Succession Act XXXIX of 1925) The doctrine 'says Fry L J in In Re Vardon's Trusts, 31 Ch D 275 (279) rests, not on the particular provisions of the instrument which raises the election but on the presumption of a general intention in the authors of an instrument that effect shall be given to every part of it, the ordinary intent to use the words of Lord Hatherley in Cooper v Cooper, L R 7 H L 53 (71) implied in every man who affects by a legal instrument to dispose of property that he intends all that he has expressed. This general and presumed intention is not repelled by showing that the circumstances, which in the event gave rise to the election were not in the contemplation of the author of the instrument but in principle it is evident that it may be repelled by the declaration in the instrument itself of a particular intention inconsistent with the presumed and general intention."

Estoppel by negligence It is true that there can be no negligence unless there be a duty. Corenthy v The Great Indian Railway Co, 11 Q B D 776. Before any one can be estopped by a representation inferred from negligent conduct, there must be a duty to use due care towards the party misled, or towards the general public of which he is one. Halsbury Vol 13 398, Seton v Lafone 19 Q B D 68. A second essential condition of estoppel by negligence is that the negligence must be in the transaction itself, and a third, which is so closely connected with the second that it is impossible to treat them separately, is that the negligence must not only be calculated to have the misleading effect attributed to it but must be proximate or real cause of that result. Bank of Ireland v Evans Chatterjee in Ireland 5 H L Cas 389 per Parke B, Suan v North British Australian Co 7 H & N 603 633.

Other cases After the right to get either rescission or reformation of the contract is barred, it is not competent to a party to a contract enjoying the benefit under it to say that he is not bound by one of its terms. Sashi Kantia v Genda Sheikh 82 Ind Cas 970 = A I R 1925 Cal 489. Admission in a different proceeding that one had sold the land does not act as estoppel so as to do away with the necessity of registering the document. Maung Po Yin v Maung Tet Tin 86 Ind Cas 205 = A I R 1925 Rang 68. Where a person accepts a gift of property made by a number of donors jointly he cannot afterwards say that some of the donors had no right to make the gift. Keezhanathi Janaki v Gorindan, 80 Ind Cas 546 = A I R 1925 Mad 990. Where a plaintiff accepted the transfer of certain shares from a widow during her lifetime he is estopped from denying the truth of the representation in suit between himself and the representatives of the lady. Mahamed Hasan v Ali Haider, 85 Ind Cas 509 = A I R 19 5 Oudh 337 = 12 O L J 1. Estoppel is purely personal and will not affect others in so far as they claim a title otherwise than through the person primarily. Umam v Puvul 85 Ind Cas 540 = A I R 19 5 Cal 993. A defendant cannot be allowed to set up his own fraud in defence. Where a plaintiff claiming a title by purchase sues for declaration and possession it is not open to the defendant to show that it was the who provided funds for the purchase by means of a fraud on the reversioner to which she and the plaintiff were parties. Iachayammal v Deraniammal, 22 I W 313 = A I R 1925 Mad 1016. A man who has represented to an intending purchaser that he has not a security and induces him under that belief to buy, cannot, as against that purchaser, subsequently attempt to put his security in force. Jia Lal v Sacra Bibi, 99 Ind Cas 2 = A I R 1927 Oudh 104. Although the house of an agriculturist is ordinarily unsaleable, still the conduct of the agriculturist judgment debtor may stop him from pleading that the house is not saleable. Ganga Lishum v Jaymohan 6 P 254 = 102 Ind Cas 616 = 8 Pat L R 563 = A I R 1927 Pat 235. Where the question arose whether a company was liable to be assessed to companies tax by municipality and it appeared that the agent of the company had written a letter to the Municipal Council assuming that the company was liable to be assessed on its profits, held that the company was not estopped from questioning the validity of the assessment by a suit in the civil court. Bombay Co Ltd v Municipal Council of Dindigul 105 Ind Cas 26 = 27 I W 213. Even if the compromise is beneficial to a party a merchant, but he has not taken any benefit out of or under it, that compromise does not constitute an estoppel barring him from challenging it Thiruvath v Anoda Sundari, 103 Ind Crs 11=A I R 1928 Cal 331 Where a person describing himself as the holder of gauth interest purported to grant a permanent lease he will be estopped from asserting his right as a ryot but the purchaser at an execution sale of that person's right and interest who got his name mutated in the sherista of the superior landlord on payment of an enhanced rent is not so estopped Saladhar Mandal v Amrita Lal Roy 105 Ind Crs 611=A I R 1928 Cal 87 A muasid who has mortgaged his muasid plots cannot assert against the mortgagee whom he has created his want of title The case might be different if the Legislature had expressly enacted that in no circumstances would a transfer of muasid land be recognised 5 O W N 515=110 Ind Crs 120=A I R 1925 Oudh 336 A mortgagee cannot deny the mortgagor's title Soubhai v Jagannan, 30 Bom L R 987=A I R 1925 Bom 350 Where a party whose name did not appear in the chitta title by mistake but claiming to be a proper party to a legal proceeding takes step for the purpose of securing some relief from the Court in that capacity, he really becomes estopped from afterwards setting up that he was not in due a party If such a step had been taken without the full knowledge of all the circumstances and without notice of the manner in which the thing had come about, it may be estopped may arise Sutharona Charari v Samarapuri, 110 Ind Crs 837=(1924) M W N 634=A I R 1928 Mad 690 If a person takes possession of certain property as a mutadali and holds possession of it on that basis he cannot afterwards turn round and say that the uaf being void, he was in possession in his own right and claim the property as his own as against the beneficiaries Rukya Bani v Najwa Bani, 55 C 148=32 C W N 248

Where a co-sharer who is also the mul far am of the vendor took part in the sale proceedings in favour of a third person and subsequently he purchased a part of the property from the vendee and the plaintiff sued later to establish his right of pre-emption Held that the mere fact that the co-sharer was a party to the original sale did not estop him from setting up his title under a sale deed as an answer to the plaintiff's claim Bhora Gangi Prasad v Poorani, 26 A L J 89=108 Ind Crs 157 A party having claimed on basis of advantage in commercial speculations cannot claim on another basis when he finds the first is prejudicial to him He cannot both appropriate and reprobate Narman v Madan Gopal 33 C W N 493=19 C L J 337=27 A L J 406=A I R 1929 P C 77 Where a person admits execution before the Registrar after the document has been explained to him, it cannot subsequently be accepted that he was ignorant of the nature of the transaction Sennimalai v Selappa, 33 C W N 107=29 L W 439=111 Ind Crs 568 Where a co-sharer refuses to purchase the property of his other co-sharer, he is estopped from exercising his right of pre-emption Rameswar v Ghisawan Prasad, 27 A L J 665=A I R 1929 All 531 For purposes of estoppel an order by consent not discharged by mutual agreement, and remaining unreduced, is as effective as an order of the Court made otherwise than by consent and not discharged on appeal Charles Hubert v Edward Keith, 118 Ind Crs 7=A I R 1929 (P C) 289=17 M L J 429 (P C) A party who takes advantage under partition is estopped from pleading imputability Narendra v Nagendra 50 C L J 267=A I R 1929 Cal 577 Where a County Court Judge has tried an action which he had no jurisdiction to try and the unsuccessful party appeals the respondent is entitled to raise the point of jurisdiction notwithstanding that it was not raised below and the fact that no objection was taken to the jurisdiction in the county Court does not create any estoppel by conduct Simpson v Crouie (1921) 3 K B 243=90 L J K B 878 Where in prior land requisition proceedings there was a declaration that minerals beneath a particular land could be used by the Government for the purpose of construction of a bridge and the owner of the land received compensation on that footing and after the completion of the bridge he sued for a declaration that he was entitled to the remaining mineral in the land, held, that he was not estopped from asserting such a claim Secretary of State v Gyanendra Chandra, 8 Pat 742 A judgment debtor who agrees to the figure of price which is to be advertised

S 115 for the information of the intending bidders at the preparation of proclamation cannot be heard later or after the plea to plead that the figure was unduly low and the sale should therefore be set aside Romanathan v Ramanathan, 117 Ind Cas 705=30 L W 995 A person creating a charge or a mortgage is estopped from saying that he is not entitled to create the charge or mortgage on the property Shanlar v Ganpat, 31 Bom L R 139=119 Ind Cas 166=1929 Bom 237

A usufructuary mortgagee cannot deny the title of the mortgagor and set up adverse possession unless he actually leaves the holding and enters under a different status Jai Lalandu v Lmao, 119 Ind Cas 568=A I R 1929 All 305

Where a widow makes a gift of her husband's property in her possession as widow, to her daughter and her husband jointly, the daughter's acquiescence for less than 12 years since the death of the widow in the property is not sufficient to deprive her of her reversionary right or sufficient to constitute any ground of estoppel which would dispose of the case Pappammal v Alamelu 119 Ind Cas 153=A I R 1929 Mad 467 If a Hindu reversioner enters into a compromise which amounts to a settlement of a doubtful claim, it is binding on him, even though at the time when he entered into it he was a mere reversioner There is nothing to prevent him from so acting as to estop himself by his own conduct from subsequently claiming a property to which he may succeed Moti Shah v Chandhar Singh 18 A 637=96 Ind Cas 595 Where an order directing the payment of the decree by instalment was passed at the request of the judgment debtor who subsequently acted upon it he is precluded from contending that the order was not binding on him Fielding v The Firm of Janaki Das 95 Ind Cas 243=A I R 1926 Lab 465

A Hindu widow executed a mortgage as guardian of her adopted son subsequently she sold the properties to the plaintiff as her own The plaintiff sued to redeem the mortgage Held that the plaintiff was not estopped from denying that the adopted son and not the widow was the owner Jangayya v Basana 23 L W 367=94 Ind Cas 639=A I R 1926 M 594 The Zamindari rights in a village were mortgaged and the mortgaged right was sold in Court auction and purchased by a third person, subsequently the mortgagee himself took a lease of the properties from the third person In a suit for redemption of the mortgage, held, that the mortgagee was estopped from setting up the plea of tenancy Gauri v Mangla, 7 L R 171 (Rev)=A I R 1926 All 463 As between a mortgagor and his mortgagee, neither can deny the title of the other for the purposes of the mortgage, but the estoppel does not arise in a suit neither based on nor connected with the mortgage Deo Kahi v Ranchoor Bur 92 Ind Cas 19=13 O L J 208=A I R 1926 Oudh 233 Where in case of an alienation a person entitled to challenge it is present at the mutation proceedings and when there is every opportunity of objecting to it, does not object, he cannot challenge the alienation subsequently Ram Sarup v Ram Saran 96 Ind Cas 915=A I R 1926 Lih 650 Where a person purchases certain property in execution of a money decree expressly subject to a mortgage on it and admits the existence of the mortgage it is not subsequently open to him to challenge the mortgage in a suit on the mortgage by the mortgagee Gurindarao v Hurchand 95 Ind Cas 563=A I R 1926 Nag 446 Where the owner of a property keeps quiet when his property is being sold as belonging to the judgment debtor in execution of a decree, though he was aware of the attachment and sale he is estopped from impeaching the sale Jhanda Singh v Hormann Singh 27 P L R 260=A I R 1926 Lab 415 Where the defendant has successfully pleaded in the Small Cause Court, that the suit was one triable by the regular side he ought not to be allowed when the suit is filed on the regular side to turn round and plead that it ought to have been filed in the Small Cause Court Aartar Singh v Aanda, 95 Ind Cas 846=A I R 1926 All 664 Where a lease is taken on the understanding that it would be for the benefit of the local public and thus formed part of the consideration for the lease the lessees cannot afterwards turn round and claim an absolute interest in the lands leased and deny rights to the public Peary Lal v Surendra Nath, 88 Ind Cas 505=A I R 1925 Cal 1233 A mere undertaking may operate

as an estoppel, though it may not amount to a contract Shailesh Chandra v Bechan Gope, 84 Ind Cas 121=A I R 1925 Cal 91. Where mortgisor entered into agreement before final decree to pay higher interest to get extension of time, he is estopped in an application by the mortgagee for execution of the agreement, from contending that the agreement could not be enforced in execution Subramania v Corera, 86 Ind Cas 723=48 M L J 121. There can be no estoppel in favour of a party who was not misled except by his own ignorance of the law Imjad v Ashraf, 20 W N 83=87 Ind Cas 445=A I R 1925 Oudh 568. A person is not precluded from setting up an inconsistent case in a subsequent litigation. The contention put forward in the previous suit in support of a legal argument cannot by itself become a foundation for any estoppel Shyama Bai v Purushotham Das, 21 L W 551=90 Ind Cas 124=A I R 1925 Mad 645. A person is not precluded from setting up an inconsistent case in a subsequent litigation. The contention put forward in the previous suit in support of a legal argument cannot by itself become a foundation for any estoppel—Shyama Bai v Purushotham Das 21 L W 551=90 Ind Cas 421=A I R 1925 Mad 645. A party to a submission to arbitration through Court can question the validity of the arbitration proceedings on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction to refer to arbitration Puanu v Sona Wangdi, 52 C 559=42 C L J 26=29 C W N 886=87 Ind Cas 633=A I R 1921 Cal 812. The person to whom a notice has been given to the effect that a property is going to be sold and who intimates his refusal to purchase can not be allowed, after the sale has been made after his refusal, to turn round and seek to enforce his right of pre-emption through the Court. The doctrine of estoppel applies to all sorts of cases including pre-emption cases Don Mahomed v Bunt Zohra, 87 Ind Cas 414.

A person is not entitled to give an undertaking to a criminal Court to abstain from certain action to go and file a civil suit for declaration that the undertaking given by him was of no effect. Ramsaran v Seo Pratab, 85 Ind Cas 756=A I R 1925 All 605. Where the vendee under a contract for sale of immovable property stated to the vendor that his (the vendee's) money was ready and that the title deed was being engrossed and where those two matters alone were wanting to complete the sale and where the vendor gave five days notice to the vendee to complete the sale, the vendee was estopped from denying the truth of his statements Motulal v Haji Moosa, 41 C L J 334=89 Ind Cas 440=27 Bom L R 814.

Where a prior vendee induced a subsequent vendee to believe that notwithstanding prior sale deed the vendor continued to be owner and to purchase property in that belief he is estopped from claiming priority under his sale deed Mohamed v Arunachellam 1925 M W N 396=90 Ind Cas 875=A I R 1926 Mad 39=49 M L J 496. The entries in the settlement Record may amount to an admission but they do not amount to estoppel Malhanlal v Pitamber L h 6 All 22 (Rev). If a man obtains possession of land claiming under a deed or Will, he cannot afterwards set up another title to the land against the Will or deed though it did not operate to pass the land in question and if he remains in possession till 12 years have elapsed and the title of his testator's heir is extinguished, he cannot claim by possession and interest in the property different from that which he could have taken if the property had passed by the Will or deed Jogeswar v Pandurang 7 N L J 82=73 Ind Cas 840=A I R 1924 Nag 73. Where there is a contract for sale no decree for possession can be given unless the title is completed by a registered deed and an agreement between parties to call the land cannot act as estoppel so as to do away with the necessity for registered deed of the transfer where the statute expressly requires it Maung Poyin v Maung Tut Fer 2 Rang 159=1925 Rang 68. Dharam Chand v Marji Sahu 16 C L J 436. Mahra Mohan v Ram Kumar 20 C W N 307. But an undertaking may operate as an estoppel though in the absence of consideration it cannot amount to a contract. Situations may arise in which a contract should be held to be an estoppel as in cases where only an adequate right of action would exist in favour of the injured party if estoppel were not allowed. In such a case estoppel may sometimes be available to prevent fraud Shailesh Chandra v Bechan Gope 40 C L J 67=1925 Cal 91.

S 115

for the information of the intending bidders at the preparation of proclamation cannot be heard later or after the sale to plead that the figure was unduly low and the sale should therefore be set aside Romanathan v Ramanathan, 117 Ind Cas 705=30 L W 995 A person creating a charge or a mortgage is estopped from saying that he is not entitled to create the charge or mortgage on the property Shanlar v Ganpal, 11 Bom L R 139=119 Ind Cas 156=1929 Bom 227

A usufructuary mortgagee cannot deny the title of the mortgagor and set up adverse possession unless he actually leaves the holding and enters under a different status Jai Nandan v Lmiao, 119 Ind Cas 568=A I R 1929 All 305

Where a widow makes a gift of her husband's property in her possession as widow, to her daughter and her husband jointly, the daughter's acquiescence for less than 12 years since the death of the widow in the property is not sufficient to deprive her of her reversionary right or sufficient to constitute any ground of estoppel which would dispose of the case Pappammal v Alamelu 119 Ind Cas 152=A I R 1929 Mad 467 If a Hindu reversioner enters into a compromise which amounts to a settlement of a doubtful claim, it is binding on him, even though at the time when he entered into it he was a mere reversioner. There is nothing to prevent him from so acting, as to estop himself by his own conduct from subsequently claiming a property to which he may succeed Moti Shah v Chandhar Singh, 18 V 637=96 Ind Cas 595 Where an order directing the payment of the decree by instalment was passed at the request of the judgment debtor who subsequently acted upon it he is precluded from contending that the order was not binding on him Fielding v The Firm of Janaki Das 95 Ind Cas 243=A I R 1926 Lah 465

A Hindu widow executed a mortgage as guardian of her adopted son subsequently she sold the properties to the plaintiff as her own. The plaintiff sued to redeem the mortgage. Held that the plaintiff was not estopped from denying that the adopted son and not the widow was the owner Rangayya v Basanu 23 L W 367=94 Ind Cas 639=A I R 1926 M 594 The Zamindari rights in a village were mortgaged and the mortgaged right was sold in Court auction and purchased by a third person, subsequently the mortgagee himself took a lease of the properties from the third person. In a suit for redemption of the mortgage held, that the mortgagee was estopped from setting up the plea of tenancy Gauri v Mangla 7 L R 171 (Rev)=A I R 1926 All 463 As between a mortgagor and his mortgagee neither can deny the title of the other for the purposes of the mortgage, but the estoppel does not arise in a suit neither based on nor connected with the mortgage Deo Kahi v Ranchoor Bux 92 Ind Cas 19=13 O L J 208=A I R 1926 Oudh 203 Where in case of an alienation, a person entitled to challenge it is present at the mutation proceedings and when there is every opportunity of objecting to it, does not object, he cannot challenge the alienation subsequently Rani Sarup v Rani Saran 96 Ind Cas 915=A I R 1926 Lah 650 Where a person purchases certain property in execution of a money decree expressly subject to a mortgage on it and admits the existence of the mortgage it is not subsequently open to him to challenge the mortgage in a suit on the mortgage by the mortgagee Gorindoo v Huchand, 95 Ind Cas 563=A I R 1926 Nag 446 Where the owner of a property keeps quiet when his property is being sold as belonging to the judgment debtor in execution of a decree though he was aware of the attachment and sale he is estopped from impeaching the sale Jhanda Singh v Hornam Singh 27 P I R 260=A I R 1926 Lah 415 Where the defendant has successfully pleaded in the Small Cause Court that the suit was one triable by the regular side he ought not to be allowed when the suit is filed on the regular side to turn round and plead that it ought to have been filed in the Small Cause Court Kantar Singh v Nanda, 95 Ind Cas 846=A I R 1926 All 661 Where a lease is taken on the understanding that it would be for the benefit of the local public and thus formed part of the consideration for the lease the lessor cannot afterwards turn round and claim an absolute interest in the lands leased and deny rights to the public Peari Lal v Surendra Nath, 88 Ind Cas 505=A I R 1925 Cal 1233 A mere undertaking may operate as an estoppel, though it may not amount to a contract. Shailesh Chandra v Bechari Gope, 84 Ind Cis 134=A I R 1925 CIL 91 Where mortgagor entered into agreement before final decree to pay higher interest to get extension of time, he is estopped in an application by the mortgagee for execution of the agreement, from contending that the agreement could not be enforced in execution. Subramania v Corera, 86 Ind Cis 723=48 M L J 121 There can be no estoppel in favour of a party who was not misled except by his own ignorance of the law. Amjad v Ashraf, 3 O W N 83=87 Ind Cis 445=A I R 1925 Oudh 568 A person is not precluded from setting up an inconsistent case in a subsequent litigation. The contention put forward in the previous suit in support of a legal argument cannot by itself become a foundation for any estoppel. Shyama Bai v Purushotham Das, 21 L W 551=90 Ind Cis 124=A I R 1925 Mad 645 A person is not precluded from setting up an inconsistent case in a subsequent litigation. The contention put forward in the previous suit in support of a legal argument cannot by itself become a foundation for any estoppel—Shyama Bai v Purushotham Das 21 L W 551=90 Ind Cas 424=A I R 1925 Mad 645 A party to a submission to arbitration through Court can question the validity of the arbitration proceedings on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction to refer to arbitration. Puany v Sona Wangdi, 52 C 559=42 C L J 26=29 C W N 866=87 Ind Cis 633=A I R 1927 Cal 812 The person to whom a notice has been given to the effect that a property is going to be sold and who intimates his refusal to purchase can not be allowed, after the sale has been made after his refusal, to turn round and seek to enforce his right of pre-emption through the Court. The doctrine of estoppel applies to all sorts of cases including pre-emption cases. Don Mahomed v Bunt Zohra, 57 Ind Cas 414

A person is not entitled to give an undertaking to a criminal Court to abstain from certain action to go and file a civil suit for declaration that the undertaking given by him was of no effect. Ramsaran v Seo Pratab 35 Ind Cis 556=A I R 1925 All 605 Where the vendee under a contract for sale of immovable property stated to the vendor that his (the vendee's) money was ready and that the title deed was being engrossed and where those two matters alone were wanting to complete the sale and where the vendor gave five days notice to the vendee to complete the sale, the vendee was estopped from denying the truth of his statements. Motilal v Haji Moora, 41 C L J 334=83 Ind Cis 440=27 Bom L R 814

Where a prior vendee induced a subsequent vendee to believe that, notwithstanding prior sale deed, the vendor continued to be owner and to purchase property in that belief, he is estopped from claiming priority under his sale deed. Mohamed v Kunachellam 1925 M W N 596=90 Ind Cis 875=A I R 1926 Mad 39=49 M L J 396 The entries in the settlement Record may amount to an admission but they do not amount to estoppel. Mahantlal v Putamberi, L R 6 All 22 (Rev) If a man obtains possession of land claiming under a deed or Will, he cannot afterwards set up another title to the land against the Will or deed though it did not operate to pass the land in question and if he remains in possession till 12 years have elapsed and the title of his testator or heir is extinguished he cannot claim by possession and interest in the property different from that which he could have taken if the property had passed by the Will or deed. Jogeswar v Pandurang 7 N L J 82=78 Ind Cis 840=A I R 1924 Nag 73 Where there is a contract for sale no decree for possession can be given unless the title is completed by a registered deed and an agreement between parties to sell the land cannot net as estoppel so as to do away with the necessity for a registered deed of the transfer where the statute expressly requires it. Mauzy Poyin v Mung Tit Fei 2 Rang 459=1925 Rang 68 Dharam Chand v Marji Salu 16 C L J 436, Mahra Mohan v Ram Kumar 20 C W N 307 But an undertaking may operate as an estoppel though in the absence of consideration it cannot amount to a contract. Situations may arise in which a contract should be held to be an estoppel as in cases where only an adequate right of action would exist in favour of the injured party if estoppel were not allowed. In such a case estoppel may sometimes be available to prevent fraud. Shailesh Chandra v Bechari Gope 40 C L J 67=1925 Cal 94

S 115

The donee of a property is not estopped from contending that the property does not belong to the donor but was all along his own property Rudha Kishen v Moolchand, 76 Ind Cas 128=1925 Lih 37 Where the parties to an arbitration sign the award and as a result thereof one of them withdraws a suit which he would otherwise have prosecuted the other party is estopped from contesting the validity of the award Monoharlal v Mt Amana 77 Ind Cas 41

It cannot be said that a Mahomedan tenant in common can be held to be represented by another Mahomedan tenant in common merely because their interests are identical Karim Baksh v Wahaj Uddin 46 A 214=L R 5 A 5 (Rev)=22 A L J 73-75 Ind Cas 1035 A mortgagor is estopped from pleading in a suit on the mortgage that he had no title to the property at the date of the document But if the mortgagee is proved to be well aware of the actual facts as regards the mortgagor's title to the property the plea of estoppel is not available to him Fulnam v Tularam 1924 Nag 363 Where the alienee from a Hindu father applied to mutation of names and the son on being examined in the proceedings did not object to alienation he is thereafter estopped from challenging the same as he must be deemed to have represented that it was a valid alienation Sheodin v Haibullah 1924 All 721 Where a person gets another's name recorded as owner of a moiety of the property and on the faith of that another purchases it in auction sale the former can not later on claim ownership of the same Nathu Lal v Anand 21 A L J 498=L R 4 A 505=74 Ind Cas 911 A dispute under s 145 Cr Pro Code relates only to possession of the properties and consequently a compromise of the proceedings does not estop a party from denying the title of the other Gopi Das v Madho Lal 45 A 162=1923 All 77=22 A I J 932

In order to maintain a plea of estoppel in a pre-emption suit it must be proved that the plaintiff believed the representation made and brought his suit on the basis of it Banke Behari Lal v Manna Lal, 73 Ind Cas 372 Where the mortgage deed clearly purports to be executed by the mortgagor as the proprietor of the property in his own interest he is estopped from denying the interest which he represented as his own proprietary right in the deed By Tarun v Raghunandan, 71 Ind Cas 944=(1923) Pat 49

Where a co-sharer had been allowed by other sharers to treat certain land as his exclusive holding and he grants a perpetual lease of a small portion of the land so as to confer occupancy right on the tenant and at a subsequent partition the land was allotted to another co-sharer held that the co-sharer was estopped from disputing the title of the occupancy tenant to the land Iqbal Singh v Munshi L R 4 A 54=90 & A L R 435

Even where the mortgagors are trustees acting in a public capacity and not for their own benefit, they are estopped from denying their title and cannot set up as a defence against the mortgagee that the property so mortgaged is trust property which the mortgagors had no right to mortgage By Ratan v Raghunand, 1 Pat L R 225=4 Pat L R 457

In a suit for rent defendant objected to the non inclusion of certain plots whereupon plaintiff included the same reserving right to sue upon title afterwards He then brought a suit in ejectment based on title Held that there was no estoppel by conduct Choudhury Ham Prosad v Ram Chandar, 4 Pat L R 730 A statement in the Court of an Assistant Collector during the mutation proceedings to the effect that the plaintiff and two others were in possession of the property in equal shares and that mutation of names may be made accordingly, does not prevent the plaintiff from asserting his right to the entire property in Civil Court subsequently Lamratan v Bindu 90 & A I R 20=72 Ind Cas 832 Where in execution of a money decree the decree holder under a bonafide mistake brought to sale certain of his own properties as those of his judgment-debtor and the sale was confirmed and delivery of possession was made to the purchaser held that the decree holder was estopped from setting up his own title to the properties as against the auction purchaser notwithstanding the fact that the mistake was bonafide Ram Swami v Anant Lal Choudhary, 151 W 272=1922 M W N 121 Though a lease of joint family property was actually executed by two out of three brothers still it was found that the other brother was acting, in concert and in the same interest with the executors of the lease. In the circumstances the brother who did not join in the lease was estopped from disputing the validity of the same. Raja Ram v Ram Kichay, L R 3 A 81=65 Ind Cas 577. Where in execution of a decree against several persons, a certain property was attached and sold to that of one of the judgment-debtors, and the others though they had knowledge of the proceedings and were present at the sale raised no objections whatever and even allowed the sale to be confirmed, they are estopped from bringing a suit against the auction purchaser for possession of the property on the ground that they had interest in the same. Abdul v Mahammad, 67 Ind Cas 797. Where a purchaser assumes liability for the discharge of certain mortgages on the property and receives consideration therefor, he is bound by them. Alla Datta v Gan Singh, 4 Lah. L J 451. When in rent receipts given by the agent of the Zemindar, the tenants are described as occupancy tenants, in the absence of evidence to show that the agent had power to confer occupancy rights, the Zemindar is not estopped from asserting that the tenants had no occupancy rights. Hamla v Misra, L R 3 A 517. One out of two plaintiffs joined in an application with the defendant to the Court, for the case to be referred to arbitration. On the next day G R the other plaintiff made an oral application before the Court to the effect that he accepted the arbitration. The arbitration lasted for over a year and G R conducted the proceedings throughout on behalf of the plaintiffs. An award was duly filed but G R objected to it on the ground that he had not signed the original application to the Court for an order of reference. G R was held estopped by his own action from raising any objection as to the legality of the arbitration proceedings on account of the want of his writing. Gauri Shankar v Gangaram, 77 P R 1919=52 Ind Cas 859.

Where a mortgagee on inquiry by an intending vendee gives him the exact amount due on his mortgage and the latter acts on this information and returns that amount out of the purchase money for paying off the mortgage, the mortgagee is estopped from recovering any larger amount from the vendee. Secretary v Punjab National Bank Ltd, 111 P R 1919. When a mortgagee takes a mortgage from a person in possession and obtains possession from him, he is not permitted to question the mortgagor's title. Surendranath v Khulendra Mohan, 29 C L J 434=52 Ind Cas 59. A mortgagee brought a suit for possession of the mortgaged property against a person whom he treated as the successor of the original mortgagor and obtained a decree, subsequently when the said representative of the mortgagor sued the mortgagee for redemption of the mortgage, the mortgagee is estopped from disputing his right to represent the original mortgagor. Gound v Chokke, 49 Ind Cas 356.

A person seeking to create title to real property by estoppel must satisfy the Court that he had neither actual nor constructive notice of the title of the real owner and had not before him any circumstances which could put him on reasonable equity to find out the truth. The Evidence Act affords no definition of estoppel to dispense with the necessity of the purchaser making a reasonable enquiry. Venkatarama v Venkatarama 50 Ind Cas 969=9 L W 318=(1919) M W N 180. The trustee of a temple, who, for his own private purposes, mortgages land which is afterwards sold in Court auction at the instance of the mortgagee, can sue on behalf of the temple to recover the land lord's interest, which was dedicated to the temple, and is not estopped from setting up a claim against a bona fide purchaser for value that it is trust property. Yasim Sahib v Ekanbera Aiyar, 37 M L J 698=26 M L T 111=10 L W 672=54 Ind Cas 497. Where a person by his conduct in a redemption suit had elected to affirm the sale and to act upon it he is estopped from suing for the cancellation of the sale of equity of redemption on the ground of fraud. Chanham v Behari Lal, 52 Ind Cas 513. Where a person purchases property subject to a mortgage he is not by that sole fact estopped from disputing the validity of or the consideration of the mortgage. Bala Prasad v Surun Singh, 28 P W R. 1919=49 Ind Cas 997. It is not open to the lessee of a mortgagor in a suit brought for his ejectment by the auction purchaser in execution of a decree on the mortgage, to question the validity of the mortgage. Sashi Bhusan v Deb Nath, 60 Ind. Cas 705.

S 115 Where parties enter into a binding agreement by which they give up certain rights, which they allege they have, in consideration of certain proceedings in Court being brought to an end, they cannot thereafter allege the continuing existence of those rights Mahomed Ibrahim v Chandan Singh, 63 Ind Cas 727

The fact that permanent structures are constructed on the lands of the defendant to the knowledge of the plaintiff would not estop him from denying the permanent character of the tenancy of the defendants Onkar Mal v Secretary of State, 56 Ind Cas 813 But where the plaintiff having, by his conduct permitted the defendants to believe that they would have the right of using the water of a well if they would repair it and the defendants relying upon the permission had acted upon the belief that they would be entitled to that right the plaintiff was estopped from denying the right of the defendants under s 115 of the Evidence Act Ananta Murarid v Guvn Nitha 22 Bom L R 415=57 Ind Cas 143 A dispute was settled by arbitration Subsequently two of the arbitrators purchased the interest of one of the parties to the dispute and sought to upset the arrangement arrived at as a result of the arbitration In the circumstances they were estopped from doing so Budhai Singh v Karan Singh, 55 Ind Cas 506 When a person appeared at the time of the mutation in respect of the sale in dispute and expressed his consent to it he cannot subsequently come forward to impugn it Muhammad v Wah, 2 Lin L J 306 Where some of the mortgagees led a subsequent purchaser of a portion of the mortgaged property and a puisne mortgagee of the remainder to believe that the whole property was unencumbered they were precluded by the doctrine of estoppel from setting up their rights under the prior mortgage against the subsequent transferees and the effect of the estoppel was to postpone them in respect of their share of the original debt to the puisne mortgagees Sakhmuddin v Somaulla, 22 C W N 641 After settlement of account a party is estopped from suing for an item as being omitted U B R (1892 1896) Vol II, 387

Where in an application to execute a decree which provides for no interest, the decree-holder puts in a prayer as to the award of interest and the judgment-debtor accepting his liability to pay the decretal debt as well as interest obtains from time to time adjournments from the Court to enable him to pay the amount he (the judgment debtor) cannot at a later stage of the proceedings dispute the item of interest and is bound to pay interest from the date on which he admitted his liability to pay interest Narayan v Raoji, 6 Bom L R 417=28 B 393

A party cannot take benefit of a transaction and at the same time repudiate it when the transaction is one and indivisible Where the property of a judgment debtor is sold in execution of a decree and the sale proceeds go in satisfaction of the decree, and the judgment debtor accepts the payment of the decree he cannot impeach a part of the sale Annapurnabai v Ramchandra, 13 Ind Cas 178

Where two persons embark upon a joint adventure for the purpose of extinguishing a prior mortgage and taking a first charge on the property, it is the legal duty of each to inform his co-mortgagee within a reasonable time that he had still an outstanding claim under the prior mortgage and the omission to give the information amounts to such an omission as is contemplated by s 115 of the Evidence Act and operates as estoppel, Pandurang v Narayan 44 Ind Cas 317

A judgment-debtor got in execution sale postponed on undertaking that he would not raise any objection on the ground of regularity or irregularity After the sale took place on the postponed date he applied to set it aside on the ground of its illegality or irregularity of which he was cognizant at the time he gave his undertaking Held that he could not be allowed to impeach the sale Lakshmi Prasanna v Rajendar, 17 Ind Cas 531

A party should not be allowed to take up a position inconsistent with that on which he has succeeded in defeating a claim in a previous proceeding brought to enforce it Basil Hegan v Sayyad Mirza, 21 O C 188=47 Ind Cas 553 A landlord who withdraws the amount deposited by the transferee of a non-transferable holding to set aside its sale under s 310 A of the C P Code of 1882 without raising any objection, cannot plead subsequently that the transferee did not, by his purchase acquire a valid title to the holding Gadadhar v Vidnapur Zemindary 27 C L J 385=43 Ind Cas 742 Where the plaintiff had in a prior suit brought against him by the defendant agreed to give up possession of the land in dispute to the defendant by a deed of compromise, the deed of compromise executed by the plaintiff in the earlier suit operated as a relinquishment of his right, title and interest in the land, and he is estopped from alleging that he had a subsisting title to it Chhanga v Phumman, 46 Ind Cas 7

A person who accepts a position conferred on him or her by a Will cannot at the same time repudiate so much of the Will as conveys an interest to another person Durga Das v Ishar Chandra, 41 C 145 Section 72 of the Contract Act should be read subject to the law of estoppel Solomon Jacob v The National Bank of India Ltd 19 Bom L R 789 The delay of nearly five years prior to the suit for rescission of contract on the ground of defect in title of plaintiff's vendors and onerous covenants is highly prejudicial to the defendant's vendors, especially when the plaintiff was previously seeking to enforce the contract against his vendees notwithstanding the defects Plaintiff's conduct in enforcing the contract against his vendee and laches of five years work out an estoppel against him and equally debar him from enforcing his claim Sorabji v Tarachand, A I R 1930 Sind 66 A purchaser at a Court sale buys a property with all risks and with all defects in the judgment-debtor's title except where it is found that the latter has no saleable interest at all The object of notifying the encumbrance is to warn the purchaser that he is buying the property subject to the claim which may be put forward against the property but it does not mean that the encumbrance charge or any other claim against the property has been established In connection, therefore, with the sale of immovable property subject to an encumbrance the auction purchaser is entitled to contest the factum and the validity of the encumbrance There is no rule of estoppel which can prevent him from impeaching the charge on the property Mt Man Kiam v Ishar Das A I R 1930 Lah 40, see also Iatunissa v Parlab Singh 31 A 583=36 Ind Cas 203 (P C) Aqa Sultan v Mohabbat Khan, A I R 1921 All 79=43 A 489, Ganesh Moheshwar v Puroshotam 33 B 311=11 Bom L R 26 Narayan v Umbor, 35 B 275=13 Bom L R 307=10 Ind Cas 913 The fact that after the death of the successful pre-emptor the vendor himself has become the legal representative is not enough to estop the latter from taking the benefit of the decree Brindaban v Durag Singh, A I R 1920 All 220

116 No tenant of immovable property, or person claiming through such tenant, shall, during the continuance of the tenancy, be permitted to deny that the landlord of such tenant had, at the beginning of the tenancy, a title to such immovable property, and no person who came upon any immovable property by the license of the person in possession thereof shall be permitted to deny that such person had a title to such possession at the time when such license was given

Estoppel of tenant,
and of licensee of person
in possession

Principle 'Where a man having no title obtains possession of land under a devise by a man in possession who assumes to give him a title as tenant he cannot deny his landlord's title That is a perfectly intelligible doctrine He took possession under a contract to pay rent as long as he held possession under the landlord, and to give it up at the end of the term to the landlord and having taken it in that way he is not allowed to say that the man who gave title he admits and under whose title he took possession has not a title That is a well established doctrine That is estoppel by contract' Per Jessel M R in his re Stranger's Estate, L R 6 Ch D 9, 10 In Cooke v Lozley 5 T R 4 Lord Kenyon C J said "Conforming to the uniform decisions in all the cases upon this subject,

S 116 Rule at the trial, and continue to entertain the same opinion, that in an action for use and occupation it ought not to be permitted to a tenant, who occupies land by the license of another, to call upon the other to show the title under which he let the land. This is not a mere technical rule, but is founded in public convenience and policy. And the only question is whether that rule shall still prevail if it do it applies equally strongly to the present case as to all others. Here the defendant who occupied the land, did so by the permission of the plaintiff, and then refused to pay his rent under an idea that he might contest the plaintiff's right but the plaintiff could not be supposed to come to trial prepared to meet such a defence and to make out his title, such an action as the present does not involve the question of title. In the same case Grose J said "It has been said that the rule of not giving in evidence nil habuit in tenements in an action for use and occupation is a technical rule but in my opinion, no rule is better founded in justice and policy than this. The general rule is admitted that in such an action as this the tenant cannot dispute the landlord's title, and no exception to it has been shown applicable to this case." "The principle is that a tenant shall not contest his landlord's title on the contrary, it is his duty to defend it. If he objects to such title, let him go out of possession." Per Lord C J in Doe dem Manton v Austin 9 Bing Rep 41

Scope of the section. The estoppel of a tenant is one of the most noticeable instances of estoppel by conduct. Similar cases of estoppel arise of bailees licensees and agents who cannot deny the title of the bailors licensors or principals after having acknowledged them by their dealings. Coelle Cas Ex 53. By this section a tenant is only precluded "during the continuance of the tenancy," from denying that the landlord had "at the beginning of the tenancy," a title to the property, the subject of the tenancy. The words of the section leave it open to the tenant to show that his landlord's title has expired subsequently. Dalalushaba v Abat Amrita 11 Bom L R 1093. In the same case Batchelor J in delivering his judgment said "The law on this branch of estoppel is contained in s 116 of the Evidence Act which in express terms limits the unassailability of the landlord's title of the continuance of the tenancy, and during the continuance of that the tenant is not permitted to deny that his landlord had a good title at the beginning of the tenancy. These words leave it open to the tenant to show that his landlord's title has expired and in these respects the Evidence Act followed what has long been the law in England see for instance Delany v Fox 2 C B N S 768 and Neave v Moss 1 Bing 60. And that this is the clear meaning of the section has been accepted in India. Ammu v Ram Krishna Sastri, 2 M 266 and Subbaraya v Krishnappa 12 M 422. So the tenant is not estopped from showing that the title of his landlord has expired since the tenancy commenced or that the land in question is not comprised in the lease. There is no inconsistency in holding the land and at the same time proving such matter. Coelle Cas Ex 53. A tenant cannot allege that his landlord has only an equitable interest. Francis v Doe d Horley 4 M & W 331, Dolby v Hes 11 Ad & El 335, Board v Board L R 9 Q B 53 per Blackburn J. A tenant who takes premises from lessors as trustees of the joint estate of two persons, is estopped from alleging that they are trustees for only one of them. Fleming v Gooding 10 Bing 549. Two conditions require to be satisfied to create that consideration upon which the estoppel is founded. Possession must be given to the tenant and the tenant must take possession by landlord's permission. Bigelow on Estoppel, 5th Ed 509. Casperz on Estoppel p 100. The principle upon which such cases rest is one of the broadest in the law to wit, that one who has received property or money from another shall not dispute the title of that person or his right to do what he has done. Bigelow on Estoppel 5th Ed 545. In Doe d Knight v Smythe 4 M & S 348 at p 349 Dampier J said

The tenant in possession paid rent to the lessor and then disclaimed. But he ought to give back the possession to the lessor, and after that the defendant may have her ejectment. It has been ruled often that neither the tenant nor any one claiming by him, can controvert the landlord's title. He cannot put another person in possession, he must deliver up the premises to his own landlord. This I believe, has been the rule for the last twenty five year, and as I remember was so laid down by Buller J upon the western circuit" That case was decided in 1815 So this rule is not a very ancient one See also Doe d Bristow v Pegge, 1 T R 758

Where a person entitled as co partner made a lease of the whole land, the tenant, after having entered and paid rent, was estopped from denying that the heir and privy in blood to the lessor was entitled to the whole Weeks v Birch (1894) 69 L T 759 In ejectment by a superior landlord against a lessee the latter cannot dispute the title of the former (Barwick d Mayor of Richmond v Thompson 7 T R 483, and where an intermediate landlord is introduced, the lessee, if he has occupied with notice of the lease to such landlord cannot question his title Rennie v Robinson, 1 Bing 147 The relation of landlord and tenant is also virtually created so far as the question of estoppel is concerned, where a party enters into possession of land under a contract to purchase it, and such a person until ousted or disturbed in possession by one having a paramount title, will not be permitted in an action for possession by the party under whom he entered to get up a title inconsistent with his Bigelow on Estoppel 5th Ed pp 545 547 But this section does not debar one, who has once been a tenant from contending that the title of his landlord has been lost or his tenancy has been determined It precludes him only during the continuance of the tenancy from "contending that his landlord had not title at the commencement of the tenancy Inamu v Ramkrishna, 2 M 226 In a suit to eject a tenant holding over after the expiration of his lease, it is not incumbent to the tenant to set up that his landlord the plaintiff holds under an invalid lakheraj tenure and that the zemindar and not the plaintiff is entitled to the land Mohesh Chunder v Gooroo Pershad Mbrsh 337=2 Hry 473 So also where the plaintiff sued to recover possession of a house from the defendants alleging that they were his tenants under a lease which he had granted to them and that though the term of the lease had expired, they refused to vacate, the defendants having pressed the Kabuliyat to plaintiff could not be heard to deny the latter's title as ground for refusing to give up possession Patel v Hargovan, 19 B 133 Plaintiff alleging a purchase of land from A and B and that he afterwards granted them a Patta and retained them in possession, sued to recover possession on the ground of the tenancy having expired He tendered in evidence a consent decree obtained against B for arrears of rent Held that the decree worked no estoppel against B by virtue of s 116 of the Evidence Act and did not relieve the plaintiff for the necessity of proving his case completely Soldar Mondal v Vilcomal 1 C L R 328 Two persons mortgaged certain property, and five years later joined with another person in executing a lease of certain lands including a portion of the mortgaged property In a suit on the mortgage to which the lessee was made a party defendant, it was held that the lessee was not owing to the lessor taken by him five years after estopped from showing that the mortgagors were not, at the date of the lease, entitled to the whole of the property comprised in the mortgage Prasanna Kumar Sen v Mahabarat 7 C W N 575 A person who obtained possession of property from another is estopped from denying the title of that other to the property at the time he was so let into possession But where the defendant obtained possession of certain property under a rental agreement from one S who was the manager of certain charity to which the said property was attached held that the defendant was not estopped from showing that S although he was entitled to manage the property, was incapable of disposing of it by Will and that therefore the executors appointed under the Will had no title to the property R Vaidyanada v Subramania, 4 L W 349 A co-sharer landlord purchased the holding of the tenant at a rent sale in execution of a decree for his own share of the rent and resettled the whole holding with the same tenant He did not secure to the tenant peaceful possession of the whole holding The principle of equitable estoppel has no application to a case like this Nora Narayana v Kali Mohan, 43 Ind Cas 47 A tenant in possession cannot even after the expiration of the tenancy, deny his landlord's title without actually and openly surrendering possession to him Malham Singh v Larshahh Ramshah 50 Ind Cas 591 (37 Ind Cas 7 21 C L J 163 23 C W N 1335 33 Ind Cas 97, 37 All 557 foll), see also Elloba Govindshet v Dayaram, 22

S 116. Bom L R 82=55 Ind C 353, Mah Lalsh v Lal Khan 67 Ind C 363, see also Mahomed v Ubeon, 89 Ind C 390=12 O L J 501, Mahomed v Zahnuddin, 101 Ind C 771, Puudlik v Urluda, 97 Ind C 992, Dayalal v Ko Lon, 6 Rung 637, Sidil v Mahomed 21 S L R 185, Verlannes v Robinson A I R 1928 Rung 162. A person who executes a lease in favour of another, is estopped from denying that other's title to grant the lease. It is immaterial whether he was the tenant of some other person before the execution of the lease Chandoo v Purbhoo, 59 Ind C 707. A person entering into a covenant in his habluyat is bound to recognise rights so recorded even if such rights were incorrectly recorded and had no real existence. Mednapore Zemindari Co Ltd v Nates Narain, 38 C L J 317=63 Ind C 161, Samsuddin v Aga Syed, 9 O & A L R 1041.

A tenant is not estopped from questioning the title of a landlord from the mere fact that he had paid rent to him as the recorded Malquzar. Seth Sujun Chand v Lala Chhababham, 18 N L R 11=1922 Nag 60. Entries in revenue records as tenant for a long time raises a presumption of correctness which has to be rebutted but tenants are not entitled to a declaration under s 42 of the Specific Relief Act of his title as regards the land. M T Jai Kuar v Lallu 4 Lah L J 207=(1922) J 14 163. Where rent is paid but not under circumstances which would establish a relationship as between the parties of landlord and tenant the tenant is not estopped from showing that the person to whom he paid the rent is not the landlord. Abdul Rajjal v Promada Sundari, 80 Ind C 22. Tenant in possession prior to lease also is estopped. Meal Ram v Ali Bhok A I R 1925 J 14 60. Where a tenant takes land from one person but after him pays rent to another he is not estopped from disputing title of that other. Abdul Rajjal v Promada Sundari A I R 1925 Cal 482. Where a property is leased by a person without title to it and the lessee is ejected by the true owner it is not open to the lessee in a suit by his lessor against him to deny the plaintiff's title. Mohi Lal v Yar Mahomed, 47 A 63=85 Ind C 756=A I R 1925 All 275.

Though the tenancy may be continuing it is quite open to the tenant to plead and show that his liability to pay rent has wholly or partially or for a time ceased. Such a plea does not amount to disputing the landlord's title but is really one of confession and avoidance. One such plea is that of non liability to pay the rent on the ground that the lessor's title has been defeated by a title paramount. In the case of complete eviction it is not quite easy to see the distinction as the question of continuance of the tenancy and the question of eviction by title paramount terminating the liability to pay the rent would go hand in hand. But in the case of a partial eviction demanding not suspension but abatement of rent the distinction is quite apparent. An attornment to a third person is a disclaimer but 'attornment' in the sense in which the word is used in English Law is not a mere agreement in favour of a third party to pay rent but has been defined as the act of the tenant putting one person in the place of another as his landlord. Jogendra Lal v Mahesh Chandra, 55 C 1013=32 C W N 559=112 Ind C 173=47 C L J 387. Where the rights of the vendors of the plaintiff had become extinguished by adverse possession of plot of land by defendant for more than 12 years the defendant will not be estopped from pleading acquisition of title by adverse possession and denying plaintiff's title to plot even though the defendant, after purchase of the plot by the plaintiff had obtained his permission to occupy the plot. Maung Ba Than v Maung Sen Win A I R 1929 Rang 170. Where the mortgagees in possession allow the mortgagors to remain in occupation of the mortgaged properties as tenants and the mortgagors duly execute and register the lease, the relation of landlord and tenant subsists between them and the mortgagor cannot be allowed to turn round and plead that the lease they executed should not be interpreted as a lease. Isa Ram v Krishna Chand A I R 1930 Lah 386=120 Ind C 602, see also Morton v Woods L R 3 Q B 658 s c L R 4 Q B 293.

The mere fact that a person has taken a lease from the Municipal Board cannot stop him from setting up his own title as against a third person, who was no party to that lease. If any estoppel arose, it would have been only as between the lessor and the lessee Tilā Ram v Moti Lal, A I R 1930 S 116

All 229

Immoveable property A several fishery is an incorporeal hereditament and would be considered real or immoveable property, and therefore this section applies to such a case Lal Shuman v Ramji, 23 Bom L R 949. Whatever may have been the nature of a person's possession prior to a lease, once he takes a lease deed in respect of the land from another, he is thereafter estopped from denying the title of his lessor Sital Prasad v Badri Prasad, 20 A L J 907 = L R 3 A 623. This section is applicable in the case of immoveable property only Maning Kyue v Maning Kata, 99 Ind Ors 996 = A I R 1927 Rang 94.

No tenant "The true ground of estoppel is" according to the judgment of Vice Chancellor Sir P. W. Page Wood, in Longford v Selmes, 3 K & J 220, 229 "that a tenant may not dispute the right of his landlord by saying that he had nothing in the property. It is equally clear he observes, that he may, nevertheless, show that the landlord had in interest at the date of the lease, which has since determined." The ground of the doctrine, is stated by Lush J, in Morton v Woods, (1868) L R 3 Q B 658 at p 671, is that "in as much as the parties have agreed that they should stand in the relation of landlord and tenant, and the one accordingly receives possession from the other and enters premises, so long as he continues in possession, he cannot be heard to deny the state of facts which he has agreed shall be taken as the basis of the arrangement, in other words he cannot set up that the landlord has no legal title." The principle is exactly expressed by Palls C B in Wagan v Doyle, (1883) 12 L R Ir 69, 72,—"The defendant is estopped from alleging that his lessor had not, at the time of letting, any estate in the premises. He may, however, on proper pleading show, that the estate which the lessor had at the time of letting had expired before the commencement of the action." A tenant may dispute the title of one from whom he did not get possession, and to whom he has not attorned, in the strict sense of the word, at the request or with the privity of the person from whom he did get possession Gregory v Doulge, 3 Bing 471, Cornish v Scovell 8 B & C 471, Lal Mahomed v Kallames, 11 C 519. A tenant who has reportedly acknowledged that a person in possession of the proprietary right was entitled to receive rent, and who has in fact attorned to him, cannot afterwards be allowed to question the validity of the title of such person, for the reason that the instrument by virtue of which possession of the proprietary right had been obtained was unregistered Shums Ahmed v Ghoolam Mohi, 3 N W P 143. A tenant who was not let into possession by the person seeking to eject him is not estopped from denying the plaintiff's title, he may show that the title is in some third person or in himself Venkata v Jayanna, 31 M L J 712 = 20 M L R 457 = 36 Ind Ors 817 (F B). A grantee of lands so long as he holds a religious office in a temple is estopped from setting up a title inconsistent with that of the grantor and in reliance from such grantee is similarly estopped and the alienation itself is invalid as against the trustee of the temple. Section 116 of the Evidence Act is not exhaustive of the law of estoppel Thayelbagam v Venkatarama Krishnayam, (1916) M W N 49 = 33 Ind Ors 858. This section applies not only to tenants let into possession at the beginning of the lease but also to tenants who are already in possession and continue in it Adawat v Dandi 25 Ind Cas 615. An adverse action taken by a third party, whether that third party be the Government or some other rival claimant cannot have the effect of terminating the relationship of landlord and tenant and the tenant will be estopped by this section from denying the landlord's title Aunhumi v Kannau Phala, (1918) M W N 376 = 8 L W 44 = 45 Ind Ors 655. Under this section a tenant is precluded from denying the title of the landlord but it is open to him to question the status of his landlord Loloram v Budya Bu, 53 Ind Cas 43. A tenant who has executed a lease but has not been let into possession by the lessor, is estopped from denying his lessor's title in the absence of proof that he executed the lease in ignorance of the defect in his lessors' title or that his execution of the lease was procured by fraud, misrepresentation or coercion. Malham v. Unshah, 123 (P. R.) 1919=30 Ind. Cas 591. A tenant induced of land by one person cannot alter by the character of his possession and make it adverse to the landlord going over to another person and paying rent to him. Abdul Halim v. Pana Ma, 11 Ind. Cas 191. A tenant cannot deny the right of the person from whom he took the tenancy. Joshi v. Ham Sahai, L. R. 1 A 393, Sital Prasad v. Badri, 69 Ind. Cas 617. A tenant can prove eas or of landlords title by ouster by paramount title holder and can return to the latter on ouster. Ramaswami v. Nagapillai, A. I. R. 1925 Mad 113. See also Nagapillai v. Ramaswami, 49 M. L. J. 710, Rathor v. Ayyararu, 101 Ind. Cas 892, Hopcroft v. Keys 9 Bing 613.

S 116

Where in suit by a landlord against his tenant the execution of the lease has been admitted, the tenant is estopped from questioning or challenging the landlord's title. Rattiram v. Nandlal, 103 Ind. Cas 121=A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 626. This section of the Evidence Act is designed to meet the case of a tenant who has been put into possession by his landlord and is based on the provisions of English law which enacts that a tenant who is so let into possession could not deny his landlord's title. The plea of estoppel is of no avail where tenants are not put into possession by habuyats entered into by certain members of the tenant's family on account of a misapprehension as to their legal position or by any lease executed by the landlord, the tenants remaining in possession of their own Sir plots and the execution of those habuyats having no effect upon their position or upon their title. Bishu Nath Saran v. Suraj Pal Singh, 4 O. W. N. 1037. Where the tenancy itself is in question the tenants are not estopped from disputing the landlord's title. Bharan Lallu v. Umar 51 B. 43=29 Bom. L. R. 97=100 Ind. Cas 1004=A. I. R. 1927 Bom. 129. This section applies to cover where the lessee is let into possession by the landlord. Ramman v. Asurn 109 Ind. Cas 182. When a person has returned to the lessors as a tenant it does not lie in his mouth to question in any manner whatsoever the title of the lessors. Kesoram v. Bonamali, 45 C. L. J. 249=103 Ind. Cas 93=A. I. R. 1927 Cal. 941. but see Kumar Kumakhya v. Surendra, A. I. R. 1928 Pat. 284. "The rule said Best C. J. in Alchome v. Gomme 2 Bing 54, "which prohibits a tenant from disputing in a Court of law the title of his landlord, is a wise rule tending to general convenience. I am aware that there is a qualification of this rule, if qualification it can be called, and that there are cases in which the tenant has been permitted to show that a landlord could not justify a distress. In all of these, however, the right of the landlord to demise has been admitted, and the plea has been either that his title has since expired or that the tenant has been compelled to pay sums which he was entitled to deduct from the rent, these cases therefore rather confirm than impeach the general rule but the tenant here broadly disputes the lessor's right to demise.

Or person claiming through such tenant. When the relation of landlord and tenant is once established it attaches to all who may succeed the tenant, immediately or remotely, and the succeeding tenant is as much affected by the acts and acknowledgments of his predecessor as though they were his own. Crease v. Barrat, 1 Cramp. M. & R. 919. The assignor of a lease is estopped equally with his assignor. Taylor v. Needham 2 Taunt. 278. Johnson v. Mason 1 Esp. 89, Doe d. Bullen v. Mitty, 2 Ad. & El. 17. Doe d. Manton v. Plomer 9 Bing. 41. But a third person not claiming possession of the land, who has brought goods on to the land by the license of the tenant, is not estopped from disputing the lessor's title. Tadman v. Henman, (1893) 2 Q. B. 168. So persons not claiming possession of land through the tenant are not estopped from denying the title of the lessor. Maharaja of Jaipur v. Surjan Singh 44 A. 671=20 A. L. J. 615=(1922) A. 333. Where the lessors accepted and acted upon the habuyat the lessors as well as the persons claiming under them are equally estopped from denying the validity of the lease. Hari Mondol v. Durjodhan, 94 Ind. Cas 661=A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 882. The estoppel operates against persons claiming through the tenants as for instance sub-lessees. Casperx on Estoppel 107. Doe d. Knight v. Smythe, 4 M. & S. 347. London and A. W. Rail Co. v. West L. R. 2 C. P. 353, Barwick v. Thompson, 7 T. R. 458.

During the continuance of the tenancy A tenant cannot, in the absence of fraud or mistake, question the title of a person to whom he has attorned (Gravenor v Woodhouse, 1 Bing 38, Hall v Butler, 10 Ad & El 204, Doe d Marlow v Wiggins 4 Q B 367), or paid rent (Carlton v Boucoel, (1885) 51 L T 659) or at whose hands he has submitted to a distress, (Panton v Jones 3 Camp 372 Cooper v Blandy, 1 Bing N C 45) A tenant is, as has already been observed not estopped from showing that his landlord's title has expired Neave v Moir 1 Bing 360 England v Slade 4 T R 682 Doe d Marriott v Edwards 5 B & Ad 1065, Downs v Cooper, 2 Q B 256, Doe d Stode v Seton, 2 C M & R 728 Mounting v Collier, 1 El & Bl 630, Doe v Watson, 2 Stark 230, Fenner v Duploel, 2 Bing 10, Hill v Saunders, 1 B & C 529 Doe v Ramsbotham, 3 M & S 516, Doe v Bolton, 11 Ad & El 307, Clark v Adre, 2 App Cas 423 By this section a tenant is only precluded, 'during the continuance of the tenancy,' from denying that the landlord had 'at the beginning of the tenancy' a title to the property, the subject of the tenancy The words of the section leave it open to the tenant to show that his landlord's title has subsequently expired Bala Klashaba v Abai Amrita, 11 Bom L R 1093, see also Subbaraya v Krishnappa 12 M 422 Where the defendant is adjudged a tenant of the plaintiff he is estopped under this section from denying the title of the plaintiff at the beginning of the tenancy Chhadamuni v Parbati A W N 1884, 274 A tenant cannot, during the continuance of the tenancy, be permitted to deny that his landlord had a good title at the beginning of the tenancy The relation of landlord and tenant continues until it is proved to have ceased Devahagu v Mahamed, 36 M 53=19 Ind Cas 555 but see Yerragunta v Mullumalla, 25 Ind Cas 721 A tenant who has been let into possession cannot deny his landlord's title how ever defective it may be, so long as he has not openly restored possession by surrender to his landlord Mussamet Balar Kunwar v Dessing, 19 C W N 1207 P C=29 M L J 335, Muhammed Mumtaz v Nawang, 60 Ind Cas 502=3 Lah L J 227 In a suit brought by the plaintiff in ejectment on the expiry of the lease it is not open to the defendant under s 116 of the Evidence Act to say that the plaintiff is not the sole landlord when the defendant had been inducted on the land by the plaintiff and when the lease in favour of the defendant had been executed by the plaintiff alone Alimuddin v Hanaddin, 34 Ind Cas 534 This section only operates as an estoppel during the continuance of a tenancy and not after it has come to an end A tenant is liable to pay rent to the person who has the real title Mahadeo v Jainawayan, 62 Ind Cas 850 But it is open to the tenant to prove a subsequent cessor of the landlord's title and one way in which the tenant can show that the title had determined is by proving an eviction by title paramount or the equivalent of such an eviction Ramchandra v Pramatha Nath, 63 Ind Cas 754 A person who has lawfully come into possession of land as tenant from year to year or for a term of years cannot set up during the continuance of such relation any title adverse to the landlord inconsistent with the legal relation between them and however notoriously and to the knowledge of the other party, acquire by the operation of the law of limitation title as owner of any other title inconsistent with that under which he was let in possession Sidi Haji v Mahamed Faruq A I R 1926 Sindh 71 (24 M 246 37 M 1 and 21 M 153, followed) The tenant is concluded forever from filing a suit on his title if a suit is filed against him in ejectment during the continuance of the tenancy and is decreed against him Verlaunes v Robinson, A I R 1928 Rang 163 A tenant is not estopped even before or after the expiration of the term from showing that his lessor's title has determined Downs v Cooper, 2 Q B 256, Langford v Selmes 3 K & J 220, 229, Grippus v Buckland, 1 H & C 236 Wogan v Doyle 12 L R Ir 89, Sergeant v Nash Field & Co (1903) 2 K B 304, 312 C A But if the tenant came into possession under the lessor, the better opinion would seem to be that he must surrender possession before he disputes his lessor's title Doe v Smythe, 1 M & S 317, Bills v Westwood, 2 Camp 11, Halsbury Vol 13, p 104

At the beginning of the tenancy The words "at the beginning of the tenancy" in this section only apply to cases in which the tenants are put into possession of the tenancy by the person to whom they have attorned, and not to cases in which the tenants have previously been in possession. Lal Mahomed v. Halliames 11 C 519. See also Gregory v. Douglas, 3 Bing. 474, Cornish v. Scurrell 8 B & C 171, Kishu v. Mehi 73 Ind Cas 170=1923 Lah 143. The words 'at the beginning of the tenancy' are expressly inserted in section 116 of the Evidence Act to show that the tenant is prevented from showing that after the tenancy commenced the estate of the landlord devolved on some other person and the defendant or the person through whom he claims is not entitled to deny that the plaintiff or the person through whom he claims is the owner, during all the time that the relation of landlord and tenant subsists and right up to the time that relation hip ceases to exist. Ganpat v. Mulani, 11 A L J 263=38 A 226=33 Ind Cas 97. This section is no bar to a tenant showing that his landlord had no title in date previous to the commencement of the tenancy or that since its commencement it has expired or has been defeated because the bar operates only during the continuance of the tenancy. Lama Suami v. Hanga Pillai 79 Ind Cas 881=1923 Muz 113. This section only provides that a tenant cannot be permitted to deny that the landlord at the beginning of the tenancy had a title to the property. It is not estoppel from saying that on the death of the lessor the property did not devolve on the plaintiff but devolved on some body else. Madan Lal v. Mr. Gour Das, 26 A L J 1255=110 Ind Cas 376=A I R 1923 All 650.

S 116

How a relationship of landlord and tenant is created. A relationship of landlord and tenant can be created either by written contract or by verbal contract, when the landlord has put the tenant in possession of the land. It may also be inferred from the payment of rent, attornment or other circumstances. Casperz on Estoppel 102. If once the relationship of landlord and tenant is established between the parties the tenant would be estopped from disputing the landlord's title. There are no words in this section to show that the tenant must be put into possession by the landlord in order to estop the tenant from disputing the landlord's title. The question in each case is whether a new tenancy has arisen. Of course in support of the contention that there was no relation of landlord and tenant between the parties the tenant may assert that the contract of tenancy is void or voidable on account of misrepresentation or fraud. Shankar v. Jagannath, 30 Bom L R 711=111 Ind Cas 911=A I R 1923 Bom 165. Payment of rent is evidence of permissive occupation and in all cases furnishes a strong presumption against the tenant. It furnishes the landlord with a prima facie case but the circumstance is always open to explanation, and where rent has been paid under a mistake or upon misrepresentation, it is open to the tenant to rebut the presumption. Gravenor v. Woodhouse 1 Bing 38, Bogers v. Pitcher 6 Taunt 202. Casperz on Estoppel 113, Williams v. Bartholomew 1 B & P 326. Doe v. Charles Perke Ad Cas 239, Fenner v. Duploel 2 Bing 10, Doe v. Barton 11 Ad & El 307. Doe v. Francis 2 M & R 57, Doe v. Brown, 7 Ad & El 447. Hall v. Butler 10 Ad & El 204, Carlton v. Boucoek 51 L T 659, Sergeant v. Nash, (1903) 2 K B 304 C A. Knight v. Cox 18 C B 645. But in any case he must show a better title in some one else and he is not allowed simply to impeach the title of the person to whom he has paid rent. Halsbury Vol 13 p 405. Carlton v. Boucoek 51 L T 659. He can also rebut the presumption by making out a very strong case. Rogers v. Pitcher, 6 Taunt 202.

Landlord is a benamidar. In cases where the doctrine of estoppel does not come into play, it is open to the tenant defendant to urge that the plaintiff, as benamidar for the beneficial owner is not entitled to claim rent from him. Rahmannassa v. Mahadeb 12 C L J 428. In that case at page 431 Mr Justice Moolerjee said "The District Judge, as we have already stated, has held that it was not open to the defendant to urge that the plaintiff was a mere benamidar for Mahkhan Lal and could not consequently claim rent from him. In support of this view, he has not mentioned any judicial decision, but in fact the view taken by him is opposed to a long series of decisions of this Court amongst which reference may be made to the cases of Donelle v. Kedarnath 16 W R 186=7 B L R 720, Kedarnath Chuckerbutty v. Donelle, 20 W R

352, Inderbuttee Koei v Sheikh Mahboob Ali, 21 W R 44 and Kailash Mondal v Baroda Sundari Dasi, 24 C 711, possibly also reliance may be placed to some extent upon the case of Jaynarain Bose v Kadimbini Dasi, 7 B L R 723. In some of these cases, there are expressions to be found in the judgments to the effect that the doctrine of estoppel recognised in English law should not be adopted in this country. It is not necessary for us to consider, whether this view is not too widely expressed and whether such a position could be maintained in view of the provisions of section 116 of the Indian Evidence Act. It is sufficient for us to hold that in cases where the doctrine of estoppel does not come into play, it is open to the tenant-defendant to urge that the plaintiff is benamidar for beneficial owner is not entitled to claim rent from him. We may point out that in the case before us no question of estoppel arises. As already explained, the defendant was a tenant of the Maharaja of Bundwan. The plaintiff claims to intervene and to receive rent from the defendant on the ground that an intermediate tenure has been created in his favour by the Maharaja on the 2nd November, 1905. It is not alleged either that he was the landlord of the defendant at the inception of the tenancy, or that he inducted the defendant into the disputed land. Consequently upon the authority of the decision of this Court in the case of Lal Mahomed v Kallanees, 11 C 519, we must hold that no question of estoppel arises. We may also observe that as explained by this Court in the case of Lodai Mollah v Kally Das Roy, 8 C 238, the plaintiff cannot possibly maintain the position that the defendant is not entitled to question his title. As was pointed out by the learned Judges in the case last mentioned, even where the plaintiff claims by a derivative title and the defendant has attorned to him the defendant is not thereby estopped from showing that the title is really not in the plaintiff but in some other person. This position is amply supported by the cases of Rogers v Pitcher, 6 Trunt 202, Clonidge v Macenzie, 4 M & G 143 and Gregory v Deridge, 3 Bing 174. But in a suit for rent, instituted by the person, in whose favour a tenancy executed a lease the tenant is estopped by s 116 from raising a plea that the ostensible landlord was only a benamidar for somebody else. The question of a lessor's title is wholly foreign to a suit of this nature. Bogor v Karam Singh, 141 P R 1906-96 P L R 1907-13 P W R 1907, see also Meer Jangoo v Chota Salub 6 N L R 161. Sibi Sant v Netaji Charan, 9 Ind Cas 806, Probhat Chandra v Byoy Chand 50 C 572-75 Ind Cas 89. But the Madras High Court has decided otherwise. So where a lease is executed by a tenant in favour of the benamidar the real owner rather than the benamidar, must be regarded as the landlord for the purposes of this section. A person, having admitted that he is benamidar under the general law, has no right to sue the tenant for rent and in such a suit the tenant can deny his right to sue. Kuppi Konan v Thiru Gnana, 31 M 461, see also Kuthaperumal v Secretary of State 30 M 245, Muthusamy v Solai 26 M L J 597.

Landlord and tenant—Collusion—Estoppel. A party obtaining possession of premises held by a tenant by colluding with him and claiming those premises by a title adverse to that of the lessor, cannot set up his adverse title against the landlord as a valid defence in an action of ejectment, and if he has collected rent from the tenant, he is liable therefor to the lessor. Pashupati v Narayan, 13 M 335.

Acceptance of lease under coercion etc. A person who, under coercion, takes a lease, is not bound by his acceptance, nor is he estopped, by paying rent to the person granting the lease, from questioning the title of the payee, unless the payee let him into possession. Even then the effect of payment as estoppel would be confined to the title of the payee at the time the possession was given. Collector v Suraj Balsh, 6 N W P 333. Where application is made to a Collector for a tenure liable to pay revenue on account of an estate, which the applicant has carved out of an unoccupied waste and cannot create such a tenure, the applicant is under no obligation to adhere to his offer made erroneously and not estopped thereby from denying liability to payment. Bryonath v Lal Meah, 11 W R. 391. Though under this section no tenant can deny his landlord's title existing at the commencement of the lease, the rule only applies where the tenant has been let into possession. If through ignorance or mistake a tenant has executed a rent note and has been put in possession by the lessor it seems that he can dispute the lessor's title. M. Laxmibai v. Devi 72 Ind Cis 555. A tenant who has executed a lease but has not been let into possession by the lessor is estopped from denying his lessor's title in the absence of proof that he executed the lease in ignorance of the defect in the lessor's title or that the execution of the lease was procured by fraud, misrepresentation or coercion. Melaram v. M. Bholi, 76 Ind Cis 4 = 192, Lah 60. If through ignorance or fraud in the matter of executing a lease the tenants attorn to a certain person, they are not estopped in a suit by the latter from showing that he had no title either when the lease was executed or attornment was made by payment of rent. But the onus of proving want of title is on them. Chengtu Soolor v. Jaleeruddin Mondal, 91 Ind Cas 669 = A I R 1926 Cal 720. Where a tenant being already in possession has made an attornment or acknowledgment of the tenancy, he may show that he did so through ignorance mistake or the like. Dishen v. Jude Husam, 112 Ind Cis 382.

S 116

Assignee of landlord. A tenant is not prevented from questioning the title of the illegal assignee of his admitted landlord. Rance Tillessuree v. Rance Ashneeth 24 W R 101. Cornish v. Scarell 8 B & C 471, Claridge v. Mackenzie 4 M & G 143. The defendant mortgaged in 1895 an unrecognised sub-division of a Narwa but remained in possession of it under a rent note executed in favour of the mortgagee. The mortgagee assigned his rights to the plaintiff. Plaintiff sued defendant in ejectment and the latter pleaded that the mortgage, the lease and the assignment were void. Held that the defendant having attorned to plaintiff it was not open to him to contend in the ejectment suit that plaintiff had no right to let out the property on rent. Devidas v. Shamal 23 Bom L R 119 = 53 Ind Cis 595. But in the case of an assignee of the lessor though he is to all intents and purposes in the same situation as the lessor and takes the benefit of and is bound by a lease by estoppel, the lessee is not estopped from showing that the lessor had no such title as he could pass to the assignee, or that the person claiming to be the assignee is not in fact the true assignee. Baruel v. Thomson, 7 Term Rep 488, Parker v. Manning, 7 Term Rep 537. Rennie v. Robinson 1 Bing 146, Caruel v. Blagare 4 Moo P C 303. Doe v. Whitroe Dow & Ry N P 1. Seymour v. Franco 7 L J O S 18. Jew v. Wood Cr & Ph 185, Gouldsworth v. Knights 11 M & W 337. 343. Doe v. Wiggins 4 Q B 367. 375. Surgeon v. Wingfield 15 M & W 221. Cuthbertson v. Irving, 4 H & N 742, Halsbury Vol 13 p 405.

Disclaimer of right to evict. The authorities show that a tenant in India is not precluded by an admission of tenancy from showing that the nature of the tenancy asserted by him to the knowledge of the landlord has been for the period prescribed by the Limitation Act pro tanto adverse to the right to evict either at will or on notice given. A manifest assertion by the tenant to the knowledge of the person representing the landlord's interests of a right inconsistent with that claimed by the landlord to treat him as a tenant at will or from year to year would be a disclaimer of the landlord's title. Tuan v. Moat 16 Ch D 730. A landlord merely receiving rent cannot preserve his right to other claims continuously denied by the tenant. The fact that such assertion and enjoyment are not challenged does not change their adverse character when once necessity for challenging it has arisen. Thakore Fatsugji v. Banaji 27 B 515 = 5 Bom L R 274. see also Shailh Nymoddu v. Ployd, 15 W R 237, Pakachnee v. Saroo 19 W R 232 (P C). Dinomoney v. Durga Prosad 12 B L R 275. Pitambar v. Nilmoney 3 C 793. Uardin v. Ngapa 7 B 96, 99, Madhava v. Narayana 9 M 244. Narayana v. Yammabai, P J 156, Santharan v. Periasami 13 M 467.

Whether sections 116 and 117 are exhaustive. Sections 116 and 117 of the Evidence Act mention certain well known forms of estoppel by agreement, i.e. that of the tenant, the licensee bailee and acceptor of a bill of exchange. The case does not come within any of these though it has been argued in part on the analogy of the tenant's estoppel. It has however been correctly submitted that these sections are not exhaustive of the doctrine of estoppel by agreement. The case of Dalton v Fitzgerald, (1897) 1 Ch D 140 on appeal (1897) 2 Ch D 86 is an instance of such an estoppel which is not provided for by the Act. Rupchand v Sarbesswar, 10 C W N 747=3 C L J 629=33 C 915. The principle of the rule in such cases is that where property is taken under an instrument and the taking possession is in accordance with a right which could not have been granted except upon the understanding that the possessor should not dispute the title of him under whom the possession was derived, there is an estoppel. Ibid, but see Nur Mahomed v Kessumar 7 S L R 11=20 Ind C 523. There it has been held that the rule of estoppel based on a dictum in Tooker v Small, 1 R R 212 is, that a mortgagee is not at liberty to dispute the title of his mortgagor does not apply and section 2(1) of the Evidence Act expressly repeals all rules of evidence which are contained in any Statute Act or Regulation in force in British India. Here the dictum in Tooker v Small has not the effect of enlarging the instances of estoppel given in ss 116 and 117 of the Evidence Act. There can be no estoppel unless s 115 applies. The Calcutta High Court again held that ss 115 to 117 of the Evidence Act are not exhaustive in force in British India. Bhaiganta v Hummat 20 C W N 1335=24 C L J 103. In delivering this judgment Sanderson C J said: "It has been decided by this Court in Ganges Manufacturing & Co v Sourinmull 5 C 669 that sections 115 to 117 of the Evidence Act are not exhaustive and the judgment of the late Chief Justice Sir Richard Garth to which I wish to draw attention is at p 678. There he is reported to have said: 'It has been further contended by the Appellants, that ss 115 to 117 contained in Chap VIII of the Evidence Act lay down only rules of estoppel which are now intended to be in force in British India, and that those rules are treated by the Act as rules of evidence, and that by section 2 of the Act, all rules of evidence are repealed, except those which the Act contains. But if this argument were well founded, the consequence would indeed be serious. The Courts here could then be debarred from entertaining any questions in the nature of estoppel which did not come within the scope of section 115 to 117 however important those questions might be to the due administration of the law'. I desire to point out that the principle of law which was laid down by Chief Justice Zindal (vide notes under principle supra) to which I have referred is a matter of great importance. Therefore in my judgment it is a matter of great importance that the principle of law to which I have referred should be affirmed. In the same case Mr Justice Moolerjee said: "It has not been disputed before us that according to the law of England a person who has been let into possession as tenant by the plaintiff is estopped from denying his lessor title without first surrendering possession. Reference may be made to Doe v Smythe, 1 M & S 347 decided in 1816 where the tenant in possession paid rent to the lessor and then disclaimed. Bayley J, observed that the tenants should have given up the possession to Knight (lessor) and then the defendant, if she has title, might have maintained her ejectment." Mr Justice Dampier added: "It has been ruled often that neither the tenant, nor any one claiming by him can controvert the landlord's title. He can not put another person in possession but must deliver up the premises to his own landlord. This I believe has been the rule for the last 25 years and I remember was so laid down by Buller J upon the Western circuit" (Doe v Pegge (1786) 1 T R 758n). This exposition of the law has been repeatedly re-affirmed (At Choine v Gomme 2 Bing 54 Doe v Austen 2 Bing Rep 41 and Tadman v Harman (1893) 2 Q B 164). There is an instructive discussion on this subject in Bayley v Badley 5 C B 396, to which reference may usefully be made. In the course of the argument in that case, Wilde C J, observed: "Does the lease operate as an estoppel except during the term?" Serjt Byles answered: "A tenant is at all times estopped from disputing the title of his landlord and referred to a long line of cases, including Doe v Smythe 4 M & S 347. At a later stage of the argument Mr Justice Vaughan Williams repeated the question whether the estoppel does not end with term." Serjt Byles answered the estoppel is limited in point of extent, but there is no authority for saying that it is limited in point of time." Wilde C J then intervened with the following observation: "In Co Litt 47(6), it is said that 'if a man

S 116. take a lease for years of his own land by deed indented, the estoppel doth not continue after the term ended, for, by the making of the lease, the estoppel doth grow, and consequently, by the end of the lease the estoppel determines. The only qualification I am aware of that has been engrafted upon that rule, is, that if the tenant came into possession under the lessor, he must restore the possession before he disputes the title. The position is different as Earle C J pointed out in Accidental Death Insurance Co v MacKenzie, 5 L T N S 20, when the tenant had possession before he took the lease. Enjoyment by permission is the foundation of the rule that a tenant shall not be permitted to dispute the title of his landlord. Two conditions, then, are essential to the existence of the estoppel, first, possession secondly, permission when these conditions are present, the estoppel arises and the estoppel prevails so long as such possession continues. That this was unquestionably the law in this country before the Indian Evidence Act was passed, is clear from a long line of decisions. The doctrine was expressly formulated in Mahesh Chandra v Gauri Prosad 9 Murr 877 and Vasudeb v Babay 8 B H C R 175 and was impliedly recognised in Bance v Thakoor, B L R (F B) 588 Gource v Jugurnath, 7 W R 25, Burn & Co v Rushmore, 14 W R 85 and Jayaram v Kadambur, 7 B L R 723 n. We have further the weighty opinion of Sir Subramanya Iyyar C J expressed in the case of Mutha nyan v Sina Sama Iayan, 28 W 526 that the law has not in this respect been altered by the Indian Evidence Act, and that now, as before, a tenant who had been let into possession was estopped from denying the landlord's title without first surrendering possession (see also Ram Chandra v Gulam Zilani 34 B 329). The respondent however has contended that this view is erroneous and that the law is embodied in section 116 of the Indian Evidence Act is an intentional departure from the English law on the subject. In my opinion there is no foundation for the contention that the Legislature in 1873 intended to revive and introduce into this country the archaic rule prevalent in England in the days of Lord Coke. Section 116 does not by its very terms affect the present case. That section merely provides that, during the continuance of the tenancy, a tenant of an immoveable property or persons claiming through such tenant cannot be permitted to deny that the landlord of such tenant, at the beginning of such tenancy had no title to the immoveable property. This does not imply that after the expiration of the tenancy the tenant is free to dispute the title of the landlord. In connection with the observations of Chief Justice Garth in Ganges Manufacturing & Co v Sourymall 5 C 669 that sections 117 and 116 of the Indian Evidence Act are not exhaustive, and there may be rules of estoppel applicable other than what is contained in those sections the following observations of the same learned Judge in the same case should also be borne in mind, namely 'The fallacy of the argument is in supposing that all rules of estoppel are also rules of evidence. Prof Wigmore also says that the estoppel is an obligation made by a rule of substantive law. So those rules of estoppel which are not rules of evidence not being included in section 115 116 or 117 of the Evidence Act are not excluded by virtue of section 2 of the Indian Evidence Act. This section does not contain the whole law of estoppel. Thus the tenant's estoppel operates even after the termination of the tenancy. Maybur v Isab Swati, 33 C W N 867 = A I R 1928 Cal 546.

Licensee of a person in possession. There is no distinction so far as concerns the law of estoppel between a licensee and a tenant and a licensee who has obtained possession by aid of the license before he can show that his licensor's title has determined must first surrender possession of the premises. Doe d Johnson v Baylup (1935) 3 Ad & El 188 Halsbury Vol 13 p 404. In that case the defendant, a daughter of the plaintiff's lessor, obtained possession of the premises upon the pretext of selling vegetables in the garden, and refused to vacate on the ground that the plaintiff had no title. In delivering his judgment in the above case Patteson J said 'In the case of a person who has become a tenant there is no doubt as to the land. Doe d Knight v Lady Smythe 4 M & S 347, shows that he must first give up possession to the party by whom he was let in, and then, if he, or any one claiming through him, has a title abunde, that title may be tried by ejectment. It was held in that case, not that the party claiming as landlord to the tenant was altogether estopped from trying the right, but that the tenant must first restore possession. If the defendant here has any right, she might, in the first instance have brought ejectment, or have entered on Mrs. Johnson and dispossessed her. But she takes neither course. She fraudulently obtains permission to go upon the land, and then turns upon the lessor of the plaintiff and insists upon holding the land. The rule, as to claiming title, which applies to the case of a tenant extends also to that of a person coming in by permission as a mere lodger or as a servant. In the same case Coleridge J said "There is no distinction between the case of a tenant and that of a common licensee. The licensee, by asking permission, admits that there is a title in the landlord." Casperz on Estoppel pp 106, 107. So a licensee cannot be permitted under this section to deny that a licensor had a title to the possession of the property at the time when the license was given to him to enter, though there was no relationship of licensor and licensee subsisting between the parties during the period sued for. Dhuhumom v Tulsa Chaman, 13 Ind Cas 512, see also Gour Hari v Anumunnessa, 11 C R 9. But the mere fact of a person bringing goods on the demised premises by the tenant's license does not estop him from disputing the validity of the instrument of demise under which the tenant holds. Padman v Henman, (1893) 2 Q B 168, Halsbury Vol 13 424. The respondent came upon the land in dispute by the license of the appellant who caused M T to redeem it from mortgage, after which it was held jointly by the families of M T and the respondent. About 15 years subsequently according to the respondent, the appellant made over the land altogether to him and M T. The respondent also raised the question of the appellant's title. The burden of proof being entirely on the respondent and no limitation being established, in the absence of proof of adverse possession, the respondent was held to be estopped from denying the appellant's title under s 116 of the Indian Evidence Act, and the presumption was that he continued to hold under him. U Tha Pa v Maung Pa Nan, U B R (1892 1896) Vol II, 561. When the occupation of the defendant is proved to be permissive, he is estopped from denying plaintiff's title under this section. Mah Hh v Maung San Dun, L B R (1893 1900) 4. Subsequent licensee can sue a prior licensee for injunction. Zahoor Hosan v Saker Banoo A I R 1925 All 29. This section merely states that the licensee ought not to deny the title of the licensor. It does not state that every license is revocable at the instance of the lessor. Consequently the licensee is not prevented from asserting that he must not be turned out. Uthulchsa v Ma Sam Me 7 R 617 = A I R 1930 Rang 29.

Estoppel between mortgagor and mortgagee. Where a mortgagee is put into possession by the mortgagor in pursuance of the contract of mortgage, he is estopped from denying the title of his mortgagor during the continuance of the mortgage. The principle of estoppel between the mortgagor and the mortgagee works in favour of and against both of them. The mortgagor is estopped from denying his own authority to mortgage the property. On the other hand the mortgagee is estopped from denying the authority of the mortgagor to mortgage his property. Ibal Ashraf v Inayatullah, 80 Ind Cas 62 = 11 O L J 722, see also Lakshmi Nachiar v Ramchandrar, 16 M L J 5, Sundera v Khatindra, 29 C L J 434, Jangi v Sheoraj, 30 Ind Cas 234, Kadakan v Oothman, 10 Ind Cas 339 = (1911) 2 M W N 61, Rajaram v Jadamandan, A I R 1925 All 708, Deendra v Mna 10 C L J 150, Mahomed v Hanaya 35 B 507, Gulab v Duan, 18 C 591 (P C), Jogun v Bhut Nath, 31 C 116, Shamaclaran v Molhoda, 15 C W N 703, Ranjan Saha v Dhiku Singh, 16 C L J 261 = 16 Ind Cas 246, Kanara Venkata v Ramaswami, 35 M 75, Mahamaya v Haridas, 42 C 455. In a redemption suit a mortgagee is estopped from setting up the interest of a third party. He cannot do so long as he has not handed over possession to his mortgagor or his representatives. Rajnarayan v Jadamandan, 83 Ind Cas 539 = L R 6 A. 196 Rev = A I R 1925 All 708. A mortgagee cannot deny the title of his mortgagor on the date of the mortgage. It is however, open to him to assert that on the death of the mortgagor persons who are his heirs under the Hindu Law did

- S 117. not succeed to his occupancy rights in accordance with the special rules laid down in Act 12 of 1891 Mahadeo v Rani Jay, A I R 1930 All 108

117 No acceptor of a bill of exchange shall be permitted to deny that the drawer had authority to draw such bill or to endorse it, nor shall any banker or licensee be permitted to deny that his bailor or licensor had, at the time when the bill or license commenced, authority to make such bill or grant such license

Explanation (1)—The acceptor of a bill of exchange may deny that the bill was really drawn by the person by whom it purports to have been drawn

Explanation (2)—If a banker delivers the goods bailed to a person other than the bailor, he may prove that such person had a right to them as against the bailor

Principle Instances mentioned in this section are estoppel by agreement. The instances cited are all cases of implied agreements. As has been well said some transactions there are which are so obviously based on a conventional state of facts that for that very reason the parties never in practice come to any express agreement about them at all and the estoppel is nothing but the carrying out of what the parties as honest men must have intended if they thought about the matter at all at the time they made the bargain (Cubabe Estoppel 12, 21). The parties are deemed to have dealt with one another on the basis of their rights being regulated by a conventional state of facts. The tenant and licensee and bailee obtaining possession are taken to accept it upon the terms that they will not dispute the title of him who gave it to them and without whose permission they would not have got it. The act of acceptance of a bill amounts to an undertaking to pay to the order of the drawer. Though all are instances of estoppel by agreement the precise term of the agreement and, therefore of the estoppel may vary according to the nature of the particular transaction in each case. Per Woodroffe J in Rup Chand Ghosh v Surbessur Chunder 3 C L J 629

Negotiable Instruments The principle of estoppel is frequently applied in the case of the acceptance of bills of exchange. The acceptor by such act admits the genuineness of the signature of the drawers and the competency of the drawers to assume that responsibility. Burr Jones Esq § 286, see also Phillips v Im Tilton L R 1 C P 463. The object of the law merchant says Byles J in Swan v North British Lustration Co 2 H & C 175, 'as to bills and notes made or become payable to bearer is to secure their circulation as money, therefore honest acquisition confers title. So whenever one of two innocent parties must suffer by the act of a third he who has enabled such third person to occasion the loss must sustain it. Per Ashurst J in Lackbarrow v Mason, 2 T R 63 (70). So in England and in America the rule is thus laid down. For more than a century it has been held and decided without question, that it is incumbent upon the drawee of a bill to be satisfied that the signature of the drawer is genuine that he is presumed to know the handwriting of his correspondent and if he accepts or pays a bill to which the drawer's name has been forged, he is bound by the act, and can neither repudiate the acceptance nor recover the money paid. National Bank v Ninth National Bank, 46 N Y 77. And, speaking of Price v Neal, 3 Burr 1354, in the same case it was said 'But as applied to the case of a bill to which the signature of the drawer is forged, accepted or paid, by the drawee its authority has been uniformly and fully sustained, and the rule extends as well to the case of a bill said upon pre-entment as to one accepted and afterwards paid. The rule is thus stated by Stephen 'No acceptor of a bill of exchange is permitted to deny the signature of the drawer, or his capacity to draw, or, if the bill is payable to the order of the drawer, his capacity to endorse the bill though he may deny the fact of the endorsement, nor if the bill be drawn by procuration, the authority of the agent by whom it purports to be drawn in the name of the principal though he may deny his authority to endorse it. If the bill is accepted in bank, the acceptor may not deny the fact that the drawer endorsed it." But by accepting and paying a bill the drawee is not held to a knowledge of a want of genuineness of any other part of the instrument or of any other names appearing thereon, or of the title of the holder. Burr Jones § 286. The reason of the English rule is thus stated by Bayley J in Cooper v Meyer, 10 B & C 471. "The defendants ought not to have accepted the bills without knowing whether or not there were such persons as the supposed drawers. If they chose to accept without making the enquiry, I think they must be considered as undertaking to pay to the signature of the person who actually drew the bills. See also Sander son v Collman, 4 M & Gr 209. But in India the law differs from the law of England as it appears from Explanation 1. In India the acceptor of a bill of exchange may deny that the bill was really drawn by the person by whom it purports to have been drawn. So he is at liberty to show that the signature is a forgery. This section is supplemented by sections 41 and 42 of the Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881). Section 41 runs as follows: "An acceptor of a bill of exchange already indorsed is not relieved from liability by reason that such indorsement is forged, if he knew or had reason to believe the indorsement to be forged when he accepted the bill." Section 42 says: "An acceptor of a bill of exchange drawn in a fictitious name and payable by the drawer's order is not, by reason that such name is fictitious, relieved from liability to any holder in due course claiming under an indorsement by the same hand as the drawer's signature, and purporting to be made by the drawer." Sections 118-122 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, lay down special rules of evidence. Section 118 lays down certain presumptions as regards consideration, date, time of acceptance, time of transfer, order of endorsement and stamp. This section further authorises the presumption that the holder is a holder in due course. Section 119 provides that the Court shall, on proof of the protest, presume the fact of dishonour. Section 120 makes provision for estoppel against denying original validity of instrument by the maker of the promissory note, drawer of a bill of exchange or cheque and acceptor of a bill of exchange. Section 121 makes provision for estoppel against denying capacity of payee to endorse. Under section 122, no endorser of a negotiable instrument shall, in a suit thereon by a subsequent holder, be permitted to deny the signature or capacity to contract of any prior party to the instrument. In an action on a promissory note or a bill of exchange against a person whose name properly appears as a party to the instrument, it is not open to the defendant to show that the signatory was in reality acting for an undisclosed principal, whether the defendant is a drawer or an acceptor. Phoenix Trading Co v Deivan Chand, 117 Ind Cas 160—A I R. 1929 Sind 172.

Bailor and Bailee. A bailee entrusted with the care of goods is estopped to claim that the bailor had no title at the time of bailment. Burr Jones § 285, Wilson v Anderton, 1 B & Ad 450=9 L J K B 48, Holl v Griffin, 10 Bing 216, Hunderson v Williams (1895) 1 Q. B 531. The estoppel upon bailees and those with whom property is either actually or constructively deposited bears a close resemblance to the estoppel of the tenant. Casper v Estoppel p 111, vide section 116 supra. A bailee cannot set up the title of a third person, unless the bailment is determined by what is equivalent to an eviction by title paramount. Biddle v Bond, 34 L J Q B 137=6 B & S 225, Bulleley v Leach, 4 Q. B 511, Explanation 2. The law on the subject is thus laid down by Blackburn J in Biddle v Bond supra. "We do not question the general rule, and we agree with what is said by my brother Marten in Cheesman v Fnull, 6 Exch 341 (346) that 'there are numerous cases in connection with wharfs and docks, in which if a party entrusted with the possession of property were not estopped from denying the title of the person from whom he received it, it would be difficult to transact business.' But the bailee has no better title than the bailor, and consequently, if a person entitled as against the bailor claims it the bailee has no defence against him, Wilson v Anderton, 1 B & Ad 450. The position of an ordinary bailee, where there has been no special contract or representation on his part, is very analogous to that of a tenant who, having accepted the possession of land from another is estopped from denying his landlord's title but whose estoppel ceases when he is evicted by title paramount. The position of the bailee is precisely the same, whether the bailor was honestly mistaken as to the rights of third person or fraudulently acting in derogation of them. See also Hardman v Willcock 9 Bing 383(n), Rogers v Lambert, (1891) 1 Q B 318. Ross v Edwards 73 L T 100 (P C). So while the bailee cannot avail himself of the title of third person, though that third person be the true owner, for the purpose of keeping the property for himself yet he may show a defence against the bailor that he has actually delivered the property to the true owner, who had the right to possession upon demand by the latter even before legal proceedings have been commenced. Such demand by the true owner is equivalent to eviction by title paramount. Burton Jones § 285. Stephen thus states somewhat differently, the general rule "No bailee agent or licensee is permitted to deny that the bailor principal or licensor, by whom any goods were entrusted to any of them respectively was entitled to those goods at the time when they were so entrusted. Provided that any such bailee agent, or licensee may show that he was compelled to deliver up any such goods to some person who had a right to them is against his bailor principal, or licensor or that his bailor principal or licensor wrongfully and without notice to the bailee agent or licensee obtained the goods from a third person who has claimed them from such bailee agent or licensee. Referring to Biddle v Bond 6 B & S 225 Lord Esher M R said "In my opinion the law is laid down in Biddle v Bond supra, by Lord Blackburn in a considered judgment of the Court of the Queen's Bench delivered by a Judge who knew more about these matters than any one else and it is I think, laid down there distinctly, that, as between a bailee and his bailor under an ordinary contract of bailment, the bailee must if he desires to defend an action for non delivery of the goods upon the demand of the bailor, shew that he has already delivered them upon a delivery order authorised by the bailor or he may ask for an interpleader order or he may, at his own risk as regards the plaintiff say 'I defend the action on behalf of A B, and I say that he is the person really entitled to the goods. If he takes the latter course he must not only allege the title of the third party, but he must prove it and if he does not prove it he has no defence. 'A bailee' says Lord Blackburn 'can set up the title of another only if he defends upon the right and title and by the authority of that person'. He must allege that title and must prove it. That is the law laid down and it seems to me rightly laid down in Biddle v Bond 6 B & S 225. Therefore I am of opinion that the defendants cannot defend the action on the right and title and by the authority of a third person, because they have not named any such person, or shewn that they have any such authority, or that any person has such a right. Indeed the defendants have said in deliberate terms that they are not defending the action for any one else but are defending for themselves only. As between the plaintiffs and themselves the defendants have no defence. Therefore, if we were to stand upon the strict rights as between the plaintiffs and the defendants, it seems to me that the plaintiffs were entitled to succeed in the action." Rogers, Sons & Co v Lambert & Co, (1891) 1 Q B 318 (325). In the same case Lindley L J said "As soon as there were several rival claimants to the copper, the defendant should have instituted interpleader proceedings against the rival claimants. This was settled by Ilkenborough v London and St Katharine's Dock Co, 3 C P D 450. That case and the more recent decision in Robinson v Jenius 21 Q B D 275, shew, that notwithstanding the contract of bailment, the defendants could have instituted interpleader proceedings in this case." See also Civil Procedure Code Order XXXV. Lopes L J added "A bailee may, however equally with a tenant, shew that the title of his bailor to the goods has expired since the bailment. Thorney v Tilbury, 3 H & N 531. So, too a bailee may set up a jus tertii, if the facts shew that there has been what is equivalent to an eviction by title paramount. Shelbury v Scotsford, Yelv 22. But suppose the bailee retains possession of the goods, and there has been no eviction, the bailee may nevertheless, set up and rely upon the jus tertii, if he defends his possession upon the right and title and by the authority of the tertius Biddle v Bond, (6 B & S 255) is an authority for this. In that case, Blackburn J delivering the judgment of the Queen's Bench, said (at p 233) 'We think that the true ground on which a bailee may set up the jus tertii is that indicated in Shebury v Scotsford, Yelv 23, viz, that the estoppel ceases when the bailment on which it is founded is determined by what is equivalent to an eviction by title paramount. It is not enough that the bailee has become aware of the title of a third person. We agree in what is said in Bettley v Read, 4 Q. B 511, 517, that to allow a depository of goods or money, who has acknowledged the title of one person to set up the title of another who makes no claims, or has abandoned all claims, would enable the depository to keep for himself that to which he does not pretend to pass any title in himself whatsoever.' Nor is it enough that an adverse claim is made upon him, so that he may be entitled to relief under an interpleader. We assent to what is said by Pollock C B in Thorne v Tisbury 3 H & N 534 537, that a bailee can set up the title of another only 'if he defends upon the right and title and by the authority of' that person. Thus restricted we think the doctrine is supported both by principle and authority, and will not be found in practice to produce any inconvenient consequences." 'But if the bailor has no title to the goods and the bailee in good faith delivers them back to or according to the directions of the bailor the bailee is not responsible to the owner in respect of such delivery." Vide s 166 of the Contract Act, The Bank of Bombay v Nandlal Thadraseydas, 17 C W N 358=40 I A 1=37 B 122 (P C.) But if a person other than the bailor, claims goods bailed he may apply to the Court to stop the delivery of the goods to the bailor, and to decide the title to the goods Contract Act, § 167.

S 117

But if bailment is accepted with knowledge that another than the bailor claims the subject matter of it, the bailee cannot set up the claim of such third person against the bailor Burr Jones § 285. In Ex parte Davies, 19 Ch D 86, Jessel M R said. There are, no doubt cases in which goods have been taken from a bailee by a third party, who claimed them by title paramount and, if there has been no fault on the part of the bailee, it has been held that this is good excuse to him as against his bailor. An illustration of this is the old case of Shebury v Scotsford, Yelv 23 in which a stolen horse has been bailed by the thief and had been forcibly taken away from the bailee by the rightful owner and it was held that the thief could not maintain an action of trover for the value of the horse against the bailee, on the ground that the eviction of the horse out of his possession was a discharge in law of his promise to return it to his bailor. But, in order that the bailee may be able to avail himself of such a defence, he must himself have been in no default. If the bailee knowing of the adverse claim, has said to his bailor 'I will sell the horse for you if you will let me have a commission, and I will hand over the proceeds to you' he could not have afterwards set up against his bailor the title of the adverse claimant, because he would have acted with his eyes open," and Lush J added, 'I am of opinion that when a person in such a position, knowing of two adverse claims to goods elects to take part of one of the claimants and to sell the goods as his, he is estopped from afterwards denying that claimant's title. If he had not taken this course he would have been entitled to show that there was a better title in the bill of sale holder there might have been what is called an eviction of trustee by title paramount.

Licenses of patentee etc. One who manufactured goods by consent of and under agreement with the patentee cannot be allowed to prove the invalidity of the patent. Burr Jones § 285. This kind of estoppel is closely analogous to that between landlord and tenant. A licensee of a patent under agreement with the patentee, so long as he continues to act under the license or during the continuance of the agreement is not at liberty to dispute the validity of the patent. Goncher v Clayton 34 L J Ch 239, Crossley v Dixon 10 H L Cas. 293. The United States Supreme Court in an oft-quoted case said 'Having actually received profits from the sales of the patented machine which profits the defendants do not show have been or are in any way liable to be affected by the invalidity of the patent, its validity is immaterial. Moreover, we think the defendants are estopped from alleging that invalidity. They have made and sold these machines under the complainant's title, and for his account, and they can no more be allowed to deny that title and retain the profits to their own use than an agent, who has collected a debt for his principal, can insist on keeping the money upon an allegation that the debt was not justly due. Kinsman v Parthurst 18 How 289. The invalidity of a patent does not render the sales of machine illegal, so as to tant with illegality the obligation of the defendants to account. Even where money has been received, either by an agent or a joint owner, by force of a contract which was illegal, the agent or joint owner cannot protect himself from accounting for what was so received by setting up the illegality of the transaction in which it was paid to him. Burr Jones § 283.

S 117

"Although said Lord Blackburn in Clark v Adie L R 2 App Cas 436, "a stranger might shew that the patent is as bad as any one could wish, the licensee must not shew that." "So far as he is concerned" said Lord Cairns in the same case, "he must stand here admitting the novelty of the invention, admitting its utility and admitting the sufficiency of the specification." Caspeix Estoppel 130, see also In the matter of D H R Moses, 15 C 241. The analogy between a licensee and a tenant is thus described by Lord Blackburn. "So long as the lease remains in force and the tenant has not been evicted from the land, he is estopped from denying the lessor's title to that land but he is entitled to show that a particular parcel was never comprised in the lease. So a licensee may show that the particular thing he has done was not included in the patent and that he has done it as one of the public, and is therefore not bound to pay royalty for it. If he used that which is in the patent and which his license authorises him to use then like a tenant under a lease he is estopped from denying the patentee's right and must pay royalty. Though a stranger can show that the patent was bad, the licensee must not do so." Clark v Adie 2 App Cas 423 (433), see also Jagornath v Cresswell, 40 C 814. But this rule does not bind either an equitable assignee of the licensee who is not acting under it (Pidding v Francis 1 Mac & G 36 Baxter v Combe, 1 Ch R 284 289) or a purchaser from the licensee Gillette Safety Razor Co v Gamage (A W) Ltd (1909) 25 T P R 803, Halsbury Vol XIII p 413. The user by the licensee of the invention amounts to consideration. Laues v Parser 6 E & B 930, Taylor v Hare 1 New Rep 260, Noton v Brooks 7 H & N 499, Crossly v Dixon 10 H L C 293, Smith v Neale 2 C B N S 89, Cooper v Smith, 26 Ch D 700, Proctor v Benms, 36 Ch D 749.

A licensee of a trademark also is estopped, as against his licensor, from questioning the latter's title to the trade mark. Jagornath v Cresswell, 40 C 814. In delivering the judgment Inam J said. The first question that I have to consider is whether the defendant can be allowed to deny the plaintiff's title. The contract between the owner of a trade mark and his licensee is like a contract between a landlord and his tenant and as between landlord and tenant so between licensor and licensee the former's right cannot be questioned by the latter. In Clark v Adie L R 2 A C 423 which was a case of a patent Lord Blackburn said "Although a stranger might show that the patent is as bad as any one could wish it the licensee must not show that" and in the same case Lord Cairns observed "so far as he is concerned he must stand here admitting its utility and admitting the sufficiency of the specification." In an earlier case Grover and Baker Sewing Machine Co v Mulkord, 8 Jur N S 713 Wood v C held that the fact of a patent having been found invalid at law in an action between the patentee and a third party could not be set up against the patentee by his licensee in a suit upon the same patent. The licensee of a trade mark is in the same position as the licensee of a patent. See also Levergue v Hooper, 8 M 149 (154) Ebrahim v Essa Abba 24 M 163. "In India there is no system of registration nor is there any provision for a statutory title to a trade mark, so that the rights of the parties must be determined in accordance with the principles of the English common law." Per Jenkins C J in British American Tobacco Co Ltd v Mahboob Buksh 33 C 110 at p 117, see also G S Hannah

v Messrs Jagannath 43 C 262=19 C W N 1 When the plaintiffs, the transferees of the trade marks and business of a jute baidor, gave a license to the defendants the right to use and to authorise others to use exclusively the trade marks and to hold the good will of the business of original jute baidor and the marks without any interference by the proprietors for a particular period on the payment of certain royalty and the defendants sought afterwards to repudiate their obligation under the agreement alleging that the plaintiff's title to trade marks was illegal and invalid Held that under section 117 of the Indian Evidence Act a licensee cannot be permitted to deny that his licensor had at the time when the license commenced authority to grant such license Section 117 would, at any rate cast upon the defendants the burden of proving the plea that was taken by the defendants, viz that the good will of the business had lost its separate existence by merger and that the plaintiffs had not the authority they professed to exercise G S Hannah v Jagannath, 19 C W N 1 The licensee of a trade mark cannot put an end to the relation of licensor and licensee by repudiating the contract, in as much as in such a case the concurrence of the other party is also essential Jagannath v Crosswell, 40 C 814 see also Johnstone v Milling, 16 Q B D 460, 467 A distinctive mark may be adopted by a person who is not the manufacturer but the importer of goods and he will acquire the property in that mark as indicating that all goods which bear it have been imported by him Latif v Emperor, 14 A L J 1080=76 Ind Crs 583=39 A 123

Warehouse man A warehouse man who on receiving an order from the seller of malt to hold on account of purchaser, gives a written acknowledgment that he so holds it, cannot set up as a defence for not delivering it to the purchaser, that by the usage of trade the property in malt sold is not transferred till it is measured and that before the malt in question was remeasured the seller became bankrupt Stonord v Demkin, 2 Camp 314 So if a warehouse man in possession of goods attorns to the buyer of them, acknowledging that he holds them for him, and upon the faith of that the buyer pays the price or the warehouse man charges, the ordinary principles of estoppels by representation apply, and the warehouse man cannot afterwards turn round and say 'The goods are not yours, setting up the ius tertii' Buddle v Bond, 6 B & S 220, 231, 232 Gosling v Burnie, 7 Bing 339, Hauces v Watson 2 B & C 540, Halsbury Vol XIII p 408 In Henderson v Williams (1895) 1 Q B 521, 533, A L Smith L J said "The principle upon which an estoppel in pais is created is laid down in the well known cases of Pickard v Sears, 6 A & F 469, Freeman v Cooke, 2 Ex 654 and Cornish v Affiniston, 4 H & N 549 and need not be stated here, for it is familiar to all lawyers. It is upon this principle that many warehouse men in like circumstances to those of the defendant have found themselves estopped from denying the plaintiff's title, and from setting up a title in a third person and as examples, I will take the cases of Stonord v Demkin, 2 Camp 314, Hauces v Watson 2 B & C 540, Gosling v Burnie 7 Bing 339, in which Lindal C J stated 'the defendant is estopped by his own admissions, for unless they amount to an estoppel, the word estoppel will be blotted from law' The admission in the present case, namely the statement by the defendant that he held the sugar at the plaintiff's order and disposal is certainly no less strong than in Gosling v Burnie, and lastly, in the case of Knights v Wiffen L R 5 Q B 660 in which the principle upon which an estoppel in pais arises is again enunciated, and it is again pointed out how it applies' The general rule is that a buyer of goods who has acknowledged that they belong to a particular person cannot afterwards question the title of that person Hauces v Watson 2 B & C 540 Gosling v Burnie, 7 Bing 337 Where a wharfinger agreed to hold goods under a delivery order for certain persons and transferred the goods into their names in his books, it was held that he could not resist in action for the conversion of those goods on the ground that they had not been separated from the bulk, and that no property passed to the person who lodged the order Woodty v Coventry, 32 L J Ex 185 A having goods in his possession, sold a quantity of them to B, who then sold part of that quantity to C C paid the price, and forwarded the delivery order of B to A who assented to it, and B subsequently became

- S. 118 bankrupt It was held that A by so assenting, had estopped himself from denying C's right to such part of his goods Knight v Whiffen, L R 5 Q B 660 Again, W assigned to the plaintiff an order on the defendant, a wharfinger, to deliver goods to the plaintiff which had not yet come into the defendant's possession The defendant, on sight of the order, promised to deliver them on arrival It was held that the plaintiff might maintain trover against him on his refusal to deliver them after arrival Hall v Griffin, 10 Bng 246 A delivery order by vendors, who also carried on the business of wharfinger, directed to the superintendent of their business in the latter capacity, has been held to be a mere promise to do some thing in future, and not a representation upon which to found an estoppel Gillman v Carball, 61 L T 281

CHAPTER IX

OF WITNESSES

118 All persons shall be competent to testify, unless the Court considers that they are prevented from understanding the questions put to them, or from giving rational answers to those questions, by tender years, extreme old age, disease, whether of body or mind, or any other cause of the same kind

Explanation—A lunatic is not incompetent to testify, unless he is prevented by his lunacy from understanding the questions put to him and giving rational answers to them

Witness must be competent Incompetency denotes the legal incapacity to give evidence The ground of incompetency were formerly numerous and many circumstances which are regarded as affecting only the weight of a witness's testimony were treated as reasons for disqualifying him altogether Gilbert Ev 4th Ed 119 144 Wills Dr 2nd Ed 122 Formerly there were several grounds of exclusion of witnesses, the chief being (1) incompetency from religion or interest and (2) incompetency from mental capacity On the former ground, not only were parties themselves and their husbands and wives excluded but also all persons who were in pari pascu with either party or otherwise substantially interested in the proceedings Successive statutes have abolished this kind of incompetency leaving the fact of interest in the proceedings to affect credibility merely Cockle Cas Ev 243 The only common law rules of exclusion prevented the following classes of persons from testifying (a) Those who by reason of peculiar religious belief, or lack of any religious belief were not supposed to be amenable to the binding force of an Oath (b) Parties to the suit (c) The husband or wife of a party to the suit except where a crime was charged by the husband against the wife or vice versa (d) Pecuniarily interested (e) Naturally incapacitated persons (f) The equality of certain crimes Speaking generally, the trend of these exclusions was absent in the same direction as the present rules excluding persons from acting as juror thus giving another illustration of the influence of the old jury system The substantial disappearance of these rules of exclusion may be traced between the years of 1823 and 1853 Mckelvey's Ev § 212

Infidels and Atheists In England formerly all persons not Christians were excluded from testifying, but at the present time there is no exclusion upon the ground of religious belief, or the lack of it The theory of the oath has always been that it gave a peculiar sanctity to testimony, and that without the oath there was no guarantee of truthfulness Under these circumstances (and the law recognized no substitute for the oath), it was quite natural that persons who by reason of their religious belief, felt no force in the oath, should have been excluded from testifying In fact without a change in the theory it would have been inconsistent and absurd to have allowed a person who refused to take an oath, or if taking it, took it only as a matter of form, to give his testimony. The broadening of the form of the oath, with the recognition that other religious beliefs besides the belief of the established church might exercise the same influence over the mind and furnish the same guarantee of truthfulness resulted in the gradual disappearance of this rule of exclusion. The change came by degree, however. It was hard for the English Courts to break away from the predominant idea of the English people that theirs was the only true religion and to concede that other forms of worship might exercise a solemnizing influence on the mind of equal force. But the change finally came about, and to-day little is left of the old rule. In 7 Coke, 17 b it is laid down that infidels—and by this he means all persons not Christians,—have no standing in the English Courts. But this doctrine was exploded as early as in 1739 when it was held in the case of Onychum v Biler, 1 Atk 21, 43, that the testimony of three witnesses whose depositions had been taken under oath administered in accordance with the Gentoo religion should be received. There Lord Chief Justice Wills at p 45 says ‘There is nothing in the argument that is Christianity is the law of England no other oath is consistent with it, and for the reasons already given this argument carries no weight with it. Though I have shown that an infidel cannot be excluded from being a witness and though I am of opinion that infidels who believe in a God and future rewards and punishments in his other world may be witnesses yet I am as clearly of opinion that if they do not believe in God or future rewards and punishments they ought not to be admitted as witnesses.’ The principle of this case was subsequently approved by Lord Mansfield in Itcheson v Everett 1 Comp 382, and thereafter reaffirmed in other cases Rex v Gilham 1 Esp 285, Edmonds v Rouse, Ry & Moody 77. It is evident from this that at that time the Courts had found no way to admit the testimony of atheists. In the case of the suit of Quakers so obnoxious to the early English Churchmen, whose members refused to take oath no little difficulty was experienced in bringing them within the rule of competency so much in fact, that a special statute was required to extend this privilege. Stat 7 & 8 William III, C 34 allowed Quakers to affirm where other persons were required to take the oath. But this did not extend their competency in criminal cases. Later, however all restriction was removed, and a form of affirmation established for any person not competent or desiring to take the oath. (Vide Stat 31 & 32 Vict C 69.) The first mentioned enactment was repealed by the Oaths Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict C 46) which provides (s 1) that ‘Every person upon objecting to being sworn and stating as the ground of such objection either that he has no religious belief, or that the taking of an oath is contrary to his religious belief, shall be permitted to make his solemn affirmation instead of taking an oath.’ But a person cannot be allowed to affirm under this statute unless he expressly objects to being sworn on one or other of the grounds specified. Reg v Moore, 61 L J M C 80, Naghi v Ali Khan, 8 T R 441. As regards the question how far it is necessary to follow a statutory form of oath or affirmation, reference may be made to Salomons v Miller 8 Ex 778, Lancaster v Heaton 8 El & Bl 952, Wolsely v Worthington, 13 Ir Ch R 341, Camp Rul Cas Vol XI p 141.

Parties to the suit. The old rule as to the incompetency of parties to the suit to be witnesses was founded upon the prejudice supposed to exist on account of personal interest in the result. At the present day it has been entirely abolished except in the one case of an accused person upon trial for the crime charged against him.

Husband and wife of party. The husband and wife of a party may testify in all cases, but is not compellable to disclose private or confidential conversations and communications. (Vide s 120 infra.)

Pecuniary interest of a witness. Originally persons pecuniarily interested in the suit were not permitted to testify. In Bent v Baler, 3 T R 27, 36 Buller J defined the rule of exclusion on the ground of interest to be whether ‘the witness is to gain or lose by the event of the cause.’ This however, has entirely changed except with respect to a witness to a Will, who is also a

S. 118 beneficiary under the Will. This has been said to be the "sole survival of the numerous exclusionary rules making witnesses incompetent by reason of relationship or pecuniary interest." Best, Ev (Chamberlain Jar Id) p 173 note. To day a person interested in the outcome of a suit is allowed to testify the same as a disinterested person but the adverse party may show by cross-examination the nature and extent of that interest is affecting the credibility of the witness. McLeys I § 316

Sex In spite of the example of the surrounding peoples, notably of Scotland, there seems never to have been in the law of England any general testimonial disability based on sex. Wignore § 517

Scope of the section Under this section all persons are competent to testify unless the Court considers that they are incapable of giving evidence or understanding the questions put to them by reason of tender years, extreme old age, disease, whether of body or mind or any other cause of the same kind. Even a lunatic if he is capable of understanding the questions put to him and giving rational answers is a competent witness. The competency of a person to testify as a witness is a condition precedent to the admission to him of an oath or affirmation and is a question distinct from that of his credibility when he has been sworn or has affirmed. In determining the question of competency the Court under this section has not to enter into inquiries as to witness's religious belief or as to the knowledge of the consequences of falsehood in this world or the next. It has to ascertain in the best way it can, whether, from the extent of his intellectual capacity and understanding he is able to give a rational account, of what he has seen or heard or done on a particular occasion. If a person of tender years or of very advanced age can satisfy these requirements his competency as a witness is established. Queen Empress v Lal Sahai 11 A 183. According to English law every sane person is a competent witness in both civil and criminal cases except a child who does not understand the nature of an oath. Powell Et 197. But in India, where a person is competent to testify according to the provisions of this section but is unable owing to his tender age, to comprehend the nature of an oath or affirmation section 13 of the Oaths Act relieves the Court of the necessity of administering an oath or affirmation to him and the evidence of such a person recorded without oath or affirmation may be admitted. Ram Samy v Emperor 10 O O 337=7 Cr L J 89. In Nasir Sheikh v Emperor 15 C W N 147 at p 149 Mr Justice Mukherjee said "In fact the Sessions Judge deliberately did not give them an opportunity to make an affirmation. The Judge appears to have assumed without investigation, that the children were of so tender an age that they could not appreciate the value and significance of an affirmation. It is plain that the Judge should not have adopted this course. As was laid down in the case of King v Braser 1 Leach 199=1 East P C 443 an infant, even though under the age of seven years, may be sworn in a criminal prosecution, provided such infant appears, on strict examination by the Court, to possess a sufficient knowledge of the nature and consequences of an oath. In other words, a Court has to ascertain from the answers to questions propounded to such a witness, whether he appreciates the danger and impropriety of falsehood. The course pursued by the Sessions Judge has led to the result that these witnesses were examined in contravention of the provisions of section 6 of the Indian Oaths Act. On behalf of the Crown, however, it was suggested that the irregularity in the proceeding, if any may be shown if necessary, to have been cured by the provisions of section 13 of the Indian Oaths Act. Section 13 lays down that no omission to make any affirmation shall invalidate any proceeding or render inadmissible any evidence whatever in or in respect of which such omission took place. In support of this view reliance has been placed upon the decision of a majority of the Full Bench in Queen v Shew Bhogtee, 14 B L R 294=23 W R Cr 12. On behalf of the Appellant, this position has been controverted and it has been argued that where there is an omission by a witness to take an oath or to make an affirmation by reason of the deliberate act of the Court section 13 is of no assistance. The question raised is by no means free from difficulty, as is amply indicated by divergence of judicial opinion on the subject. In this Court, the judicial opinion has not been uniform, as appears from an examination of the decisions in Queen v Iwarua, 14 B L R 51=22 W R Cr 14 Queen v Annunto, 14 B L R 295 (note)=22 W R Cr 1 and Queen v Shew Bhogta, 14 B L R 294. It is further worthy of note that in the case of Nandolal v Nistarani, 27 C 428 440, when it was argued on the authority of some of the decisions first mentioned that section 13 of the Indian Oaths Act applied to cases where the omission to take the oath or affirmation was the result of the deliberate act of the Court or of the witness Sir Francis Maclean, C J with the concurrence of Mr Justice Macpherson and Mr Justice Hill, described the contention as at once novel and startling. There has been a similar divergence of judicial opinion in the other High Courts, as is indicated by the cases of Queen v Visu, 10 A 207 Queen v Lal Sahai, 11 A 183, Empress v Shara, 16 B 359 and Empress v Vnaperumamah, 16 M 105. In view of this divergence of judicial opinion and of the course we propose to take with regard to the second ground urged by the appellant, I reserve my opinion upon the difficult question of the true scope and effect of section 13 of the Indian Oaths Act.

This section makes no distinction between prosecution and defence witnesses. Joseph v Emperor, 3 Rang 11=85 Ind Cas 236=3 Bur L J 265=26 Cr L J, 492=A I R 1925 Rang 122. The only test of competency is that the witness should not be prevented from understanding the questions put to him or from giving rational answers to these questions by tender years or other cause. Ram Jolaha v Emperor, 102 Ind Cas 349=28 Cr L J 541=8 Pat L J 594. Under this section a husband is a competent witness to prove non-access. Hoove v Hoove, 25 M L J 594.

How to ascertain competency. Incompetency in a witness will not be presumed. It comes in the shape of an exception or objection to the witness, and if the facts on which it rests are disputed they must like all other collateral questions of fact, be determined by the Judge. (Bartlett v Smith 11 M & W 483, R v Hill, 2 Deo L C 251), who, in cases of doubt, is always disposed to receive the witness and let the objection go to his credibility rather than to his competency. Best Ev § 133. Mental competency to give evidence depends not upon age but upon understanding or intelligence. There is no fixed limit of age under which an infant is excluded as a witness. R v Braxator, 1 Leach C C 199. Before examining a child of tender years as witness, the Court should satisfy itself that the child is sufficiently intellectually developed to comprehend what he has seen and to give an intelligent account of it to the Court. If the Court is of opinion that by reason of tender years and defective or immature understanding, the child could not have perceived the particular incident to prove which he is produced as a witness the Court should not only refrain from administering the oath to him but should also decline to examine him as a witness. On the other hand, if the child though of tender years is sufficiently intelligent to understand the question put to him and to give rational answers to those questions then his capacity to give evidence is on the same footing as that of any other adult. But in such cases it would be desirable if the Court, before examining the child as a witness tests his intellectual capacity by putting a few simple and ordinary questions to him and to record a brief proceeding so that the appellate Court may feel satisfied as to the capacity of the child to give evidence. Tulsi v Emperor, 110 Ind Cas 799=29 Cr L J 767=A I R 1928 Lah 903.

Duty of Court in cases of witnesses of tender years. In Nafar Sheikh v King Emperor, 18 C W N 147 at p 150, Mr Justice Moolajee said "It has further been argued that under section 118 of the Evidence Act, he was bound to ascertain, before those children of tender years were examined as witnesses whether they had capacity to understand and to give rational answers. Reliance has been placed upon the decision in Fakir v Emperor, 11 C W N 51, which it has been urged, is an authority for the proposition that it is obligatory upon a Judge to test the capacity of a witness of tender years by appropriate questions and to form his opinion as to the competency of such a witness

S 118 before the actual examination commences. It may be conceded that there are expressions in the judgment in the case mentioned which tend to support this broad statement, but in my opinion, the proposition thus widely formulated is not justified by the terms of section 118 of the Indian Evidence Act. That section lays down that all persons shall be competent to testify, unless the Court considers that they are prevented from understanding the questions put to them, or from giving rational answers to those questions, by tender years. The Legislature has not prescribed an inflexible rule of universal application to the effect that before a child of tender years is questioned, the Court must, by a preliminary examination test his capacity to understand and to give rational answers and must form an opinion as to the competency of the witness, before the actual examination commences. In fact the case of Queen v Whitehead L R 1 C C R 33 shows that the incompetency of a witness may very well appear in the course of his examination in-chief and that the evidence of a witness so found to be incompetent may at any stage be withdrawn from the jury. The true rule on the subject is concisely stated by Breuer J in Wheeler v United States, 159 U S 523 in the following terms: "The decision of this question (whether the child witness has sufficient intelligence) primarily rests with the trial Judge who sees the proposed witness, notices his manner, his apparent possession or lack of intelligence, and may resort to any examination which will tend to disclose his capacity and intelligence, as well as his understanding of the obligations of an oath. As many of these matters cannot be photographed into the record the decision of the trial Judge will not be disturbed on review, unless from that which is preserved it is clear that it was erroneous. The mere circumstance that the sessions Judge did not interrogate the witnesses before their examination began with a view to test their capacity does not in the view I take of the true effect of section 118 of the Indian Evidence Act invalidate the trial." The question of the capacity of the witness to testify is a question for the Judge himself to decide and not for the jury although after he has decided in favour of the competency of a witness it is for the jury to determine the amount of credit to be given to the statements made by such witness. Queen v Hossein, 8 W R Cr 60. A Judge can act on the evidence of a child of tender years if he is impressed by its intelligence and demeanour and the evidence given bears no marks of tutorage. Ghulam Hussain v Crown, 6 Lah L J 474=1925 Lah 94. It is of very great importance that when the evidence of a child of tender years is adduced the judicial officer should for the sake of precaution ascertain as a preliminary measure by means of a few simple questions whether the intelligence of the child is such that (whether sworn or not) it is capable of giving testimony which is patent of credit, and it is desirable that something should at the commencement of the record of the evidence of the witness of this character be entered to show that such a test has been in fact made. It may turn out in the course of the examination at the trial that the test has been a fallacious one and that the evidence which the child gives is not intelligible and in such a case it is always open to the judicial officer to say that he cannot accept the evidence which the child is giving. On the other hand there is no obligation imposed by law upon a Judge definitely to make on the record any endorsement of his own as to a child's capacity, and when he has clearly relied upon the evidence given it is idle to suggest that he could have been other than thoroughly satisfied as to the capacity of the child to give intelligible testimony. Panchu v Emperor 1923 Pat 91=3 Pat L T 649=66 Ind C S 73=23 Cr L J 233. In the case of a child of tender years produced as a witness the Court should examine it after being satisfied that the child is intellectually sufficiently developed to enable it to understand what it has seen and to afterwards inform the Court thereof. Dharam Ram v Emperor 13 A L J 1072. Ghulam v Emperor A I R 1940 Lah 337, contra, Nafar v Emperor, 41 C 406. The Judge must form his opinion as to the competency of a witness before his actual examination commences. Fakir v Emperor, 11 C W N 51.

Child witness. Children of six or even five years of age have been allowed to testify upon the Court being satisfied as to their capacity to give rational testimony. R v Holmes 2 F & F 788, R v Palms, 2 Moody C C 135,

R v Brasier, 1 East P C 443 Where in a murder case, a small boy, who was an eye witness to the murder, was not examined in the Sessions Court on the ground of his youth, held that the Sessions Judge, especially considering the importance of the witness ought not to have refrained from examining him unless, under the words of section 118 of the Evidence Act, he considered that the boy was prevented from understanding the question put to him, or from giving rational answers to those questions by reason of tender years. Queen Empress v Ram Sewal, 23 A 190 = A W N 1900, 211 A child of tender years is a competent witness when such child is intellectually sufficiently developed to understand what it has seen and afterwards to inform the Court about it, this sufficiency may be tested even in examination-in-chief, understanding is thus the sole test of competency. S Razul v Emperor, A I R 1930 Sind 129 = 120 Ind Crs 514, Nafar Sheikh v Emperor, 41 C 406 = 18 C W N 147, Dham Ram v Emperor 38 A 49 = 13 A L J 1072

Oath A witness who has taken oath in the usual form may be asked whether he thinks such oath binding on his conscience but not whether he considers any other form more binding. The Queen's Case, 2 Br & Bing 284 A person who does not believe in the sanctions of religion will not be bound by an oath. Thus, where a witness who had been sworn on the voir dire stated in answer to the opposing counsel that she did not believe in a future state of rewards and punishments and regarded the obligation of an oath as no higher than that of her word, it was held that the Judge had acted properly in rejecting her evidence. Mulen v Catanack, 7 H & N 360 It is not enough that a person has a religious belief unless he is able to say what form of oath is binding on his conscience. Naghi v Ali Khan, 81 L R 444 Where in a trial for murder the Sessions Judge deliberately abstained from administering an oath or affirmation to the only eye witness to the murder on the ground that she was only 6 or 7 years of age the evidence is still admissible. In every case where a witness is a competent witness within section 118 of the Evidence Act, the provisions of ss 5 and 6 of the Oaths Act should be complied with. The only cases in which an oath or affirmation should not be administered are cases in which it clearly appears that the witness does not understand the moral obligation attaching to an oath or affirmation or the consequence which may arise from giving false evidence or the inequity of so doing, and in such cases the evidence of such a person would be practically valueless. Fatu Santal v Emperor 6 Pat L J 147 = 2 Pat L 1 288 = 61 Ind Crs 705 = 22 Cr L J 417 The evidence of a boy witness even if taken without any solemn affirmation in the prescribed form, is admissible under section 13 of the Indian Oaths Act though it should be received with due care and caution. It is necessary that before proceeding to examine a witness of tender years the Court should satisfy itself that the witness was competent to testify, that he was capable of understanding the questions put to him and of giving rational answers to these questions, and that thereafter the Court should proceed to administer the oath or affirmation as required by the Oaths Act. If the witness is found to be incapable of understanding the obligation of such an oath or affirmation provided he is found to be a competent witness, these facts may be noted so that the record may show that before taking the statement of a witness of that character the trial Court had ascertained that the witness was a competent witness under section 118 of the Evidence Act and that the omission to administer an oath or affirmation was due to want of understanding the obligation of an oath. Emperor v Hari Ramji, 20 Bom L R 365 = 45 Ind Cas 497 = 19 Cr L J 593 see also Queen Empress v Viraperumal, 16 M 10 A Sessions Judge who had no doubt as to the competency of certain boy witnesses ought to have administered an affirmation to them. The word "omission" in section 13 Oaths Act includes any omission and is not limited to accidental negligent omissions. Empress v Sambha 11 C P I R Cr 16 Whether a child understands the nature of an oath or not, he should when examined as a witness be examined on oath or affirmation. Queen Empress v Sheoratan S C 242 Oudh, Queen v Inwita, 22 W R Cr 1 Pua v R E 2 L B R 322 see also Queen Empress v Marsu 10 A 207 = A W N 1988 86, contra Golla Channa v Emperor, 15 Cr L J 161 = 22 Ind Cas 737, Queen v Seua 23 W R Cr 12 = 14 B L R (F B)

S ' 18 294 Queen v. Hurry 22 W. R. Cr. 11-11 B. L. R. 51, Queen v. Permal 7 W. R. 527, Nandlal v. Nandam 27 C. 110

Insanity. There was a period (and it has not long passed away) when the lunatic and idiot, in the superstitious belief of the times, which regarded madness as an infliction sent from heaven were treated as incapable of being witnesses at all. (a) Fitt (b) Comyns Digest 'Testimony' A, 1, 176; White's Case 2 Leach Cr. C. 101 ed., 182 Wigmore § 192. Sir Edward Cole, in his notes upon Fitt and Non compos mentis is of four sorts: (1) An idiot which from his nativity by a perpetual infirmity is non compos mentis. (2) He that by sickness, grief or accident wholly loses his memory and understanding. (3) A lunatic that hath sometime understanding and sometime not, 'aliquando gaudet lucubræ interualle' and therefore he is called non compos mentis so long as he hath not understanding. (4) Lastly he that by his own vicious act for a time deprives himself of his memory and understanding, as he that is drunken. (Cole on Fitt 216 (b). So also Professor Greenleaf, in his Evidence laid down in 1812. It makes no difference from which cause this defect of understanding may have arisen, nor whether it be temporary and curable or permanent whether the party be hopelessly an idiot and maniac, or only occasionally insane as a lunatic, or be intoxicated, or whether the defect arises from mere immaturity of intellect, as in the case of children. While the deficiency of understanding, exists, be the cause of what nature so ever the person is not admissible to be sworn as a witness.' But this indiscriminate rule of exclusion, since the progress of our intelligence respecting mental derangement and defect, has been modified and rationalised. The question being, whether the person is trustworthy as a witness, the law now asks whether in such case the derangement or defect is such as to make the person untrustworthy as a witness, it no longer excludes absolutely. Wigmore § 192. In R. v. Hill, 2 Den. & P. C. C. 251-5 Cox. Cr. C. 259, Campbell L. C. J. said 'It has been argued that any particular delusion commonly called monomania, makes a man inadmissible. This would be extremely inconvenient in many cases in proof either of guilt or innocence. It might also cause serious difficulties in the management of lunatic asylums. I am therefore of opinion that the Judge must in all such cases, determine the competency and the jury the credibility. The rule which has been contended for would exclude the testimony of Soerites, for he had one spirit always prompting him. In the same case Talfour J. said 'It would be very disastrous if mere delusions were held to exclude a witness. Some of the greatest and wisest of mankind have had a particular delusion.' This broad and rational principle—that the derangement or defect, in order to disqualify must be such as substantially negatives trustworthiness upon the specific subject of the testimony—is now practically every where accepted. In three particular respects this rationalization of the rule affects its present content, in two of them the field of competency becomes broader in one of them narrower. First, the mere fact of derangement or defect does not in itself exclude the witness, the various forms of monomania are no longer treated as equivalent to complete lunacy. Secondly the enquiry is always as to the relation of the derangement or defect to the subject to be testified about. If on this subject no aberration appears, the person is receivable however untrustworthy on other subjects. Thirdly the mere fact of soundness at the time of trial is no longer sufficient, for derangement or defect at the time of the event to be testified to may make the person untrustworthy. The inquiry looks to the capacity to observe as well as to the other elements, the capacity to recollect and to narrate. Wigmore § 492.

Idiocy. A person incapacitated to such an extent that he is unable to understand the subject in reference to which he is called as a witness is incompetent. Naturally incapacitated persons are not permitted to testify. This rule has always existed, and exists to day. The question of whether a person has sufficient capacity to testify is a question of fact for the Judge to decide, and he may hear testimony on the point as well as examine the person himself. Melchey's L. v. § 217.

Drunkenness. It follows from modern theory of mental derangement that intoxication even habitual, does not in itself incapacitate a person offered as a witness. The question is, in each instance whether the witness was so bereft of his powers of observation, recollection, or narration that he is thoroughly untrustworthy as a witness on the subject in hand. First, then, the capacity of observation at the time, of the events to be testified to may be such as would exclude the witness as untrustworthy. Yet there is found a tendency, to forget this requisite and to declare that the time of taking the stand is that which alone is to be considered. Secondly, the capacity of recollection may appear to be so affected that the witness is untrustworthy. Finally the capacity of intelligent and truthful narration may appear to be destroyed temporarily. Wigmore § 499. But that a witness was drunk on the occasion to which he is called upon to testify goes to his credibility and the weight of his evidence, and not to his competency to testify. Drunkenness at the time of testifying is per se not sufficient to disqualify the witness from testifying. It is for the Court to determine from the present conduct and appearance of the witness whether he is in such a state as to comprehend the obligation of oath, and to testify intelligibly or whether he should be excluded. Burr Jones § 724. 'To render the witness incompetent it must be shown that, at the time of his examination, he was non compos mentis deranged in mind from some cause, the effect of liquor, or any other cause. No drunken man should be permitted to give evidence, but this never can apply to drinking men even though incapable of managing their estates. The point of enquiry is the moment of examination is the witness then offered so besotted in his understanding as to be deprived of his intelligence? If he is, exclude him, if not he is a hard drinker or habitual drunkard, yet, if, at that time he is sober and possessed of a sound mind he is to be received.' Gebhart v Shultz 15 Serg & R (Pa) 235. In that case Duncan J added "Men of the highest intellect have fallen victims of this vice, who when the effect of hard drinking has subsided possess, in their sober moments their understanding, if not in its full vigour, yet sufficiently unimpaired to recollect and to state the facts where they do recollect with clearness and intelligence." So a drunkard is a competent witness, when he is free from the influence of liquor. Banks v Goodfellow, L R 5 Q B 549, R v Hill, 2 Den 254, Spittle v Walton, L R 11 Eq 420.

Accused whether competent witness. Section 342 (4) of the Criminal Procedure Code provides that no oath shall be administered to the accused. See also section 5 of the Indian Oaths Act. As no oath can be administered to an accused person so he can not be examined as a witness. Thus where several accused are tried jointly, one accused cannot be sworn and therefore cannot be examined as a witness against other co accused till he is convicted or discharged. Reg v Hanumantha 1 Bom 610. Empress v Ashgar Ali 2 A 260. Wheeler v King Emperor, 45 C 720, Queen Empress v Dala Jira 10 B 190, Nga Ngue v King Emperor, 20 Cr L J 342. But an accused can make affidavit on oath in support of an application for transfer of the case under section 526. Ghulam v Emperor, 3 Lah 46=23 Cr L J 399, see also Gallagher v Emperor, 54 C 52. So in India an accused person is not entitled to give evidence on his own behalf. In England the disqualification of the accused in criminal cases to testify for himself seems not to have been questioned in policy until Bentham's time. But his arguments in this respect took longer for their fruition in legislation than any other of his proposals for abolishing witnesses' incapacities. By the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict C 36) the disability of the accused to appear as a defence witness has been removed. Before that time, it had become customary in England to allow the accused to make a statement to the jury à la to tell his story, not on oath and not as a witness, but in the guise of an address or argument on the testimony and the whole case. R v Watkins 8 C & P 242, R v Walking 8 C & P 243. R v Dyer 1 Cox Cr 113. R v Williams 1 Cox Cr 363, R v Shumam 15 Cox Cr 122, R v Milhouse 15 Cox Cr 622. That the formal grant of competency then, was so long withheld was due rather to a hesitation founded on the supposed interest of the accused himself. His failure to use the right of testifying would (it was believed) damage his cause more seriously than if he were able to claim that his silence was enforced by law. But chiefly, his exercise of the right to testify would (it was believed), in subjecting

S. 119 him to the ordeal of cross-examination, place him in a situation in which even an innocent man would show at a disadvantage, and would injure more than assist his own cause." Wignore § 579, see also State v. Cameron, 10 Vt 533, 60, People v. Fayler, 36 Cal 522 528 (Am), 11 American Law Rev 752. But in England the preponderance of opinion seems to be on the side that an accused should be competent to testify for himself. Sir James Stephen in his history of Criminal Law Vol I, p 112 said "I am convinced by much experience that questioning the accused, or the power of giving evidence, is a positive assistance, and a highly important one, to innocent men and I do not see why in the case of the guilty there need be any hardship about it." Similar remarks also occurred in Lord Alerton's Recollections of Bar and Bench, where at p 176, he said "It will be convenient here to refer to the effect of the passing of the Act which enables prisoners to give evidence. I had long been impressed with the absolute necessity of such a measure in the interests of justice, for the protection of the innocent and (it may be) for the more certain conviction of the guilty." So in England every person charged with an offence is a competent witness for the defence at every stage of the proceedings but he cannot be called except on his own behalf. Criminal Evidence Act [61 & 62 Vict C 36, s 6(1)]. There it is the duty of the presiding Judge, to inform him that he has a right to give evidence if he wishes so to do. R v Warren 20 T L R 623. The counsel for the prosecution may comment upon any evidence given under the Act by a person charged, (h v Gardner, (1899) 1 Q B 150), but he must not comment upon the failure of any such person or of the wife or husband of such person to give evidence. Stat 61 & 62 Vict C 36, s 1(b). But it has been held that the Judge may comment upon such failure. R v Rhodes, (1899) 1 Q B 77, h v Smith 81 T J K B 2153=31 T L R 617. There are however many cases in which it would not be expedient or calculated to further the ends of justice so to do. Hop v The Queen, (1894) A C 653. A person discharged by the police and not brought before the Magistrate is not an accused person. In India the evidence of such a person is admissible although he has been illegally discharged by the police. Queen Empress v Mona Puna, 16 B 661.

Counsel engaged in a case. A police officer or advocate conducting a prosecution should never be sworn, unless he is called as a witness, and if so called he should be allowed to depose only to those facts which he knows and of which he is in accordance with the provisions of the Evidence Act a competent witness. Empress v Kendu 6 C P L R Cr 1 in this connection see also Weston v Peary 40 C 895, Lodd Goundas v Ralmani 29 Ind Crs 135=17 M L T 382, Chandreshwar v Bishenwar 5 P 777.

119 A witness who is unable to speak may give his evidence in any other manner in which he can make it intelligible, as by writing or by signs, but such writing must be written and the signs made in open Court. Evidence so given shall be deemed to be oral evidence.

Scope. At the time when unscientific ideas prevailed concerning mental derangement and defect the deaf and dumb were so far treated as idiots that they were presumed to be incapable of testifying until the contrary was shown. Hale, Pl Cr I 31. R v Ruston 1 Leach 3 C & P 127. Morrison v Lennoid 3 C & P 127. To day this presumption has disappeared. Wignore § 498. In People v. Mc Gee 1 Den 21. Jewett J said "The woman was of sense sufficient to have intelligence conveyed to her and to communicate intelligence to T by signs and motions. If she had sufficient reason to have intelligence conveyed to her by T and to communicate facts to the understanding of T although she was not able to talk or write, she could have been sworn and testified through him by signs." See also Harrod v Harrod, 1 Key & J 9. Persons affected with these calamities have been found by the light of modern science, to be much more intelligent in general, and to be susceptible of far higher culture, than was once supposed.

Still, when a deaf mute is addressed as a witness, the Court, in the exercise of due caution, will take care to ascertain before he is examined, that he possesses the requisite amount of intelligence, and that he understands the nature of an oath. When the Judge is satisfied on these heads, the witness may be sworn and give evidence by means of an interpreter. If he is able to communicate his ideas perfectly by writing, he will be required to adopt that, as the more satisfactory method. Morrison v Lennond 3 C & P 127, per Best C J. But if his knowledge of that method is imperfect, he will be permitted to testify by means of signs. Morrison v Lennond, 3 C & P 127, R v Ruston 1 Lev 408, R v Steel 1 Lev 452. The State v De Wolf 8 Conn 93, Com v Hill, 14 Mass 207, Taylor § 1376. The gesticulation of a deaf mute at the place where a dead body was found during the police enquiry and subsequently in Court cannot be used in evidence against an accused person, as he is not a competent witness under s 116 of the Evidence Act. Samadun v Amq Emperor, 5 O C 246. A witness who is so deaf and dumb that it is impossible to make him understand the questions put in cross examination, is not a competent witness and his evidence, if taken ought to be struck out and a conviction based solely on his evidence must be quashed. Venkattan v Emperor 14 Ind Cr 655 = (1912) M W N 100. In this connection see also Requ v Abdulla 7 A 385 (F B).

A deaf mute's testimony may be taken by the use of written questions to which he replies in writing. The questions and answers are then read to the Court and jury. But it must appear that the deaf mute is able to understand intelligently communications made to him by signs or otherwise and that he is able to communicate his thoughts in an intelligent manner. And where a deaf mute is able only by means of descriptive signs to picture the happening of certain events and cannot understand questions or communicate the details of the events that he is attempting to tell about his testimony cannot be taken. When the witness, by reason of physical injuries to the throat was unable to speak the Court was justified in permitting her to nod for yes and shake her head for no, and to write answers for which the simple affirmative and negative signs were inappropriate. Buri Jones § 719.

120 In all civil proceedings the parties to the suit, and the husband or wife of any party to the suit, shall be competent witnesses. In criminal proceedings against any person, the husband or wife of such person, respectively, shall be a competent witness.

Parties to civil suit, and their wives or husbands. Husband or wife of person
under criminal trial

Reason of the rule It was a favourite doctrine of common law that husband and wife were one person in the law. Since parties were incompetent to testify in their own behalf it followed that, if the legal identity of husband and wife was conceded, they are not competent witnesses for or against each other. Buri Jones § 733. Blackstone thus stated this ground of exclusion. "But in trials of any sort, they are not allowed to give evidence for or against each other, partly because it is impossible their testimony should be indifferent, but principally because of the union of the persons, and, therefore, if they were admitted to be witnesses for each other, they would contradict one maxim of the law 'nemo tenetur seipsum accusare'" Black Com 413, see also section 3 of Act XV of 1852 and s 14 of Act II of 1855. This section does away with this rule of the common law. In India that bar has been removed by this section. The rule of exclusion in England is merely a rule of positive law and not one depending upon the fundamental principles of natural justice. Per Sir Barnes Peacock J in Queen v Khayoolah, 6 W R 21 (25) Cr. Mr Livingstone in his Introductory Report to the Code of Evidence, prepared by him for the state of Louisiana says "The exclusion of interested testimony having been examined and found to be injurious to the investigation of truth, and its admission to be attended with the inconvenience which may not be reduced to one of a quantity that has no assignable value, it, of course finds no place in the proposed code, and with it disappears one of the most fruitful sources of uncertainty, expense, delay, and inconvenience in the law. If the search after truth requires that interested witnesses, and even the parties themselves should be interrogated to discover it, are there any relations in which the offered witness may stand to the parties that exclude his testimony? (1) The code now offered does not contain the exclusion of his husband or wife as witnesses, for or against each other, because the reporter does not find any one sufficient ground, the reasons by which it is supported in the English Divisions or Commentaries. The first of these alleged reasons is that their interests are identical. But in a system which declares interest as an objection to competency, this reason fails of course.

S 120

Civil cases. Even before the passing of the Indian Evidence Act, it was held in Queen v Ahpooallah 6 W R 21 Cr (1 B) by the majority of Court, that in India upon trials to the Mofussil a wife was competent to give evidence for or against her husband or for or against any person tried jointly with her husband. This rule has been incorporated in this section. Bastardy proceedings under section 193 Criminal Procedure Code are civil proceedings within the meaning of section 120 of the Evidence Act, and the defendant thereto may give evidence on his own behalf. Aur Mahomed v Bis mulla Jan, 16 C 781, see also Bare Tokee v Abdool, 5 C 536. A person against whom an order for maintenance under section 483 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is sought is a competent witness on his own behalf in such proceedings. Hiralal v Sahib Jan 18 A 107. In Rosario v Ingles 18 B 468, 473, the Court observed. Proceedings under section 458, Criminal Procedure Code have been held to be of a civil nature. Aur Mahomed v Bis mulla Jan, 16 C 781. By section 120 Evidence Act, in civil proceedings the parties to the suit shall be competent witnesses. Mrs Rosario is a party and a competent witness. If she states in the witness box that her husband had no access to her at any time when the children now in question could have been begotten her statement may be taken for what it is worth. If her evidence of this alleged fact cannot be excluded as inadmissible, then there is no provision of law determining at what stage of the proceedings her evidence may be recorded. See also John Howe v Charlotte Howe 33 M 466. There is no inflexible rule that if a party, plaintiff or defendant gives his testimony, he must be disbelieved because he is a party to the suit. Such a rule, if adopted, would nullify the provisions of section 120 of the Evidence Act, which provides that in all civil proceedings the parties to the suit shall be competent witnesses. Jogendra Krishna v Karpal Harshu & Co, 49 C 315=35 C L J 175=68 Ind Cas 993.

Criminal cases. The theory of disqualification by interest was merely one variety of the general theory which underlay the extensive rules of incompetency at common law. The law on the subject is thus laid down by Mrs Starkie, in his Evidence at page, 83. 'The law will not receive the evidence of any person even under the sanction of an oath, who has an interest in giving the proposed evidence, and consequently whose interest conflicts with his duty. This rule of exclusion, considered in its principle requires little explanation. It is founded on the known infirmities of human nature which is too weak to be generally restrained by religious or moral obligations when tempted and solicited in a contrary direction by temporal interests. There are no doubt, many whom no interest could reduce from a sense of duty and their exclusion by the operation of this rule may in particular cases shut out the truth. But the law must prescribe the general rules and experience proves that more mischief would result from the general reception of interested witnesses than is occasioned by their general exclusion.' For the reception of evidence of parties to suits the following reason is urged in the Second Report of the English Common Law Practice Commissioners. 'Plain sense and reason would obviously suggest that any living witness who could throw any light upon the fact in issue should be heard to state what he knows, subject always to such observations as may arise as to his means of knowledge or his disposition to the truth.'

The law of England, however, at least until a recent period, proceeded on a very different principle. Acting apparently on a distrust both of the integrity of witness and of the discernment of the tribunals, it sought to protect the latter from the possibility of being misled, by carefully excluding from giving testimony not only the parties to the cause, but any one who had any, even the most minute, interest in the result. Every person so circumstanced, however small and insignificant the amount of his interest, was presumed to be incapable of resisting the temptation to perjury, and every Judge and jury man was presumed to be incapable of discerning perjury under circumstances peculiarly calculated to create suspicion and witchfulness. It is painful to contemplate the amount of injustice which must have taken place under the exclusive system of the English law, not only in cases actually brought into Court and there wrongly decided in consequence of the exclusion of evidence, but in numberless cases in which the parties silently submitted to wrongs from inability to avoid themselves of proof which though morally conclusive, was in law inadmissible. From the time, however, when the late Mr Bentham first turned the attention of the public to the defects of the English law of evidence, the system of exclusion has been crumbling away before the power of discussion and improved legislation. [After noting the general statutes between 1843 and 1851, which had by successive steps removed incompetency for interest, it continued: Such is the gradual progress of opinion and intelligence. A quarter of a century ago such a measure if proposed would doubtless have been treated as a wild and dangerous innovation, altogether unfit to be entertained by the Legislature. The new law has now been in practical operation for eighteen months, and according to the current testimony of the bench, the profession and the public, is found to work admirably and to contribute in an eminent degree to the administration of justice.] Vide English Common Law Practice Commissioners Second Report p 10. In England, this disqualification of the parties in civil suits except in actions for adultery and breach of promises was removed by Stat 14 & 15 Vict C 99, s 2. Stat 16 & 17 Vict. C 83, s 1 states that husbands and wives of parties shall be competent and compellable to testify on behalf of either or any of the parties. Section 6 of Stat 22 and 23 Vict C 61 provided that on wife's petition for divorce founded for adultery, coupled with cruelty or desertion, both husband and wife are competent and compellable as to cruelty or desertion. Section 2 of Stat 32 & 33 Vict C 68 enacts that parties to an action for breach of marriage promise, are competent witnesses. Stat 40 & 41 Vict C 14 enacted, on indictment or in proceeding to try or enforce a civil right only, the defendant, and the defendant's wife or husband to be competent and compellable witness. In 1898 the English Criminal Evidence Act was passed. Section 36 of that Act (Stat 61 & 62 Vict. C 36) states: 'Every person charged with an offence and the wife or husband, as the case may be of the person so charged, shall be a competent witness for the defence at any stage of the proceedings, whether the person so charged is charged solely or jointly with any other person. Provided as follows: (a) A person so charged shall not be called as a witness in pursuance of this Act except upon his own application, (b) The failure of any person charged with an offence, or of the wife or husband as the case may be, of the person so charged, to give evidence shall not be made the subject of any comment by the prosecution, (c) The wife or husband of the person so charged shall not, save as in this Act mentioned, be called as a witness in pursuance of this Act except upon the application of the person so charged. (d) Nothing in this Act shall make a wife compellable to disclose any communication made to her by her husband during the marriage, etc. Under this section in criminal proceedings against any person (i.e. where the person is in the position of an accused) the husband or wife of such person, respectively, shall be competent witnesses. But the accused is not a competent witness in a criminal case. The complainant or the husband or wife of such complainant is incompetent witness in a criminal proceeding, although this section makes no provision for it, because in all criminal cases the crown is always the nominal prosecutor.

Proceedings under Divorce Act. By section 52 of the Indian Divorce Act (IV of 1869) any party may offer himself or herself as a witness, and shall be

S 121. examined, and may be cross examined and re examined, like any other witness. The word 'party' includes a co respondent. De Linton v De Bretton, 4 A 49 (51). Section 52 of the same Act enacts "On any petition presented by a wife, praying that her marriage may be dissolved by reason of her husband having been guilty of adultery coupled with cruelty or of adultery coupled with desertion without reasonable excuse the husband and wife respectively shall be competent and compellable to give evidence of or relating to such cruelty or desertion." See also Kelly v Kelly 3 B L R App 6, Stat 23 & 23 Vict C 61 s 6

121 No Judge or Magistrate shall, except upon the special order of some Court to which he is subordinate, be compelled to answer any questions as to his own conduct in Court as such Judge or Magistrate, or as to anything which came to his knowledge in Court as such Judge or Magistrate but he may be examined as to other matters which occurred in his presence whilst he was so acting

Illustrations

(a) A, on his trial before the Court of Session says that a deposition was improperly taken by B, the Magistrate. B cannot be compelled to answer questions as to this, except upon the special order of a superior Court.

(b) A is accused before the Court of Session of having given false evidence before B, a Magistrate. B cannot be asked what A said except upon the special order of the superior Court.

(c) A is accused before the Court of Session of attempting to murder a police-officer whilst on his trial before B a Sessions Judge. B may be examined as to what occurred.

Principle. A Judge is not bound to leave the bench and testify as to anything. Public policy would authorize his refusal. If the Judges are made competent witnesses, it would lead to embarrassment, and would have a tendency to lower the standard of Courts and bring them into contempt. Burn Jones § 764. In Duke of Buccleuch v Metropolitan Police L R 5 E & I App 429, 433 Cleasby B and "With respect to those who fill the office of Judge, it has been felt that there are grave objections to their conduct being, in the subject of cross examination and comment (to which hardly any limit could be put) in relation to proceedings before them and as everything which they can properly prove can be proved by others the Courts of law discountenance and I may say prevent them from examining. This section clears up an uncertain point of English law by exempting a Judge from answering questions as to his own conduct in Court, or as to anything other than actual occurrences in his presence, which came to his knowledge in Court as such Judge, unless with the special order of the Court above. Cum Lo 352 illustrations (a) (b) (c)

Scope of the section. Calling the Judge as a witness is an exceedingly rare event. Nevertheless, it has sometimes happened that a presiding Judge or Magistrate has temporarily left the bench to assume the role of witness in the pending cause. But the two functions are so inconsistent that the function is obviously improper. If a Judge is put upon the stand as a witness, he has all the rights of a witness, and he is subject to all the duties and liabilities of a witness. It may chance that he may, for reasons sufficient for himself, but not sufficient for another of equal authority in Court, decline to answer a question put to him or in some other way bring himself in conflict with the Court. Who shall decide what course shall be taken with him? Shall he

return to the bench and take part in disposing of the interlocutory question thus arising and upon the decision being made, go back to the stand, or go into custody for contempt? The first would be unseemly, if not unlawful, for it would be passing judicially upon his own case. The last would disorganise the Court and suspend its proceedings. Other like results may be conceived as possible, equally as contrary to the good conduct of judicial proceedings. Reg v Gaillard, 8 Cr & P 595. But nevertheless a Judge may give testimony as a witness in a trial before a Court of which he is a member. Mitchell v Justices, 4 B, 30 L R 526. Judicial officers are not exempted from giving evidence upon matters which they saw, when sitting as Judges, unless they arrive at such knowledge by virtue of investigation which they were making as Judges. A Munsiff should not be called upon to depose to what took place before him in the course of a trial which he was conducting as a Munsiff. High Court Proceedings 27th Nov 1871, 2 Weir 777=6 M H C App 43. The privilege given by this section is the privilege of the witness, i.e., of the Judge of whom the question is asked. If he waives such privilege it does not lie in the mouth of any other person to assert it. A committing Magistrate who is cited as a witness in a Sessions Court cannot be compelled to answer questions as to his own conduct in Court, except under the special orders of the Court to which he is subordinate. If he does not object to answer such questions there is no prohibition to his doing so. Empress v Chidon 3 A 573=A W N 1881 37.

Judge, whether competent witness. In arguing a question as to the duty of the Court not to have rendered a certain judgment counsel put this case.

Sir let us put the case that one man kills another in your presence you observing it and another who is not guilty is indicted before you and is found guilty so as to incur the penalty of death you ought to respite the judgment against him, for you are knowing to the contrary, and should make further report to the king to give him pardon. No more should you give judgment in this case, before causing those to appear by whose hands the king was paid. Gascoigne C I said. 'Once the king himself asked of me the very case that you have put, and asked me what was the law, and I told him just as you say it, and he was well pleased that the law was so.' Year Book, 7 H IV 41 pl 5. In Sir John Fenwick's trial before the House of Commons, 13 How St Tr 663, 667, Mr Hailes, Solicitor General, on Mr Newport having cited the above story of Gascoigne, replied. 'It is said, though a Judge do not think in his conscience a person guilty, yet he ought not to make use of that private knowledge, and a case was quoted out of Henry IV. But I think that Judge might have behaved himself something better than he did, and sure I am, now he would be blamed. I do not say that a Judge upon his private knowledge ought to judge, he ought not. But if a Judge knows anything whereby the prisoner might be convicted or acquitted (not generally known), then I do say he ought to be called from the place where he sits, and go to the bar and give evidence of his knowledge, and so the Judge in Henry IV's time ought to have done and not to have suffered the prisoner to have been convicted and then get a pardon for him for a pardon will not always do the business.

A Judge says Mr Tylor 'before whom the cause is tried, must conceal any fact within his own knowledge unless he be first sworn (A v Anderson, 7 How St Tr 871, Hurpurshad v Sheo Dayal, 3 I A 259 286) and consequently if he be a sole Judge, it seems that he cannot depose as a witness (Ross v Buhler, 2 Mart N S 312), though if he be sitting with others, he may then be sworn and give evidence (Trial of Regicides, 5 How St Tr 1181). In this last case, the proper course appears to be that the Judge who has thus become a witness should leave the bench, and take no further judicial part in the trial, because he can hardly be deemed capable of impartially deciding on the admissibility of his own testimony or of weighing it against that of another. Ross v Buhler, 2 Mart N S 312 Taylor § 1379. So a person having to exercise judicial functions may give evidence in a case pending before him when such evidence can and must be submitted to the independent evident judgment of other persons exercising similar judicial functions sitting with him at the same time. So also a Sessions Judge is a competent witness, and

- S 121. the giving of evidence by him does not preclude him from dealing judicially with the evidence of which his own forms a part Queen v Moolta Singh, 13 W R 60 Cr In a case in which a Deputy Magistrate took an active part in the capture of parties charged with having been members of an unlawful assembly and where he tried them on that charge, Phear J said 'It has been held by this Court and in accordance with the general principles which govern the conduct of an English Court of criminal justice that while a person is not necessarily disqualified from presiding as a Judge or acting as a jurymen upon an inquiry into or investigation of facts, he may have been himself a witness of some of the facts which are the subject of the inquiry or investigation if he does do so so far from being under any such obligation as that which the Deputy Magistrate seems to have assumed, to, is bound to state to the prisoner or other person concerned, or to make known to him, so far as he can, what are the facts which he himself observed to which he himself can bear testimony And moreover the prisoner who is being tried by a Judge in this situation has a right if he thinks it desirable to cross examine the Judge who, under these circumstances and to this extent, must be viewed as a witness, and his evidence should be recorded It is quite erroneous in our opinion, to suppose on the contrary, as the Deputy Magistrate appears to have supposed that he was bound to keep out of sight altogether the part which he has played in the matter and to pretend (we cannot use any other word than that) that he knew nothing about the facts excepting so much as the witness told him in Court It is always dangerous for any man in whose right conduct others are concerned to set up and endeavour to carry out a fiction such as this It is most specially dangerous for a Criminal Judge, to attempt anything of the kind This Deputy Magistrate if he thought it right, as he had to take upon himself this duty of trying the prisoners in this case ought to have made no pretence whatever of any sort he ought to have frankly avowed and openly stated in his Court all the part which he had taken and the facts which he had observed and made his own evidence part of the record in the case This avowal of a Criminal Judge being the principal witness in the case which he has to try is, no doubt most apparent this however is reason for his declining to try the case not for his endeavouring to resume an unreal character' Hurro Chunder Paul and ors 20 W R 76 Cr

In Empress v Donnelly, 2 C 405 the question arose whether a Magistrate can himself be a witness in which he is the sole Judge of law and fact In answering the question in the negative Markby J said As to the second point whether the conviction is illegal because the Magistrate himself gave evidence that question seems to me to resolve itself in this Is a sole Judge of law and fact competent to decide a case in which he has himself given evidence? It has been strongly contended on the part of the Crown that he is so and that there is no impeachment in law to a Judge giving evidence and then disposing himself of the case by his sole opinion No instance of this kind has, however, been found and no authority of any Judge or text writer has been cited in support of such a proposition The English cases (they are very bad and very old) do not go farther than to establish that a person having to exercise judicial functions may give evidence in a case pending before him when such evidence can and must be submitted to the independent judgment of other persons exercising similar judicial functions sitting with him at the same time (per Norman C J in Queen v Mukta Singh 4 B L R 1 Cr 15) No case in England is cited in which even under the circumstances a Judge has been called as witness in a trial on which he was sitting later than the trial of Lord Stafford Two cases are cited as having occurred in this country—one the case of Queen v Tara persad Bhattacharjee S 1 Rep 1857 pt 1 p 83, and the other case before Mr Justice Norman above referred to That learned Judge went into the matter on that occasion very fully and having carefully considered his judgment, I have come to the conclusion that he did not intend to carry the law beyond that which he lays down is the result of the English cases In the absence therefore of any authority for the position that a sole Judge of law and fact may give evidence, and then decide a case in which he has been a witness,

I refuse to give any countenance to what appears to me to be a most objectionable proceeding. Every one admits that it is highly objectionable for a Judge to give evidence even when there are other Judges besides himself. For my own part, I consider these objections so formidable that I would gladly see the practice of calling a Judge as a witness abolished in all cases. But these objections are greatly increased when the Judge who testifies is a sole Judge. The case is entirely in his hands. He has no one to restrain, correct, or check him. If he gives his evidence upon any matter of importance, the party against whom his evidence tells could not venture to test his credibility either by cross examination, or contradict it by other testimony. I need say nothing of the indecency of such a proceeding, no one dare venture to defend it. The Judge would therefore give his evidence without the usual safeguards against false testimony—a position which has been over and over again repudiated. In the same case Prinsep J added: 'On the second point, I consider that the authorities quoted in the judgment of Mr Justice Norman in Queen v Mulia Singh 4 B L R A Cr 15 are conclusive that one who is sitting as a sole Judge is not competent also to be a witness. See also Queen v Hanukam 19 M 263.

Although a Magistrate is not disqualified from dealing with a case judicially merely because in his character of Magistrate it may have been his duty to initiate the proceedings, yet a Magistrate ought not to act judicially in a case where there is no necessity for his doing so and where he himself discovered the offence and initiated the prosecution, and where he is one of the principal witnesses for the prosecution. Queen v Bholanath 2 C 23 see also Sudhania v Queen Empress, 23 C 328, Gurish v Queen Empress 20 C 857, In the case of Anand Chunder Singh v Basu Mudh 24 C 167 Sardor Khan v Emperor 21 P R 1904 Cr = 27 P R Cr 1904, Alimuddin v Emperor, 20 C 392 = 6 C W N 390.

It is one of the oldest and plainest rules of justice and of common sense that no man shall sit as Judge in a case in which he has a substantial interest. This is the law of this country as much as it is the law of England. Queen v Bholanath, 2 C 23 (27), Queen v Hiratal 8 B L R 422 (F B), Queen v Meyer, 1 Q B D 173, Seagut v Dale, L R 2 Q B D 518, Gurish v Reg 20 C 457, Wood v Corporation of Calcutta, 7 C 322. It is not at all proper for a Magistrate, in disposing of a case, to rely on statements made to him on of Court. Reg v Sahadev 14 B 572 see also Sri Balusa v Sri Boluso 22 M 427. A Judge is not justified in acting chiefly on his own knowledge and belief. Muthun Bibee v Busher Khan 11 M I A 213 (221), Honproshad v Sheo Dyal, 1 I A 259 Jousseou v Puto, 7 W R 190, Sooroy Kont v Khootee Narain, 22 W R 9, Durga Prosad v Ram Doyal, 38 C 153, Satughan v Emperor, 40 Ind Cis 357, Kishore v Gonesh, 9 W R 252, Kallonnass v Gango, 23 W R 121.

Where a Magistrate, trying a case of riot, made a local inspection of the scene of the alleged offence and was influenced by such inspection in arriving at a conclusion in the case, he is a witness in the case and is such was incompetent to try the case. Queen Empress v Mamchem, 19 M 263 = 2 W R 725 = 6 M L J 143, see also Gaya Singh v Mahomed 5 C W N 864, Hari Keshore v Abdul 21 C 920, but see In re Lalji 19 A 302. The rule is that the same person cannot both be prosecutor and Judge. Queen v Nali, 24 W R Cr 1, Queen v Gangodhor, 3 C 622, Queen v Deokh, 2 A 806, Gurish v Queen Empress, 20 C 865, In re Het Lal, 22 W R Cr 75.

Jurors. It was formerly held that jurors could not be asked to state the testimony of a witness given before them for the purpose of impeaching him at the trial. 12 M Abr 20 (tit Evidence). But under s 118 of the Evidence Act they are competent witnesses to give evidence of material facts. But where it was alleged that the verdict of the jury was arrived at by casting lots and the Sessions Judge held an enquiry into the matter in the course of which he examined, besides other persons, all jurors, held that the statement of the juror as to what happened in the jury room is inadmissible. Emperor v Hari umar, 17 C W N 787 = 40 C 693 = 14 Cr L J 392 = 20 Ind Cis 216. "The necessity for securing to the grand jurors an absolute freedom of deliberation and decision, immune from apprehension of injury from the person charged by them,

- S 122. demands a guarantee that by no legal process will the disclosure of their votes and expressions of opinion in the jury room be compelled. It forbids that any grand juror shall be compelled to disclose his own utterances or permitted to disclose the utterances of his fellows."

122 No person who is or has been married shall be compelled to disclose any communication made to him during marriage by any person to whom he is or has been married, nor shall he be permitted to disclose any such communication, unless the person who made it, or his representative in interest, consents, except in suits between married persons, or proceedings in which one married person is prosecuted for any crime committed against the other.

General Principle of Privileged communications. Looking back at the principle of Privilege as an exception to the general liability of every person to give testimony upon all facts required in a Court of Justice and having in view that preponderance of extrinsic policy which alone can justify the recognition of any such exception four fundamental conditions may be predicated as necessary to the establishment of a privilege against the disclosure of communications between persons standing in a given relation. (1) The communications must originate in a confidence that they will not be disclosed. (2) This element of confidentiality must be essential to the full satisfactory maintenance of the relation between the parties. (3) The relation must be one which in the opinion of the community ought to be sedulously fostered and (4) The injury that would inure to the relation by the disclosure of the communications must be greater than the benefit thereby gained for the correct disposal of litigation. These four conditions being present a privilege should be recognized, and not otherwise. Wigmore § 2285.

Principle underlying this section. The policy which should lie at the foundation of every rule of privileged communications is amply satisfied in the present privilege. The communications originate in confidence, the confidence is essential to the relation, the relation is a proper object of encouragement by the law and the injury that would ensue to it by disclosure is probably greater than the benefit that would result in the judicial investigation of truth. There seems therefore to be no reason for objecting to the recognition of the present privilege. Wigmore § 2332. The happiness of the married state requires that there should be the most unlimited confidence between husband and wife and this confidence the law secures by providing that it shall be kept for ever inviolable and nothing shall be extracted from the bosom of the wife which was confided there by the husband. Green L. § 234.

Husband and wife—Old rule of excluding their evidence. The principle underlying this section must not be confused with the old disability of husband and wife to be witness against each other. The record of judicial rationation says Prof Wigmore defining the grounds and policy of this privilege forms one of the most curious and entertaining chapters of the law of evidence. It is curious because the variety of ingenuity displayed in the invention of reasons ex post facto for a rule so simple and so long accepted could hardly have been believed, but for the recorded utterances. Wigmore § 2229. The reason of the privilege is thus given by Buller J in his trials at Nisi Prius, 286. 'Husband and wife cannot be admitted to be a witness for each other, because contrary to the legal policy of marriage.' In Barker v. Dixie Lee Cist & Hurdwicke 264. Lord Hardwicke L. C. J. said 'The reason why the law will not suffer a wife to be a witness for or against her husband is to preserve the peace of families. The following reasons are stated by Sir William Blackstone in his commentaries. If they are admitted to be witnesses for each other, they would contradict one maxim of law nemo in propria causa testis esse debet, and if against each other, they would contradict another maxim, nemo tenetur seipsum accusare. A new reason is ascribed by Lord Kenyon, L C J in Davis v Druce, 4 T R 678, where he said 'Their being so nearly connected, they are supposed to have such a bias on their minds that they are not to be permitted to give evidence for or against each other'. "Most of these reasons says Prof Wigmore "do not call for particular dissection, their very statement is void of force" "Hard", 'hard ship', 'policy', 'peace of families', 'absolute necessity'—some such words as these are the vehicles" says Mr Jeremy Bentham "by which the faint spark of reason that exhibits itself is conveyed. There are the lending terms, and these are all you are furnished with, and out of these you are to make a applicable, a distinct and intelligible proposition, as you can. [As to the 'policy of the situation, it is precisely the opposite, for] if a man could not carry on schemes of injustice, without being in danger, every moment, of being disturbed in them, and (if that were not enough) betrayed and exposed to punishment by his wife, injustice in all its shapes, and with it the suits and the fees of which it is prolific would in comparison with what it is at present be rare. Let us, therefore, grant to every man a licence to commit all sorts of wickedness, in the present and with the assistance of his wife, let us secure to every man in the bosom of his family and in his own bosom, a safe accomplice. Let us make every man's house his castle, and, so far as depends upon us let us convert that castle into a den of thieves! A rule like this protects and encourages inculcates fraud. For falsehood is but one modification of fraud, concealment, a sort of negative falsehood is another, I mean concealment of any facts of which for the protection of their rights individuals or the public have a right to be informed. By authorizing an individual to conceal it in a case in which it is not so much as pretended that its mischievousness is in the smallest degree less than in other cases, it at once protects and encourages two different acts, of the mischievousness and criminality of which it shows itself sufficiently sensible on other occasions,—the principal crime, and that concealment of it, which when the act so concealed is criminal, is itself a crime. To the legislators of antiquity the married state was one object of favour, they regarded it as a security for good behaviour, a wife and children were considered as being (what doubtless they are in their own nature) so many pledges. Such was the policy of the higher antiquity. The policy of feudal barbarism of the ages which gave birth to this immoral rule, is to convert that sacred condition into a nursery of crime. The reason now given was not I suspect, the original one. Drawn from the principle of utility though from the principle of utility imperfectly applied, it favours of a late and polished age. The reason that presents itself as more likely to have been the origin of one is the gringribbler nonsensical reason—that of the identity of the two persons thus connected. Baron and Feme are one person in law. On questions relative to the two matrimonial conditions this quibble is the fountain of all reasoning. Bentham's Rationale of Judicial Evidence 6 IX Pt IV, C V Wigmore § 2238. But this section deals with a different subject. The Commissioners on Common Law Procedure in their second report at p 13 said. The question how far communications of married persons inter se should be a matter of testimony in Courts of Justice stands on a different ground (from that of compelling one to testify to facts against other). So much of the happiness depend on the inviolability of domestic confidence that the alarm and unhappiness occasioned to society by invading its sanctity and compelling the public disclosures of confidential communications between husband and wife would be a far greater evil than the disadvantage which may occasionally arise from the loss of light which such revelations might throw on questions in dispute. Hence all communications between them should be held to be privileged." So this privilege rests on the obvious ground, that the admission of such testimony would have a powerful tendency to disturb the peace of families, to promote domestic horrors, and to weaken, if not to destroy, that feeling of mutual confidence, which is the most endearing solace of married life. Taylor § 909.

Scope of the section. This section is based upon section 3 of Stat 16 & 17 Vict C 83, which runs as follows 'No husband shall be compellable to disclose any communication made to him by his wife during the marriage, and no wife shall be compellible to disclose any communication made to her by her husband during the marriage." The protection afforded by this section is greater than that conferred by the English Statute. There only the husband and wife are protected from disclosing any communication made to him to her by his or her marriage partner. But in India, he or she is not permitted to disclose that communication. Steph Dig Est 110, Markby Li p 93. As according to the rule of interpretation, words importing the masculine gender includes feminine the word he includes the word she and the word him includes the word her. So this section confers the same privilege on the wife that it confers on the husband. Markby Li p 93, General Clauses Act (X of 1897) s 13. The words "compelled to disclose or 'permitted to disclose' clearly imply that the party concerned is not made or allowed to say or do something by way of disclosing a communication made during marriage. Per Subramanya Iyyar J in Queen Empress v Donaghy, 22 M 1 (4). In the same case Boddam J said: "We think the Sessions Judge was wrong in declining to receive in evidence the letter, exhibit V — a letter from the first defendant to his wife which had been found by the police when searching her house under a search warrant. Section 122 of the Evidence Act does not apply to such a case. A document even though it contains a communication from a husband to a wife or vice versa in the hands of third persons, is admissible in evidence, for in producing it there is no compulsion on or permission to the wife or husband to disclose any communication. The section protects the individuals and not the communication if it can be proved without putting into the box for that purpose the husband or the wife to whom the communication was made. For these reasons we think the exhibit V was rightly received in evidence. A third person, who has overheard a conversation between husband and wife while it was going on, may testify to it. Greenleaf 15th Ed Vol I p 347, see also R v Pamerter, 12 Cox Cr 177. The principle applies quite irrespective of whether either spouse is a party to the cause. Moreover the death or divorce of the other member does not affect the policy of prohibition. Again the other member may always waive the privilege. Greenleaf § 333 (C). A conversation with a third person is not excluded because the other spouse was also present. All bright v Hannah, 103 Ia 98. The common law privilege protects only conversations or communications, and the question may thus arise whether certain conduct by one spouse in the presence of the other—such as the payment of money or the signing of a note—is to be treated as a communication. Greenleaf § 254.

S 122

The protection is not confined to cases where the communication sought to be given in evidence is of a strictly confidential character, but the seal of the law is placed upon all communications of whatever nature which pass between husband and wife. O'Connor v Mayorbanks 4 M & Gr 435-11 L J C P. It extends also to cases in which the interests of the strangers are solely involved as well as to those in which the husband or wife is a party on the record. It is however, limited to such matters as have been communicated during marriage. Taylor § 909 A. This section is limited to such matters as have been communicated during the marriage, and consequently if a man were to make the most confidential statement to a woman before he married her and it were afterwards to become of importance in a civil suit to know what that statement was the wife, on being called as a witness and interrogated with respect to the communication would as it seems, be bound to disclose what she knew of the matter. Taylor § 909. In interpreting the rule it is not material that the relation of husband and wife should be still subsisting at the time when the evidence is required to be given. So where a woman, who had been divorced by Act of Parliament and had married another person was offered as a witness against her former husband to prove a contract which he made during the coverture Lord Alvanley held her clearly incompetent adding with his characteristic energy "It never can be endured, that the confidence which the law has created while the parties remained in the most intimate of all relations shall be broken whenever, by the misconduct of one party, the relation has been dissolved. Monroe v Twissleton, Pea Add Cas 221 explained and confirmed by Lord Ellenborough in Avegon v Ld Kinnand, 6 East, 192, 193 Where there is no "representative in interest" who can consent, under this section to the disclosure of communications made by a deceased husband to his wife during marriage the wife should not be permitted, even if willing, to disclose such communications. The widow of a deceased husband is not his "representative in interest" for the purpose of giving such consent. The prohibition enacted by the section rests on no technicality that can be waived at will but is founded on a principle of high import which no Court is entitled to relax. Nauab Hauladar v Emperor, 40 C 891. No statement of an incriminating nature made by the appellant as to her guilt under section 302 I P Code to her husband could be received in evidence. Ishnan v Emperor 1923 Lah 40. In Mussamat Fatima v Crown, 10 P R 1914 Cr = 261 P L R 1914 = 15 Cr L J 613 = 25 Ind Crs 525 F, wife of A, was convicted of murdering her step son on the strength of a confession by her to her husband and the pointing out by her to him alone of the body of the step son floating in a pond. Held that such evidence is not admissible as the crime was not committed by the wife against the husband within the meaning of s 122 Evidence Act. Statements alleged by the wife of an accused person to have been made to her in respect of the offence with which he is charged, without the accused or his representative in interest consenting to those statements being disclosed are inadmissible under this section. Mulla v Emperor, 213 P L R 1913 = 19 Ind Crs 705 Cr = 14 Cr L J 273. An offence against a person is an offence calculated to injure his person or property or reputation, as in cases of defamation and does not include an offence against a son though such offence may result to the father's grief in mind. Mussamat Fatima v Crown, 10 P R 1914 Cr = 261 P L R 1914 = 15 Cr L J 613 = 25 Ind Crs 525. Under this section no communication between husband and wife can be disclosed by the one against the other without consent of the party concerned. The consent can not be implied. It is incumbent upon the Court to ask the party, against whom the evidence is to be given. Bishen Das v Emperor, 244 P L R 1913 = 19 Ind Crs 1004 = 14 Cr L J 316 = 41 P W R 1913 Cr = 27 P R 1913 Cr. So evidence given by the wife of one of the accused as to certain communications between her and her husband is inadmissible under this section. Jouala Salas v Crown, 34 P R 1914 Cr = 27 Ind Crs 664 = 16 Cr L J 181. The communication made by an arbitrator to his wife shortly before his death admitting that he had accepted bribe from a party can be permitted to be disclosed in evidence only if the requirements of this section, have been fulfilled. Kakobad v Khambatta, A I R 1930 Lah 280.

Communication does not include acts The privilege has for its object the security from apprehension of disclosure,—a security in consequence of which confidences will be freely given and not withheld. The protection therefore extends only to communications, i.e., utterances, not acts—the reasoning being analogous to that which establishes a similar limitation for communications between attorney and client (vide s. 126 infra). It follows, therefore, on the one hand that the privilege does not apply to domestic conduct as such. On the other hand, it is equally true that any particular act or conduct may in fact become the subject of a special confidence in the wife alone, i.e., may become a communication to her. For example, the husband, bringing home a package of valuables, and calling his wife's attention, "Note that I place this in the fourth desk drawer," in effect communicates to her not only the words but also the act of placing the package. While his domestic acts are ordinarily not to be treated as communications nevertheless it is always conceivable that they by special circumstances be made part of a communication. To formulate a precise rule would perhaps be impracticable. It is clear however, that the mere doing of an act by the husband in the wife's presence is not a communication of it by him for it is done for the sake of the doing, not for the sake of the disclosure. There must be something in the way of an invitation of the wife's presence or attention with the object of bringing the act directly to her knowledge. Except in such cases, the privilege cannot cover anything but an utterance of words, spoken or written. Wymore § 2337

123 No one shall be permitted to give any evidence derived from unpublished official records relating to any affairs of State, except with the permission of the Officer at the head of the department concerned, who shall give, or withhold such permission as he thinks fit

Evidence as to affairs of State Principle On the principle of public policy, the official transactions between the heads of the departments of state and their subordinate officers are in general treated as privileged communications. Greenleaf 1 v § 251. In Beatson v Stone 5 H & N 838, 53 Pollock C B said: We are of opinion that it cannot be laid down that all public documents, including treaties with foreign powers and all the correspondence that may precede or accompany them and all communications to the heads of departments are to be produced and made public whenever a suitor in a Court of justice thinks that his case requires such production. It is manifest to think, that there must be a limit to the duty or the power of compelling the production of papers which are connected with acts of state. As an instance, we would put the case of a British minister at a foreign court writing, in that capacity a letter to the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs in this country, containing matters injurious to the reputation of a foreigner or a British subject: can it be contended that the person referred to would have a right to compel the production of the letter in order to take the opinion of a jury whether the injurious matter was written maliciously or not? We are of opinion that, if the production of a state paper would be injurious to the public service the general public interest must be considered paramount to individual interest of a suitor in a Court of Justice.

Scope of the section This section follows the English law as laid down by the majority of the Court in Beatson v Stone 5 H & N 838 instead of the view of Martin B in the case of Fildes in Hennessy v Wright, 21 Q B D 509 and makes the public officer the Judge of whether a communication made to him in official character should or should not be disclosed. Jadub Lal v Khemani, 21 Q B D 509. So under this section the Judge is bound to accept, without question the decision of the public officer referred to. This view is confirmed by s 162 which forbids the Judge even to inspect the documents. Mark Ev p 91. The term "evidence" in this section refers to both oral and documentary evidence. Whately Stotes, Vol II p 919. This section is in accordance with Beatson v Stone 29 L J Ex 430, in which Pollock C B said: We are of opinion that, if the production of a state paper would be injurious to the public service the general public interest must be considered paramount to the individual interest of a suitor in a Court of Justice, and the question then arises, how is this to be determined? It is manifest that it must be determined either by the presiding Judge or by the responsible servant of the Crown in whose custody the paper is. The Judge would be unable to determine it without determining what the document was, and why the publication would be injurious to the public service—an enquiry which cannot take place in private and which, taking place in public, may do all the mischief which it is proposed to guard against. It appears to us therefore, that the question whether the production of the document would be injurious to the public service, must be determined not by the Judge, but by the head of the department having the custody of the paper and if he is in attendance and states that, in his opinion the production of the document would be injurious to the public service, we think the Judge ought not to compel the production of it. See the Rajah of Coorg's case 20 Jur 407. Not Ex 309.

Affairs of state would no doubt, be held to include any matters of a public nature with which the Government is concerned. Can Ev 354. So no person will be required to testify with regard to state secrets, or as to correspondence between Government officials on matters of public business, if in the opinion of the head of the department, such disclosure would injure

ously affect the public interest Best Lt 537 But any officer having the custody of records, not being records of which the production may, on special grounds be refused, is bound to produce them on receiving summons to that effect 2 Weir 781 Statements made by witnesses in the course of departmental enquiry into the conduct of police officers who were subsequently put upon their trial on charges of taking illegal gratification are not privileged under s 123, 124 or 125 of the Evidence Act Harbans v Emperor, 16 C W N 431=15 Ind Cas 77 Statements made before the Income Tax Collector do not relate to affairs of state and so are not governed by section 123 of the Evidence Act. Venkata chela v Sampathu Chettier, 4 M L T 317=32 M 62=19 M L J 263=1 Ind Cas 705 A report made to the Inspector General of Prisons under the jail manual is an unpublished official record relating to affairs of state within the meaning of this section and privilege can be claimed by the head of the department Emperor v Nandha 12 O L J 387=26 Cr L J 387=A I R 1925 Oudh 540=89 Ind Cas 387

Official records relating to affairs of state The protection of documents from discovery upon broad ground of state policy and public convenience is not limited to public official documents of a political or administrative character. The foundation of the rule is that the information cannot be disclosed without injury to the public interest, and not that the documents are confidential or official which alone is no reason for their non production Asiatic Petroleum v Anglo Persian Oil Co (1916) 1 K B 822=85 L J K B 1075 A libel case by a lieutenant-colonel, who was engaged in a mining company against one of a Court of enquiry appointed by the Commander-in-Chief to enquire into the plaintiff's conduct in the mining adventure and reporting his misconduct, the military secretary of the commander was held privileged from producing the minutes of the Court of enquiry containing the alleged libel, on the ground that the report was made under lawful orders and was confidential Home v Bentinck, 2 B & B 150, 154, see also Earl v Vars 1 Shaw 229 236, Leatson v Stone, 5 H & N 838, 853 Hennessey v Wright, L R 21 Q B D 509, contra Robinson v May, 2 J P Smith 3 Dickson v Wilton, 1 F & F 419 Where the document itself is privileged no extract from the same could be produced Anderson v Hamilton 1 B & B 156 note The votes or speeches of members of the House of Commons or the proceedings of the House of Commons cannot be disclosed Hignore § 276 The military and international affairs including proceedings before a military Court of inquiry cannot be disclosed R v Watson, 2 Stark 116 148 In Mercer v Denne (1904) 2 Ch 535 511, Farwell J said 'It would be most dangerous to admit confidential report made to the war office' In affirming the rule in the Court of Appeal in (1905) 2 Ch 385, 360 Vaughan Williams J said 'I agree although not perhaps exactly on the same grounds State-papers, despatches, minutes or documents of any such description which relate to the carrying on of the Government and are connected with the transaction of public affairs are privileged Hader v East India Co 25 L J Ch 345=8 Deg M & G 182 187, see also Bishop v Buryn Trial 16 How St Tr 495 In R v Russell 7 Dowd Pr 693 papers of a public nature and in the possession of Lord John Russell, in his public character as Secretary of State were held not producible In Smith v East India Company 11 L J Ch 71 correspondence on the subject of freight between defendants' directors and the royal commissioners, was held privileged on account of the company's governmental duties

Who determines the necessity of secrecy Although the party who relies upon a public document may be prepared to lay before the Court the original or such secondary evidence of it as has been raised by statute to the rank of an original nevertheless it is in the power of the head of any public department of state, whether a party to the action or not (Admiralty Commissioners v Aberdeen Steam Trawling Co 1909 S C 335), to represent to the Judge that in his opinion it would be prejudicial to the interests of the state that the document should be produced in open Court and thereupon the Judge will order that the document shall not be put in evidence Pouell Es 273 As the head of the department is alone competent to judge whether the disclosure of a document

S 124. will be injurious to the public interest he alone is competent to take this objection Beatson v Shene 5 H & N 838 On a proper construction of section 124 of the Evidence Act it is quite clear that it is for the Court to decide whether or not a particular document for which privilege is claimed is a communication made to a public officer in official confidence. If the Court decides that it was so made, then it has no authority to compel the public officer to produce it, for according to the section the public officer himself is the sole judge as to whether its disclosure would or would not be in the public interests. Collector v Jaunpur, 44 A 360=20 A L J 140=66 Ind Crs 171, see also Hughes v Vargas, 9 T L R 551, Williams v Star Newspaper 24 T L R 297. But "the truth cannot be escaped" says Prof Wigmore "that a Court which abdicates its present function of determining the facts upon which the admissibility of evidence depends will furnish to the designing officials too ample opportunities for abusing the privilege. The lawful limits for the privilege are extensible beyond any control if its applicability is left to the determination of the very official whose interest it is to shield his wrong doing under the privilege. Both principle and policy demand that the determination of the privilege shall be for the Judge." Wigmore § 2379. But unfortunately this section following the English law makes the public officer the judge as to whether a communication made to him in his official confidence should or should not be disclosed. If he thinks that the public interest would suffer by such disclosure he is entitled to refuse to disclose the communication. Bulku Bhuyan v Hari Nath 7 O W N 246, Secretary of State v Saminatha Nadar 119 Ind Crs 718. Where certain statements were made to a station master of a State Railway, but there was nothing to show that they were made to him in official confidence the communications are not protected. Emperor v Bhagwati A I R 1929 Oudh 543=6 O W N 937. In a recent Madras case the Court observed. The question for decision is whether certain documents, items 1 and 7 are open to the lower Court's inspection. The point is concluded by Iruin v D J Reid 48 C 304 which follows the English Law see Halsbury's Laws of England Vol II pp 84 and 137. The public officer concerned and not the Judge is to decide whether the evidence referred to shall be given or withheld. If the objection is taken by the proper person the Court will not go behind it. Secretary of State v Saminatha Nadar A I R 1930 Mad 342.

124 No public officer shall be compelled to disclose Official communication<sup>s</sup> communications made to him in official confidence when he considers that the public interests would suffer by the disclosure

Principle In Hennessey v Wright L R 21 Q B D 309, 312, Field J said. There are two aspects of this question. First the publication of a state document may involve danger to the nation. If the confidential communications made by servants of the crown to each other by superiors to inferiors or by inferiors to superiors, in the discharge of their duty to the crown, were liable to be made public in a Court of Justice at the instance of any suitor who thought proper to say fiat justitia ruat cælum an order for discovery might involve the country in a war. Secondly, the publication of a state paper may be injurious to servants of the crown as individuals there would be an end of all freedom in their official communications if they knew that any suitor that as in this case any one of their own body, whom circumstances had made a suitor, could legally insist that any official communication of no matter how secret a character should be produced openly in a Court of Justice. (1) The thrust of the argument' says Prof Wigmore is that an official should be secured from liability based on his official communications made in the course of duty. No body can dispute this general principle. But it signifies nothing for the law of Evidence. It signifies an exoneration from tortious or criminal liability. Whether and how far such exoneration should be conceded is a question of substantive law and is now solved by that law liberally in favour of officials. But wherever that law has declined to concede an exoneration, and his predicted liability, all this reason for protection ceases; by hypothesis it is a mockery to reserve, against righteous claims, a privilege of testimonial secrecy. This much seems plain. All the argument based upon hardship to officials may be conceded but for the purpose of testimonial privilege all such cases are irrelevant being duly safeguarded by other means. (2) The remainder of the argument consists in involving secrecy for acts of pending international negotiations or military precautions against foreign enemies. This too may be conceded. There ought to be a protection for 'secrets of State' in this narrow sense. But this done, what remains? In only three or four of the precedents has there been even a pretence that the matters actually preserved from disclosure concerned international facts of negotiation or defence. If they do not, then this reason is insufficient, for it is vain to claim secrecy on the ground that something else might have been asked for which it is in fact not asked for. (3) The question is then reduced to this whether there are any matters of fact, in the possession of officials, concerning solely the internal affairs of public business, civil or military, which ought to be privileged from disclosure when material to be ascertained upon an issue in a Court of Justice. Ordinarily, they are not. In any community under a system of representative Government and removable officials there can be no facts which require to be kept secret with that solidity which defies even the inquiries of a Court of Justice. 'To cover with the veil of secrecy,' said Patrik Hurry in Elliots Debates III, 170 'the common routine of business, is an abomination in the eyes of every intelligent man and every friend to this country.' Such a secrecy can seldom be legitimately desired. It is generally desired for the purposes of partisan politics or personal self-interest. The responsibility of officials to explain and to justify their acts is the chief safeguard against oppression and corruption. To concede to them a secretarial secrecy in a Court of Justice is to attribute to them a character which for other purposes is never maintained—a character which appears to have been advanced only when it happens to have served the interest of some individual to obstruct investigation into facts which might fix him with a liability. Wigmore § 2378.

Scope of the section. There is a marked difference between this section and section 123. This section is confined to public officers, though who are such is not defined. Section 123 embraces every one. This section makes the officer himself the judge of the propriety of waiving the privilege. In no case has the Court any authority if the objection is raised by proper authority. Section 123 is confined to unpublished records. Section 124 has no such restriction, though it is hard to see how privileged communications once published by the Government—e.g. by placing them in the editor's room—could be excluded. Ant. Fv 310. Statements whether oral or written, made by an officer summoned to attend before a Military Court of Inquiry are not part of the minutes of the proceedings of the Court which when reported and delivered to the Commander in chief, are received and held by him on behalf of the sovereign, and on grounds of public policy cannot be produced in evidence. Dankins v Lord Rolobey, L.R. 8 Q.B. 255. In Wyatt v Gore, Holt 299, Gibbs C.J. said 'No office of this kind could be executed with safety, if conversations between the governor of a distant province and his attorney general who is the only person upon whom such governor can lean for advice were suffered to be disclosed.' See also M. Eheney v Connellan 17 Ir C.L. 55, 69. Section 123 excludes only unpublished official records relating to any affairs of state except with the permission of the head of the Department while under section 124 in the other official matters the public officer claiming privilege may exercise his own discretion in giving or refusing disclosure. Ichanguir v Secretary of State, 6 C.W.N. 131. The words 'communication in official confidence' used in this section import no special degree of secrecy and no pledge or direction for its maintenance but include generally all matters communicated by one officer to another in the performance of duties. Nagaraja Pillai v Secretary of State, 26 Ind. Cas. 723=39 M. 304. In English law the privilege as to the production of public documents before Courts of law extends even to those which pass from hand to hand in a public office, in the usual course of business with no special work of secrecy upon them, and the ground upon which the privilege

S 124

1854 is that it would be detrimental to the public interest to produce it. And A resolution of a Government setting various opinions of Government officers including their legal advisers on a question of land tenures is a privileged document under s 121. Suryappa v Secretary of State, 23 Bom L R 1213 = A I R 1926 Bom 590

When he considers that the public interest would suffer by the disclosure this section follows the English law and makes the officer the judge as to whether a communication made to him in official confidence should or should not be disclosed. If he thinks that the public interest would suffer by such disclosure, he is entitled to refuse to disclose the communication. Bodhubhisan v Hari Nath, 7 C W N 216. An officer's refusal to disclose a document on grounds of public policy is final. It is not competent to the Court to call for and examine the secret archives of the State in order to satisfy itself of their confidential nature. Lala Tribhuban v Deputy Comm 17 Ind Cas 225 = 5 O L J 291, but see Collector of Jaunpur v Jamno 11 A 360 where the Court observed 'It is for the Court to decide whether or not a particular document for which privilege is claimed is a communication made to a public officer in official confidence'. The Judge is not allowed even a private perusal of the document. Beatson v Shene 5 H & N 838. On principle the rule is ludicrous. Is it to be said that even this much of disclosure cannot be treated? Shall every subordinate in the department have access to the secret, and not the presiding officer of the justice? Cannot the constitutionally co-ordinating body of Government share the confidence? It is ridiculous to observe a Chief Magistrate as in Beatson v Shene, supra solemnly protesting his incompetence to share the knowledge of a fact which had never been secret till and hid for months been spread abroad by the hundred tongues of scandal. Wigmore § 2379. In Gugy v Vaguro, 13 I W Can 33-38 (Am) Mondelet J said "Concealing that the privilege may exist, is to you to compare the discretion the unbiased mind the position of the Judge who is free independent of the Crown and of the people, who is free from party spirit who knows or should know no one to the biased mind—naturally no cessantly, biased mind—of a politician, not independent as the Judge is but dependent upon a party who knows or must know, the contending parties, and may have the most cogent reasons for supporting one party, in preference to another, who has to bear and does bear the external pressure which the Judge is or should be inaccessible to whose interest it may be, under the flimsy pretence under the transparent veil of pretended public interest, to screen some petty minion in office? The comparison cannot hold for a moment. In the case of the Judge you have sacred guarantees, in that of a politician you have none. External pressure will curb down the politician whilst you will behold the Judge more erect than ever calmly and firmly resisting and baffling its baneful influence. Clearly then manifestly should it be left to the Judge on the Bench in his discretion to determine the question instead of allowing a secretary or any member of the Government, to silence him to interfere with the administration of justice and to become the Judge."

When the officer says that the production of the document is not in the interest of public service the document is privileged. Nagaraja v Vythanatha, (1911) 2 M W N 369. If a public officer to whom communications are made in official confidence considers that the public interest would suffer by their disclosure, such communications could not be produced in evidence. But if it is not established that they were made in official confidence the opinion of the officer before whom they were made is not relevant. Emperor v Bhagwati, Ind Rul (1930) Oudh 174.

Confidential official business. On principle of public policy the official transactions between the heads of the departments of state and their subordinate officers are in general treated as privileged communications. Beatson v Secretary of State, (1905) 2 Q B 189. Thus communications between a provincial governor and his attorney general on the state of the colony or the conduct of its officers (Wyatt v Gore Holt's N P Cas 299) or between such governor and a military officer under his authority (Cooker v Maxwell,

2 Stark 183), the report of a military commission of inquiry made to the commander in chief (Horne v Lord F C Bentinck 2 Bro & Bing 130), and the correspondence between the agent of the Government and a Secretary of State (Inderson v Hamilton, 2 Bro & Bing 156n Morbury v Madison, 1 Cranch 141) are confidential and privileged matters, which the interest of the state will not permit to be disclosed Green v Le § 251 The correspondence between the Directors of the East India Company and the Board of Control, under the old law (Smith v E India Co 1 Phil 50, Rajah of Coorg v East India Co 25 L J Ch 315, Wadur v East India Co, 8 Deg M & G 182), or between an officer of the customs and the Board of Commissioners, (Black v Holmes, Fox and Sm 28)—are confidential and privileged matter which the interest of the state will not permit to be revealed Saylor § 947 But communications though made to official persons, are not privileged, when they are not made in the discharge of any public duty, such for example, as a letter by a private individual to the chief secretary of the postmaster general, complaining of the conduct of the guard of the mail towards a passenger Blake v Pilford 1 M & Roh 193, Green v Le § 251 Where the law is restrained by public policy from enforcing the production of papers, the like necessity restrains it from doing what would be the same thing in effect namely, receiving secondary evidence of their contents Gray v Pentland, 2 S & R 186, 137, Green v Le § 251 Ibbot v Gourti, 5 P W R Cr 1913=5 Ind Cr 714 The customs superintendent could not claim privilege as to the admission made to him by the Inspector although what took place between the two superintendents might probably be privileged Rukh mah v Emperor, 22 C W N 451=45 Ind Cr 284=19 Cr L J 521 Where the secondary evidence of certain documents had been admitted in the Court below without Government's sanction it is not open to the Government to object to their admissibility in appeal under section 121 of the Evidence Act Rathnamasuri v Secretary of State for India, 44 M L J 102=17 L W 415=12 Ind Cr 211 A Magistrate who came across certain document during the trial of a criminal case consulted the District Magistrate and declined to allow the document to be produced and confiscated it on the ground that it was a document of state, Held that the action of the Magistrate was correct Wamanaray v Emperor 22 N L R 31=94 Ind Cr 899=A. I R 1926 Nag 304 Privilege under this section can be claimed under this section in correspondence between president of Municipal Council and Secretary to the Government Padmana bhush v Town Council Thulur 6 Mys L J 453 It is doubtful whether a Railway station master is a public officer within the meaning of this section Emperor v Bhagwati, Ind Rul (1930) Oudh 174

125* No Magistrate or police officer shall be compelled to say whence he got any information as to the commission of any offence, and no Revenue-officer shall be compelled to say whence he got any information as to the commission of any offence against the public revenues

Explanation—"Revenue-officer" in this section means any officer employed in or about the business of any branch of the public revenue

Principle A genuine privilege for communications, on the fundamental principle of privilege must be recognized for communications made by informers to the Government, because such communications ought to receive encouragement, and because that confidence which will lead to such communications can be created only by holding out exemption from a compulsory disclosure of the informant's identity Wigmore § 2374 In Hind's Rul, 24 How St Tr 99,

* This section was substituted for the original s 125 by the Indian Evidence Act (1872) Amendment Act, 1887 (3 of 1887)

S 125 Earle C J said "It is perfectly right that all opportunities should be given to discuss the truth of the evidence given against a prisoner, but there is a rule which has universally obtained on account of its importance to the public for the detection of crimes, that those persons who are the channel by means of which that detection is made should not unnecessarily be disclosed, if it can be made to appear that really and truly it is necessary for the investigation of the truth of the case that the name of the person should be disclosed, I should be very unwilling to stop it but it does not appear to me that there is any necessity for it in this particular case. So it is absolutely essential to the welfare of the state, that the names of parties who interfere in situation of this kind should not be divulged, for otherwise be it from fear or shame, or the dislike of being publicly mixed up in inquiries of this nature—few men would choose to assume the disagreeable post of giving or receiving information respecting offences and the consequence would be that many great crimes would pass unpunished. Per Dallas C J in Home v Bentinck 2 B & B 162, Layton § 941, see also Watson final 32 How St Tr 102, R v O Connell 5 State Tr N S R v O'Brien 7 How St Tr 1 123, Ill Gen v Bryant, 15 L J N S Exch 263. These matters are either those which concern the administration of public justice or those which concern the administration of government but the principle of public safety is in both cases the same and the rule of exclusion is applied no further than the attainment of that subject requires. Greenl Ev § 250.

Scope of this section. The law recognizes the duty of every citizen to communicate to the government and to its officers such information as he may have concerning the commission of offences against the laws and for the purpose of encouraging the performance of that duty without fear of consequences, the Courts have long held that when the Government is immediately concerned, a witness cannot disclose the names of persons by whom and to whom information has been given which led to the discovery of the offence. Thus, in revenue cases a witness is not compelled to disclose the name of the informer [Re v Alers 6 Esp 125 (n)] or to state whether he himself was the informer. Alt Gen v Bryant, 15 M & W 16—15 L J Ex 265. The same rule has been applied in cases of treason (Re v Hardy 24 How St Tr 199 Re v Watson, 32 How St Tr 1) counterfeiting (United States v Moses 4 Wash C C 726) piracy (State v Soper, 16 Me 293) and in actions for libel based upon communications sent to public officers charging the plaintiff with misconduct in office or with offences against law. Gray v Pentland, 2 Seig & R 23. Home v Bentinck 2 Br & B 130, Robinson v May, 2 Smith 3, Burr Jones § 763.

Accordingly where a witness possessed of such knowledge, testified that he related it to a friend not in office who advised him to communicate it to another quarter a majority of the learned Judges held that the witness was not to be asked the name of that friend, and they all were of opinion that all those questions which tend to the discovery of the channels by which the disclosure was made to the officers of justice were upon the general principle of the convenience of public justice to be suppressed that all persons in that situation were protected from the discovery, and that if it was objected to it was no more competent for the defendant to ask the witness who the person was that advised him to make a disclosure than to ask who the person was to whom he made the disclosure in consequence of that advice or to ask any other question respecting the channel of communication, or all that was done under it. R v Hardy 24 How St Tr 808, Greenl Ev § 250. It may now be taken as settled rule that witnesses for the crown in criminal prosecution undertaken by the Government are privileged from disclosing the channel through which they have received or communicated information (R v Watson 32 St Tr 1 R v Richardson 3 F & F 693, A G v Bryant 15 M & W 169, Mails v Beyfuss, 25 Q B D 494) but it has been ruled that a detective cannot refuse on grounds of public policy to answer a question as to where he was secreted. Webb v Catchlove 3 T L R 159. In R v Derrard 11 & F 240 when objection was taken to a question put to a witness, whether he had gone to a certain place as a spy Lord Campbell, allowed the objection to prevail on the ground that the question was not relevant, and that the witness was really called upon to draw an inference from facts within his knowledge. Again in R v Smith O'Brien,

S. 126.

7 St Tr N S 2, it was ruled that disclosures made by informers to the Government, the Magistrate or the police, with the object of detecting and punishing offenders, were privileged. So the defence cannot elicit from individual prosecution witnesses whether he was a spy or an informer also cannot discover from police officials the names of persons from whom they had received information. Annita v King Emperor 19 C W N 676=42 C 957

In Weston v Peary Mohan Das, 40 C 98 at p 920, Woodroffe J said I will only add as regards section 125 of the Evidence Act that though the section does not in express terms prohibit the witness, if he be willing, from saying whence he got his information, both the English authorities from which the rule is taken and consideration of the foundation of the rule show that the protection should not be made to depend upon a claim of privilege being put forward, but that it is a duty of the Judge apart from objection taken to exclude the evidence (see Marks v Beyfees 25 Q B D 494 Hennessey v Wright, 21 Q B D 509). A fortiori if objection is taken, it cannot since the law allows it, be made the ground of adverse inference against the witness.

In England this rule does not apply to private prosecutions. Phips 182 On an indictment for poisoning, the police having, in consequence of certain information, found the bottle containing the poison, in a place used by defendant, a policeman declined to state from whom he had received the information, but Cockburn C J ordered him to answer the question, which in the particular instance turned out to be material the information having been supplied by two girls not called, "they could have stated," said the Judge "how it was they had come to know that the bottle was where it was found, and perhaps could have given some clue to the person who put it there." R v Richardson, 3 F & F 693. So in England the line between public and private prosecutions not being clearly drawn for this purpose, it is for the Judge to decide whether the information is protected or not. Roscoe Cr Ev 181. The English rule was followed in an Indian case before the passing of the Indian Evidence Act. In re Mohesh Chandra, 13 W R Cr 1(10). But under this section the rule is applicable both in cases of public and private prosecutions. A mere suggestion that the complaint would show that the house ruled was not the one referred to in the complaint is not sufficient to justify any departure from the rule embodied in this section and the Magistrate was right in refusing to order the production of the complaint. Laladhar v Crown, 8 S L R 303=16 Cr L J 447=29 Ind Cas 79.

The words 'information as to the commission of any offence' in this section, only enacted the rule which, as said by Eyre C J in Hardy's case, 24 How St Tr 808, has universally obtained, on account of its importance to the public for the detection of crimes, that those persons, who are the channel by means of which the detection is made, should not be unnecessarily disclosed. Queen Empress v Dyanna Happa, Rat Un Cr C 937. But having regard to the distinction drawn throughout Act VII of 1873 (Bombay) between a police officer and an officer of the salt department, the latter cannot be considered a Police officer within the meaning of s 125 Evidence Act, and may, therefore, be compelled to say whence he obtained the information as to the commission of an offence. Reg v Gouta Rat Un Cr C 183. So also a superintendent of the Post office is not privileged under this section. Queen Empress v Rana Dhan, 2 Bom L R 329 followed in Harban v Emperor, 16 C W N 431=15 Ind Cas 77. A distinction should be drawn between questions which a witness cannot be compelled to answer and those which he cannot be permitted to answer. The latter class of questions might properly be forbidden, but questions of the former class are in no way barred, a witness has merely the right of referring to such questions, without any hostile inference being drawn from his refusal. Mahomed Ali v Emperor, 10 Ind Cas 917=13 Cr L J 277.

126 No barrister, attorney, pleader or vakil shall at any time be permitted, unless with his Professional communication client's express consent, to disclose any communication made to him in the course and for the purpose of his employment as such barrister,

S 126. pleader, attorney or vakil, by or on behalf of his client, or to state the contents or condition of any document with which he has become acquainted in the course and for the purpose of his professional employment, or to disclose any advice given by him to his client in the course and for the purpose of such employment

Provided that nothing in this section shall protect from disclosure—

(1) any such communication made in furtherance of any [illegal] purpose

(2) any fact observed by any barrister, pleader, attorney or vakil, in the course of his employment as such, showing that any crime or fraud has been committed since the commencement of his employment

It is immaterial whether the attention of such barrister, † [pleader], attorney or vakil was or was not directed to such fact by or on behalf of his client

Explanation—The obligation stated in this section continues after the employment has ceased

Illustrations

(a) A, a client says to B, an attorney—"I have committed forgery and I wish you to defend me

As the defence of a man known to be guilty is not a criminal purpose, this communication is protected from disclosure

(b) A, a client, says to B, an attorney—"I wish to obtain possession of property by the use of a forged deed on which I request you to sue

The communication being made in furtherance of a criminal purpose is not protected from disclosure

(c) A being charged with embezzlement retains B an attorney, to defend him In the course of the proceedings B observes that an entry has been made in A's account book charging A with the sum said to have been embezzled, which entry was not in the book at the commencement of his employment

This being a fact observed by B in the course of his employment showing that a fraud has been committed since the commencement of the proceedings, it is not protected from disclosure

Principle At common law in very early times a privilege was recognized as to matters between an attorney and his client, and this privilege has continued in the strictest form to the present day An attorney is neither compelled nor permitted, without consent of his client, to disclose communications made to him by his client McElvey v Evans § 236 In order to promote freedom of consultation of legal advisers by clients, the apprehension of compelled disclosure by the legal advisers must be removed and hence the law must prohibit such disclosure except on the client's consent Wignmore § 2291 Phipps v. Phipps 170, Per Mounteney B in Annesley v Earl of Anglesea, 17 How St Tr 1225, Jones v Great Central Railway, (1910) A C 45, Lyell v Kennedy 9 App Cas 86 In

* This word in s 126 was substituted for the original word 'criminal' by the Indian Evidence Act Amendment Act (18 of 1872) s 10 II

† This word in s 126 was inserted by the Indian Evidence Act Amendment Act (18 of 1872), s 10

S 126.

Anderson v Bank, L R 2 Ch D 644 649 Jessel M R said "The object and meaning of the rule is this. That by reason of the complexity and difficulty of our law, litigation can only be properly conducted by professional men, it is absolutely necessary that a man, in order to prosecute his rights or to defend himself from an improper claim, should have recourse to the assistance of professional lawyers, and it being so absolutely necessary, it is equally necessary to use a vulgar phrase, that he should be able to make a clean breast of it to the gentleman whom he consults with a view to the prosecution of his claim, or the substantiating his defence against the claim of others, that he should be able to place unrestricted and unbounded confidence in the professional agent, and that the communication he so makes to him should be kept secret, unless with his consent (for it is his privilege and not the privilege of the confidential agent) that he should be enabled properly to conduct his litigation. This is the meaning of the rule." See also Per Lord Chancellor Brougham, in Greenough v Gasell 1 Myl & K 98, 103, where his lordship said "The foundation of this rule, is not on account of any particular importance which the law attributes to the business of legal professors, or any particular disposition to afford them protection. But it is out of regard to the interest of justice, which cannot be up holden and to the administration of justice, which cannot go on, without the aid of men skilled in jurisprudence, in the practice of the Courts, and in those matters affecting rights and obligations which form the subject of all judicial proceedings." If such communications were not protected, no man, is the same learned Judge remarked in another case, would dare to consult a professional adviser with a view to his defence, or to the enforcement of his rights and no man can safely come into a Court either to obtain redress, or to defend himself. Bolton v Corporation of Liverpool 1 My & K 94, 95. No privilege can be thus required for any communication which is made for the purpose of committing a criminal or fraudulent act or of aiding a contempt of Court, since that can be no part of the client's interests nor within the scope of the professional duties of a legal adviser were the rule otherwise, the result would be that a man intending to commit treason or murder might safely take legal advice for the purpose of enabling himself to do so with impunity, and the solicitor to whom the application was made would not be at liberty to give information against his client for the purpose of frustrating his criminal purpose. Wills Et 2nd Ed p 277, Russell v Jackson, 9 Hare 392, Follett v Jefferyes 1 Sim N S 3, 17 R v Cox 14 Q B D 153 Williams v Quebrada (1895) 2 Ch 751 Bullivant v G F for Postlethwaite, (1901) A C 196, Ramsbotham v Senior, (1839) 8 Eq 575n. In re Postlethwaite (1857) 35 Ch D 722.

Scope of the section. In regard to professional communications the reason of public policy which excludes them, applies solely, to those between a client and his legal adviser, and the rule is clear and well settled, that the confidential counsellor, solicitor, or attorney of the party cannot be compelled to disclose papers delivered, or communications made to him, or letters or entries made by him, in that capacity. Greenough v Gasell, 1 Myl & K 101, In this decision, the Lord Chancellor Brougham was assisted by consultation, with Lord Lyndhurst Tindal G J and Paule J 4 B & Ad 876, and it is mentioned as one in which all the authorities have been reviewed in 2 My & W 100 per Lord Abinger and is cited in Russell v Jackson 15 Jur 1117 as settling the law on the subject. Greenl Et § 237, see also Berd v Lovelace 19 Eliz in Chancery, Cury's R 88, Austen v Vesey, Cury's R 89, Kelway v Kelway Cury's R 127, Dennis v Codrington Cury's R 143 Wilson v Kastall, 1 T R 753 R v Wilkes 2 Camp 578 Wilson v Froug 7 Johns Ch 25 Wills v Oddy 6 C & P 728, R v Shaw 6 C & P 372. This protection says Lord Chancellor Brougham, "is not qualified by any reference to proceedings pending or in contemplation. If, touching matters that come within the ordinary scope of professional employment, they receive a communication in their professional capacity either from a client or on his account and for his benefit in the transaction of his business, or which amounts to the same thing if they come to pass in the course of their employment on his behalf matters which they knew only through their professional relation to the client, they are not only justifying in withholding such matters, but bound to hold them, and

S. 126. will not be compelled to disclose the information, or produce the papers, in any Court of law or equity, either as a party or as a witness." Greenough v Gaskell 1 My & K 101. In Pearce v Pearce 1 Deg & Sm 25, Knight Bruce J C said "And surely the meanness and the mischief of prying into a man's confidential consultations with his legal adviser, the general evil of infusing reserve and dissimulation, uncertainty and suspicion and fear, into those communications which must take place and which unless in a condition of perfect security must take place uselessly or worse are too great a price to pay for truth itself." "Nevertheless," says Prof. Wigmore "the privilege remains an anomaly. Its benefits are all indirect and speculative, its obstruction is plain and concrete. It is worth preserving for the sake of a general policy, but it is none the less an obstacle to the investigation of truth. It ought to be strictly confined within the narrowest possible limits consistent with the logic of its principles." Wigmore § 2291. Broad v Pitt 1 M & W 283 = 3 C & P 518. Foster v Hall, 12 Pick Mass 69 97. Communications made by a client to his pleader expressly for the purpose of incorporation in the pleadings are not confidential and are not privileged. Bibi Sona v Mir Abdul, 6 S L R 1. Under this section a pleader cannot disclose the contents of a document confided to him by a client in the course and for the purpose of his professional employment without the express consent of the client. The privilege is not by this fact that the client had offered to produce the document in Court when necessary. Bailanta v Bhadai, 1930 Ind Rul Bom 88. An executor of a client cannot be presumed to give his consent to the pleader stating the contents of it from the mere fact that the executor, had deposed to its contents as a witness. Ibid.

Privilege is irrespective of litigation begun or contemplated. Under the original theory of privilege the confidences of the client were respected only when given for the purpose of securing aid in litigation and in the very litigation in which they were given. It is obvious however that this limitation would be wholly inconsistent with the modern theory of the privilege. This principle applied equally to communications made in contemplation of a suit or even after dispute arises though not directly with a view to litigation. Gainsford v Grammar 2 Camp 9. Wadsworth v Hamshaw, 2 B & B 5. In Williams v Bludie 1 C & P 158. Abbott C J said "Whatever is communicated for the purpose of bringing or defending an action is privileged but not otherwise. I have considered this subject a great deal, and my mind is made up upon it." So in Broad v Pitt, 3 C & P 518, Best C J held that communications made not for the purpose of a suit or proceeding intended or apprehended were not privileged. In Clark v Clark 1 Mo & Rob 3. Abbott C J (Lord Tentenden) further expanded his view by recognizing the privilege for consultations "with respect to a matter then in dispute and controversy although no cause was in existence with respect to it. Within a short time after Lord Tentenden's death, the present rule was judicially accepted and has never since been doubted to be law. Wigmore § 2294. Now the protection is not qualified by any reference to proceedings pending or in contemplation. Per Lord Brougham, L C in Greenough v Gaskell 1 Myl & K 83, 101. see also Moore v Terrell 4 D & Ald 870, 876. Doe v Harris 5 C & P 593. In Cromack v Heathcote 2 B & B 4. Dallal C J said "I know of no such distinction as that arising from the attorney being employed or not employed in the cause. In Pearce v Pearce 1 Deg & Sm 12. Knight Bruce J C said "I suppose Cromack v Heathcote to be now universally acceded to, as far as any discovery by the solicitor or counsel is concerned, the question of existence of any suit claim or dispute is immaterial." Wigmore § 2294. In re an Attorney 84 Ind Cas 303 = 26 Bom L R 887, Muet v Morgan 1873, L R 8 Ch 361, Bullock v Corrie 3 Q B D 356.

Advice sought for miscellaneous non legal purpose. A lawyer is sometimes employed without reference to his knowledge and discretion in the law,—as where he is charged with finding a profitable investment for trust funds. In such a case the privilege is held not to apply. Walker v Waldman 6 Madd 47. Bramwell Lucas 2 B & C 745, but see Furquand v Knight 2 M & W 93,

BARRISTER, ATTORNEY, PLEADER O

Doe v Watkins, 3 Bing N C 421, Jones v Pugh, 1 Phil easy to find a definite test for distinguishing legal Where the general purpose concerns legal rights and obli incidental transaction would receive protection though i commercial in nature— as where the financial condition of ceased, in the course of a proceeding to enforce a claim But apart from such cases the most that can be said by w that a matter committed to a professional legal adviser mitted for the sake of the legal advice which may be rrible for some aspect of the matter, and is therefore withi it clearly appears to be lacking in aspects requiring legal

Ch 96 But it is not from non legal advice ligations a particular in itself it were merely a shareholder is dis against a corporation of generalization, is is prima facie so com no more or less desi in the privilege, unles
vice Higmore § 2296

S 126.

Barrister, Attorney, pleader or vakil This section c 24 of Act II of 1855, where the words used were “A vakil” Under that Act it was held that the words did n
R v Chandra Kant, 9 W R Cr Letter 10=1 B L section the word “pleader” has been added Now the qu word “pleader” includes Mookteers In construing th
Abbas Pasha v Queen Empress, 2 C W N 484 (188)
The pleader for the Appellants contends that the st reused to the Mukteer Kedar Nath were privileg consent of the accused, Kedar Nath ought not have depose in Court, and reliance is placed on section 126 of the which declares that ‘no barrister, attorney, pleader or vakil
The cognate section in Act II of 1855 section 24 de attorney or vakil shall not without the consent of hi communication made by the client to him in the cour employment or any advice given by him profession knowledge of which he shall have acquired in the cour employment The privilege however, is that of the client matter’ It will be noticed that there are two important 126 which differentiates it from section 21 of Act II of 18
tion of the word ‘pleader’ and of the word ‘express befor which makes it specially stringent in favour of the pri
no suggestion in this case that the accused expres-ly con cloing in Court the statement or statements made to The question that was raised here was this: that it is much he did not come within the purview of section 126 and statements made by the accused were not privileged, an ferred to a case of the Queen v Chandra Kant Chattraj 8, which proceeded upon Act II of 1855 As we have section 24 of the old Act is different from the section in t Procedure Codes Act XXV of 1861, and Act X of 1872 definition of the term “pleader” Act X of 1882 for the word as follows — Pleader, used with reference to any Court, means a pleader authorized under any law for th to practise in such Court, and includes (1) an advocate, a v of a High Court so authorized, and (2) any mukteer or o with the permission of the Court to act in such proceed the definition therefore, is this that all persons who app legal proceeding as representing parties for the purpose particular case come within the category of pleaders, i we take it, be construed as applying to all persons who co gory of pleaders is defined in the Criminal Procedure Co be a strange anomaly if mukteers who act in certain Court
excluded from the provisions of section 126 of the India statements made to them by their clients were not reg whilst in the case of all persons who hold a recognised p attorneys or vakils, they should be privileged We may i sion which was contained in Act II of 1855 and which was fied by section 126 of the present Evidence Act embodies principles of the English law, and that although in E barrister attorney or include Mookteers

R v Cr 8 In this tion is whether the section the Court in 25 C 736 observed statements made by the
and that without the
to those statements Indian Evidence Act, shall at time etc’
lied that a barrister, client, disclose any use of his professio to his client, the
of his profession to disclose any such additions in section 15, namely the addi
the word ‘consent’ vilege Now, there is ented to Kedar dis him by the accused is he was a Mukteer that consequently the d we have been re
nally 1 B L R A C already pointed out, he present Act The
did not contain any first time defines the proceedings in any time being in force
vakil and an attorney other person appointed ling The result of ear in a Court in any of pleading in any and section 126 must, me within the cate
le It would indeed as pleaders were Indian Evidence Act and arded as privileged,
osition as barristers
ay that the provi
subsequently ampli
one of the wisest
ngland there is no

S 126. Analogue to a muktear, the Indian Legislature having regard to the conditions of this country has purposely included in the term 'pleader' all persons who plead for clients in any legal proceeding in a Court of Justice." Now by the amendment of section 1 (r) by Act XXXV of 1923 'pleader' used with reference to any proceeding in any Court, means a pleader, or a muktear authorized under any law for the time being in force to practise in such Court, and includes (1) an advocate, a vakil and an attorney of a High Court so authorized, and (2) any person appointed with the permission of the Court to act in such proceeding. Now the word 'pleader' includes not only muktears but also an advocate, a vakil and an attorney as well as any person appointed with the permission of the Court to act in any proceedings." On principle communications made to a muktear should be privileged but it is not free from doubt whether the interpretation of the word 'pleader' given for the first time in Act X of 1882 should be accepted in interpreting the Indian Evidence Act which was placed in the Statute Book as early as in the year 1872. The question is whether the communications to muktears during 1872 and 1882 were privileged. If we are to accept the interpretation of the Court in Abbas Padda v Queen Empress, supra, even in that case such communications were not privileged. The reason given by Glover J in Queen v Chandra Kant Chakraverty 1 B L R Cr 8 in holding that communications to muktears are not privileged is thus expressed "Section 24 Act II of 1855, says that barristers, attorneys and vakils shall not disclose any communications etc, etc. From the position of the word 'attorney' in the sentence it is clear that attorneys of the High Court only are meant and not muktears who if included in the privilege, would naturally follow in their proper order after vakils. There is therefore by law no privilege as to communications between muktears and their principals, and the witness's testimony ought to have been received and laid before the jury. "The reasons given for this decision seem equally to apply to the language of the present section." Woodroffe's Evidence Act 8th Ed p 901. But on principle such communications should be excluded and it is anomalous that provisions of this section apply to interpreters and the clerks or servants of barristers pleaders, attorneys and vakils whereas muktears and revenue agents who are legal advisers should be excluded by giving a strict interpretation of the section. It is highly desirable that this doubt should be set at rest by legislative intervention, as in municipal Courts all confidential communications are generally made to muktears. (Vide Wigmore § 2300 and Bean v Quimby, 5 H N 94 (97)). "There are professional legal advisers in India" says Mr Justice Markby "who are not included in this section, and one very important class of persons who are called muktears. They are recognized by the Courts and though not mentioned in the section they would probably obtain the same protection as the persons mentioned." Markby p 96.

According to English law the privilege attaching to confidential professional disclosures is strictly confined to the case of legal advisers and does not protect those made to clergy men (Norman Shaw v Norman Shaw 69 L T 468. Wheeler v Le Marchant L R 17 Ch D 631 R v Gilham 1 Moo C C 186, but see R v Griffin 6 Cox 219 Broad v Pitt 3 C & P 518) doctors (R v Duchess of Kingston 20 How St Tr 510 R v Gibbons 1 C & P 97) patent agents (Mosely v Victoria Co, 57 L T 482), clerks (Lee v Birrell Camp 3, Webb v Smith 1 C & P 337) and friends (Wheeler v Le Marchant 17 Ch D 675) Phup Ex 170. There is no ground for encouraging the relation of client and legal adviser except when the adviser is one who has been formally admitted to the office of attorney or counsellor as duly qualified to give legal advice. That the person consulted is in fact practising without formal sanction of the Court is certainly not sufficient. Stade v Tucker L R 14 Ch D 824 827. Communications made to foreign solicitors are also protected, when they act for their foreign clients. Laurence v Campbell 1 Drew 480. A legal adviser may render his services without charge if he pleases and hence the mere circumstance that the advice is given gratuitously does not nullify the privilege. Wigmore § 2302.

Shall at any time be permitted etc. In every case the privilege is the right not of the legal adviser but of the client, it exists for his protection and he can alone waive it, without his express consent his legal adviser will not be allowed to disclose any fact or document that is privileged Power v Foster, 15 Q B D 114. The legal adviser is not competent to waive the privilege R v Leeson, 11 Cox 152, Wibson v Rastall, 4 F R 753, Lyell v Kennedy, 27 Ch D 1. Kay v Poorum Chund, 1 B 631. But it is client and not as party to a cause, that he is entitled for the reason of the privilege applies to all clients as such, whether or not they are parties when the disclosure is sought from them. Hence, the privilege equally forbids disclosure by the attorney of a client not in any way concerned in the cause Wilson v Rastall 4 F R 753, R v Withers 2 Camp 578. Conversely when the client is not a party then on general principles the party cannot invoke the privilege Merle v Moore, 2 C & P 275, Wigmore § 2321. The client may claim the benefit of the rule, although no fee has been paid, or although there has been no formal retainer. The privilege has been recognized even in cases where the attorney did not consider that he was acting as counsel, when the circumstances were such as to show that the relation of attorney and client actually existed Burr Jones § 749. But a waiver of a separate part of a privileged communication does not deprive him from insisting on it as to the residue Lyell v Kennedy 27 Ch D 1. And subject to such waiver when once communications or statements are privileged they always remain so (Peace v Foster, 15 Q B D 114, Bullock v Carry 3 Q B D 356 Hoslam Foundry etc v Hall, (1897) 3 T L R 776) as the privilege is not destroyed by death but may be claimed by the personal representatives of the client who was entitled to it. Bullivant v A G for Victoria, (1901) A C 196 Hills Ev 2nd Ed p 235. But although the rule "once privileged always privileged" (Bullock v Carry 3 Q B D 356, Calcraft v Guest (1898) 1 Q B 761) undoubtedly prevails to this extent that a document does not lose its privilege by anything short of waiver, this does not affect the admissibility of other evidence to prove the matters to which the privileged documents relate, if for example the party requiring production has at some previous time obtained a copy of the privileged document or has perused its contents he is at liberty to give secondary evidence of them, if due notice to produce the original has been given. Hills Ev 2nd Ed 285, see also Stinet v Morgan 3 Ch 361 Lloyd v Mostyn, 10 M & W 478 481 482 Calcraft v Guest (1898) 1 Q B 759.

Anytime The word "anytime" in this section is significant. When a communication is once privileged it is "always privileged" Per Cockburn C J in Bullock v Carry 3 Q B D 356 Per Lindley L J in Calcraft v Guest, (1898) 1 Q B 761. The privilege continues for the purpose of future litigation (Bullock v Carry, supra) notwithstanding a change of solicitors or that the solicitor is struck off the rolls (Cholmondeley v Clinton, 19 Ves 263) or the solicitor becomes personally interested (Chaut v Brown, 7 Hare, 79), or the client dies. Bullivant v Att Gen (1901) A C 196, Powell Ev 233. The subjective freedom of the client, which it is the purpose of the privilege to secure, could not be attained if the client understood that, when the relation ended or even after the client's death the attorney could be compelled to disclose the confidences, for there is no limit of time beyond which the disclosure might not be used to the detriment of the client or his estate. Wigmore § 2323, Peace v Foster L R 15 Q B D 114, 118. In Attorney, Ime, 81 Ind Cas 353—A I R 1925 Bom 1 (F B) Wilson v Rastall (1792) 4 F R 759, Parlet v Yates, 12 Moo P C 520, Explanation to the section.

Express consent The privilege is designed to secure the client's confidence in the secrecy of his communication, hence, the privilege is not violated by receiving such disclosures as the client by his own will permits to be made. Wigmore § 2327. In England, it has always been recognized that a waiver may be made. Captain Baillies Trial 21 How St Tr 1, 341 Merle v Moore, Ry & Mo 390. Such waiver belongs to the client and not to the attorney. But such waiver can be express or by implication. As regards waiver by implication there is some conflict of decisions. Holdram v Ward, Style 449. Mackenzie v Yeo 2 Curt Eccl 866, 876. In India the matter is set at rest by use of the words "clients express conduct." The question in this connection may well arise whether there can be a waiver by a deceased client's representatives. That an executor or administrator may exercise authority over all the interests of the estate left by the client, and yet may not incidentally have the right, in interest of that estate, to waive the privilege concerning confidential communications affecting it, would seem too inconsistent to be maintained under any system of law. It is generally agreed that in testamentary contests the privilege is divisible, and may be waived by the executor, the administrator the heir the next of kin or the legatees. Wignore § 239. Doe v. Hertford 13 Jar 632. Russell v. Jackson 9 Haro 187, 92, Greenlaw v. King 1 Beav 117 115. So the word clients in this section includes representatives of the clients. But it is doubtful whether the executor of a client can waive this privilege in respect of a Will when there are various beneficiaries having conflicting interests under the Will. Bulanda v. Bhatal, 1930 Ind Rul Bom 88.

S 126

The consent required by this section should be given on each occasion when a communication of the kind described is sought to be made admissible in evidence. A consent given to the disclosure of some privileged matters in civil suit is not sufficient authority for the disclosure of the same matters in a criminal case arising out of the suit. Queen Empress v. Gullshan, A W N 1890 172. The statement of a pleader that his client is a benamidar of a certain person without the consent of his client, cannot be admitted in evidence. It is very improper on the part of the pleader to disclose that communication without his client's consent. Kululla v. Debruddhi 16 C W N 712.

Communication made to him in the course and for the purpose of his employment. It is a familiar and long established rule of common law that an attorney or a counsel cannot disclose communications made by or on behalf of his client to him or the advice given by him in the course of his professional employment without the consent of the client, such communications were privileged and not admissible in evidence. Greenough v. Gaskell 1 Myl & K 98, Dennis v. Codrington Cary 100 Kelway's Kelway Cary, 89, Burr Jones 748. This privilege protects from disclosure two classes of communications (i) confidential communications which have passed at any time between the party or witness and his legal adviser in his professional capacity for the purpose of the former obtaining legal advice for the protection of his interests, information procured in pursuance of such communications for the same purpose and notes and other records of such communications and information made for the same object (ii) similar communications information notes and records, made or procured with a view to litigation whether commenced or only contemplated including therefore instructions to counsel or solicitor cases to advise reports evidence briefs etc, prepared on the client's behalf. Hills 1r 2nd Ed 276. Greenough v. Gaskell 1 Myl & K 98. Minet v. Morgan 8 Ch 361. Anderson v. Bank of British Columbia 3 Ch D 611. Wheeler v. Le Marchant 17 Ch D 675, Sontpuant, etc., Co v. Quick 3 Q B D 315.

If the protection was confined to proceedings begun, says Lord Chancellor Brougham in Greenough v. Gaskell 1 Myl & K. 98 102 or in contemplation then every communication would be unprotected which a party makes with a view to his general defence against attacks which he apprehends, although at the time no one may have resolved to reveal him. But, were it allowed to extend over such communications, the protection would be insufficient if it only included communications more or less connected with judicial proceedings, for a person often times requires the aid of professional advice upon the subject of his rights and liabilities with no reference to any particular litigation, and without any other reference to litigation generally than all human affairs have in so far as every transaction may by possibility become the subject of judicial inquiry. The communications may be either oral or written. Pearee v. Foster, 15 Q B D 114. Greenough v. Gaskell 1 Myl & K 98. A communication with a solicitor for the purpose of obtaining legal advice is protected though it relates to a dealing which is not the subject of litigation provided it be a communication made to the solicitor in that character and for that purpose. Per Jessel M R in Wheeler v. Le Marchant, 17 Ch D 682. Minet v. Morgan, L R 8 Ch 361. Absence of litigation or prospect thereof at the time the confidential communications are made is no excuse for disclosure. In Attorney, In re 84 Ind Cts 353—A I R 1925 Bom 1 (F B) It is misconduct from a professional point of view for an advocate after being consulted in his capacity of advocate about a case and after learning particulars of the case as stated by one side to undertake the case in the interest of the opposite party. The fact that there was no definite agreement by the first party makes no difference. Maung Mya U v Sun Saugh, U B R 1897—1901 Vol II, 368

S 126

By or on behalf of his client. Neither client nor solicitor need act personally in their communications with each other in order that the privilege may be claimed, it exists equally when they act by means of clerks, interpreters, or other agents. Wills v 273, Anderson v Bank of British Columbia, 2 Ch D 641, Wheeler v Le Marchant, 17 Ch D 675. In the former case Jessel M R said "He may employ a third person to write the letter, or he may send the letter through a messenger, or he may give a verbal message to a messenger." In the second case the same learned Judge also observed "The actual communication to the solicitor by the client is of course protected, and it is equally protected whether it is made by the client in person or is made to the solicitor in person or to a clerk or subordinate of the solicitor who acts in his place and under his direction. Again, the evidence obtained by the solicitor or by his direction or at his instance, even if obtained by the client, is protected, if obtained after litigation has been commenced or threatened, or with a view to the defence or prosecution of such litigation." See also Du Barre v Livette, Peake N P 77, Wilson v Rastall, 4 T R 753, 756 Hall v Wildman, 6 Madd 47, Bunbury v Bunbury, 2 Beav 173, Reid v Longlois, 1 Mc N & G 627, 638, Glyn v Gaulfield, 3 Mac N & G 463 473, Carpmael v Pouis, 9 Beav 16, Ford v Fennant 32 Beav 162, 168, Goodall v Little, 1 Sum N S 155 163, Steel v Stewart 1 Phil Ch 471, 475

Contents or condition of any document with which he has become acquainted. The client's disclosure of the contents of a pre-existing document will almost always be an act of communication: it is a part of the matters voluntarily committed to the notice of the attorney. It is impossible, in the language of Justice Bronson (Coveney v Tannahill, 1 Hill N 33, 35), to perceive "any solid distinction between the oral statement of a fact to counsel and a communication of the same fact by delivering to him a deed or other written instrument." Unless, therefore, a particular communication of this sort is not confidential, it is within the privilege, and the testimony of the attorney on the stand cannot be required. Wigmore § 2303, see also Bulstrode v Lelchmere, Freem Ch 5, Anon, Skin 404, Bottomly v Osborne, Peake Add Cts 99 101, R v Upper Boddington, 8 Dowl & R 726, Bate v Kinsey, 1 Cr M & R 38, Masston v Downes 6 C & P 381, Wheatley v Williams, 1 M & W 533, Doe v Watkins 3 Bing N C 421, Hurring v Cloberry, 1 Phil Ch 91, Hibberd v Knight, 2 Exch 11, Davies v Walters 9 M & W 608, 612. A solicitor is not bound to produce, or to answer any questions concerning the nature or contents of, a writing entrusted to him professionally by his client. The mere statement of the solicitor that he received the document from his client professionally is enough to protect it. Volant v Soyer 13 C B 231. Although a document may not be such as passed directly between the legal adviser and the client, yet it is of such a nature as to make it quite clear that it was obtained confidentially for the purpose of being used in litigation and with a view to being submitted to legal advisers, then the Court will not compel the production of such a document. Vishnu v Newyork, 7 Bom L R 709. Where a pleader became acquainted with a Will in the course and for the purpose of his professional employment, he cannot be examined in a subsequent suit with reference to the Will. Barkanto v Baulat, 31 Bom L R 1046—A I R 1929 Bom 414

Relevancy or necessity of the communication. The Courts have not always used consistent language in answering the question whether the privilege is limited in some way to communications necessary or material or relevant to some purpose of the consultation. In Gillard v Bates, 6 M & W 547, the Court observed "The test is, whether the communication is necessary for the purpose of carrying on the proceeding in which the attorney was employed. The result down in Colles v Kennerley 11 B 111 is that the Court shall see "whether the communications were made by the client to his attorney confidentially as in instructions for conducting his case, or in mere public duty." In Imbrey v Lord of Exeter 17 How St Tr 1229 Barclay v B said "Now limiting the policy of the law in protecting communications by the client to his attorney to be as has been said in favour of the client, and principally for his service and that the attorney is in loco of the client, and therefore his trustee, does it not follow from thence that everything said by a client to his attorney falls under the same reason?" I own I think not, because there is not the same necessity upon the client to trust him in one case as in the other and of this the Court may judge from the particulars of the conversation. Nor do I see any impropriety in supposing the same person to be trusted in one case as an attorney or agent and in another as a common acquaintance. But where the client talks to him at large as a friend and not in the way of his profession, I think the Court is not under the same obligations to guard such secrets though in the breast of an attorney. In the same case Huntreys B added "If this original principle be kept constantly in view I think it cannot be difficult to determine either the present question or any other which may arise upon this head, for upon this principle whatever either is or by the party concerned can naturally be supposed necessary to be communicated to the attorney in order to the carrying on any suit or prosecution in which he is returned,—that the attorney shall inviolably keep secret. On the other hand whatever is not, nor can possibly by any man living be supposed to be, necessary for that purpose—that the attorney is at liberty, and in many cases—as particularly, I think, in the present case—the attorney ought to disclose. It is thus further elucidated by Douson B "Nothing that came properly to the knowledge of the attorney in defence of his client's cause ought to be revealed. I will suppose an unknowing man to have twenty deeds by him and he delivers them all to his attorney to see which were relative to suit, he looks them over and binds not half of them relative thereto. I apprehend the attorney is not compellable to disclose the contents of any one of these deeds neither do I think it necessary and I think the Court must in this case be satisfied first that what came to this man's knowledge was not necessary to his client's claims and in the next place, that the client could not think it necessary. The test is therefore not whether the fact or the statement is actually necessary or material or relevant to the subject of the consultation but whether the statement is made is a fact for the purpose of the client to obtain advice on that subject. Hymore § 2310

S 126

Communication must be confidential. The moment confidence ceases' said Lord Eldon, 'privilege ceases' Parlhurst v Louten, 2 Swanst 191 216. Greenough v Gaskell, 1 W & A 98, 101. Letters in order to be privileged must be professional communications of a confidential character for the purpose of getting legal advice. Gardner v Lam, L R 1 exch D 19 53, O Shea v Wood, (1891) P 237, 286. The privilege assumes of course that the communications are made with the intention of confidentiality. Hymore § 2311. The law in India on this point is practically the same as in England and that in interpreting section 126 of the Evidence Act a Court may rightly refer to English cases, as shown by Hestrop C J and Sargent J in the case of Munon Haji Harun v Maulvi Abdul Kasim 3 B 91 in which Chief Justice Sir M Westropp said "Communications to be protected by that section (126) of the Evidence Act must we think, be confidential." The word "disclose" shows, that common sense seems to demand, that the privileged communication must be confidential or private. Sargent J said "The use of the word 'disclose' in section 126 of the Evidence Act shows that the communications to be privileged must be of a confidential nature between a solicitor and his client." Both Judges in the course of their judgments quoted English cases. This was exactly the principle followed in England in Ex parte Campbell 13 re Cathcart, L R 5 Ch 703. Framp v Mohan Singh 18 B 263 272. See also Bursill v Tanner 16 Q B D 1. Lyell v Kennedy 23 Ch D 387 S C 9 App Cas 81, R v Rodrigues 5 Bom L R 122. Oriental Bank v Brown, 12 C 265. In Dwyer v Collins, L R 7 Ex 646, Baron Parke said

"The privilege does not extend to matters of craft which the attorney knows by any other means than confidential communications with his client, though if he had not been employed as attorney, he probably would not have known them" The case of Paulhurst v Louton, 2 Sw 191 and Bussell v Fanner, 16 Q B D 1 show that when a solicitor claims the privilege, he must state the name of the client on whose behalf he claims it. Per Fulton J in Francis v Mohan Singh, 15 B 263 (278). Communications made to legal advisers in order to be protected by this section must be confidential. A communication made to a pleader, in order that it might be communicated to the Court is one of the statements in a plaint and in order that a decree might be obtained, is not such a communication, but, on the contrary, is one made expressly for the purpose of disclosure and express consent to the disclosure was therefore actually given by client. Abdul Hussein v Bibi Sona Dera 1 S L R 85

Communication, distinguished from acts, client's conduct, Appearance Abode, etc. The question is, does the privilege cover only that knowledge of the attorney which is obtained from hearing the client's utterances or also that which comes from seeing the client's acts? The question has given rise to a difference of opinion more apparent than real. It is sometimes discussed as if the word 'communications' was synonymous with 'utterances of words' that is, those who favour its largest answer repudiate the limits of the word "communications" as if it included no more than "utterances", and yet it is of course conceivable that an act or a bodily condition may be voluntarily disclosed and willingly made known to the attorney by the client without any utterance of words. The problem is also sometimes discussed, from the point of view of the attorney, as involving the inquiry whether the privileged knowledge of the attorney is restricted to that which he obtains by the sense of hearing only, or includes also that which he learns by seeing, and this mode of statement corresponds more closely to the distinction between utterances and acts of the client. Wignome § 2306. In Robson v Kemp, 5 Esp 52, 53 Lord Ellenborough, L C J said "The act (of destroying a power of attorney) cannot be stripped of the confidence and communication as an attorney, the witness then acting in that character. One sense is as privileged as another. He cannot be said to be privileged as to what he hears but not to what he sees, where the knowledge acquired is to both has been derived from his situation as an attorney." But in Greenough v Gasell, 1 Myl & K 93, 104, Lord Chancellor Brougham said "(the privilege does not exist) where there could not be said, in any correctness of speech, to be a communication at all,—as where for instance, a fact, something that was done, became known to him from his having been brought to a certain place by the circumstance of his being attorney, but of which fact any other man if there would have been equally cognizant." Similarly in Brown v Furter, 1 H & N 736, Pollock C B said "A legal adviser may give evidence of a fact which is patent to his senses." Martin B said "With respect to matters which the counsel sees with his eyes, he cannot refuse to answer." Bulger J in his trials at Nisi Prius 284, said "The privilege does not cover a fact of his own knowledge and of which he might have had knowledge without being counsel or attorney in the cause, as, suppose him witness to a deed produced in the cause, he shall be examined to the truth of execution, so, if the question were about an examine in a deed or a Will, he might be examined as to the question whether he had ever seen such a deed or Will, he might be examined as to the question whether he had ever seen such deed or Will in other plight, for that is a fact of his own knowledge, but he ought not to be permitted to discover any confessions his client may have made to him on such head." The marked contrast says Prof Wignome 'is between the statement of Lord Ellenborough, in Robson v Kemp, and that of Baron Martin, in Brown v Foster, can they be reconciled? And is either of them consistent with Mr Justice Bronson's distinction between a communication and an act? The truth is that each is right, under some circumstances and all are harmonious, when the proper allowance is made. Looking back at the reason of the privilege, it is seen to secure the client's freedom of mind in committing his affairs to the attorney's knowledge. It is designed to influence him when he might be hesitating between the positive action of disclosure and the inaction of secrecy. There is therefore by hypothesis, always some voluntary act of disclosure,—some removal of that secrecy which would otherwise have existed as between the client and the attorney. On the one hand, then, those data which would have come to the attorney's notice in any event, no mere observation, without any action on the client's part—such as the colour of his hat or the pattern of his shoes—such data which become known by such acts as the client would ordinarily have done in any event, without any purpose of communicating them to the attorney as his attorney or his adviser—such as the style of his handwriting or the amount of money in the roll of bills from which he pays his retainer—these are not any part of the communications of the client in the language of Lord Chancellor Brougham and Mr Justice Buller they are 'facts of which any other man if there, would have been equally cognizant.' On the other hand almost any act, done by the client in the sight of the attorney and during the consultation may conceivably be done by the client as the subject of a communication, and the only question will be whether, in the circumstances of the case it was intended to be done as such. The client, supposedly may make a specimen of his handwriting for the attorney's information or may exhibit an identifying scar or may show a secret token. If any of these acts are done as part of a communication to the attorney, and if further the communication is intended to be confidential, the privilege comes into play. Ordinarily then it is true as Chief Baron Pollock said that a legal adviser may give evidence of a fact which is patent to his senses, that is of anything which he either sees or even hears, so far as it is otherwise patent,—in other words, is not the subject of an express disclosure. Yet, in a given case, any of these things may be committed to the attorney in such a way as to be within the privilege. It is to be noted, however, that many such acts which thus become the subject of a communication may still not be confidentially committed to the attorney and thus be not privileged. Obviously no fixed form of rule can be set for the present application of the principle. In this ordinary case it is only the expressed communications of the client that will be privileged." Wigmore § 2306. For the purposes of section 126 of the Evidence Act it is immaterial whether the communication which is sought to be protected was verbal that is to say, by word of mouth, or by demonstration. In a suit for the revocation of a patent in which the question for decision was the formation and process of working of a stove owned and used by the defendant the plaintiff tendered in evidence a vakil who had been employed by the defendant in some previous proceedings and had, in the course and for the purpose of his employment, visited the defendant's premises at the latter's invitation in order to make himself acquainted with the working of the stove. Held that the knowledge required by the vakil as to the formation and process of working of the stove amounted to a communication made to him by his client in the course and for the purpose of his employment and that therefore, his evidence was admissible under section 126 of the Evidence Act. Gopi Lal v Lakhpat Rai, 44 Ind Cas 605=16 A L J 987.

S 126

No adverse reference from claims of Privilege. If a client party claims the privilege no inference should be drawn against him as to the unfavourable nature of the information sought. Per Lord Chelmsford in Wentworth v Lloyd 10 H L C 591, Pouell Esq 233 Wigmore § 2322. Weston v Peary Mohan 40 C 898 (919) Dulhan v Haranandan, 20 C W N 617 P C. What ever the reasoning may be for other privileges it is plain that here the drawing of such an inference would virtually disclose the communication and it is this very disclosure against which the privilege protects. Wigmore § 2322.

Judge to determine the privilege. The claim of privilege being made, the trial Judge determines whether the facts justify the allowance of the claim. This follows from the general principles of the judicial function. Its application is usually of no difficulty except sometimes in determining what weight to give to the party's oath in answering a bill of discovery. Wigmore § 2322. Ordinarily an attorney's statement that a document is privileged is sufficient. Volant v Soyce, 13 C B 231. But in Lyell v Kennedy, L R 27 Ch D 1, 21,

Cotton L J said 'The Court must be satisfied, clearly satisfied, either from admissions or from other documents, that the oath of the defendant by which he claims his protection cannot be really available for the purpose for which it is put forward' Wigmore § 2323

Third person over hearing The Law provides subjective freedom from client by assuring him of exception from its process of disclosure against himself or the attorney or their agents of communication. This much, but not a whit more, is necessary for the maintenance of the privilege. Since the means of preserving secrecy of communication are entirely in the client's hands, and since the privilege is a derogation from the general testimonial duty and should be strictly construed, it would be improper to extend its prohibition to third persons who obtain knowledge of the communications. One who overhears the communication whether with or without the client's knowledge is not within the protection of the privilege. The same rule ought to apply to one who surreptitiously reads or obtains possession of a document in original or copy Wigmore § 2326

Joint interest—No privilege 'No privilege attaches to communications between solicitor and client as against persons having a joint interest with the client in the subject-matter of the communication—e.g., as between partners (Re Pickering 25 Ch D 247, Gourant v Edison 59 L T 813), directors and shareholders (Gowand v Edison supra, Woodhouse v W 30 F L R 559), trustees and cestui que trust (Talbot v Marshfield 2 Dr & S 519, Re Mason, 22 Ch D 609, Re Portlethwaite 35 Ch D 722,) even though the party resisting production has paid for the communication (Bacon v Bacon 34 L T 319), lessor and lessee as to production of the lease (Doe v Thomas, 9 B & C 289), reversioner and tenant for life as to common title (Doe v Dote 3 Q B 609), two persons stating a case for their joint benefit (J G v Berkeley 2 J & W 291) or a husband and wife who are only collusively in contest (Pond v De Pontes 5 Jur N S 993 aliter if the contest is genuine). Nor does any privilege attach as between joint claimants under the same client—e.g., between claimants under a testator as to communications between the latter and his solicitor (Russell v Jackson 9 Har., 387). But where communications relate to matters outside the joint interest, they are privileged even as against a person hearing the expense of the communications—e.g. communications between a plaintiff corporation and its solicitors, as against a defendant ratepayer as to matters not connected with the rates (M of Bristol v Cox, 26 Ch D 678), or between a trustee and his solicitor as against the cestui que trust where the communication is not made for the former's guidance in the trust but to enable him to resist litigation by the latter (Thomas v Secy of State, 18 W R 312). In cases of joint interest it is sufficient, as against third persons if one only of the interested parties claims privilege (Newton v Chaplin, 19 L J P C 371, Hearley v Phillips 10 Q B D 465, Rochefoucauld v Boustead, 65 L J Ch 794)—Phip Ev 3rd Ed p 178. Where the consultation was had by several clients jointly, the waiver should be joint for joint statements, and neither could waive for the disclosure of the other's statements, yet neither should be able to obstruct the other in the disclosure of the latter's own statements Wigmore § 2328 In re an Attorney, 84 Ind Cis 353 (F B)—26 Bom L R 887

Joint Attorney There may be a relation, not of an absolute confidence. The chief instance occurs when the same attorney acts for two parties having a common interest, and each party communicates with him. Here the communications are clearly privileged from disclosure at the instance of third persons. Yet they are not privileged in a controversy between two original parties, in as much as the common interest and employment forbade concealment by either from the other Wigmore § 2312, Baugh v Crodoche 1 M & R 184, Perry v Smith 9 M & W 681, In re an Attorney 84 Ind Cis 353 (F B)—26 Bom L R 887. But if a solicitor be employed for two parties as for mortgagee and mortgagee and peruse on behalf of the former his abstracts of the title, he cannot, as against him, disclose their contents (Doe v Watkins, 3 Bing, 4 C 421), and where a professional man was engaged by vendor and purchaser to prepare the deeds, and the draft conveyance was confidentially deposited with him by both parties, it was held that he could not produce it at the trial against the interest of the purchaser's devisees though with the consent of the vendor Doe v Seaton 2 A & E 171. Where two persons, having a dispute about a claim made by one of them upon the other went together to a solicitor, when one of them made a statement and instructed the solicitor to write a letter to a third party on the subject of the claim,—it was held that in a subsequent action between these two persons both the statement and the letter were admissible in evidence Shore v Bedford, 5 M & Gr 271 Griffith v Davies 5 B & Ad 502. In all these cases the question would seem to be, was the communications made by the party to the witnesses in the character of his exclusive solicitor? If it was the bond of secrecy is imposed upon the witness if it was not the communication will not be privileged Perry v Smith, 9 M & W 682 Raynolt v Sprye, 10 Beav 51, Taylor § 926. A communication to the opposing party's attorney, as such is clearly without the privilege, since no confidence is reposed, nor if reposed, could be accepted Wigmore § 2312, see also Memon v Abdul Karim 3 B 91 Marston v Downes 6 C & P 381 Ripon v Davies 2 Nev & M 310, Insworth v Wilding (1900) 2 Ch 315, R v Abery, 8 C & P 596, 598.

S 126

Time of consultation The privilege exists not for the sake of the legal profession in general but for the sake of clients needing legal advice. It therefore assumes that the relation of client and adviser has been formed (or is forming) for a particular person as client & the communications are protected not merely when the person consulted is a professional legal adviser, but when the person consulting is seeking the benefit of that relation. Hence a communication to an attorney is without the privilege if made before the relation was entered into or after it was ended Wigmore § 2304 Greenough v Gaskell, 1 Myl & K 101. An interesting question, however arises when the communication is made pending negotiations for the retainer. Here it would seem plain by reason of the privilege that since the would be client cannot certainly predict the attorney's acceptance of the employment, the former must be protected in his preliminary statements when making the overtures, even if the overture be refused. It would further be immaterial that the refusal was due to a disagreement as to fees and to the clients' own withdrawal by reason of the fee demanded for upon none of these matters could he predict the result until the preliminary statement has been made. Obviously, too if the retainer is accepted the privilege covers the preliminary statement Wigmore § 2304.

Any advice given by him No legal adviser is permitted whether during or after the termination of his employment as such unless with his client's express consent to disclose any advice given by him to his client during the course and for the purpose of such employment Steph Dig Ev art 115. So not only communications made to an attorney but any advice given by him to his client is also privileged. That the attorney's communications to the client are also within the privilege was always assumed in the earlier cases and has seldom been brought into question. The reason for it is not any design for securing the attorney a freedom of expression but the necessity of preventing the use of his statements as admission of the client or as leading to inferences of the tenor of the client's communications although in this latter aspect, being hearsay statements they could seldom be available at all Wigmore § 2320.

Proviso (1)—Communications in furtherance of any illegal purpose Professional communications are not privileged when such communications are for an unlawful purpose having for their object the commission of a crime. Then they partake of the nature of a conspiracy or attempted conspiracy, and it is not only lawful to divulge such communications but under certain circumstances it might become the duty of the attorney to do so. The interest of public justice requires that no such shield from merited exposure shall be interposed to protect a person who takes counsel how he can safely commit a crime People v Van Matre 37 N. Ch 69. Moreover no such interposition falls within the just scope of the relation between legal adviser and client. The case of William v Quebriada Ry etc Co, (1895) 2 Ch 751 was considered one of unusual gravity and importance, and Kelchuch J, in delivering the opinion of the Court said "It is of the highest importance in the first place that the rule is to privilege of protection from production to an opponent of those communications which pass between a litigant or an expected or possible litigant, and his solicitor should not be in any way departed from. However hardly the rule may operate in some cases long experience has shown that it is essential to the due administration of justice that the privilege should be upheld. On the other hand, where there is anything of an underhand nature, or approaching to fraud, especially in commercial matters, where there should be the veriest good faith with the whole transaction should be ripped up and disclosed in all its nakedness to the light of the Court. It is no part of the lawyer's duty to advise his clients in what manner they may commit crime or fraud with impunity, hence, the privilege does not extend to communications made in furtherance of prospective criminal acts. If the witness is employed as an attorney in any unlawful or wicked act his duty to the public obliges him to disclose it. No private obligations can dispense with that universal one which lies on every member of society to disclose every design which may be formed contrary to the laws of society to destroy the public welfare, Annesley v Lord Anglesea 17 How St Tr 1229 (1240). In Galside v Outram, 3 Jur N S 39, Sir W Page Wood V C said there can be no confidence in iniquitous secret." In Russell v Jackson 9 Hure 392, Turner L J said "I am very much disposed to think that the existence of an illegal purpose would prevent any privilege attaching to the communications. Where a solicitor is a party to a fraud, no privilege attaches to the communications with him upon the subject, because the contriving of a fraud is no part of his duty as solicitor and I think it can be said that it is part of the duty of a solicitor to advise his client as to the means of evading the law. Similarly Sir W Page Wood V C said I should first beg leave to consider whether an attorney may be examined to any matter which comes to his knowledge as an attorney. If he is employed as an attorney in any unlawful or wicked act, his duty to the public obliges him to disclose it. No private obligations can dispense with that universal one which lies on every member of the society, to discover every design, which may be formed contrary to the laws of the society, to destroy the public welfare. For this reason, I apprehend that, if a secret which is contrary to the public good—such as a design to commit treason murder or perjury—comes to the knowledge of an attorney, even in a case where he is concerned, the obligation to the public must dispense with the private obligation to the client.

"But the difficulty has been to define the boundaries of this limitation. It has not always been kept in mind that the privilege, in its very fundamentals, presupposes what Bentham so drastically censured,—the furnishing of legal advice to the culpable client, as well as to the worthy one; a client who, if the law were duly enforced would lose in the litigation. How, then, can the privilege continue to exist at all if any exception is to be made by which the confidences of the guilty are to be disclosed? It is possible, of course, to take merely the practical point of view, and to declare that the privilege must at least cease to be a cloak for criminal conspiracy regardless of its logic, and to contrive an arbitrary limit for this exception. But it seems hardly necessary thus to do violence to the theory of the privilege looking at the reasons of policy upon which it rests they appear by their natural limits to end with the same conclusion. They predicate the need of confidence on the part not only of injured persons but also of those who, being already wrongdoers in part or all of their cause, are seeking legal advice suitable for their plight. The confidences of such persons may legitimately be protected wrongdoers though they may have been, because the element of wrong is not law is found separated from an element of right, because, even when it is, a legal adviser may properly be employed to obtain the best available or lawful terms of making redress, and because the legal adviser must not habitually be placed in the position of an informer. But the elements all cease to operate at a certain point, namely, where the desired advice refers not to prior wrongdoing, but to future wrong doing. From that point onwards, no protection is called for by any of these considerations. Upon this much there has been a fair consensus among all who have declared themselves upon the subject. But certain minor points of detail still remain, if a practical rule for disclosure is to be settled upon. (1) Must not the advice be sought for a knowingly unlawful end? (2) Must not that unlawfulness be either a crime or civil wrong involving a moral turpitude? (3) Must not the attorney have so far abandoned his professional attitude as to have become, by assent to the design, a partaker in the client's intended wrong? Wigmore § 2298. The law on the subject is thus laid down by Brouson J in Corney v Tannahill, 1 Hill N Y 33, 35, 41. "It is the privilege of one who is charged with a wrong, either public or private, to speak unreservedly with his counsel in preparing for his defence, but he should not be allowed to stop the mouth of one who was present when the wrong was done, upon the allegation that he was retained as a counsel to see, or aid in the transaction. Indeed, I think there can be no such relation as that of attorney and client, either in the commission of a crime, or the doing of a wrong by force or fraud to an individual. The privileged relation of attorney and client can only exist for lawful and honest purposes. Now if the plaintiff consulted counsel beforehand as to the means, the expediency, or consequences of committing such a fraud, his communications may perhaps be privileged, and they are clearly so, as to what he may have said to counsel since the wrong was done. But the attorney may, I think, be required to disclose whatever act was done in his presence towards the perpetration of the fraud. One who is charged with having done an injury to another either in his person, his fame or his property, may freely communicate with his counsel, without the danger of having his confidence betrayed through any legal agency. But when he is not disclosing what has already happened, but is actually engaged in committing the wrong, he can have no privileged witness." In Annesley v Earl of Anglesea, 17 How St Tr 1229. Monteney B said. "A man (without any natural evil to it) promotes a prosecution against another for a capital offence, he is desirous and determined, at all events, to get him hanged, he retains an attorney to carry on the prosecution, and makes such a declaration to him as I have before mentioned (the meaning and intention of which, if the attorney hath common understanding about him, it is impossible he should mistake), he happens to be too honest a man to engage in such an affair, he declines the prosecution, but he must never discover this declaration, because he was retained as attorney. This prosecutor applies in the same manner to a second, a third, and so on, who still refuse, but are still to keep this inviolably secret. At last, he finds an attorney wicked enough to carry his iniquitous scheme into execution. And after all, none of these persons are to be admitted to prove this, in order either to bring the guilty party to condign punishment, or to prevent the evil consequences of his crime with regard to civil property. Is this law? Is this reason? I think it is absolutely contrary to both."

S. 126

"Looking at the reasons for the privilege, says Prof Wigmore, "and construing it as strictly as possible, the first of the three questions should be answered in the affirmative, but the second and the third in the negative. The decisions apparently reach this general result except in the second respect, where there is an inclination to mark the line at crime and civil fraud, yet it is difficult to see how the law can protect a deliberate plan to defy the law and oust another person of his rights, whatever the precise nature of those rights may be." Wigmore 2298. In this section also the word 'illegal' has been substituted for the word 'criminal' by s. 10 of the Indian Evidence Act Amendment Act (XVIII of 1872), see also Russell v Jackson, 9 Hare 329, Kelly v Jackson 13 Ir Eq R. 129, Taylor § 912.

Statements and communications regarding the commission of a crime already committed, made by the party who committed it to an attorney, consulted as such, are privileged communications whether a fee has or has not been paid and whether a prosecution or litigation is pending or not. The question was raised in the United States Supreme Court in Alexander v United States 138 U S 353, which was a trial for murder of a partner, and reliance was placed on a leading English case (Reg v Cox, L R 14 B D 153) as holding the doctrine that where a communication is made to counsel in furtherance of a scheme to commit a crime, the client is not entitled to the privilege. "This case, however" said Mr Justice Brown "is clearly distinguishable from the one under consideration in the fact that the solicitor was consulted with regard to a scheme to defraud, for which his clients were subsequently indicted and tried and the testimony was offered upon that trial, while in this case the consultation was had after the crime was committed, and was offered in evidence as an admission tending to show that the defendant was concerned in the crime or rather in a statement contradictory to one he had made upon the stand. Had he been indicted and tried for a fraudulent disposition of his partner's property, the case of Reg v Cox would have been an authority in favour of admitting his testimony, but we think the rule announced in that case should be limited to cases where the party is tried for the crime in furtherance of which the communication was made." Vide illustrations (a) and (b). So the privilege mentioned in this section is subject to the limitation that no Court can be called upon to protect communications which are in themselves part of criminal or unlawful proceedings. Bullivant v At General for Victoria (1901) A C 196. So this privilege cannot be claimed where the consultation with the attorney was for the purpose of raising money on a forged Will. R v Abery, 8 C & P 596, see also Rothwell v King 2 Swinst 221 note. R v Furber 2 C & K 313, R v Haywood, 2 C & K 234, R v Jones 1 Du Cr 166. So a solicitor is not privileged when he acts as particeps criminis, Reynell v Spye, 10 Beav 51 56. But in Follet v Jeffreys, 1 Sm N S 3, 17 Lord Cranworth V C held communications respecting an attempt to dispose of property in evasion of creditors, privileged. In Charlton v Coombs, 32 L J Ch N S 284, it was held that an attorney need not be privy to the fraud in order that the privilege should cease. See also R v Douner 14 Cox 486. Williams v Quebrada Ry (1895) 2 Ch 751, R v Cox and Bullion L R 14 Q. B D 153, 164, Postle the uante v Rielman L R 35 Ch D 722, 724. Communications made with a view to carry out a fraud are not privileged. O'Rourke v Danbushire, (1920) A C 581.

Proviso (2) This proviso is based upon the following observation of Sir W Page Wood V C, "No private obligations can dispense with that universal one which lies on every member of the society to discover every design, which may be formed contrary to the laws of society, to destroy the public welfare. For this reason, I apprehend that, if a secret which is contrary to the public good—such as a design to commit treason, murder or perjury—comes to the knowledge of an attorney, even in a cause where he is concerned, the obligation to the public must dispense with the private obligation to the client." Vide illustration (c).

Communications which are privileged—Cases A solicitor is not at liberty without his client's express consent, to disclose the matter of the employment. This section protects from publicity not merely the details of the business, but also its general purpose, unless it be shown abunde that such business or the communication made in respect of it falls within proviso (1) or (2). Where in an interview between a solicitor and his client a third person in his client's company makes a statement to him in the course and for the purpose of his professional employment, the solicitor is not privileged from disclosing the name of the person making the statement, unless the name was made the subject of a special confidence, and it was stipulated by or on behalf of his client that it was not to be disclosed. Francis Bluecap v Mohansing Dhan Singh 18 B 263. A pleader is prohibited from disclosing any communication made to him in the course and for the purpose of his employment as such pleader by his client, without the client's express consent. Any such communication volunteered by the pleader is inadmissible in evidence even if offered upon oath. Ma Paw v Maung Keyun L B R (1893—1900), 358.

Communications which are not privileged A solicitor may be examined like any other witness to a fact which he knew before his retainer, that is,

- S 127. before he was addressed in his professional character (Cuts v Pickering, 1 Vent 197, Tord Say and Selle's Case, 10 Mod 11) or where he was made himself a party to the transaction (Duffin v Smith, 103, Robson v Kemp, 11 Esp 52), or where he is questioned as to a collateral fact which he might have known without being entrusted as the solicitor in the cause (Hull v P 25). An attorney may prove his client's handwriting though the knowledge was obtained from witnessing his execution of the bail bond in the action (Hurd v Moring, 1 C & P 372). If he is a subscribing witness to a deed he may be examined concerning the execution (Doe v Andrews, 2 Cowp 816). Where a prisoner being in custody on a charge of forgery wrote a letter to a person, desiring him to ask Mr G or any other solicitor whether the punishment of forgery is still the same where the names of the parties are entirely fictitious as where the names are those of real persons, it was held that his letter was not a privileged communication (R v Breuer, 6 C & P 363). A solicitor conducting a cause in Court may be called as a witness by the opposite side and asked who employs him, in order to shew the real party, and so let in his declarations (Lery v Pope 11 & M 18, Russell on Crimes, pp 2310-2311). The privilege is also confined to communications to the solicitor in his character of solicitor, and therefore a communication made to him or a question asked him by his client, not for the purpose of getting his legal advice, but to obtain information as to a matter of fact is not privileged. As where a client asked his attorney whether he could safely attend a meeting of his creditors called on the attorney's suggestions and the attorney advised him to remain at his office for the present, and he accordingly remained there two hours to avoid being arrested, it was held that the attorney might prove all these facts, in order to shew an act of bankruptcy, in an action by his client's assignees (Brannell v Lucas 2 B & C 715, Russ Crimes 2313). A pleader cannot claim privilege under this section from disclosing a statement made to him by a person, if this same was not made to him in the course and for the purpose of his employment as a pleader, and the fact that the pleader has been acting as a professional adviser to the party makes no difference (Emperor v Balu Dharma 4 Bom L R 160). This section has no application where the statement made by a client to his solicitor was not made in confidence, but for the purpose of communication (Emperor v Maime, 5 Bom L R 122). A communication to an attorney to be privileged must be of a confidential or private nature. Such a communication made in the presence and hearing of the opposite party or made to the attorney not exclusively in his character as attorney of the party making it but addressed to him also as attorney of the opposite party is not privileged (Memon Husein v Moutar Abdul 3 B 91). Section 126 of the Evidence Act deals with professional communications. Where one defendant had written a letter to a co-defendant and the document came into the hands of the plaintiff, it was held that there was no rule relating to privileged communications preventing its production in evidence (Parcheappa v Ita 11 B R (1872-1892) 412).

127 The provisions of section 126 shall apply to inter-

Section 126 to apply to interpreters etc interpreters, and the clerks or servants of barristers, pleaders, attorneys and vakils

Principle It has never been questioned that the privilege protects communications to the attorney's clerks and his other agents for rendering services (Taylor v Foster 2 C & P 195, Bouman v Norton 5 C & P 177, Lyell v Kennedy L R 27 Ch D 1 (19)). The assistance of these agents being indispensable to his work and the communications of the client being often necessarily committed to them by the attorney or by the client himself, the privilege must include all the persons who act as attorney's agents (Wigmore § 2301).

Scope of the section The privilege is applicable to a person acting in the capacity of an attorney and apparently to an attorney's clerk (Louderberger v Gorham 5 Cal 450, (Am) Gibley v Haffie 16 N Y 180 183). So where a communication is made to a pleader's clerk he is not at liberty to disclose the communication. Though a communication contained in a letter is not addressed to a pleader direct but to his clerk, this section extends to such a communication, the same confidential character that attaches to a communication to a pleader under s. 126. Amanullah v Amanullah, 26 C 53=2 C W N 649. The evidence of the advocate's clerk is also inadmissible. Maung Mya U v Sun Singh U L R (1897 1901), Vol II, 363. In Ibbins Prata v Queen Empress 25 C 766, it was held that communications to a mukhtar's clerk is also privileged. But the privilege does not extend to a mere student in law in the attorney's office nor the attorney's clerk although the client supposed he was in attorney. Barnes v Harris, 7 Cush 576.

S. 128

128 If any party to a suit gives evidence therein it has its own instance or otherwise, he shall not be deemed to have consented thereby to such disclosure as is mentioned in section 126, and, if any party to a suit or proceeding calls any such barrister, pleader, attorney or vakil as a witness, he shall be deemed to have consented to such disclosure only if he questions such barrister, attorney, or vakil on matters which, but for such question, he would not be at liberty to disclose.

Privilege not waived by volunteering evidence

Privilege The privilege mentioned in section 126 is designed to secure the client's confidence in the secrecy of his communications, hence the privilege is not violated by receiving such disclosures as the client by his own will permits to be made. So in respect of this privilege it has always been recognized that a waiver may be made. Captain Bullock's Trial, 21 How St Tr 1, 311, 360, 480. Merle v Moore, Ry & Me 390. Now the question is what constitutes a waiver by implication? Judicial decision gives no clear answer to the question. In deciding it, regard must be had to the double elements that are predicted in every waiver, i.e. not only the element of implied intention, but also the element of fairness and consistency. A privileged person would seldom be found to waive, if his intention not to abandon could alone control the situation. There is always also the objective consideration that when his conduct touches a certain point of disclosure fairness requires that this immunity shall cease, whether he intended that result or not. He cannot be allowed, after disclosing as much as he pleases, to withhold the remainder. He may elect to withhold or to disclose, but after a certain point, his election must remain final. Wigmore § 2327.

Scope of the section Under s. 21 of Act II of 1855, a party who gave evidence in a suit at his own instance was deemed to have waived his privilege, and to have consented to disclosure by his professional adviser of any relevant matter which the professional adviser would, but for such privilege, be bound to disclose. Cum Ex 361. Under the present Act the client's offer of his own testimony in the cause at large is not a waiver, for the purpose either of cross-examining him to the communications or of calling the attorney to prove them, otherwise the privilege of consultation would be exercised only at the penalty of closing the client's own mouth on the stand. The client's offer of his own testimony as to specific facts about which he has happened to communicate with the attorney is not a waiver. Wigmore § 2327, Doolar Jha v Janyal, 15 W R 340. The client's offer of the attorney's testimony in the cause at large is not a waiver so far as the attorney's knowledge has been acquired casually as in ordinary witness. But the client's offer of his attorney's testimony as to specific communication to the attorney is a waiver as to all other communications to the attorney on the same matter, for the privilege of secret consultation is intended only as an incidental means of defence, and not as an independent means of attack, and to use it in the latter character is to abandon it in the former. So also a client's offer of his own or his attorney's

* This word in s. 125 was inserted by the Indian Evidence Act Amendment Act (15 of 1872), s. 10.

S 129. testimony as to a part of any communication to the attorney is a waiver as to the whole of that communication, on the analogy of the principle of completeness Higmore § 2327, Faylor § 927, see also McDonnell v Conry, 1843, 1r Cir Rep 807. Once the privilege is waived, the waiver cannot be recalled. The evidence is made incompetent at the option of the client only, and if he elects at any time to remove the seal from the lips of the witness, the evidence may be received. The bar of secrecy having been removed by the client, and the information having lawfully been made public, the right to object further thereto is gone. The client cannot use the privilege both as a sword and a shield, to waive when it inures to his advantage and to withhold when it does not. After its publication no further injury can be inflicted upon the rights and interests, which the law was intended to protect, and there is no further reason for its enforcement. The nature of the information is of such a character that when it is once divulged in legal proceedings it cannot be again hidden or concealed. It is then open to the consideration of entire public, and the privilege of forbidding its repetition is not conferred by law. The consent, having been once given and acted upon cannot be recalled and the client can never be restored to the condition which the law from motives of public policy has sought to protect. Burr Jones § 756. "There is no principle or authority for holding after a consent to publish such information has been properly given, and the evil if any consummated that the privileged person can again raise the objection. The objection having been voluntarily defeated by the party for whose benefit it was enacted, there can be no reason for its continued enforcement in such case. The maxim of cessante ratione legis cessat ipsa lex is of frequent application, and is a sound rule of interpretation. It seems to us that this rule may properly be applied in determining the meaning of the word 'waived' as used in the statute, and as supporting the conclusion that when once waived and made effectual by publication it is waived for all time." McKinney v Grand Street etc 104 N Y 352 (Am). Waiver in one trial is a waiver in subsequent ones. Burr Jones § 756.

129 No one shall be compelled to disclose to the Court any Confidential communication which has taken place between him and his legal professional advisers, unless he offers himself as a witness, in which case he may be compelled to disclose any such communications as may appear to the Court necessary to be known in order to explain any evidence which he has given, but no others.

Principle The privilege being for the protection of the client in his subjective freedom of consultation, it would plainly be defeated if the disclosure of the confidences though not compellable from the attorney, was still obtainable from the client. Accordingly under the modern theory, it has never been doubted that the client's own testimony is equally privileged. Higmore § 2324.

Scope of the section Under the old law (i.e. Act II of 1855 section 22), a party to a suit who offered himself as witness was bound to produce any confidential writing or correspondence that had passed between himself and his legal adviser. The reason for this rule is not very clear and the present section abrogates it so far that such correspondence need be produced only if it is necessary to explain the witness's evidence. The English law at present is identical with the rule laid down here. Munet v Morgan L R 8 Ch App 361, Cuz Ev 362. So the client as well as the attorney, may refuse to testify to communications of the character under discussion, as the rule would be of no value if it might be evaded by compelling the client to disclose that which the attorney is bound to withhold. State v White, 19 Kan 415 (Am). This privilege extends even to those cases where the client offers himself as a witness in his own behalf. Birmingham R & E Co v Wildman, 119 Ala 347. It would be absurd to protect professional communications, and to leave them unprotected at the examination of the client. The true view seems to be that communications which the lawyer is precluded from disclosing the client cannot be compelled to disclose. This privilege is essential to public justice, for if it did not exist, no man would dare to consult a professional adviser with a view to his defence or to the enforcement of his right. Whart. Ev § 583. 1 Greenl. Ev §§ 236—240. The rule is not limited in its application to advice given or opinions stated, but extends to all communications by either party, whether oral or documentary, properly relating to the business in hand, and to all documents, books, papers or instruments which may be properly used by the client to convey professional information of his attorney. Crosby v. Berger 11 Page (N. Y.) 377. On the same principle the privilege extends to a state of facts or a case prepared for the purpose of obtaining the advice of counsel, and to the opinion of counsel based upon such statements. Burr Jones § 750.

In Muncheishaw Be. v. The New Dhumsay S. & W. Co. 4 B. 576, which was a suit for wrongful dismissal in which the defendant pleaded justification by reason of the plaintiff's misconduct, the defendant alleged that the plaintiff while in their employment had taken sookri (i. e., a percentage on payments made by customers). The plaintiff stated that he had done so with the permission of the agents who were his official superiors. He said that he had had a letter from them expressly allowing him to accept sookri that he lost the original document, which in the year 1878 he had submitted to counsel with a case for opinion upon matters connected with it. He now produced a translation of the document. Mr. Interarity for the defendant called for the production of the case submitted to counsel. West J. in disallowing the production said: "In drawing up the Indian Evidence Act, chiefly from Taylor on Evidence, Sir James Stephen plainly intended to adopt in section 129 the principle contended for in sections 816, 817 of the work, he was condensing but with this qualification not expressed at that place that if a party becomes a witness of his own accord he shall, if the Court requires it, be made to disclose every thing necessary to the true comprehension of his testimony. The argument that albeit the document may not be such that the Court can properly order its production as evidence yet the opposite party may demand a perusal of it, is I think opposed to all principle. If a communication is protected by its confidential character it is protected in an especial degree against an adversary in litigation. Here the document which the plaintiff is asked to produce, is in its nature a confidential communication. The plaintiff wanted advice for his personal guidance in fulfilling a contract of service. The statement which he laid before counsel, with this view is his own property in substance as well as form, it not being suggested that the consultation was in furtherance of any fraud. I do not find it necessary to compel a disclosure of it, in order to explain the evidence given by the plaintiff and in the absence of such necessity it would be wrong to put pressure on the plaintiff. It is obviously desirable that communications with professional advisers should be unembarrassed by any such fears as a contrary decision would give rise to. Cunning men could easily evade a rule which would make frank communications unsafe. Truthful men would be placed at a disadvantage by their candour. Advice would have to be given on muted and distorted statements, and unless litigation would thus be promoted in numberless cases in which an exact knowledge of facts would have enabled a counsel or solicitor to nip it in the bud by timely warning or suggestion. Lastly, a compulsory disclosure of confidential communications is so opposed to the popular conscience on that point that it would lead to frequent falsehoods as to what had really taken place. The rule of protection seems to me to be one which should be construed in a sense, most favourable to bringing professional knowledge to bear effectively on the facts out of which legal rights and obligations arise and disclosures made under section 129 should not be enforced in any case except when they are plainly necessary." Letters written by one of the defendants servants for the purpose of obtaining information with a view to possible future litigation are not privileged even though they might, under the circumstances, be required for the use of the defendants' solicitor. Bipro Das v.

S 130. Secretary of State, 11 C 655 In this section "compelled" cannot mean "subpoenaed" and it uses the words "compelled to disclose" with reference to the case when a man has offered himself as a witness, and must refer to some force put upon the witness after he is in the witness box. Mohar Sheikh v Queen Empress, 21 C 392 Statements of witnesses recorded for the special purpose of being shown to a legal adviser with a view to ascertaining whether there is a good cause to go to the Court are privileged under this section. Dinbas v Bromro, 13 Ind Cas 71 The documents for which privilege could be claimed would be those only which are in the nature of communications between the lay clients and their professional legal advisers. This statement made by the defendant's servants to the defendant with reference to the subject matter of the suit must be disclosed at the request of the plaintiff and no privilege can attach to them. Control India Spinning v Gr I P Railway, 29 Bom L R 111=102 Ind Cas 125=A I R 1927 Bom 567

130 No witness who is not a party to a suit shall be compelled to produce his title deeds to any properly or any document in virtue of which he holds any property as pledge or mortgage or any document the production of which might tend to criminate him, unless he has agreed in writing to produce them with the person seeking the production of such deeds or some person through whom he claims

Production of title deeds of witness not a party

Principle The title deeds to land in England were always a secret of extraordinary importance. The landed interests, at the time of the common law's formation and until recently were overwhelmingly dominant in politics, religion and social intercourse. The safety of those interests was a paramount object. Now, under any title system not founded on compulsory public registration, the secrecy of the title instruments comes to be a vital (if selfish) consideration for the occupants of the land. Their possession may be unquestioned but the instruments under which they claim are constantly defective in some important feature. A boundary may vary & release be missing, a recital be incorrect, a score of defects of one sort or another might be discoverable in the chain of title. But the possession and the title are yet unquestioned, and thus the security of title depends practically on preserving these defects from ascertainment by persons opposed in claim who might be only too glad to take advantage of them. It comes therefore to be a fundamental maxim of the dominant class that each occupant is entitled to keep secret his documents of title. Without this, almost any title in the country might be in jeopardy. It is an absolute demand of self-interest that the appearance shall pass for the reality. Wigmore § 2211 Those who register their deeds have no need for such protection: their title in general strands or falls by what is publicly recorded, not by what they privately possess, and there is no appreciable motive for demanding a privilege of secrecy for that which can neither hurt nor help them. Where a person holds a document, not his own, but subject to a lien which would be lost by his surrender of possession, or owns and holds a document, such as a bill of exchange, whose continued possession is necessary for the enforcement of his rights under it, he may fairly claim not to be compelled to surrender it for evidential purposes in litigation between other parties. Wigmore § 2211

Production of title deeds by persons not party to a suit No witness who is not a party to a suit can be compelled to produce his title deeds to any property. Pickering v Noyes, 1 B & C 263, Adams v Lloyd 3 H & N 351, Doe v Dale 3 Q B 609, Egremont v Egremont, 11 Q B D 158 Where an attorney is called upon, whether by subpoena duces tecum or other wise, to produce deeds or papers belonging to his client, who is not a party to the suit, the Court will inspect the documents, and pronounce upon their admissibility according as their production may appear to be prejudicial or not to the client, in like manner as where a witness objects as to the production of his own title deeds Copeland v Watts, 1 Stark 95, Inmy v Long, 9 East 473 Reynolds v Routley, 3 Rob La 201, Travis v January, 3 Rob La 227. So, if the documents called for are in the hands of the agent or steward of a third person, or even in the hands of the owner himself, their production will not be required where in the judgment of the Court it may injuriously affect his title R v Hunter 3 C, & P 591, Pickering v Noyes, 1 B & C 262, Roberts v Simpson, 2 Stark 203, Doe v Thomas 9 B & C 288, Bull v Loveland, 10 Pick. 9, 14, Doe v Langdon 12 Q. B. 711, Doe v Hensford, 13 Jur 632 Doe v Clifford, 2 C & K 448 Kemp v King, 2 Mo & Rob 437, R v Woodby 1 Mo & Rob 390, Thompson v Mosely, 5 C & P 501. This extension of the rule, which will be more fully treated hereafter, is founded on a consideration of the great inconvenience and mischief which may result to individuals from a compulsory disclosure and collateral discussion of their titles in cases where not being themselves parties, the whole merits cannot be tried Greenle Dy § 469 (n). A Will, as well as the title deeds of an estate in mortgage to the party whose privilege is invoked, and the mortgage deed itself, would be within the protection. The object is to protect property by excluding the means of picking holes in the document under which it is held. Indeed it is not necessary that the deeds should be even those establishing the title. They would be within the protection of the rule, though called for to show the title's defence. Thus in a case in which the witness, an attorney, was required to produce a deed of assignment with a view of showing a departure with the interest in the property, but objected on the ground that it was the deed of his client, the objection was upheld by the Court Creswell I objecting — 'The attorney was bound to exercise all the control over it which the law authorised him to do. He was fully justified in refusing to produce it or to answer any question respecting it. It was said that this was not a title deed. It was however, called for as such, and it was intended to show that the title was no longer in the defendants.' It need not be even strictly a deed, — any document or paper having relation to the title would be within the protection. The document too must be one by the production of which title might be capable of being affected. Thus in an action of ejectment, where the title of the lessor of the plaintiff was disputed the solicitor of a gentleman, who had been in treaty with him for the purchase of the property, but which treaty had gone off was allowed to produce on behalf of the defendant, the abstract of title that had been delivered to his client, as furnishing secondary evidence of the contents of the deed relating to the property, which the lessor of the plaintiff had refused after notice to produce Doe v Langdon, 12 Q. B. D 711, Goodale Fr pp 150 151.

The protection against the production of the deeds would extend to all discovery of their contents. It was observed by Baron Alderson. It would be perfectly illusory for the law to say that a party is justified in not producing a deed but that he is compellable to give parol evidence of its contents, that would give him or rather his client through him, merely an illusory protection if he happens to know the contents of the deeds and would be only a round about way of getting from every man an opportunity of knowing the defects there may be in the deeds and titles of his estate. I am clearly of opinion, therefore, that when a party refuses to produce a deed, and is justified in so doing, he ought not to be compelled to give parol evidence of its contents Dukes v Wales, 9 M & W 606.

There have been cases in England in which the Court has taken on itself the inspection of the document, with a view to determining whether its production would be prejudicial to the client, but this course has been considered as objectionable, and would not, according to English law, it seems be now upheld and for the cogent reasoning advanced by Maule J in Toland v Soyer, 13 Com B 236. 'Suppose' said his Lordship 'the Judge were bound to examine the document, and, upon doing so were to say that it was not a title deed, — his decision might be made the subject of an argument in open Court by bill of exception and thus the contents of the deed might be communicated to all the world.' But Professor Wigmore says. This principle, then,

S 131. that the disclosure of title deeds in litigation between other parties was not compellable appears to have been always accepted in English Courts, coming down as an unquestionable tradition, and it was occasionally extended to documents other than those affecting land, though it seems ever to have been regarded as limited by trial Court's discretion' Wigmore § 2211 see also Miles v Dawson 1 Esp 105, Copeland v Watts, 1 Stark 95, Reed v James 1 Stark 132 Corson v Dubois, Holt 239, Roberts v Simpson 2 Stark 203, Harris v Hill 3 Stark 140, R v Hunter 3 C & P 591, 592, Mills v Oddy 6 C & P 728, Doe v Langdon, 12 Q B 711 The rule appears to be the same in India Vide Order XVI r 6 of the Civil Procedure Code and s 162 of the Indian Evidence Act

Although a witness cannot be asked to testify to the contents of such a document, yet he could be required to describe the deed for identification Doe v Clifford 2 C & K 443 Pheps v Piew 3 E & B In the last named case, Weightman J said 'His privilege is only not to produce the instrument for the purpose of disclosing its contents' But the party could prove the contents by any other evidence available R v Upper Boddington 8 Dorol & R 726 Marston v Dounes 6 C & P 381 382, Newton v Chaplin, 6 C B 356 367, Inuit v Sudhan 15 C L J 9

Any document in virtue of which he holds the property as pledgee or mortgagee A mortgagee or a pledgee when not parties to a suit are not compellable to produce documents by virtue of which they hold any property as such These documents are title deeds of this property Vide Doe v Ross 7 M & W 103 explained by Lord Justice Turner in Hop v Lidelell 24 L J Ch 694, Chichester v Marq of Donegall 31 L J Ch 694 Costa Rica Republic of v Erlanger, 44 L J Ch 231 Taylor, § 458

Document the production of which might tend to criminate him Upon principles of reason and equity, a Judge will refuse to compel either a witness or a party to a cause to produce any document the production of which may tend to criminate him Whitaker v Lord, 2 Taunt 115 Roe v New York Press 75 L J Jo 31, Spokes v Grosvenor Hotel Co (1897) 2 Q B 124 But a book of account cannot be withheld on the ground that it tends to incriminate him

